The P R E F A C E.

THE following Exposition was delivered in one hundred and twenty two sermons to the Congregation where God in his providence has placed me, and were designed only for their use, profit, and edification. Had I had any thoughts of publishing it to the world, when I entered upon it, perhaps it might have appeared with some little more advantage than now it does; nor had it appeared now, had not the importunity of the people to whom I minister, with others, obliged me to it; to which I the more readily complied, considering that the authority and usefulness of this book are called in question in this loose and degenerate age; in which not only this, but all scripture is ridiculed and burlesqu'd, and the great doctrines of faith therein contained, treated with the utmost sneer and contempt; and therefore would willingly contribute all I can towards the vindicating of this, or any other part of the sacred writings; which, being given by Inspiration of God, are profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, and for instruction in righteousness.

I have, in the performance of this work, consulted the original text, with the versions of several learned men, and have taken notice of them, where they have differed from our translation, or have furnished out a proper and useful observation. I have also inspected several interpreters upon this book, both Jewish and Christian; and have collected their several senses together, and generally, if not always, have humbly given my opinion which is the most eligible. The versions which I have made use of, are those of the Septuagint, the Vulgate Latin, the Tigurine, Junius and Tremellius, Arias Montanus, Pagninus, &c. The writings and interpreters which I have consulted, of the Jewish, are Shirhashirim Rabba, Targum, Jarchi, Aben Ezra, Alshech and Yalkut Simeoni, together with the books of Zohar and the Rabboth, which are interspersed with the senses of various passages in this book. Of Christian interpreters, Alcuin, Foliot, Mercerus, Cocceius, Sanctius, Ainsworth, Brightman, Cotton, Durham, Patrick, &c. from all which I have received profit and advantage, and from none more than from the short notes of the incomparable Ainsworth, and the sweet observations of the excellent Durham: I mention these authors not by way of ostentation, but as in duty bound to acknowledge by whom I have profited; for as Pliny says<sup>a</sup>, Est benignum & plenum ingenui pudoris, fateri per quos profeceris. Where two or more senses of any passage have offered agreeable to the analogy of faith, I have considered them all, and have made what improvement ment of them I was capable of, leaving the reader to judge for himself, which of them is most preferable; this I thought a much better way, than to be too positive and dogmatical in the sense of a text, especially in such a part of scripture, which is so very mystical and abstruse. If I should be thought in any part of this work to have stretched the metaphors too far, I hope it will be imputed to an honest zeal, and a hearty desire to set forth the glory of Christ's person, and his exceeding great love to his church and people; to do which, all tropes and figures, all the flowers of rhetorick fall abundantly short. I have been obliged to contract what I delivered sermon-wise, lest the volume should swell to too large a bulk, but the substance of it is here contained.

At the end of this Exposition I have given a version of the Targum, or Chaldee Paraphrase upon the whole book, with some notes thereon, induced herunto by the following reasons; First, To gratify the curiosity of some, who observing frequent mention and use made of it in my Exposition, might be desirous of perusing the whole, which has not been, as I know of, ever translated into our language before; Mr. Ainsworth has indeed transcribed several passages out of it, in his learned notes upon this book. Secondly, For the profitableness thereof. Our learned country-man Mr. Broughton<sup>b</sup> says, this paraphrase is worth our study both for delight and profit; and that it expounds several passages of scripture, and some in the New Testament, which I have directed to in my notes upon it; and I am persuaded that the writings of the Jews, the antient Jews more especially, would give us much light into the phraseology and sense of abundance of texts in the New Testament. Besides, this paraphrase does very often direct us, or at least confirm us as to the persons speaking in this song, to know which is of very great use, in the explication of it. I am sensible, that some will object against it, as being filled with ignorant and senseless interpretations, mingled with Rabbinical stories, and Talmudic-fictions, all which I grant in some measure to be true; but then this should move our pity, and put us upon praying for this poor, blind, and ignorant people; and this observation does but confirm what the apostle says concerning them, that until this day remaineth the same veil untaken away in the reading of the Old Testament, which veil is done away in Christ; but even unto this day, when Moses is read, the veil is upon their hearts, 2 Cor. iii. 14, 15. For the removal of which we should pray, and which I would make a Third reason for the publication of this paraphrase.

I shall add no more, but commit these my labours to the blessing of God, humbly desiring they might be useful to souls, and make for the advancement of His glory.

C H A P. I. Ver. I.

The Song of Songs, which is Solomon's.

IN TENDING, by the assistance of God, to open and explain this mysterious part of the sacred writings, it will be proper,

- I. To enquire into, and establish the authority of this Book.
- II. Shew the nature of it; it being a Song.
- III. The excellency of it; it being called the Song of Songs.
- IV. The Penman of it; which is Solomon.

I. I shall endeavour to prove the divine authority of this book, and vindicate it from those exceptions which are made against it: And,

1st. It was always received by the ancient Jews, to whom the oracles of God were committed, as a very valuable part of the sacred writings; and has been continued in the canon of the scriptures by the Christians in all ages to this very day. The Jews had always a very venerable esteem of it, calling it, the holy of holies; forbidding their children the reading thereof, as well as the first chapter of Genesis, and the beginning and end of the prophecy of Ezekiel, until they were thirty years of age,<sup>a</sup> because of the mysteriousness and sublimity of it. They say,* that Solomon when he was old, and near death, the Holy Ghost dwelt upon him, and he composed the books of Proverbs, Song of Songs, and Ecclesiastes. Their ancient book of Zohar <sup>b</sup> asserts, that Solomon composed it by the inspiration of the holy Spirit; as does also the Targum upon this book, and R. Solomon Jarchi, and R. Aben Ezra in their prefaces to their commentaries upon it; the latter of which has these words; God forbid, God forbid, says he, that the Song of Songs should be written or understood of things obscene; but it is intirely parabolical, and had it not been of very great excellency, it had not been written in the catalogue of the holy scriptures; for of it there has been no controversy, that it defiles the hands:<sup>c</sup> For tho' there was once a controversy <sup>d</sup> among the wise men concerning the books of Proverbs and Ecclesiastes, who afterwards, as it became them, changed their minds; yet there never was any concerning this, as appears from their Mishnah; <sup>e</sup> where they say, that all the scriptures are holy, but the Song of Songs is the holy of holies, and if the wise men have had any controversy, it has been only concerning Ecclesiastes: So that this book appears to be authentick, according to the mind of the ancient as well as of the modern Jews; and as for the Christians, they have always looked upon it as a part of the holy scripture, a few only excepted, and have all along continued it in the canon as they found and received it. The ancient fathers and councils have always esteemed it sacred and venerable, not to take notice of authorities of a later date. The opinion of Theodorus of Mopsuestia, who called the divine authority of this book into question, was condemned in the second council of Constantinople, which was held about the year 553. This book also appears in the catalogue of the canonical books of scripture, established in the council of Laodicea, Can. 59. held about the year 364. It is likewise in Origen's catalogue, recorded by <sup>f</sup> Eusebius, as well as in that which Melito <sup>g</sup> brought from the East, and sent to his friend Onesimus, who flourished about the year 140. So that thus far, at least, we can trace up the authority of this book among the Christians: Not to take notice of the canons of the Apostles, in which it stands as a part of canonical scripture, nor the constitutions of the Apostles with the larger epistles of Ignatius, in which citations are made from this book; which, if genuine, would prove the reception of it in the christian church still more early; but, because they are generally looked upon to be spurious, they are not to be insisted on. And it may be further observed, that not only Origen, but Hippolytus in the third century <sup>h</sup> wrote commentaries upon this book.

2dly. This book was wrote by one that was θεόπνευστος, divinely inspired, as appears by his being the penman of the books of Proverbs and Ecclesiastes; for why he should not be under the inspiration of the same spirit in writing this, as he was in writing those, there appears no reason to conclude. The objection against it, taken from his great fall into lewdness and idolatry, produced by a late author <sup>i</sup>, avails but little; especially, if, as some think, it should:

should appear that it was written before, or if with others, it is taken to be wrote after his fall; it will lie as strongly against the book of Ecclesiastes; which is generally allowed to be wrote after, as it does against this: Besides, it has pleased the all-wise God, who gives no account of his matters to his creatures, to make use of men, after very great falls into sin, as Amanuenses of his holy spirit, and penmen of the sacred scriptures, as David and Peter.

3dly, The dignity and sublimity of the matter contained herein, shew it to be no human composition; for never man spake or wrote like unto it; it is therefore called the Song of Songs, being the most excellent of Songs; which cannot be equalled by any, but surpasses all others, not only human but divine; it is preferred to all scriptural songs, which, as one <sup>k</sup> observes, would be blasphemous to do, was it not of a divine rise and authority.

4thly, The majesty of its style bears a testimony to the divine original of it, which cannot be equalled by the most elaborate performances; it defies all the art and wisdom of man to come near it; and plainly shews itself to be the language of God himself, whose voice is powerful and full of majesty.

5thly, The power and efficacy which it has in and over the hearts of men, is another evidence of its being the word of God; which is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. This book has been profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; which are so many arguments of its being given by inspiration of God; it effectually works in them that believe; it has been useful to thousands who have had their spiritual senses exercised, for the comfort of their souls, the raising of their affections, the increase of their faith, and their instruction in divine things: The reading and expounding of this excellent portion of scripture have been owned by God, for the good of multitudes, who are so many sealing evidences of the authority of it.

7thly, There is a very great agreement between this and other portions of scripture. Now this has been always looked upon as a considerable evidence of the authority of the sacred writings, that though they have been delivered at sundry times, and in divers manners, yet there has been always an intire harmony between them; the which also appears in this part of scripture; for though it is delivered in a mysterious and figurative style, yet it admits of senses which are very agreeable to the proportion or analogy of faith; nay, in many places of the new Testament there seems to be manifest allusions to this song, as will be hereafter more particularly observed: But notwithstanding all these evidences of its divine original, there have not been wanting persons who have called in question its sacred authority; as Theodorus of Mopsuestia, whose opinion was, that it was not wrote by inspiration, but was only designed by Solomon to celebrate his amours between him and Pharaoh's daughter; which opinion of his was condemned in the sixth century by the second council of Constantinople, as has been before observed: Grotius in the last century seem'd to be much of the same mind; and Mr. Whiston in this, has attempted in a set tract, to weaken the authority of it, and make it appear to be a loose, prophane and amorous song: His proposition is this; The book of Canticles is not a sacred book of the old Testament; nor was it originally esteemed as such, either by the Jewish or the Christian church; with what truth this is asserted, will in some measure appear from what has been already said. The arguments by which he endeavours to confirm and establish this proposition, are as follow, which I shall particularly consider.

I. Because, as he asserts, "It was not written in his younger days, or "when he was the good, the wise, the chaste, and the religious man; but "long afterwards, when he was become wicked and foolish, and lascivious, "and idolatrous." And he affirms, that there are some very plain and particular chronological characters in this book, which determine it to belong to the latter and worse part of his life, and to that only. And,

The first passage in it, which he mentions to confirm this, is Cant. i. 9. where the church is compared to a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariots; which he imagines refers to those horses and chariots which Solomon, contrary to an express command, Deut. xvii. 16. had brought unto him out of Egypt, 1 Kings x. 28, 29. when he began to degenerate from his former piety: in answer to which, it may be replied, that the comparison in the text, under consideration, is not made to a company of horses brought out of Egypt, which ran in Solomon's chariots, but to a company of horses in Egypt, which ran in Pharaoh's chariots; so that this text falls very much short of proving what it is produced for.

His other chronological evidence of this book's belonging to the loose and vicious part of Solomon's life, is Cant. vii. 12. where mention is made of the chariots of Amminadib; in which he supposes there are more proofs than one, of what he contends for: The first is, that here are chariots referred to, as used in Judea, which he says, we only meet with once before, since the days of Moses, viz. 2 Sam. viii. 4. though that appears to be a mistake; for Abshalom prepared himself chariots and horsemen, 2 Sam. xv. 1. as did also Adonijah, 1 Kings i. 5. both which were before Solomon's accession to the throne. His other proof from this text is, that this Amminadib was one of the twelve rulers of provinces, who married Taphath, the daughter of Solomon, 1 Kings iv. 11. and therefore he concludes that Solomon could not be a very young man when he wrote this book. To which I answer,

1st, That it is not Amminadib but Abinadab, that is there mentioned.

2<sup>dly</sup>, That it was not Abinadab, but the son of Abinadab that married Solomon's daughter.

3dly, It is not likely that king Solomon's son-in-law should be a chariot driver, as this Ammiadib is thought to be by many interpreters, who was famous for his skill, courage, and swiftness in driving.

The last chronological evidence he mentions, p. 10. and which he takes to be the principal and most evident one, which shews in what particular time of Solomon's life this book was written, is Chap. vi. 8, 9. where mention is made of sixty queens and eighty concubines, and virgins without number; which he thinks refers to Solomon's wicked practice of polygamy, expressly forbidden, Deut. xvii. 17. To which I reply,

1st, That the allusion does not seem to be made to the number of Solomon's queens and concubines, but to the custom of some princes in the East, which Solomon had in view; for the number of queens and concubines here don't agree with the number of Solomon's, recorded 1 Kings xi. 3. where he is said to have seven hundred wives, and three hundred concubines, which is vastly different from the account which is given here: and if it should be said, that though when he wrote this book, he had not arrived to that prodigious pitch of wickedness in the practice of polygamy, to which he afterwards did; yet he had begun, and gone a great way in it, and had at that time he wrote it, such a number of wives and concubines, as are here mentioned, which he refers to. I answer, 2dly, That it is not likely that Solomon should prefer one of his wives, and praise her above all the rest; which would have been the way to have alienated their affections from him, and made her the object of their envy, as well as have raised such domestick feuds and quarrels, which would not easily be laid. Besides,

3dly, It does not seem reasonable to suppose that those other queens and concubines of Solomon's should speak so much in the praise and commendation of his lawful wife, as these are said to do here; which is not usual for such sort of persons to do. As to those other texts referred to, viz. Chap. i. 3, 5. and ii. 7. and iii. 5, 10, 11. and v. 8, 16. and vi. 9. and viii. 4, 6, 7. produced by Mr. Whiston, to prove that the person, who is the bridegroom in this song, loved many other women and virgins, of which his spouse was jealous; I need only say, that those texts do indeed express the love of the daughters of Jerusalem to him, and the notice which the spouse took of them, for whom she appears to have a very great value and affection, to whom she often points out her beloved, and directs them to observe the transcendent excellencies and beauties of his person, as well as strictly charges them to give him no disturbance: yet she also signifies her very great love and regard to him; but no where insinuates any wandering affection or wanton love in him unto others, or that she was jealous of him upon that account.

II. His next reason, p. 12, 13. is, "that there is no foundation for an allegorical or mystical sense of this book; there being not the least sign of a sober, virtuous, or divine meaning therein, nor any thing that in the “least concerns morality or virtue, God or religion, the Messiah or his kingdom:” which, if true, would indeed go a great way against the authority of it; but I hope the following Exposition will make it appear that there is a good foundation in it for a mystical or allegorical sense, agreeable enough to the analogy of faith; as well as shew that there are many things in it, which encourage morality and virtue, promote the cause of God and religion, and concern the Messiah and his kingdom; and Mr. Whiston has not thought fit to give any one instance which discovers the contrary.
" least

III. He says, p. 13. that, “the introduction of double or mystical senses of scripture among the Jews, is much later than the days of Solomon; and “cannot therefore be supposed to belong to any book of his writing:” but this does not appear to be true, for surely the speech of Jotham to the men of Shechem, recorded in Judges ix. must be understood in an allegorical or mystical sense; and Nathan’s parable, 2 Sam. xii. 1. which were delivered long before Solomon’s time. Moreover, the 45th Psalms is of the very same strain, and bears a very near resemblance with this song, which was wrote by David, Solomon’s father: besides, suppose this allegorical and mystical way of writing had not been used before, by the inspired writers, it is no argument that it should not be used now, as it was afterwards in the writing of the new Testament, as Mr. Whiston confesses, p. 22.

IV. Another reason which he produces, p. 23. is, that “neither the contemporary, nor succeeding writers of the Old Testament, ever quote or allude to this book of Canticles, nor to any part thereof, upon any occasion whatsoever.” The same may be said of many other books of the Old Testament, whose authority was never yet called in question; nor can this be look’d upon by judicious persons, a sufficient reason why any of them should.

V. He says, p. 24. “The apocryphal writers of the Old Testament, never quote nor allude to this book, nor to any part thereof upon any occasion whatsoever.” Which I persuade myself, will be no ways shocking or stumbling to any thoughtful Christian, nor be look’d upon by them as a sufficient objection against the authority of it; had they expressly opposed it, it could not have been very considerably improved against it, much less will their silence have any force to explode it; and yet after all, in Eccles. xlvii. 18. Solomon is admired for his Songs, Proverbs, and Parables.

VI. He urges, p. 25. that “Philo, the eminent Alexandrian Jew, who was contemporary with Christ and his earliest apostles, and who was prodigiously fond of mystical or allegorical senses of scripture, does yet never cite nor allude to this book of Canticles, nor to any part of it, on any occasion whatsoever.” Be it so, that it is not once cited or alluded to in his writings; for though they are voluminous, there are but few citations of scripture in them; yet it does not follow from thence that it must be spurious. Many books in the canon of the scripture, whose authority is unquestionable, would yet stand upon a very precarious foundation, if citations out of them, and allusions to them in human writings, were absolutely necessary to their continuance in it.

VII. What he lays a considerable stress upon, and makes the main foundation for the exclusion of this book, is, that Josephus not only, neither cites nor alludes to it, but has also left it out in his catalogue of the sacred writings. That he should neither cite nor allude unto it, in writing a history, need not be wondered at; but if it can be made appear that it is not to be found in his catalogue, it will indeed be a considerable objection against it. Now the account which Josephus<sup>1</sup> gives of the sacred writings among the Jews, is only this, viz. that they had only two and twenty books, five of which are books of Moses, thirteen wrote by the prophets, and the other four contained holy hymns and moral precepts. Now in this account he seems to have regard to the division of the books of the old Testament into three parts<sup>m</sup>, used by the Jews; which was first, the law; secondly, the prophets; and thirdly, the Hagiographa; which our Lord also takes notice of, Luke xxiv. 44. where he saith; These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled, which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning me; where by the Psalms is meant the whole third part, called the Hagiographa, because it began with that book; which also contained the most plain and manifest testimonies of the person, office, and sufferings of Christ, than any other book in that part did. Now the order of the books, according to this division of them, which Josephus has a regard to, was this, viz.

In the law, which was the first division, stood

These are the five books of Moses according to Josephus.

1. Genesis.
2. Exodus.
3. Leviticus.
4. Numbers.
5. Deuteronomy.

In the prophets, which was the second division, stood

These are the thirteen books of the prophets, according to Josephus.

1. Joshua.
2. Judges, with Ruth; which make but one book.
3. Samuel 1 and 2. but one book; hence Samuel is called a prophet. Acts xiii. 20.
4. Kings 1 and 2. but one book.
5. Isaiab.
6. Jeremiab, with the Lamentations, but one book.
7. Ezekiel.
8. Daniel.
9. The twelve minor prophets, but one book. Vid. Mar. i. 2. Acts vii. 42.
10. Job.
11. Ezra and Nebemiab, but one book.
12. Esther.
13. Chronicles 1 and 2. but one book.

In the Hagiographa, which was the third division, stood

 containing holy hymns { 2. Proverbs.
 cording to Josephus. { 4. Solomon's Song; in all 22.

From hence it appears, that there is no force in this objection; nor has Mr. Whiston any reason to charge Dean Prideaux with forcing this book of Solomon's Song into Josephus's catalogue; for his twenty two books cannot be made up without it; though the Dean had no manner of reason to leave out the book of Chronicles, seeing Ezra and Nehemiah, which he makes to be two books are comprehended in one by the Jews, which he himself also <sup>a</sup> observes. The Jews indeed, at this present time, reckon the books of the old Testament to be twenty-four, and that by making Ruth, which is a continuation of the history of the book of Judges, and the Lamentations, which were wrote by Jeremy, and so properly belong to him; two books distinct by themselves; and even in this account of theirs of the sacred writings, this book of Canticles keeps its place, nor did they ever pretend to exclude it.

VIII. Another argument used by Mr. Whiston, p. 29. is, that "our blessed Saviour himself does never once make the least allusion to this book, or to any part of it, on any occasion whatsoever": To this I reply, that it appears plain and manifest, that several phrases used by our Saviour, bear a near resemblance with, are allusions to, and seem to be taken out of this book: Thus the efficacious grace of God is expressed, by drawing, John vi. 44. agreeable to Cant. i. 4. In his discourse with Nicodemus, he compares the holy Spirit to the wind, John iii. 8. which metaphor is used Cant. iv. 16. likewise he seems manifestly to allude, in Mat. xiii. 52. where the instructed Scribe is said to bring forth things new and old, to Cant. vii. 13. where the very phrase is used: As also his comparing the church to a vineyard, and letting it out to husbandmen, are very agreeable to, and are the very phrases used Cant. viii. 11, 12. To all which might be added, several other resemblances and allusions, which are to be found in the evangelic history, as Mat. xxv. 1, 5. compared with Cant. v. 2. and Mat. ix. 13. John iii. 29. where Christ is called the bridegroom, and the disciples the children of the bride-chamber, agreeable to the several parties in this song.

IX. He says, p. 30. that "when St. John, the beloved disciple, came at the end of his Revelation, to this very matter of the marriage of the Lamb, "or Messias; yet have we not a word of it, i. e. this book, nor the least allusion to it, or to any part of it, whatsoever". That John, in his book of Revelation, refers and alludes to this of Solomon's Song, seems undeniable; every one may easily observe what a likeness and resemblance there is between the description which the spouse gives of her beloved in Cant. v. and that which John gives of Christ in Rev. i. Moreover, the phrase of Christ's standing

ing at the door, and knocking, Rev. iii. 20. manifestly refers unto, and plainly appears to be taken out of Cant. v. 2. where the spouse says, it is the voice of my beloved that knocketh, saying, open to me, &c. Besides what John says of the marriage of the Lamb, and the preparation of the bride for it; if it is not an allusion to, yet it is a confirmation of what is said in this book, where the church is represented as beautifully array'd and adorn'd, and as passionately wishing for the consummation of the marriage; nay, this is spoken of as compleated, Cant. ii. 16. and the glory and pomp of the solemnity describ'd, Cant. iii. 11. with the joy that was expressed on that occasion; for there the day of his espousals is called the day of the gladness of his heart; also it deserves our notice, that those two books of Revelation and Solomon's Song, conclude much in the same manner. John closes his book of the Revelation, and with it the canon of the scriptures, with a passionate wish for Christ's second coming, saying, Amen; even so come, Lord Jesus: and the church concludes the book of Solomon's Song thus; Make haste, my beloved, and be thou like to a roe, or to a young hart upon the mountains of spices.

X. As what he thinks will much prejudice the authority of this book, he says, p. 30. that "the writers of the known books of the new Testament, with their earliest companions, the apostolical fathers of the first century; St. Matthew, St. John, St. Peter, St. Paul, St. Mark, St. Luke, St. James, St. Jude, St. Clement, in his epistles, St. Barnabas, that prodigious allegorizer, and St. Hermas: I may add (says he) and St. Polycarp also, one of their later companions, do never once cite or allude to this book of Canticles, or to any part of it, on any occasion whatsoever." That the evangelists, Matthew and John, either in using their own, or in recording the words of Christ, have alluded to some passages in this book, I have already shown, and the same may be said of the other evangelists, Mark and Luke, who mention several of the very same things; for which, see Mark ii. 19, 20. and xii. 1. Luke v. 34, 35. and xx. 9. and it seems very evident, the apostle Paul has reference to it in many passages of his writings, as will appear from comparing 2 Cor. ii. 14, 15, 16. Eph. v. 2. with Cant. i. 3. as also Col. ii. 16, 17. Heb. x. 1. with Cant. ii. 17. and iv. 6. to which may be added, Eph. v. 27. compared with Cant. iv. 7. So that seeing there are so many passages in several of the writers of the known books of the New Testament, which bear so near a resemblance, and have so manifest an allusion to some parts of this book; it need not much concern us, that Clement, Barnabas, Hermas and Polycarp take no notice of it.

XI. What he thinks will much prejudice the authority of this book, is, "that the Apostolical Constitutions give no manner of reason to suppose that this book of Canticles was then looked upon as a book of scripture, but the direct contrary." Now those books called the Constitutions of the Apostles, by Clement, Mr. Whiston looks upon to be truly authentic and apostolical; when they appear manifestly to be spurious, entirely destitute of apostolical authority, of a much later date than the times of the apostles, and containing several things and doctrines directly opposite unto them. As for instance, praying with the face to the East, is enjoyn'd, l. 2. c. 57.

and l. 7. c. 44. Trigamy is asserted to be an indication of incontinency; and such marriages as are beyond the third, are called manifest fornication, and unquestionable uncleanness, l. 3. c. 2. Anointing with oil in baptism is enjoined, l. 3. c. 15, 16. and l. 7. c. 27, 41, 42. The keeping of the day of Christ's nativity, Epiphany, the Quadragesima, or Lent, the feast of the passover, and the festivals of the apostles, l. 5. c. 13. and l. 8. c. 33. Fasting on the fourth and sixth days of the week, l. 5. c. 15. Baptizing of infants, l. 6. c. 15. Singing for the dead, and honouring of their reliques, l. 6. c. 30. Nay, praying for saints departed, l. 8. c. 41, 42, 43, 44. As also crossing with the sign of the cross in the forehead, l. 8. c. 12. Moreover, the Lord's supper is called an unbloody sacrifice, l. 6. c. 23. and l. 8. c. 5, 46. 'Tis likewise asserted, that Christ, in the celebration of that ordinance, mixed wine and water in the cup, l. 8. c. 12. Nay, concubines continuing so, are allowed an admittance to a participation of that sacred ordinance, l. 8. c. 32. with many other things which appear foreign enough from the simplicity of the apostolic age, doctrine, and practice. And now who that reads and considers these things, will ever think that those writings can furnish out an argument sufficient to prejudice the authority of the book of Solomon's Song? had any thing been said in them, which was expressly against it, it would scarce have deserved consideration, much less should their silence about it be improved as an evidence against it. And yet after all, it is pretty to observe how much Mr. Whiston himself is foiled with two passages in them, which appear to be allusions and references to a passage in this book; the one is in l. 6. c. 13. where the false apostles are called αλωπέκων μερίδες ἢ χαμαιζήλων ἀμπελώνων ἀφανισαί, the portions of foxes, and the spoilers of the low vineyards: And again, in the same book, c. 18. where those same persons are said to spoil the church of God, ὡς ἀλώπεκες μικροὶ ἀμπελῶνας, as the little foxes do the vineyards; which are manifest references to Cant. ii. 15. and over against the latter of which passages Mr. Whiston himself has placed this text as referring to it, in the Edition of the Constitutions, which he has published. Now to evade the force of this, he is obliged to make this part of the work to be of a later date than the rest, even later than the destruction of Jerusalem; lest this book of Canticles should appear to have obtained authority too early in the world: He acknowledges that it is in the catalogue of the sacred writings, mentioned in the Canons of the Apostles, Can. 85. which he looks upon to be genuine and authentick, though he questions its being in the original copies of those canons; he allows, that Ignatius, in his larger epistle to the Ephesians, cites Cant. i. 3, 4. and is very willing to grant it a place in Melito's catalogue, which I have before mentioned: So that from the whole it appears, that the Apostolical Constitutions are so far from making against the authority of this book, that they rather make for it; though their testimony is good for nothing, the whole being a spurious work, and carries in it evident marks of falshood and impiety, and was condemned as false and heretical by the sixth general ral synod, held at Constantinople<sup>1</sup>, about the year 680. Thus have I considered the several arguments and objections produced by Mr. Whiston to disprove the sacred authority of this book, which, notwithstanding, appears to have a divine stamp upon it<sup>m</sup>. There is one objection more made against it, which I think Mr. Whiston has took no notice of, and that is, that no proper name of God is to be found in this song. To which I reply, in the words of "Mr. Durham ; " 1. That it is so also " in other scriptures, as in the book of Ester ; the scripture's authority " doth not depend on naming the name of God, but on having his " warrant and authority. 2. This song being allegorical and figurative, " it's not so meet nor consistent with its style, to have God named under " proper names, as in other scriptures: Yet, 3. There are titles and de- " scriptions here given to an excellent person, which can agree to none " other but Christ, the eternal son of God ; as, the king, O thou whom " my soul loveth, the chief of ten thousands, the rose of Sharon, and the " like ; whereby his eminency is singularly set out above all others in " the world". Hence it appears, that the sacred and divine authority of this book remains firm and unshaken, notwithstanding those objections made against it ; nor is there any reason for persons to scruple it, much less to reject it from the canon of the scriptures, especially seeing it may be improved and made useful for the consolation and edification of God's people. I proceed,

Secondly, To consider the Nature and subject of this book ; it being a song in which the bride and bridegroom, with their friends and companions, the daughters of Jerusalem, bear their several parts ; and it being a divine song, is, no doubt, intended for the glorifying of Christ, the chearing and refreshing of his church, and also the edification of others ; for it is the duty of saints to be teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns ; and spiritual songs ; singing with grace in their hearts to the Lord. I shall not enter into the consideration of the controversy, whether singing of the praises of God vocally, is an ordinance to be used under the new Testament, though I firmly believe it to be so ; nay, that it is one of the most noble, and most glorious branches of religious worship, it being that which comes nearest to the employment of saints in a glorified state ; and what requires a great deal of light, knowledge, experience, faith and love to perform in a right way and manner : nor shall I need to observe those several cases of conscience concerning singing, which have a very good solution from this song ; such as these, viz. whether the distressed cases of God's children may be sung, or they sing when in distressed circumstances : Whether complaints of their sins, failings and infirmities, may be put into their songs : Whether cases different from theirs, yea, such as they have not attained unto, may be sung ; sung; as also whether it is lawful to sing the praises of God in mix'd assemblies; all which may be answered in the affirmative, and for which this song affords a sufficient foundation; the church here bringing her sorrows and distresses into this song, as well as her comforts and privileges, Cb. i. 6. and iii. 1. and v. 7. nay, her sins and failings, Cb. i. 5, 6. and v. 2, 3, 4. Very different cases are also here sung; yea, such, which if taken in a strict sense, she had not fully attained to, as in Cb. viii. 12. Moreover, she sings in the presence of, and joins with the Virgins the daughters of Jerusalem, who seemed in a great measure to be ignorant of Christ, Cb. v. 8, 9. and vi. 8, 9, 10. all which are largely and judiciously insisted upon by the excellent Mr. Durham, in his Exposition of this place, to which I refer the reader: I proceed more particularly to consider the nature and subject of this song; which,

<sup>m</sup> Since I wrote this, I have met with an Answer to these Arguments of Mr. Whiston by the very learned Carpzorius, Professor of Divinity in the University of Leipsick, published in his Critica Sacra, Par. 3. which was printed in the Year 1728, the same Year my Exposition of this Book first came out. In the Year 1729 was published a Translation of the Critica Sacra into English, so far as it is concerned with Mr. Whiston, by Moses Marcus, a converted Jew.

1st. Is not a celebration of the amours between Solomon and Pharaoh's daughter, which has been the opinion of some, as has been already observed; for there are some things in it which are spoken of this bridegroom, which cannot be applied to Solomon, as that he was both a king and a shepherd, as in Cb. i. 4. compared with ver. 7. that he was his wife's brother, and she his sister, Cb. v. 2. and viii. 1. Nor is it likely that Solomon would ever give such commendations of himself, as are mentioned in Cb. v. 10. &c. There are also many things spoken of the bride, which by no means agree with Pharaoh's daughter, as that she was a keeper of the vineyards, Cb. i. 6. and yet a prince's daughter, Cb. vii. 1. that she should be represented as running about the streets in the night, unattended, Cb. iii. 2. and be exposed to the blows and contempt of the watchmen, Cb. v. 7. besides, several of the descriptions here given of her, if taken in a literal sense, would rather make her appear to be a monster than a beauty, as Cb. iv. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. and Cb. vii. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. all which agree very well, when understood of Christ, and his Church. Nor,

2<sup>dly</sup>. Is it typical, that is to say, this book does not express the amours and marriage of Solomon and Pharaoh's daughter, as typical of that inexpressible love and marriage-union between Christ and his church; 'tis true, there is some resemblance between natural and spiritual marriage, as is manifest from Eph. v. 23, 24, 25, 29, 31, 32. nor is it altogether to be denied, that Solomon was a type of Christ, in some respects, in his marriage of that person; but that this book is an Epithalamium, or nuptial song composed by him on that occasion, and that in such a manner, as at the same time also to be expressive of the love of Christ to his church, must be denied; for Solomon's marriage of Pharaoh's daughter was at least twenty years before this book was wrote, as appears from Cb. vii. 4. where mention is made of the tower of Lebanon, by which seems to be meant, the house of the forest of Lebanon, or some tower near unto it; now he was seven years in building the temple, 1 Kings vi. 38. and thirteen more in building his own house, 1 Kings vii. 1. after which he built this, ver. 2. From hence it may be reasonably concluded, that this book was not penned on any such occasion; for for Solomon would never write a nuptial song twenty years after his marriage, which should have been sung the same night he was married. Nor,

4thly. The whole is figurative and allegorical; setting forth in a variety of lively metaphors, the mutual love, union and communion, which are between Christ and his church; also expressing the several different frames, cases and circumstances which attend believers in this life; so that they can come into no state or condition, but here is something in this song suited to their experience; which serves much to recommend it to believers, and discovers the excellency of it. Which,

Thirdly, Comes next to be considered, it being called the Song of Songs, for this reason, because it is the most excellent of songs; so the baby of holies is used for the most holy, and the King of kings and Lord of lords, for the greatest King and chiefest Lord. This song is more excellent than all human songs; there's no comparison between them, either in the subject, style, or manner of composition: it has the ascendant of all those 1005 songs, which Solomon himself made, of which we read, 1 Kings iv. 32. nay, is preferable to all scriptural songs; the subject of it being wholly and purposely the love of Christ to his church; its style is lovely and majestic; the manner of its composition neat and beautiful; and the matter of it full and comprehensive, being suited to all believers, and their several cases: This song indeed contains all others in it, and has nothing wanting and deficient therein. The Jews say in their ancient book of Zohar*, that "this song comprehends the whole law; the whole work of the creation; the secret of the fathers; the captivity of Egypt, and the coming out of Israel from thence; the song that was sung at the sea; the covenant of mount Sinai; the journey of the Israelites through the wilderness; their entrance into the land of Canaan; the building of the temple; the crown of the holy name; the captivity of Israel among the nations, and their

Fourthly, The author or penman of this song, is said to be Solomon; the Song of Songs, which is Solomon's, i. e. which is of, or concerning Solomon, * as the words may be render'd; and so respect the subject of this song, which is Christ, the true Solomon, of whom Solomon was an eminent type, as is at large shewn in several particulars, on Ch. iii. 7. Now 'tis he that this song treats of; the transcendent glories and excellencies of his person; his inexpressible love unto, care of and concern for his church and people, together with the nearness of access unto, and sweet communion and fellowship with himself, which he indulges them with, are here particularly expressed and set forth; so that it may well be called the Song of Songs, which is concerning Solomon: though, perhaps, the words may regard Solomon as the author and penman of it, who was used by the holy Ghost as his Ama-nuensis therein, which was no small honour to him; his wisdom, riches and grandeur, did not set him above an employment of this nature; nay, his being concerned herein, was a greater honour to him than all the rest: and it may not be amiss to observe, that his royal title, as king of Israel, is here omitted, which yet is put at the beginning of both his other books, Proverbs and Ecclesiastes; the reason may be, either because such a title, expressive of majesty, would not so well have suited a song of loves; or else it is purposely omitted, lest he should be thought to be the king, so frequently spoken of in this song; or rather because that the subject of this song is the King of kings; and therefore, whilst he is speaking of the things which he had made, touching the king, he lays aside his own royal title, veils his majesty, and casts his crown at the feet of him, by whom kings reign, and princes decree justice. The time of his writing this book does not appear very manifest; some think that he wrote it in his youthful days, the subject being love, and the manner of its writing being poetry, both which the youthful age mostly inclines to, and delights in; but it appears from what has been already said, that it was not wrote until twenty years after his marriage, when he could not be a very young man; it seems therefore most likely that he wrote it a little before his death, after his fall and repentance, when he had had a larger discovery of the love of God unto his own soul, notwithstanding all his sins, failings, and infirmities; and so a proper person for the holy Ghost to use in setting forth the greatness of Christ's love to his people, and the several different states, conditions, cases and circumstances, which they are, at one time or another, brought into in this life, of which he had had a very great experience. But from the title, I shall now proceed to the consideration of the book it self; which thus begins, * So Midrash in loc.

Ver. 2. Let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth; for thy love is better than wine.

HAVING considered the title, now follows the song it self, which begins with these words; and it being dialogue-wise, where several parties are concerned, and do interchangeably speak, it will be therefore necessary, in order to explain them, to consider,

- I. Who the person is that speaks and begins the song.
- II. To whom this speech is directed.
- III. The nature of the request that is made. And,
- IV. The reason of it.

I. Let us consider who the person is that speaks; it appears clearly to be the church and bride of Christ, who here begins and continues speaking, to ver. 8. She first directs her speech to Christ, in this and the two following verses; in ver. 5, 6. she turns her self to the daughters of Jerusalem; and then again to Christ, in ver. 7. she begins the song, which,

1st. Does not suppose that she was first in her love to Christ: she was not before-hand with him, either in the love or in the expressions, and manifestations of it; for he had loved her with an everlasting love, and therefore had thus sweetly drawn her with the bands of love, to himself. 'Christ is first, both in his love and in the discovery of it; for we love him, because he first loved us; 'tis the manifestation of Christ's love to our souls, which causes us to love him again, and in some way or other to shew it.

2dly, Neither does it suppose, that her love to Christ, and desires of his presence and company, were more ardent than his were to her; for as Christ's love is prior to ours, so it far exceeds, and is much superior to it; neither can believers be more desirous of Christ's company, than he is of theirs. But,

3dly, It shews that she was impatient of delay, and could not bear his absence any longer; she was sick of love, for hope deferred maketh the heart sick; she had, perhaps, been hoping, waiting for, and expecting his presence a considerable time, and he was not come; therefore growing impatient, breaks out in this abrupt manner, let him kiss me, &c. or, O that he would kiss me with one of the kisses of his mouth; I cannot be easy unless he does.

4thly, She speaks as one who had had experience of Christ's love; she knew how sweet the kisses of his mouth were, and how delightful his company had been to her in time past; she had tasted that the Lord was gracious, and therefore was so earnestly desirous of the returns of these love-visits, venting her heart and soul in these passionate wishes and desires. And,

5thly, Though Christ gives the first discoveries of love on his part; yet when the church is espoused unto him, it highly becomes her to shew an affectionate regard unto him, and strong desire after his company.

II. It will be proper to take notice of the person to whom this speech is directed, and that is Christ; and the form of speech here used, is also worthy our regard; here's no particular mention made of any person; no one particularly named, whose company she desired; but only him, let him kiss me, &c. 'tis a relative without an antecedent, of which we have many instances in scripture, as Psal. lxxxvii. 1. Isa. liii. 2. Lam. iii. 1. unless we suppose that the antecedent to it is Solomon, in ver. 1. let him, i. e. Solomon, or Christ, who is Solomon's anti-type, whose song this is, and who is the subject of it; let him, I say, kiss me with the kisses of his mouth; though the connection seems rather to be with the thoughts of her heart, than with any words before expressed: she had had him so much in her thoughts, and her love was so fixed on him, she knew him so well, and had had so much converse with him, that she thought there was no need to mention his name; but that every one must very well know who she designed; as Mary Magdalene, at Christ's sepulchre, when Jesus said unto her, ' woman, why weepest thou? whom seekest thou? she supposing him to be the gardiner, saith unto him; Sir, if thou have born him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him, and I will take him away. Suppose he had been the gardiner, how should he have known who this him was she meant? But she was much in the same frame as the church is here, who speaks of Christ as if there was no other in the world besides him; and indeed he's a nonfuch, the most eminent person in the world, in the believers esteem; whose language is, whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire besides thee, Psal. lxxiii. 25. Christ then is the person here spoken of, whom she intends, and to whom she directs her speech.

III. Having took notice of the person speaking, and to whom this speech is directed, we will now consider the request it self, which is here made, let him kiss me, &c. and this may be considered, either,

First, As the request of the church, under the old Testament. And that, 1st, For the manifestation of Christ in the flesh; than which nothing was more passionately longed for, and earnestly desired; many kings and prophets greatly desired it; yea, all the Old Testament saints did more or less pray, as David did, ' O that the salvation of Israel were come out of Zion; and this they were so vehemently desirous of, because they knew hereby redemption from all evil would be obtained, the curse removed, and all spiritual blessings procured for them; Christ's incarnation being, like kisses, a pledge and indication of his love, was very desirable to the church, and, as appears by her expressions, would be exceeding grateful to all those who were waiting for the consolation of Israel: He had sent his prophets, and by them had spoken unto her at sundry times, and in divers manners; yet she is not easy and contented herewith, but would have greater displays of his grace, by his appearing in his own person to kiss her with the kisses of his mouth.

2dly, For the doctrines of the gospel, in opposition to the law. Most of the Jewish writers understand, by the kisses of his mouth, the words of the law, which God spake to the people face to face; but that dispensation was not so desirable an one; for they that heard that voice of words, intreated that the word should not be spoken to them any more; for they said unto Moses, speak thou with us, and we will hear; but let not God speak with us, lest we die. The words of the law contain sharp and severe rebukes for sin; pronounce the sinner guilty before God; curse and condemn him, and are the killing letter to him; therefore these are not the kisses of Christ's mouth, which the church here desires; but rather they are the sweet and comfortable doctrines of the gospel, which may be so called.

1. Because they come from him; they are the words of his mouth, which drop from him like sweet smelling myrror; he is the author of them, he has spoke and delivered them, they proceed alone from him, and 'tis he that owns, blesses, and makes them useful to men.

2. As kisses, they carry in them intimations of his love to souls, to whom they come in power, and in the holy Ghost; the love of Christ is the great subject of the gospel; it fills all the doctrines thereof, which give a noble display of it, and lead into a farther acquaintance with it.

3. As the kisses of a friend, they are grateful and acceptable to believers; they are more valuable to them than their necessary food, and are preferred by them to all that's dear in life, yea, to life it self, however they are slighted and despised by the men of the world.

4. As kisses, they raise the affections and fill the soul with love to Christ; kisses, as they are indications of, so they are incentives to love. When the truths of the gospel come with power upon a sinner's heart, they let in, not only a great deal of light, but also a large measure of love; faith comes hereby, and that works by love, both to Christ and to his Gospel. Or,

Secondly, We may consider this request as the request of the church, or of every particular believer, for the enjoyments and manifestations of Christ's love. The manifestation of Christ's love is very desirable to believers, who would always have it if they could; this is their heaven on earth, and the beginning of glory to them; this comforts them in all their troubles, and is preferred by them to all earthly enjoyments; and may be called the kisses of Christ's mouth.

1st, Because kisses are evidences and pledges of love amongst nearest relations: Christ stands in, and fills up all relations to his people, and has affections for them suitable to them all; he is a kind and indulgent father, a tender husband, an affectionate brother, and loving friend; of all which he has given, and continues to give, full, and incontestable proofs; of which the kisses of his mouth are plain and undeniable evidences.

2dly, Kisses are tokens of reconciliation and agreement. Now though reconciliation is made by the blood of Christ, and believers have the comfortable application of it to their souls; yet every time that Christ withdraws his presence from them, they are ready to think that he is angry with them, and is not reconciled unto them; but when he shews himself again, and manifests his love, then they can behold him, and God in him, as reconciled unto them.

1. To shew the various ways Christ has to manifest his love, sometimes by one providence, and sometimes by another, sometimes in one ordinance, and sometimes in another; he is not ty'd to one way, but has divers ways, and makes use of various means to shew himself unto his people; he is never at a loss when he thinks fit to do it.

2. To denote the frequent and repeated actings of his love to her soul; which she was desirous of; she was for having not one kiss, but many, one discovery and manifestation of his love and grace after another; yea, many visits from him, until she arrived to the full enjoyment of his love, with himself, in glory. Or,

3. The words may be read thus; let him kiss me with one of the kisses of his mouth. See Cb. iv. 9. and then the sense is; "O that I had but one glimpse, one view, one discovery more of his love and grace unto my soul, but one kiss more from his mouth, which is most sweet, and altogether lovely; how great a satisfaction would it be to me, could I have but this request granted:" which way of speaking shews how exceeding grateful the manifestations of Christ's love are to believers. Again, These are also said to be the kisses of his mouth, which is not to be looked upon as a mere Hebraism, or as a redundancy in expression; but this heaping up of words shew,

(1.) The vehemency of her affection, how much her heart was set upon, and how eagerly desirous she was of, communion with Christ; and therefore pours out words, that she might fully express her mind; for out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh.

(2.) She mentions the kisses of his mouth, in contradistinction to any other; she valued the kisses of no other mouth but Christ's; the kisses of any mouth were not desirable to her, none but the kisses of his mouth were.

(3.) She does hereby express the singular satisfaction she should take herein; let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth; "his mouth, which is sweet

“and delightful to me; his mouth, whom my soul loves, whom I value and esteem above all others, and in the enjoyment of whom I place my chiefest happiness.” Or,

(4.) It may point out that particular way and manner in which she was desirous that he would manifest his love unto her, i. e. by his word of promise in the gospel; as if she should say, “O that he would manifest himself, and break up his love and grace to my soul, in some kind promise or other, which may drop from his mouth, and be brought home unto me by the spirit of grace.”

Fourthly, She assigns a reason for this request, for thy love is better than wine; here is a sudden change of person, from the third to the second; before she said, let him kiss me, &c. now she says, for thy love, &c. the reason of which, perhaps, is, because he was absent before, but now present; she had lost sight of him, and speaks of him as at a distance from her; but now he is in view, at the very sight of whom her faith is increased, and her soul fired with love; and having greater nearness to him, grows in her familiarity and boldness with him.

Here we shall, 1. Take notice of the love of Christ, and give some account of the nature and excellency of it: and, 2. Shew in what respects it is preferable to wine.

First, Let us consider this love of Christ, which is so highly commended by the church; in the Hebrew text it is in the plural number, loves, to shew,

1st, The various ways in which Christ has discovered it; he shew'd it by his suretyship-engagements for the elect in the everlasting covenant of grace and peace, of which he is the surety, mediator and messenger; he shewed it in his assumption of human nature in time; he has given a full display of it, in laying down his life for the sheep, in giving himself a ransom for many, and in offering himself a sacrifice for the sins of all his chosen ones; he has loved them and died for them, loved them and shed his precious blood for them, and in that blood has washed them from all their sins; he now shews, that he loves them, by appearing in the presence of God for them, acting as an advocate with the father, and preparing glory for them; and he will, e'er long, come again to take them to himself, that where he is, there they may be also.

2<sup>dly</sup>, It may intend the various effects of it; all the blessings of grace flow from it, such as vocation, sanctification, justification, adoption and glorification; all spring from this boundless and matchless love of Christ.

3<sup>dly</sup>, Being in the plural number, may denote the aboundings of it; it is superabounding love, love that has heights and depths, and lengths, and breadths; it is immeasurable and unconceivable; it passeth the perfect knowledge of men and angels.

4<sup>thly</sup>, The frequent discoveries of it, which are made to the saints; and, which, like the waters in Ezekiel's vision, increase and rise from the ankles to the knees, and from the knees to the loins, and from thence become waters to swim in, a river, an ocean of love, which cannot be passed over.

5<sup>thly</sup>, The great esteem the church had of Christ's love, which she shows, by calling it loves, in the plural number, as well as by saying, that it was better than wine: the excellency of which will further appear, if we consider the nature and properties of it; which are as follow.

1. As to the original of it, it is free and sovereign; it does not take its rise from any thing in us, or done by us; nothing of this nature moved him to it, but he loved us because he would love us; nothing out of himself moved him to it; it was not because we were better than others, for we are by nature children of wrath, even as others; he loved us when unlovely; he died for us while we were yet sinners, and ungodly in ourselves, and enemies to himself; our love to him is not the cause of his loving us, but his love to us is the cause of ours: in this he is intirely free and sovereign; he has pitched his love and grace on whom he will, and these he loves freely; he was not moved or influenced by foreseen faith or works, or any deservings of ours whatever; for we neither deserved nor desired his love, neither indeed could we have expected it.

2. As to the time of its commencement, it is from eternity; before the mountains were formed, and the highest part of the dust of the earth was made, he was rejoicing in the habitable part of his earth, and his delights were with the sons of men: that he loved his people from eternity, is manifest from his engaging as a surety for them; his becoming the mediator of an everlasting covenant; in which he agreed to take care of their persons, and by dying, to redeem their lives from destruction, and to bring them to eternal glory; as also, from his receiving all grace for them before the world began; all which manifestly shew that he had a love for them; for all the after actings of his love and grace, are but the openings and breakings forth of this love of his, which he bore towards them from everlasting.

3. As to its duration, it is to eternity; having loved his own, which were in the world, he loved them unto the end<sup>a</sup>: his love is invariable, unalterable and unchangeable; 'tis like himself, the same yesterday, to day, and for ever; all the waters of sin and corruption cannot extinguish it; nor can any creature in heaven, earth, or hell, separate his people from it.

4. As to the degree of it, it is the greatest love; <sup>a</sup> greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends; but Christ's love is greater than this; for he hath laid down his life for enemies, and even whilst they were such; here is great love for great sinners, shewn by a great person, one who thought it no robbery to be equal with God: and this he shew'd by giving himself a ransom for them; such is the greatness of this love, that it cannot fully be express'd by men or angels.

5. As to the quality of it, it is the nearest; that of the nearest relations and friends to each other, as of a parent to a child, of an husband to a wife, of brothers, or friends to each other, are but faint resemblances and meer shadows of this; all fall short of painting and expressing to the life the nature of this love.

6. As to the pattern or form of it, it is as the father's love to him; as the father hath loved me, says he, so have I loved you: as the father loves Christ, as mediator, with an everlasting, unchangeable, and inseparable love, so does Christ love his people. What surprizing grace is this, that Christ should:

should love us with such a love! when there's no comparison between him, who is the object of the one, and them, who are the objects of the other; when we contemplate this amazing love, conceptions fail us to comprehend it, words fall short of expressing it, in eternity only will those surprizing mysteries of grace be unfolded to us.

7. As to any instance of love, none can be compared with it, 'tis unparalleled'd; that of Jonathan's to David, of one friend's dying for another, and of those brave Romans who died for their country, which history furnishes us withal, can by no means equal or come near it; scarcely for a righteous man will one dye, peradventure for a good man some would even dare to dye, says the Apostle<sup>a</sup>; where he alludes<sup>a</sup> to the division of the Jewish nation into three parts, which were these; First, There were צְדִיקִים or righteous persons, who kept to the external letter of the law, and did as they imagined, what that required, but would do no more. Secondly, There were others called חַסִּידִים, or good men, who were bountiful and liberal to the poor, and did more than the law required in repairing the temple and maintaining of sacrifices, &c. but, Thirdly, There were another sort who were called רְשָׁעִים, or wicked and ungodly persons, who had no regard to the law, profligate wretches, the refuse of the people. Now for one of these righteous ones, says the apostle, scarce any would dye, because what he had done, he was obliged by the law to do; peradventure for one of these good men, one to whom he had been kind and liberal, a person would even dare to die; but who will die for the other sort, the wicked and ungodly? not one; but God commendeth his love towards us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us; O matchless and unparalleled love!

8. As to its effect upon the hearts of sinners, 'tis surprizing, comfortable and rejoicing; for souls, when but just let into it, begin that wonder, which will last throughout an endless eternity; they now place an ecce, a behold before it, and say as the Jews did of Christ, in regard to Lazarus, behold how he loved him! O how has he loved me, and me! says one and the other; what manner of love is this! 'tis surprizing, wonderful, passing the love of women, as David said concerning Jonathan's; and it being shed abroad in the heart, by the spirit of God, fills the soul with an universal pleasure, with a joy unspeakable and full of glory; the manifestations and discovery of it bear up the soul under all the trials of life, and make it long to be in glory, that it may have its fill thereof; wherefore it is no wonder the church here prefers it to wine, which,

Secondly, We shall now consider. The church had a real value for Christ's person, and therefore must needs esteem his love; his person, being, to her, the chiefest among ten thousands, his love must be preferable to all others; she had tasted a real sweetness in it, and had seen the vanity and emptiness of all earthly enjoyments, and therefore prefers it to wine; by which is intended the most sumptuous banquet, with all the dainties and delightful entertainments thereof: Nothing is so valuable as the love of Christ; Oh how excellent is thy loving kindness, says the Psalmist<sup>b</sup> 'tis better than life, and all the

the comforts, pleasures and profits thereof. I'll now endeavour to shew, in a few particulars, wherein this love of Christ is better than wine.

1st. It is preferable to it for its ancientness; good old wine is accounted the best; and therefore Christ says<sup>c</sup>, no man having drunk old wine, straightway desireth new: for he saith, the old is better. Now no wine is comparable to this of Christ's love, for its antiquity; for, as has been already shewn, 'tis a love which commences from everlasting, it does not bear date with time, but was before time was, and will be when time shall be no more. The Jews<sup>d</sup> often speak of wine, that has been reserved in the grape ever since the creation of the world, which, they imagine, they shall drink in the earthly kingdom of the Messiah; but this wine of divine love was laid up and reserved in the heart of Christ, long before the creation of the world; this excels all other wine for its antiquity.

2<sup>dly</sup>. It is preferable to wine for its purity; no wine so pure and unmix'd as this of Christ's love; it is wine on the lees, well refined, free from all the dregs of deceit, hypocrisy and dissimulation; 'tis a love unfeigned, a pure river of water of life.

3<sup>dly</sup>. It is better than wine, and is preferable to it, for its freeness and cheapness; wine is not every one's liquor, every one's purse cannot reach it, especially in some countries; but this wine of Christ's love, is to be had without money, and without price, than which nothing can be cheaper; nor is any thing freer, for it is freely shed abroad in the hearts of God's people, by the spirit.

4<sup>thly</sup>. For the plenty of it, it is preferable to wine; wine, as it is dear, so it is scarce in some places; but this, as it is cheap, and to be had freely, so there's plenty of it: In the marriage at Cana of Galilee, there was want of wine, but there's no want thereof in this feast of love, which Christ has made for his spouse and bride: This is a river, nay, an ocean of love, which flows forth in plentiful streams to poor sinners.

1. Wine will revive and cheer a man that is of an heavy heart, and therefore it is advised to be given to such, Prov. xxxi. 6. yet it will not bring a man to life that is dead; but such is the nature of Christ's love, that when it is convey'd into the heart of a sinner, dead in trespasses and sins, it makes him alive; for whenever it is a time of love to a poor sinner, it is also a time of life; nay, it not only conveys life, but it maintains and supports it, and keeps souls from dying; he that has had it shed abroad in his heart, by the spirit, shall never die the second death.

2. Wine may remove a worldly heaviness, or a sorrow on the account of worldly things, the things of time, but not a spiritual heaviness, or a sorrow on the account of the things of another world, the things of eternity; but the manifestation of Christ's love to the soul, can remove this sorrow and heaviness, and fill it with a joy unspeakable and full of glory, and give him that ease, comfort and satisfaction of mind, he is wishing for.

3. If a man drinks never such large draughts of the wine of Christ's love, it will never hurt him, when other wine, with excessive drinking of it, not only wastes the estates, but consumes the bodies, and destroys the health of men; but of this a man may drink freely and plentifully, without doing himself any hurt; nay, it will be of considerable advantage to him, and therefore says Christ in Cb. v. 1. Eat O friends, yea, drink abundantly, O my beloved.

No wonder then that the church was so desirous of enjoying Christ's presence, and having the manifestations of his love, to her soul, seeing his love is thus better than wine; besides, it may be observed that she makes use of this as an argument with him to obtain her request; and in so doing, shows what a value she had for the love of Christ, how much she esteemed it, as also what it was she expected and sought after, in desiring communion with him.

Ver. 3. Because of the savour of thy good ointments, thy name is as ointment poured forth; therefore do the virgins love thee.

THE church having mentioned the excellency of Christ's love, as the reason why she desired such intimate communion with him, proceeds in these words to take notice of his savoury ointments and precious name; which were both so delightful, fragrant and odorous, that even the Virgins, those chaste creatures, were ravished, and had fallen in love with him; and therefore it was no wonder that she, who was his spouse and bride, should express her love to him, and be so desirous of his company. In these words we have,

I. The savour of Christ's ointments expressed.

II. The fragrancy and preciousness of Christ's name declared.

III. The influence that all this has upon the hearts of the virgins, in attracting their love to Christ: therefore do the virgins love thee.

I. The savour of Christ's ointments is here expressed by the church, as having knowledge of them herself, and as having observed the effect of them upon the hearts of others. By ointments we are to understand the graces of the spirit of God, that oil of gladness with which Christ, as mediator, is anointed above his fellows; this was poured out without measure, upon him; 'tis like the precious ointment upon Aaron's head, that ran down upon his beard, and went down to the skirts of his garments; for this being poured upon Christ, the head, descends to all his members; from him they receive that anointing, which teacheth all things. In explaining these words, I'll endeavour,

First, To shew why the graces of the spirit in Christ, or in his members, are compared to ointments.

Secondly, Why they are called Christ's ointments.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, In what sense they are said to be good. And,

Fourthly, What's meant by the savour of them.

First, I shall endeavour to shew why the graces of the spirit, either in Christ or in his saints, are compared to ointments.

1st. With the holy anointing oil, which was made according to a divine prescription and direction, kings, priests and prophets were formerly anointed, and thereby installed into their several offices: Thus Saul, David and Solomon were anointed to be kings; thus Aaron and his sons were anointed to be priests; and thus Elisba was anointed prophet in the room of Elijah: Now, as with this anointing oil, these were anointed, and thereby installed into their offices; so Christ, with the anointing oil of the spirit, was anointed, and thereby installed into those offices, which he has taken upon him, and bears for the good of his people; 'tis with this he is anointed to be king, and is set over God's holy hill of Zion; 'tis with this he is consecrated a priest for evermore, to offer sacrifice, and make intercession for transgressors; and this same spirit being upon him, he is anointed therewith a prophet to preach good tidings to the meek. Christ, as the glorious God-man, was anointed and installed into his office as mediator, from eternity; his human nature was anointed with the Holy Ghost, at the time of its conception, in the virgin's womb; and more visibly at his baptism, when the spirit descended upon him as a dove; and still more gloriously at his ascension to, and session at the father's right hand, when he received from him the promise of the spirit, and was made or declared to be both Lord and Christ: And 'tis with the same unction that saints are by him made kings and priests unto God; kings, because grace reigns in their hearts now, and they shall reign with Christ in glory, for ever hereafter; priests, to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ.

2dly. With this holy anointing oil, all the vessels of the tabernacle were anointed and made fit for use, to which saints may be compared, who are chosen vessels, vessels of mercy, that were fore-ordained for glory; now these, in their natural state, are not fit for their master's use; yet when anointed with this unction, they are not only fit for their master's present use here, but are prepared for glory hereafter; the saints having the oil of grace, as well as the lamps of profession, are ready to go in with the bridegroom, whenever he comes and calls for them.

3dly. Anointing with oil was made use of for ornament; it makes the face to shine, as the psalmist says *. Christ, as man and mediator, is adorned with the grace of the spirit; he is fairer than the children of men, and the reason is, because grace is poured into his lips; he has a larger measure of this oil of gladness, than others, and therefore is the perfection of beauty; he is white and ruddy, the chiefest among ten thousand; and as Christ is, so the saints are adorned herewith, and become beautiful in his eye, being all glorious within: By this grace they are purified and prepared, and so presented as a chaste and beautiful virgin to Christ.

4thly. Anointing with oils or ointments was used for chearing and refreshing persons, being very useful for this purpose in hot countries; hence Solomon says 'ointment and perfume rejoice the heart'; and for this reason Mary brought ointment and anointed the feet of Jesus, to cool and refresh them while he sat at meat: These ointments or graces of the spirit are the oil of gladness, both to Christ and to his people; in the exercise of them, he, as man, was delighted and refreshed, and so are his saints; the grace of the spirit is, to them, the oil of joy for mourning; he, by his sweet influences and delightful operations on their souls, powerfully draws forth grace into exercise, and thereby administers much comfort to them; they are oftentimes fill'd with joy and peace in believing, being made to abound in hope through the power of the Holy Ghost.

Secondly, We'll now consider why these ointments are said to be Christ's.

1st. They are of his making; as he 'is God, he has an all-sufficiency of grace in himself, underived from any other, and is the author of all grace; this excellent composition is all his own; this ointment is made and prepared by his own hand: The holy anointing oil, though of Gods prescribing, yet it was not of his making, though, according to the composition of it, no other was to be made; but these ointments are not only prescribed, but made by him, that is, God; and none can make, according to the composition thereof; which shews the excellency of them.

2dly. He is the subject of them; as God, he is the author and maker, but, as mediator, they are communicated to him, they are poured into him, and upon him without measure; it pleased the Father, that in him should all fulness dwell; they are his, not only because made by him, but because they are in his possession, he is anointed with them above his fellows.

3dly. They are his, because he has a right to dispose of them; they are his own as God, being the maker of them; and they are his own as mediator, being given to him; wherefore he may do what he will with them, as indeed he does; he gives these ointments to whom he will, and he gives them freely and plentifully; he has a fulness of all grace in himself, and from thence saints receive grace for grace. This ointment being poured plentifully upon the head, runs down freely to all the members; these ointments are first Christ's, and then they are ours; he composed them as God, for our use and service, and they were given to him as mediator, for that purpose: Grace in Christ, and grace in us, are of the same nature, though not of the same degree; grace in us is as in its streams, but

grace in Christ is as in its fountain; it is but a small measure we have, but it is an infinite, an inexhaustible fulness that is in him; which may serve to recommend Christ to us, and direct us where to go for these oils or ointments.

Thirdly, They are said to be good ointments.

1st. They are good in their own nature; it is an excellent composition, there is no ingredient in them but what is good; grace, as wrought in us, is called, some good thing, toward the Lord God of Israel; it is a good work, which being begun, shall be performed until the day of Christ.

2dly. These ointments are both made, and applied by a good hand; for he that has made them, and he that anoints us with them, is God; the ingredients are not only good, but they are put together by a skillful hand; this unction is made by and received from the holy one.

3dly. They are good in their effects: they are good to make the face to shine, to adorn the saints, revive and refresh them; they are good to soften hard hearts, and heal wounded spirits; they are good to anoint the eyes with, and thereby recover, continue, and increase sight.

4thly. They are good in the believers esteem; they have had experience of their nature and effects, and can write probatum est upon each of them; and therefore highly value them, and with very good reason. For,

5thly. These ointments are exceeding rich and costly. The holy anointing oil was rich and costly, being made of the principal spices, but not to be compared with these; the ingredients of which are preferable to gold and silver, to rubies, and all things that can be thought of or desired; these are precious, rich and costly ointments indeed.

6thly. Which makes them still more valuable, they never lose their efficacy; dead flies cause the ointment of the apothecary to send forth a stinking savour; corrupt it so, that it loses its virtue, and becomes good for nothing; grace cannot be lost and perish in the saints; the anointing which they receive, abides in them; it is an immortal seed, a well of living water, springing up into eternal life; and notwithstanding the dead flies of their sins and corruptions, yet they cannot make the ointment of grace send forth a stinking savour; corruptions do, but grace never will; it is not indeed always in exercise, but it never will lose its nature or its virtue; the saints lamps shall never go out, being supplied with oil from that fulness of it that is in Christ.

Fourthly. These ointments are said to have a savour in them; and so they have to the believer, who savours not the things of men, but the things of God; for as for the natural man, he receiveth not, i. e. he savours not the things of the spirit of God, for they are foolishness, unsavoury and insipid things unto him: These ointments can no more be savoury to a carnal man, than food can be relishing to a man of a vitiated taste, or music be delightful to a deaf man, or colours pleasant to one that is blind; for as the one wants his taste, the other his hearing, and the third his sight, so this man wants his smelling, and therefore these ointments cannot be savoury to him; but they are so to the believer, who has his spiritual smelling: Now by the favour of these ointments, is intended the manifestation of Christ's grace unto the soul; the sense and perception which souls have of it, and their interest in it, fill them with pleasure and delight; and it was this which made the virgins love Christ, and the church so desirous of his company.

II. The church in these words declares the fragrantcy and preciousness of Christ's name, when she says, that his name is as ointment poured forth. It will be proper to enquire what is intended by the name of Christ, and in what sense that may be said to be as ointment poured forth.

1st. By the name of Christ may be meant his person, this being not an unusual way of speaking in the scripture; thus in Rev. iii. 4. Thou hast a few names, i. e. persons, even in Sardis, &c. and in Mat. xii. 21. and in his name shall the Gentiles trust, i. e. in the person of Christ shall the Gentiles trust; so here thy name is as ointment poured forth, i. e. thy person is as delightful, grateful, and odorous to me, as the pouring forth a box of ointment; thou art altogether lovely to me, thy whole person is so; every thing in thee is engaging, and thou hast every thing to render thee desirable to me; all beauty, power, wisdom, and grace, are in thee, that it is no wonder the virgins love thee; for not only thy mouth, but all of thee is lovely and desirable.

2<sup>dly</sup>. By it may be intended some one, or any of those names by which he is called. As,

1. The Messiah or Christ, which signifies anointed. So that in comparing it to ointment, there may be an allusion to the signification of the name itself, and may more particularly point out which name is intended, even the name Messiah, to which Christ, in the new Testament, answers; which though not very frequently met with in the old Testament, yet was well known to the ancient Jews, as appears from their Targums, where it is made use of in upwards of sixty * places, in which the Redeemer is treated of; and as it was well known, so it was highly esteemed of by them; they expected him who was to redeem Israel, under this title and character; and when he was come, and had revealed himself unto some, in an exulting manner they said one to another, we have found the Messiah, which is, being interpreted, the Christ: That name had been always precious to the saints, who waited for the consolation of Israel, and was then like a box of ointment poured forth, exceeding grateful, delightful, and refreshing to them.

2. Another name by which Christ is called, and which may be said to be as ointment poured forth, is the name Jesus, which signifies a Saviour, and was given him, because he saves his people from their sins. Christ is, in the everlasting gospel, reveal'd as a Saviour; it is therein declared, that the design of his coming into the world was to save sinners, and that he has obtained eternal salvation for them, and is both able and willing to save the chief of them; the discovery the gospel makes of him, is exceeding delightful and pleasant to awakened sinners. This name Jesus, a Saviour, how sweet is it to such who have seen the exceeding sinfulness of sin, themselves lost and undone

thereby, and in a perishing state and condition! The news of a Saviour are good news and glad tidings of great joy unto them; the discovery of it is like the breaking open a box of ointment, and pouring it out; it at once removes the filthy stench of sin from the sinners nostrils, and that sadness and sorrow of heart which arise from the guilt of it upon the conscience.

3. Christ's name Immanuel, may be said to be as ointment poured forth, which signifies God with us; and there are two things in it which make it like ointment poured forth, i. e. exceeding odorous and grateful to believers.

(1.) That he is God; hence they know, and are well assured, that he is able to save them; that the work is not too heavy for him; that he has not undertaken that which he is not able to accomplish, which they would have reason to believe, if he was only a creature: From hence they comfortably conclude, as well they may, that all he did was efficacious, and answered the purposes for which it was done; as that his sacrifice was effectual to atone for and expiate sin; his blood to procure the pardon of it, and thoroughly cleanse from it; his righteousness to justify from all sin, and render them acceptable in the sight of God; and all this, because they are the sacrifice, blood and righteousness of one that is God. From this name they also gather, that he having taken the care and charge of them, is able to keep them from falling; and that none is able to pluck them out of his hands, no more than they can separate them from his heart, which they could not be so assured of, was he a creature.

(2.) Another thing which makes this name like ointment poured forth, is, that he is God with us; God dwelling and conversing with us, God in our nature, God manifest in the flesh; hence it appears, that he, who is the great God, and our Saviour, is near a-kin to us, and we to him; being flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bone, we are both of one and the same nature, and therefore he's not ashamed to call us brethren; and his assuming our nature, gives him a right, as well as makes him a proper person to be our Goel or Redeemer, whereby all the blessings, which he procured in this nature, are communicated to us, and not to angels; now what makes this name still more sweet, savoury and delightful, is, that he, who is Immanuel, God with us, God in our nature, is, and will be on our side; and if God be with us, and for us, who shall be against us?

4. Christ's name, the Lord our righteousness, may be said to be as ointment poured forth, by which he is called, Jer. xxiii. 6. this is exceeding grateful, sweet and precious to a poor sinner; one who has seen his own righteousness, as filthy rags, and as an unclean thing, how does he value Christ as the Lord his righteousness! he counts all things but loss and dung, in comparison of him, and desires only to be found in him, and in his righteousness, and not in his own; and what makes this so exceeding precious to him, is, because it acquits from all sin, and secures from all wrath and condemnation, and renders him spotless, unblameable, and irreproveable in the sight of God.

5. Any, or all of those names of Christ, in Isa. ix. 6. may be said to be as ointment poured forth, they being exceeding precious and delightful to believers;

lievers; such as wonderful, counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting father, and prince of peace. Christ's name, wonderful, is so; he being wonderful in his incarnation and grace, in his person and offices, in his works, relations and characters; this emits a sweet odour to believers, even like a box of ointment opened to them: And so is his name counsellor; under which character he acted from everlasting, consulting with the other two persons, our eternal welfare in the ancient council of peace; and still continues to bear this character, which he makes good, by giving to us the best advice and most wholesome counsel, and this he does freely and faithfully: His name, the mighty God, carries in it as much sweetness and comfort to the believer, as it does greatness and majesty; and that endearing title, the everlasting Father, who, as such, loves his children with an everlasting love, and has made everlasting provisions for them, and takes everlasting care of them, fills those he stands thus related to, with the utmost pleasure: And that noble character, the prince of peace, which he bears on the account of his having obtain'd peace, by the blood of his cross, for rebellious sinners, so sweetly diffuses the odour of his grace, that it charms and captivates the believers heart. Or else, 3dly, By Christ's name, we may understand his Gospel; thus, the apostle Paul is said to be a chosen vessel, to bear the name of Christ before the Gentiles, i. e. to preach his gospel to them; he was a vessel full of the precious ointment of the gospel, and his preaching of it was the pouring of it forth, which was exceeding grateful to poor sinners. The gospel to some, is like a box of ointment, shut up; it is hid unto them, they know it not, it's a sealed book, a hidden mystery, an unpleasant story, and unfavoury words; it sends forth no other savour than that of death unto death; but to others, it's like a box of ointment opened, and poured forth, which diffuses and spreads a sweet and delightful odour abroad. The ministers of the gospel make manifest the savour of Christ's knowledge in every place where they are sent, and become to some the savour of life unto life; they open the box, and pour forth the ointment of the gospel, which coming with power, is received with pleasure; and being worthy of acceptance, it meets with it in the hearts of awakened sinners.

4thly, By the name of Christ, may be intended the fame which was, and still is spread abroad of him: Some <sup>e</sup> Jewish writers expound it of a good name or good report, which Solomon says, is better than precious ointment <sup>b</sup>; and then the sense is this, "such is the fame that is spread abroad of thee, of thy greatness and goodness, of thy beauties and excellencies, that even those who have only heard of thee, by the hearing of the ear, and to whom, at present, thou art not known by sight, have fallen in love with thee." In the days of Christ's flesh, his name was renowned, his fame was spread far and near, for the good he did to mankind, in healing the sick, and curing all manner of diseases; for the surprizing miracles which he wrought, and for the work of the ministry, which he was engaged in; his matter being excellent and divine, words of grace and wisdom, such as never man spake; and his manner of delivery being with power and authority: and now his fame fame is great, and an excellent report is spread abroad of him through the preaching of the everlasting gospel, for the mighty achievements of his grace, and what his arm of almighty power has done, in working out, and bringing in salvation for poor sinners; as also for those peculiar blessings of grace, which souls daily receive from him, as well as for those personal excellencies which are in him; now such a report going abroad of him, his name being thus, as ointment poured forth, the virgins love him, souls flock after him, and come unto him. Which brings me to consider,

III. The influence that all this has upon the hearts of others; therefore do the virgins love thee. In explaining which clause, I shall endeavour,

2<sup>dly</sup>, Give some account of the nature of their love and affection to Christ.

1st, Let us consider who are intended by the virgins. Some think carnal professors are here meant, who are called virgins in scripture, though foolish ones; but their love is not real, such as this seems to be in the text; others have thought that they are the uncalled and unconverted among the Gentiles, who are not yet espoused to Christ; but they rather appear to be true believers in Christ, by their love to him, for faith works by love; and, perhaps, persons lately converted are intended, whose love to Christ is generally warm and lively, and their affections strong, not having as yet met with those chills, nor attended with that coldness and indifferency, which too often, and too soon, befall God's children: The first love is the best and strongest, but often times doth not last long, warm and lively, being gradually chilled with the aboundings of corruption within, and the snares of the world without; though, perhaps, all true believers, whether of a later or of a longer standing, may be understood here, and may be justly called virgins.

1. For their chaste and strict adherence to Christ, their only husband, to whom they are espoused; I have espoused you to one husband, says the apostle, that I might present you a chaste virgin to Christ; these being betrothed to him in righteousness, in loving kindness, in mercies, and in faithfulness, know, own, and acknowledge him as their Lord and husband, and steadfastly adhere to him as such: He is a head, both of eminence and influence to them; to him they hold, and him alone they submit unto as such; he is the Saviour of the body, the church, and they acknowledge him to be their's, and will have no other. Their language is, Asbur shall not save us, neither will we say any more to the work of our hands, ye are our Gods. They make use of none, as the mediator between God and them, either as a mediator of redemption, or of intercession, but the Lord Jesus Christ; him they know and love, to him they have given up themselves, and by him they will abide, as their head and husband, their Saviour and Mediator.

2. For the singleness of their love and affection to Christ. Their love is not common to all, it is not bestowed upon any creature, but purely reserved for him, who alone deserves it; they can every one of them say, whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none on earth that I desire besides thee. Christ requires all their love, he'll admit of no rival in it, and they they are heartily willing to bestow it all upon him. Those who love any creature, or creature-enjoyment more than Christ, or equally with him, are not worthy of him, nor worthy to be called by the name of virgins.

3. For their incorruptness in the doctrine of faith : This is what the apostle seems to have a regard to, when he declared his fervent desire to present the Corinthians, as a chaste virgin to Christ ; he was jealous, lest they should be seduced through the subtilty and craftiness of ill designing men, and their pure minds be corrupted and drawn aside from the simplicity that is in Christ ; lest they should be polluted with error, and so not answer the character of virgins, which they had hitherto bore, and which he earnestly wished might continue with them. Now virgins are such, who having received, bold fast the faithful word, as they have been taught ; whose souls having been nourished up in the words of faith, and of good doctrine, and established therein, cannot be moved from thence, but will earnestly contend, and strive together for the faith once delivered to the saints.

4. For the truth and sincerity of their worship : They are such who worship God in spirit and in truth ; who make the word of God, and his will therein revealed, the rule to act by, in all solemn and social worship, and not the authorities, customs, and inventions of men ; and when they are concerned in any part of religious worship, their desires are, that their hearts and souls may be engaged therein ; they are not of those who draw near to God with their mouths, and with their lips honour him, but have removed their hearts far from him, and their fear towards him, taught by the precept of men ; for as they have not committed spiritual whoredom, which is idolatry, so they serve the Lord with pure spirits ; they desire that whatsoever they do, more especially in divine worship, might be done in faith, from a principle of love to God, and according to his word and will : These are they who are said <sup>1</sup> not to be defiled with women, for they are virgins ; these are they which follow the lamb whithersoever he goeth, in every ordinance and institution of his, which he in his word has pointed out unto them, and marked out for them.

5. For the purity of their lives and conversations ; they hold the mystery of the faith, not merely notionally and by a profession of it, but in a pure conscience, and hereby adorn the doctrine of God, our Saviour ; their garments are, in some measure, kept from being spotted with the pollutions of the world, and which they also frequently wash and make white in the blood of the lamb. Besides, <sup>2</sup> that grace of God, which bringeth salvation, i. e. the doctrines of grace, which bring the news of salvation by Christ, to poor sinners, teach them that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, they should live soberly, righteously and godly, in this present world ; which, through the mighty power of God's grace, they are, in some measure, enabled to do.

6. For their fairness and beauty. Virgins being fair and beautiful, believers are therefore compared unto them ; for though they are black in themselves, yet they are comely in Christ ; though full of spots in themselves, yet as considered in him, they are all fair, and there is no spot in them :

through that comeliness, which he has put upon them, they are a perfection of beauty, and being so, are the delight of Christ, and wonder of angels.

7. For their gay and costly attire, and yet modest behaviour. Virgins, in their youthful days, if modest, though their attire is gay and splendid, suitable to their age, yet are of a decent and becoming behaviour. Believers are richly attired: These virgins appear in cloth of gold, in raiment of needle work, curiously wrought, which cannot be match'd; they are deck'd with all kinds of ornaments, with bracelets, chains, rings and jewels; they have on the glorious robe of Christ's righteousness, and are adorned with the various graces of the spirit, which make their behaviour decent and modest; for they are not proud and haughty, one of their ornaments being that of a meek and quiet spirit; they have low, mean, and humble thoughts of themselves; suitable to their character is their carriage and deportment; for though they are so richly clothed, and so nearly related to the King of kings, yet like their Lord, are meek and lowly.

Secondly, I shall now proceed to give some account of the love which these virgins bear to Christ: In doing which I shall,

1st, Give some account of the nature of it.

2<sup>dly</sup>, Shew from whence it arises. And,

1st, Let us consider the nature and properties of it.

1. It is a superlative love which souls bear to Christ; it exceeds and excels their love to all creatures, or creature-enjoyments. Christ loves them above all others, and they love him more than all persons or things besides; of all that claim a share in their love, as none deserves, so none has a greater interest therein than himself.

2. It is universal; they love all of Christ, and all that belong to him; they love him in his person, and in all his offices, relations and characters, which he has took upon him, and by which he is pleased to manifest himself unto them: They love all his saints, be they high or low, rich or poor, and by whatsoever character and denomination they are distinguished, if it appears, that his grace is but wrought in their hearts, and they bear his image and superscription; they love all his commands, ordinances and institutions; they esteem all his precepts concerning all things, to be right, and are not partial in their obedience thereunto.

3. It is, or at least ought to be, constant and faithful; as his is to them, and as Jonathan's was to David: We should love him in adversity, as well as in prosperity, at all times; nothing should separate our love from Christ, as nothing can separate his love from us.

4. It is, or ought to be, fervent and ardent; and so it is usually at first conversion, as has been already observed; and this is called in scripture, the first love, which the church at Ephesus was blamed for leaving; not that she had lost her love to Christ, but the fervency thereof was much abated; she began to grow cold and lukewarm in her affections, which is too often the case of God's people, through the prevailings of corruptions, and an immoderate derate desire and purfuit after the things of this world ; because iniquity shall abound, fays Chrift, <sup>a</sup> the love of many fhall wax cold.

5. Where there is true love to Chrift, it is always hearty and unfeigned : The virgins, true believers, love him with all their heart, and with all their foul ; they love him in fincerity, and from their very hearts can appeal to him, who is the heart-searching, and rein-trying God, as Peter did, <sup>o</sup> and fays, Lord, thou knoweft all things, thou knoweft that I love thee. Here's no deceit, diffimulation or hypocrify in their love ; though it may be fometimes weak and languid, yet whenever it exerts and fhews it felf, it is real and hearty ; thefe love not in word only, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth.

2dly, It will be proper to enquire into the fprings and caufes of this love, and to obferve from whence it arifes. And,

1. It fprings and arifes from a fight of Chrift's lovelinefs : An unbeliever fees no beauty in Chrift, wherefore he fhould desire him ; there is nothing in him lovely to a carnal eye ; but one that is made light in the Lord, and has but a glimpe of the King in his beauty, his heart is won, his foul is ravifhed and drawn forth in love to him ; he admires and defires him above all, and cannot be eafy without an intereft in him.

2. From a view of his fuitablenefs, as a Saviour ; the believer not only fees perfonal and transcendent excellencies in him, which ravifh him, but fpecial blessings, which are proper for him ; he beholds him as full of grace and truth ; he fmells a sweet favour in his ointments, and that name Jefus, a Saviour, becomes exceeding precious to him ; he views all righteoufnefs and ftrength, peace and pardon, light and life, joy and comfort, grace and glory, and all things appertaining to falvation, every thing to make him comfortable here, and happy hereafter, in Chrift ; and therefore fays, as David did, <sup>p</sup> I will love thee, O Lord, my ftrength.

3. From a fenfe of his love and manifeftation of it to their fouls ; we love him, fays the apoftle, <sup>q</sup> because he firft loved us ; our love is not the caufe of his, but his is the caufe of ours ; and it is not merely his loving us, but the shedding it abroad in our hearts by his fpirit, which draws out our love to him ; for though he loved us, yet if he had not fome way or other manifefted it to us, and overcome our hearts with it, we fhould ftill have remained enemies to him ; but his giving us the fenfe and perception of it in our hearts, is what has drawn us to himfelf, and will keep us there.

4. From a view of union and relation to him ; how can perfons do otherwife than love him, when they fee themfelves fo nearly united to him, as to be members of his body, of his flefh, and of his bones ? How can they but love him, when they view him ftanding in and filling up the relations of an indulgent father, a tender husband, a loving brother, and faithful friend unto them ?

5. This is more and more increafed by enjoying communion with him ; the more intimate a believer is with Chrift, the oftner he fees him, the more frequent vifits he receives from him, and the greater acquaintance

and fellowship he has with him, the more he loves him ; every sight of him, visit from him, and enjoyment of his presence, add fresh strength and fervency to his love : John, the beloved disciple, who lean'd on Christ's bosom, and had intimate communion with him, had his heart fill'd with love to him, and wrote the most largely of it. But,

3dly, I shall now endeavour to show how this love manifests it self ; and it does so,

1. By a regard to Christ's commands and ordinances ; if ye love me, says Christ, ' keep my commandments ; for he that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me ; i. e. he that hath my commandments written upon his heart, by the finger of the spirit, according to the tenor of the covenant of grace, and is enabled to keep them by the assistance of my grace and spirit, he it is that shews his love to me ; and therefore, as you say, you love me, shew it by an observance of my commands : and all that love Christ will do so, according to the measure of grace received ; they will love the place of divine worship, and have a respect to all his ordinances and institutions ; for all his tabernacles are amiable and lovely to them.

2. By a regard to his truths, the doctrines of the gospel ; they receive the truth in the love of it, and value it more than their necessary food ; they highly esteem the preachers of it, and cannot bear to hear one truth of the gospel spoken against.

3. By a regard to his people ; they love the saints, who love Christ ; they delight in their company, and take pleasure in conversing with them ; they are the excellent in the earth, in whom is all their delight ; and indeed, where there is no love to the saints, there can be no true love to Christ ; for, as the apostle John says, ' he that loveth not his brother, whom he hath seen, how can he love God, whom he hath not seen ?

4. By a regard to his presence ; a soul that loves Christ, values the presence of Christ ; nothing so desirable to him as that is : And when he has lost sight of Christ, cannot be easy without him, but seeks here and there until he has found him, whom his soul loves : He thinks himself never more happy, than when he has Christ's presence, and never worse than when he is without it.

5. This love manifests it self, by parting with, and bearing all for Christ : A soul that truly loves Christ, will part with all that is near and dear to him, for him ; he'll forsake his own kindred, and his father's house ; he counts Christ the pearl of great price, and is therefore willing to quit all he has, that he may but enjoy that ; he leaves all, as the disciples did, and follows Christ ; and resolves, come what will, that Christ's God shall be his God, and Christ's people his people, and where Christ lodges he will lodge, and where he goes he will follow, and cleave close to him, as Ruth did to Naomi. Moreover, he is not only willing to leave and lose all for Christ, but also to bear all for him, that he is pleased to lay upon him, and call him to ; he is willing to suffer reproaches, afflictions and persecutions for the sake of him and his gospel, and to bear any cross whatever, he thinks fit to enjoin him ; him; all which he would never be willing to submit to, was not his soul filled with love to Christ; and such a love as this, which springs from such causes, and manifests it self in these ways, is exceeding grateful to Christ, as appears from Ch. iv. 10.

* John xiv. 15—21.

* 1 John iv. 20.

Ver. 4. Draw me, we will run after thee : The King hath brought me into his chambers. We will be glad and rejoice in thee : We will remember thy love more than wine : The upright love thee.

THE church having took notice of the excellency of Christ's love, the favour of his ointments, and preciousness of his name, which made the virgins, her companions, love him; she persists in and continues her request, for communion with him, in these words; in which we have,

I. A petition; draw me.

II. An argument, which she makes use of to obtain this request; we will run after thee.

III. The request granted to her, which is acknowledged by her; the King hath brought me into his chambers.

IV. The effects thereof, or the influence which this had upon her; we will rejoice, &c.

I. Here is a request or petition made by the church to Christ; draw me. What she intends hereby will be proper to consider. And,

1st, There is a powerful efficacious drawing of a soul to Christ, at conversion, when God calls a poor sinner by his grace, brings him to Christ, enables him to venture upon him, and believe in him for life and salvation; which is what Christ speaks of in John vi. 44. when he says, no man can come to me, except the father which hath sent me, draw him. A soul's coming to Christ for life, is not the produce of power and free will in man, but of the grace of God in drawing, though it is not effected, by force or compulsion; 'tis true, the sinner, in his natural estate, is stout hearted, and far from righteousness, averse to Christ, and the way of salvation by him; but by mighty grace, this stout heart is brought down, and made willing to submit to God's way of salvation; this obduracy is removed, and hardness of heart taken away by him, who has promised to take away the stony heart, and give an heart of flesh. Unconverted sinners are indeed unwilling to come to Christ for life; but those who belong to the election of grace, are made willing in the day of Christ's power: The manslayer did not more willingly flee from the avenger of blood, to the city of refuge, than a sinner, sensible of sin, and the danger of his state, does to Christ for salvation; for though a soul is not brought to Christ, by the power of his free will, yet he is not brought against his will: Drawing does not always suppose force and compulsion; there are other ways of drawing besides that. Thus the fame of a skilful physician draws many people to him; thus music draws the ear; love the heart; and pleasure the mind; as the Poet says, trahit sua quemque voluptas. Nor is this done by mere moral suasion, which is what ministers use, knowing the terrors of the Lord, they persuade men ; but if the mighty power of grace does not attend their ministry, not one soul will ever be converted ; though they represent the joys of heaven, and the terrors of hell, in never such a lively manner ; speak in never such moving strains, and use the most powerful arguments to win upon souls ; yet they'll stretch out their hands all the day, to a gainsaying and disobedient people ; they return with a who hath believed our report ? the arm of the Lord not being revealed unto them : God does not act as a mere moral cause in man's conversion ; he does not only propose an object, and then leave the will to chuse, but powerfully and effectually works both to will and to do of his own good pleasure ; for this drawing is accomplished by the secret and invisible power of his mighty grace : and in this sense is the word used, in Jud. iv. 7. when Deborah tells Barak, that the Lord had promised, saying, I will DRAW unto thee, to the river Kishon, Sisera, the captain of Jabin's army, with his chariots and his multitudes, and I will deliver him into thine hand, i. e. I who have the hearts of kings, generals, and captains of armies in my hands, and can turn them as the rivers of waters, whithersoever I will, will powerfully and invisibly work upon, move and incline Sisera's heart to lead his army to the river Kishon, where I'll give an instance of my power and goodness in delivering him into thine hands. Thus God powerfully and invisibly works upon the hearts of sinners, bends their wills, slays the enmity of their minds, allures and draws them to Christ, suavi omnipotentia, & omnipotentia suavitatem, by a sweet omnipotence, and an omnipotent sweetness ; and this he does by revealing Christ unto them, in all his beauty and loveliness, discovering the love of Christ unto their souls, by the kind invitations of his grace, the precious and encouraging promises of his gospel, and the special teachings of his spirit ; all which is an evidence of his everlasting love ; for 'tis, because he hath loved them with an everlasting love ; therefore with loving kindness he hath drawn them : This is also a fruit of Christ's death ; I, if I be lifted up from the earth<sup>a</sup>, says he, meaning his elevation upon the cross, will draw all men unto me ; i. e. all that the father hath given me, and has promised, shall be gathered to me, and which I shall shed my blood for. Moreover, it is likewise an indication of the weakness and impotency of sinners, seeing they cannot come unless they are drawn ; and sufficiently destroys the notion which advances the free will and power of the creature in conversion : But I apprehend that this is not the drawing intended in this petition, for thus the church had been already drawn.

The Septuagint read it, they have drawn thee : After thee, at the smell of thine ointments, will we run ; i. e. the virgins have loved thee, and shewn their love to thee ; and this has so took with thine heart, that it has drawn thee after them, they have thy company, which I want ; but by the smell of those ointments, which thou carriest about with thee, I, and others, will run after thee, till we find thee : So that Christ, according to this version and sense of the words, is the person drawn, and not the person petitioned to, to draw ; though the latter seems best to agree both with the Hebrew text, and the sense of the words.

R. Aben Ezra thinks that they are the words of the virgins, who, every one of them, desire, saying, draw me; we, every one of us, will run after thee; but they seem rather to be the words of the church, desirous of more intimate communion with Christ; for there is,

2dly, A drawing to nearer communion with Christ, which believers oftentimes want, and are desirous of, and which the church had enjoyed, as appears from the following clause in this verse; in which she declares, that the king had brought her into his chambers, where he conversed with her, and disclosed the secrets of his heart to her; now this petition of her's for nearer communion with him, supposes,

1. A distance between Christ and her; not a distance with regard to union, for believers being one with Christ, they never are, nor can be distanced from him; they are always in this sense, a people near unto the Lord; nor is there a distance of affection, for having loved his own, which were in the world, he loves them to the end; they can never be separated from his love, seeing they are engraven as a seal upon his heart: but this is a distance as to communion; and, in this sense, Christ sometimes does stand at a distance, and hides himself from his people; as appears from their frequent complaints of it, they then thinking themselves forsaken and forgotten by him.

2. This petition shews her uneasiness in this condition, and therefore she says, draw me; not but that sometimes believers are lukewarm and indifferent; for falling asleep upon a bed of security, they become unsensible of their condition, and therefore unconcerned about it; but when they are awakened, and find their beloved gone, their souls are troubled, and being impatient of delay, though in the night, as the church in Ch. iii. arise from their beds, and in the streets and broad ways seek him, whom their souls love.

3. This request shews the sense she had of her own inability to attain to a state of nearer communion with him: When he hides his face, who can behold him? when he stands at a distance, who can come near him? if he is pleased to withdraw his presence, there's no commanding it; the light of his countenance, the enjoyment of his presence, and fellowship with him, are as much the instances of his distinguishing and sovereign grace, and as much depend upon his sovereign pleasure, as the first workings of grace it self; we can no more enjoy the one at pleasure, than we could effect the other; the same spirit that wrought grace in us at first, must give us access into Christ's presence; we need now the same bands and cords of love to draw us to Christ, as then we did.

4. It signifies the apprehension she seems to have of danger, draw me or I shall be drawn away; believers may be sometimes under fearful apprehensions of being drawn away by the corruptions of their natures, the snares of the world, and the temptations of satan, though they can never be drawn totally and finally from Christ. He has, by the cords of love, drawn them to himself; and though they may not always experience it, yet he will never leave his people till he has brought them safe to glory.

5. It shews that high value and esteem she had for communion with Christ, which makes her so earnestly importune that blessing, and use such pressing and repeated instances for the enjoyment of it; this was the one thing she earnestly neftly desired and fought for, yea, preferred to all other enjoyments. Moreover,

II. Here is an argument made use of to obtain this request, we will run after thee: Or else it may be considered as the end of her asking this favour, draw me, that we may run after thee; Lord, do thou draw, that we may run, which we cannot do, unless thou dost; but if thou wilt, we shall run after thee. Here is a change of persons in these words; first she says, draw me, and then we will run after thee; by whom are meant, she, and the virgins her companions, the church, and particular members: Every one in their stations would act with more life and vigour upon such drawings. We will run after thee; this is not a running to Christ, as sinners do under apprehension of danger, as to a city of refuge, and saints, as to a place of protection, safety and security; but this is a running after him: Christ is the forerunner who has gone before us, and left us an example, both in doing and suffering, as the fulfiller of righteousness, and the great captain of our salvation; and we must follow him, the lamb, whithersoever he goeth; and not only follow, but run. Our life is frequently, in scripture, called a race; Christ is the mark we must press after; heaven is the prize we should have in view; and the way or stadium, in which we should run, are Christ's commandments; though our running therein, or performing them, is not the cause of our obtaining the prize; for it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy; yet running herein is our duty; which supposes,

1st, Cheerfulness, readiness, and willingness; then says David<sup>c</sup>, will I run the way of thy commandments, when thou shalt enlarge my heart; i. e. I shall observe them more cheerfully, readily and willingly; it will remove that backwardness that is in me to duty.

2<sup>dly</sup>, Swiftnefs; I made haste and delayed not, to keep thy commandments<sup>d</sup>, says the same psalmist; such obedience as this, though far more perfectly than we are capable of, do the angels perform in heaven.

3<sup>dly</sup>, Strength; and this we have not, but there is fulness of it with Christ; who, whilst we are waiting on him, is pleased to renew our strength, so that we mount up with wings as eagles, and run and are not weary, and walk and do not faint. Now this is the effect of that drawing, without which there is no running; we cannot set one step forward unless he speak to us, much less can we run, unless he draw us.

III. Here is an account of the request being granted, which she observes with pleasure, the King hath brought me into his chambers; though others read it, let the king bring me, or, O! that the King would bring me, &c. and so take it as a continuation of her desires after communion with Christ; but this is for want of knowledge in the Hebrew language, as Mercer observes: Others think, that the past tense is put for the future, and so read it, the King shall or will bring me, &c. as being expressive of her faith, that she should enjoy what she was desirous of. Junius renders it, when the King shall have brought me, &c. and so carries it in the nature of a promise, as to her and her virgins future behabehaviour upon the enjoyment of such a blessing; though I think it is much better rendered by our translators, the King hath brought me, &c. and so signifies her enjoyment of the mercy she sought after. Wherein are three things to be considered.

1st, Who this King is, that brought her into his chambers.

3<sup>dly</sup>, What is meant by his bringing her there, or what this phrase is expressive of.

1st, Who this King is, not Solomon, for a greater than Solomon is here; but the Lord Jesus Christ, who is αὐτὸς ἰσχυρὸς, by way of eminency, is called the King: Who is the king of the whole world, the King of the kings of the world, and the king of saints; he has, as he is God, an universal empire over all worlds, heaven, earth and hell; and, as mediator, has a kingdom given him by his father, which he has purchased with his own blood, and by the mighty conquests of his grace, has brought into subjection to himself; in this kingdom he enacts laws for the subjects thereof, by which they are governed and kept in order; he subdues all their enemies, sin, satan, and the world; protects them from all dangers; encourages his loyal and faithful subjects, courteously receives them, graciously takes notice of all their petitions, and supplies them with every thing needful for them: now this kingdom, which Christ, as mediator is possess'd of, is of a spiritual nature, and managed in a spiritual way; 'tis kept in peace, being governed in wisdom and righteousness; and will continue for ever, when all other rule and authority shall be thrown down. But,

2<sup>dly</sup>, What chambers are these which this king is said to bring her into? Not the temple, into which Solomon introduced the people of Israel, which is the sense <sup>e</sup> some give of the words; though there may be an <sup>f</sup> allusion to the temple, and the chambers thereof, of which mention is made, 1 Chron. xxviii. 11, 12. and more especially to the holy of holies, which was inaccessible to any but the high priest; as that, which was typified by it, is to any but Christ the high priest, and those who belong to him, to whom he gives access, and who have boldness and liberty to enter into the holiest of all, by the blood of Jesus: Nor do I think that by them are meant those everlasting mansions of peace and rest, which are in Christ's father's house, which he is preparing for his spouse and bride, and into which he, e'er long, will introduce her, where they will keep an everlasting nuptial feast; for at present she could not say, that she was brought thither, though she might be assured of it, that she should, by those kind intimations of his love unto her; therefore it seems better to understand them either,

1. Of those chambers of intimate communion and fellowship, which Christ sometimes brings his people into, and of which they are exceeding desirous: This inestimable blessing Christ frequently grants to his people in his ordinances; for he don't always suffer them to stand without, in the outer courts, but sometimes takes them into his inner chambers, where he discloses the secrets of his heart unto them, gives evident intimations of his love, and fills their souls with divine consolation: Or else,

2. The

2. The doctrines of the gospel, which contain the unsearchable riches of Christ, and the mysteries of his grace, which he brings his people gradually into, and shews them those things which eye hath not seen, neither hath ear heard, nor the heart of man conceived of; he took me, as if she should say, into his chambers, and there more thoroughly instructed me into his mind and will, gave me to know more fully the mysteries of the kingdom, opened all the treasures of his grace, and shew'd me all his riches, and glory contained therein. Now this sense suits well with a practice much used by the Jews, who frequently taught in chambers, where they also met together to converse about, and determine matters in religion, as will fully appear from their writings; and we have many hints in the new Testament, which confirm it: 'Twas in such a chamber that Christ kept the passover, and instituted the Lord's supper, and gave such a discovery of the nature of his death and sufferings to his disciples: In such a room the disciples met together, after his ascension; and in such an one Paul preached till midnight. But,

3dly. What is meant by being brought into these chambers; or what does this phrase import, or express?

1. On Christ's part.

(1.) An acknowledgment of her to be his bride; he having espoused her to himself, and solemniz'd the marriage among her friends, which was the Jewish custom, takes her home to himself as his spouse and bride, to live and converse with him, leads her into his chambers, and there unlocks all his treasures, shows her all his riches and glory, and puts her into the possession of them.

(2.) It imports wonderful condescension in him, that he, who is the King of kings, should vouchsafe to regard such a worthless creature, as the church is in her self, much more espouse her to himself, and in such a kind, loving and familiar manner, give her access to his person, and all he has, and grant her such intimate communion and fellowship with him.

(3.) It shows us, that all our nearness to, and communion with God, are in and through Christ; 'tis he that gives us access into the grace wherein we stand, and leads us into the presence of his father; he is our only way of access unto him, and acceptance with him.

2. On her part; they being her words, shew,

(1.) That she does not ascribe this to herself, but to his powerful and efficacious grace; she was conscious of her own inability, and therefore makes application to him, and, having obtained her desires, acknowledges it to the glory of his grace; who brought, or caused her to come, as the <sup>h</sup> word may be rendred, notwithstanding all difficulties and obstructions which lay in the way.

(2.) This she does with thankfulness, in an exulting manner, as this way of speaking testifies, and the following words declare: What was before matter of prayer, is now the subject of praise; she owns, with gratitude, as became her, the mercy she had received.

(3.) It

(3.) It seems to be in a boasting way and manner that she speaks. Believers are allowed to glory in the Lord, and boast of what he has done for them, and manifests to them, that his grace may be magnified, others take notice of it, and they be encouraged in their addresses to him: The church here might have an eye to the virgins or daughters of Jerusalem.

IV. We have, in these words, the effects or consequences of the church's enjoying this valuable blessing, as they appear in her and her members, or her daughters, the virgins.

1st. Gladness and rejoicing in Christ; we will be glad and rejoice in thee. The several clauses of this text, <sup>1</sup> some think, should be considered thus; the first clause, draw me, as the words of the church; the next, we will run after thee, the chorus of the virgins; then the church again says, the King hath brought me into his chambers; and after that, the virgins, we will be glad, &c. but whether the church, or the virgins, or both, are here intended, it is certain, that this is the language of believers, of whose joy Christ is the object: They rejoyce, not in themselves, neither in their works, graces or frames, but in the Lord Jesus Christ: This is one part of the character which the apostle gives of true believers; they are such who rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh, Phil. iii. 3.

1. They rejoice in his person, in his greatness, fitness, fulness and glory, as he is God and man in one person; for being so, he is able to be their saviour, a proper person to be a mediator, has all fulness of grace treasured up in him, and appears to be the brightness of his father's glory, and the express image of his person; a view of, and communion with, such an one, must needs fill the believer with a joy unspeakable and full of glory.

2. They rejoice in what he has done for them; he is the Lord Jehovah, who has done great things for them, whereof they are glad; he engaged, as their surety in the everlasting covenant, and in the fulness of time, assumed their nature, finished and made reconciliation for their sins, satisfied divine justice, fulfilled a righteous law, brought in and cloathed them with an everlasting righteousness, procured the pardon of all their sins; and in short, has secured all grace and glory for them; and when they consider all this, they cannot but be glad and rejoice in him.

3. They rejoice also in what he is unto them, as well as in what he has done for them; he stands in and fills up all relations to them; he is their everlasting father, their kind and loving brother, their tender and indulgent husband, their constant and faithful friend, and indeed, their all in all; he is every thing to them, for he of God is made unto them, wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption; and when they consider him under all these endearing characters and relations, 'tis no wonder that they are heard to say, I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, my soul shall be joyful in the God of my salvation, &c.

than wine. I have already on ver. 2. shewn you the preferableness of Christ's love to wine, and shall not here repeat it, but only shew,

1. What it is to remember Christ's love.

2. Why we should, and why every believer will do so.

● What it is to remember it.

(1.) It is so to record it in our minds, as not to forget it; we should, with David<sup>a</sup>, call upon our souls, and all that is within us, to bless his holy name, and forget not all his benefits; and more especially, we should not forget his love from whence they all spring.

(2.) We should often meditate upon it; which would not only serve to advance the glory of divine love, but would sweetly ravish our souls, raise our affections, inflame our love, and quicken our faith.

(3.) We should constantly observe that ordinance, which Christ has appointed for this purpose, viz. the Lord's supper; it being his design in the institution of it, that we should remember him, his broken body and precious blood, and particularly his special love, which appeared in all.

(4.) We should so remember it, as to have our desires more strongly after it, and our affections more firmly fix'd upon it: Christ's love is excellent and valuable, it is preferable to life itself, and all the comforts of it; and a frequent revolving it in our minds will enlarge our desires after a greater knowledge of it, and heighten our value for, and esteem of it.

(5.) We should so remember it, as to exercise faith in it; for it will bring us but little comfort, and do us but little service, unless we can, in some measure, appropriate it to ourselves, saying, with the apostle, he hath loved me, and hath given himself for me; it will afford us no solid joy, and comfort, that he has loved others, if we have no reason to hope and believe that he hath loved us; for it is faith's viewing a peculiar interest in this love, that fixes a sense of it more firmly upon the mind.

(6.) It then appears, that this is uppermost in our minds, when we speak and make mention of it to others; and, indeed, that should be the subject of our discourse now, which will be the delightful theme of glorified saints; to all eternity. But,

2. Why should we, and why will every believer remember Christ's love, value and esteem it more than wine?

1. Because 'tis worthy of remembrance, in its own nature, and in its effects, as has been already shewn; 'tis better than wine; 'tis great and glorious, stupendous and unparallel'd, matchless and boundless, everlasting and unchangeable; it passeth knowledge, and is the source and spring of all the grace we now receive, and of all the glory we are expectants of.

2. It would be ungrateful in us not to remember it; should we be unmindful of, and forget this love, and the benefits which spring from it, we should be justly chargeable with the vile sin of ingratitude; and it might be very pertinently returned upon us, what Abshalom<sup>1</sup> said to Hushai, is this thy kindness to thy friend?

3. Because

3. Because he hath remember'd us, and that in our low estate, because his mercy endureth for ever; even when we were in the depths of sin and misery, could not help our selves, and were so far from having any love to him, that we were in open rebellion against him; yet such was his amazing love to us, that he raised us beggars from the dunghil, washed us from our sins in his own blood, and made us kings and priests to God and his father; and shall we not remember? can we be forgetful of this love?

4. A remembrance of it promotes our own comfort and edification, serves to make sin odious and detestable, and is oftentimes useful to excite and revive grace, to banish our doubts and fears, and make the person of Christ more precious to us.

3dly, Another effect or consequence of the church's being brought into the chambers of near fellowship and communion with Christ, is, that the love of his church and people is the more drawn forth to him, who here go under the character of upright ones, the upright love thee; or, according to the Hebrew text, uprightnesses love thee; the abstract for the concrete; which intends upright men, or men of uprightness, as being the persons who love Christ; unless with R. Sol. Jarchi, we take it to be expressive of the sincerity of their love, and so read it, in uprightnesses, or with an upright love they love thee: R. Aben Ezra thinks it is the adjective of wine, before mentioned, and intends the excellency, sweetness and incorruptness of it, as in Ch. vii. 9. and the sense then is this, we will remember thy love more than wine; yea, more than upright wine, or wine that goes down sweetly, do they love thee: Though I rather think it intends the character of the persons who love Christ. I have already, on the preceding verse, shown the nature of this love, with which souls love Christ, from whence it springs, and how it manifests it self; and shall now only consider the character of those persons who are here said to love him, viz. upright ones; and they are,

1. Such who are said to be upright in heart, of whom mention is made in Psal. cxxv. 4. Do good, O Lord, to them that be good, and to them that are upright in their hearts; such are they who have a work of grace wrought upon their souls; whose hearts are right with God, and desire to worship him with their whole hearts; who live by faith on Christ, and his righteousness, and whose words and actions are without dissimulation; such are Israelites indeed, in whom there is no guile.

2. Who are of an upright conversation, as in Psal. xxxvii. 14. These are they who walk according to the rule of God's word; they are not partial in their observance of his commands, but have a regard to them all; they make conscience of avoiding lesser, as well as greater sins; and in all their obedience to the divine will, seek the honour and glory of God; and what they do, they do in faith, and from a principle of love to God and Christ. Junius understands this clause, of the sincerity and uprightness of the love of the church and her friends to Christ, and reads it in connection with the former thus; we will remember thy love more than wine, and whosoever most uprightly love thee; i. e. whoever bear a sincere affection to thee will do the same.

Ver. 5. I am black, but comely; O ye daughters of Jerusalem, as the tents of Kedar, as the curtains of Solomon.

THE church, in the preceding verses, had directed her speech to Christ, where we have observed the request she makes, and the success of it, and also the comfortable and grateful frame of spirit, produced by it: Here she turns her self to the daughters of Jerusalem, and gives an account of her person and state, and delivers her mind to them in this and the following verse. Wherein may be considered,

- I. The persons she speaks to, the daughters of Jerusalem.
- II. The character which she gives of her self.
- III. The reason of her so doing.

I. The persons she speaks to, are the daughters of Jerusalem: And seeing these are frequently mentioned in this song, it will be necessary to consider who are meant by them. R. Sol. Jarchi would have them to be the Gentiles, who, he says, are so called, because Jerusalem shall be the metropolis of all nations, according to Ezek. xvi. 61. I will give them unto thee for daughters; and that they are, in the same sense, the daughters of Jerusalem, as the towns of Ekron are called in Josh. xv. 45. The daughters of Ekron; but it is much better to understand them of particular churches, of which, Jerusalem that is above, or that general assembly, and church of the first-born, whose names are written in heaven, is the mother; though I rather think, young converts are intended by them, who, perhaps, had not as yet join'd themselves to the church, though they had a very great respect for her, as is manifest from Cb. v. 9. they seem to be very weak, and their knowledge of Christ but small, yet desirous of knowing him and seeking him with her. See Cb. v. 8. and vi. 1. and it is very evident, that not only the church, but Christ also, had a very great respect for them, from Cb. iii. 9, 10, 11. They were her friends and companions, distinct from mothers children, mentioned in the following verse, and were far from being enemies either to Christ or his church.

II. To these persons she gives a character of her self.

- 1st, She makes a concession that she was black.
- 2<sup>dly</sup>, Notwithstanding asserts that she is comely. And,
- 3<sup>dly</sup>, Uses some similes to express both by, as the tents of Kedar, the curtains of Solomon.

1st, She ingenuously and frankly acknowledges that she was black. This is not to be understood literally of Pharaoh's daughter, whom Solomon had married; and whose mother, Grotius conjectures, might be an Arabian, and so these words be expressive of her natural complexion; but this is not intended, nor, perhaps, is there so much as an allusion to it, but rather to a shepherdess, or keeper of vineyards, made black by lying in the fields, as the

the following verse seems to intimate: The Targum applies it to the people of Israel, when they made the calf, and says, that then their faces became as black as the Ethiopians, that dwell in the tents of Kedar; but when they returned, by repentance, and were forgiven, the brightness of the glory of their countenances was increased, as the angels; but the words are expressive of the spiritual estate and complexion of the church of Christ, and of all believers in him; who may be said to be black,

1. Upon the account of their many spots, blemishes, and infirmities; for though they are fair and spotless, as considered in Christ, yet they are black and full of spots, as considered in themselves; sin dwells in them, and they are sometimes overcome, and carried captive by it; 'tis always present with them; this body of sin and death, they carry about as their burden; neither will they be rid of it in this life; for if we say, that we have no sin, we deceive our selves, and the truth is not in us; the most holy and righteous man on earth is not without it; every one is both disturbed and defiled with it, and therefore in this sense may be said to be black; and so the <sup>a</sup> Jewish doctors expound it, of the sinful actions and evil works of the congregation of Israel.

2. The church of Christ may be said to be black, oftentimes on the account of those swarms of hypocrites and hereticks that appear in it; there have always been more or less of them in the church, in all ages, which have been spots in their feasts of charity. There was a Cain in Adam's family, a Ham in Noah's, an Ismael in Abraham's, an Esau in Isaac's, and a Judas among Christ's disciples; these goats have always been among Christ's sheep; these tares grow up among his wheat, and will do so, till he shall divide the sheep from the goats, and take his fan in his hand and thoroughly purge his floor. Now upon the account of these, and the several heresies, schisms, and divisions, which frequently arise, and are made in the church of Christ, she may be said to be black: And also,

3. By reason of the persecutions and reproaches of the world, which the church of Christ, and all believers in him sustain; for they that will live godly in Christ Jesus, must suffer persecution, of one kind or another; if not confiscation of goods, fines, imprisonments, racks, tortures, yea, death it self, which in some ages of the world, have been the lot of God's children, yet, at least, loss of their good names, credit, and reputation; for if they are loved by Christ, they must expect to be hated by men; if they have peace in him, in the world they must have tribulation; they may be sure of being vilified by the world, and backbited and reproached by carnal professors; and this is what the church seems to ascribe her blackness to, in the following verse. So in Zobar <sup>b</sup>, this blackness is, by the Jews, expounded of the captivity of the people of Israel.

4. She may be said to be black, with sorrow and mourning; black colour not only being the habit of mourners, but does also, in scripture, express grief and sorrow it self. See Jer. viii. 21. and xiv. 2. The sins and corruptions of God's people, oftentimes put them in this mourning habit; as

David says †, when he was under a sense of his manifold iniquities, I go mourning all the day long, or nearer the Hebrew, † I go in black, all the day long; the coldness, hypocrisy and formality of professors, give them much uneasiness; the many errors and heresies among them, and the persecutions and reproaches, both of the world and carnal professors, produce this black hue and mournful colour.

5. They are black, in the eyes of the world, which indeed is no wonder; for the men of the world see no beauty nor comeliness in Christ himself, and therefore not any in his people; they being, in their eyes, mean, abject, and contemptible, despised by them, and accounted as the refuse and off-scouring of all things. But notwithstanding all this, she could say, 2dly, That she was comely, i. e. beautiful and desirable, having graceful features, and a just symmetry and proportion. Now the church, and every believer in Christ, may be said to be comely.

1. By the imputation of Christ's righteousness, whereby they are justified from all sin, and stand spotless and irreproveable in God's sight; their own righteousness is as filthy rags, and rather detracts from, than adds to their comeliness; but Christ's righteousness being that fine linen, clean, and white, with which being array'd, they are adorned as a bride for her husband, they appear perfectly comely, through the comeliness which Christ has put upon them; they are no ways comely in themselves, but in Christ they are a perfection of beauty.

2. By the sanctifying grace of the spirit, whereby they are made new creatures; Christ is formed in their hearts, and they are conform'd to him, who is the first-born among many brethren; his image is impressed upon them, and all the parts of the new man are in a just proportion in them, though not grown up to their perfection; and thus being made partakers of the divine nature, and appearing in the beauties of holiness, they are all glorious and comely within.

3. Believers are so in their church state, having fellowship with Christ, and with one another, walking together in, and according to the commands and ordinances of Christ Jesus: A church of Christ, in gospel order, is beautiful for situation; all her tabernacles are amiable and lovely; and enjoying the presence of Christ in them, is beautiful as Tirzah, comely as Jerusalem, and terrible as an army with banners. O how comely are the saints in their goings in Zion! a more lovely sight than this can scarce be seen; they are then like a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariots.

4. However black believers may be in the eyes of the world, they are certainly comely in the eyes of Christ; who often, in this song, calls his church his fair one, and the fairest among women; however undesirable she was to others, she was very desirable to him; her eyes, cheeks, lips, teeth, head, hair, neck, &c. are commended and praised by him; so much beauty and comeliness appeared in her, that his heart was even ravished with her; and so long as he thinks her comely, it matters not what opinion others entertain of her.

3dly, She makes use of some similes to express both her blackness and her comeliness, as the tents of Kedar; as the curtains of Solomon. Some * think that these refer to both parts of her character; and suppose that the tents of Kedar, though they were mean and abject without, yet were full of wealth and riches within; and that Solomon's curtains or hangings had an outward covering, which was not so rich and valuable as that within; and so are both designed by the church to represent unto us, that though she was mean and abject, in the eyes of the world, yet she was rich, glorious, and beautiful within: The outside of a believer is only seen by the world, and they judge of him accordingly; his inside is hid from them, as the riches of Kedar's tents, and the fineness of Solomon's curtains were from those who viewed the outside only; though I rather think her blackness is designed by the one, and her comeliness by the other.

1. For her blackness, she compares her self to the tents of Kedar. Kedar was the second son of Ishmael, Gen. xxiv. 13. whose posterity dwelt in the deserts of Arabia, Isa. xlii. 11. and their employment being to feed cattle, Isa. lx. 7. They dwelt in tents, Psal. cxx. 4, 5. which were made of hair cloth, and that of goats hair; which being always exposed to the sun and rain, were very black, look'd very mean and contemptible: They had no other houses but these; and because they always dwelt in them, removing and pitching them at pleasure, therefore they were called Scenites<sup>s</sup>. Now the church compares her self to these mean, black, and despicable tents, on the account of the sins and infirmities of her self, the carnality and hypocrisy of others, the many errors and heresies she was vexed with, as well as the persecutions and reproaches of men, which oftentimes oppressed her, as has been already observed.

2. For her comeliness, she compares her self to the curtains of Solomon: The Septuagint read it, ὡς δερρεῖς Σαλωμών, as the skins of Solomon; and so the Vulgate Latin likewise; which version Gilbert Foliot<sup>h</sup> following, in his exposition of this place, says it is not to be understood of the skins of sheep, goats, or any other animal, but of the very skin of Solomon himself; who being a rich king, and living deliciously, he supposes was very comely and beautiful, to whose fine skin he thinks the church here compares herself, to set forth her comeliness; but this is much better referred by Alcuin, his countryman, to the skins of slain beasts, of which he thinks, Solomon made tents for himself; though, it seems rather to intend those rich hangings of tapestry, which Solomon had, either about his bed, or in the several apartments of his house, which, no doubt, were very rich, costly, and glorious, he being so great and wealthy a prince; and therefore the church, on the account of her perfect comeliness, through Christ's righteousness put upon her, and the curious.

curious and embroider'd work of the spirit of God in her, as also her walk in gospel order, compares her self to these curtains or hangings. Moreover, by a metonymy, may be understood, both in this and the preceding comparison, the persons who dwelt in Kedar's tents, and Solomon's courtiers, who lived in these apartments of his, which were so richly hung; the former being black, and the latter dwelling in the palace of a wealthy king, and faring deliciously, were, no doubt, plump and comely; though neither Solomon nor any of his courtiers, could come near the church for beauty and comeliness; and to this sense agrees <sup>1</sup> Junius's version of the text. But,

III. Let us now consider the reason of her giving this account of her self to the daughters of Jerusalem: Her design seems to be to obviate what might be objected by, and remove whatever might be discouraging in her to the daughters of Jerusalem, those young converts; they might object to her, thou talkest of being brought into the king's chambers, and having nearness of access unto him; how can it be, that one so black as thou art, should be taken notice of, by so great a person, and have such nearness to him, who appears to be so mean and so unworthy thereof? To this she answers, by granting, that she was black in herself, but yet was comely, through his comeliness; in him she was prepared as a bride adorned for her husband; and it was this that gave her the favour and acceptance she had with him.

Again, It might be objected, how can'st thou be chearful, when thou art so black, loaded with persecutions and afflictions, and hated and despised by all? This she obviates by observing, that the world could not see her inward glory, and therefore passed a wrong judgment upon her; and that the unseen glory, riches, beauty, and perfection in Christ, supported her under all reflections, persecutions and reproaches.

Also the sins and infirmities which they saw in her, as well as the sufferings she was exposed unto, might stumble those young converts, and be a means to deter them from the ways of Christ, and joining with his church and people; and seeing there was danger of this, therefore she informs them of her beauty, as well as of her blackness; of her grace, as well as of her corruptions; of her glory, as well as of her sufferings; and in doing this, her design is to engage and encourage them to go with her; in all which, she discovers her strength of faith in Christ, and his righteousness, notwithstanding all her sins and sufferings; of which she gives a further account in the following verse.

Ver. 6. Look not upon me, because I am black, because the sun hath looked upon me: My mother's children were angry with me, they made me the keeper of the vineyards, but mine own vineyard have I not kept.

THE church here continues her discourse to the daughters of Jerusalem:
And,

- I. Desires of them, not to look upon her.
- II. Gives a reason why she would not have them do so, because I am black; of which blackness she assigns several causes; some of which are more near, others more remote.

I. She desires the daughters of Jerusalem not to look upon her; which may be understood, either, 1. Of a look of scorn and disdain: She was now in suffering circumstances, surrounded with a variety of enemies, exposed to a multitude of troubles, and liable to many failings and infirmities; for which reasons she might be jealous of falling under their scorn and contempt, and therefore says, look not upon me. The meanness, poverty and sufferings of the saints, render them contemptible to the world; and the failures and imperfections of their lives, are oftentimes thrown in their teeth, and this, too often, by professors themselves; but this we should be very careful of, that we do not treat our fellow christians after such a manner; we should be far from slighting a believer under sufferings, or carrying it with a disdainful air to a fallen saint; for we should consider, that we also are in the body, and liable to the same temptations. Or else, 2. It means a curious and prying look into her failings and infirmities; conscious she was to her self of them, but knew it was not their duty, though, perhaps, they too often made it their business to look into them. There are some who are never better, than when thus employ'd, in exposing of the saints; they watch for their haltings, and are glad to report and spread a tale of the infirmities of their brethren; their eyes pierce like vultures, and fasten upon nothing else but corruption: But such a curious, prying look as this, is condemned by Christ, Mat. vii. 3, 4, 5. And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye, &c. If God did as strictly observe and mark our iniquities, as we are too apt to mark one anothers, what would become of us! This consideration should deter us from xxiii. 5—11. Ezek. viii. 16. for idolatry, error, and superstition, will make the church black. 2. Others <sup>d</sup> understand it of Christ, the sun of righteousness; and that she was made black, either by suffering for him, or else by being in his company; in whose presence, all other beauty, but his own, vanishes and disappears. Thus a person that is not of a fair complexion, being in the company of one that is, looks abundantly worse than if viewed alone: Christ's beauty infinitely exceeds any that is in us; there is no comparison between them; we look black, exceeding black, when compared to Christ. But, 3. I should rather chuse to understand it of the sun of persecution, for under this name it goes in Mat. xiii. 6. compared with ver. 21. and this seems to suit better with the church's present state and circumstances; and, indeed, every one that will live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution, either from the tongues, if not from the hands of men: And this persecution, which the church underwent, seems to be a very vehement one; in that she compares it to the looks and scorplings of the sun; and it must continue some time upon her, to make and leave such visible marks and impressions of it; and yet she patiently endured all, and bravely bore the heat and burden of the day, and seems to be no more ashamed of her sufferings, than she was of the person and cause for whom she suffered.

<sup>2dly.</sup> Her mother's children were angry with her. To her outward persecution were added intestine broils; it is therefore no wonder she looked so black as she did: Oftentimes a man's worst enemies are the men of his own house. The Targum, by mother's children understand the false prophets, who taught the congregation of Israel to serve the idols, and walk in the statutes of the people, by reason of which, she served not the Lord, neither walked in his statutes, nor kept his precepts and his laws. R. Sol. Jarchi thinks the Egyptians are intended, among whom the Israelites were brought up; many of whom came along with them; out of Egypt, and were frequently the cause of their falling into sin: But rather we are to understand by mother's children, either, 1. Indwelling sins and corruptions, which are produced with nature; lust conceived, as soon as we were conceived; nay, we were conceived with it; and in it, as the psalmist says, Psal. li. 5. bebold I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me; which brought forth sin in us, as soon as we were brought forth into the world; and these indwelling lusts and corruptions proclaim war against us; these war-against the soul, and sometimes bring it into captivity, to the law of sin, which is in the members; they frequently draw us away to the performance of sinful actions; making us the keepers of other vineyards, and often divert us from our duty; and cause us to neglect it; they hinder us from doing the good we would; for when we would do good, evil is present with us; and so we may be said not to keep our own vineyard. Or else, 2. Carnal professors may be here intended, who are members of the same society, externally children of the same mother, who profess themselves of the holy city, are pretenders to godliness, but enemies to it; such are they, who have a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof.

thereof, in themselves, and hate it in others; which, perhaps, may be one reason why these children that were born after the flesh, these false brethren, were angry with the church here; as they frequently are at her zealous defence and vindication of gospel truths and ordinances, in the power and purity of them, and at her faithful reproofs and admonitions to them and others, throwing all the scandal and reproach upon her, that possibly they can: Now these are generally her most bitter and implacable enemies, are thorns in her side, and give her the greatest uneasiness, causing more grief and trouble to her, than all her sufferings and persecution from the world; for hereby they blacken and lessen her reputation and character, more than any other, whatever; and yet bear it she must, and patiently she ought to endure it; Christ himself was not free from it, for who were more bitter and implacable enemies to him, and his gospel, than the Jews, God's professing people, and the chief among them, the high priests and Pharisees?

3dly. She says, they made her the keeper of the vineyards, as an effect of their anger to her, and this, no doubt, added to her blackness; for being obliged to lie abroad in the fields, to keep the vineyards, she was exposed to the scorching sun beams, and thereby got the hue she appeared with; this employment being not only very slavish, but base, mean, and reproachful; it was what was usually done by the poorer sort, and was much below the honour and dignity she was raised unto. By vineyards may be meant false churches; and by her keeping them, her falling in with their corrupt worship, and observance of the vain traditions and ordinances of men; which Christ complains of, and condemns in the Jewish church, who made the commandment of God of none effect, by their traditions: But this the church was obliged unto by her mother's children; her compliance does not seem to be voluntary, but forced, and she complains of it as an imposition; they made me, i. e. forced and obliged me to do it. And this produced, 4thly. A neglect of her own vineyard, but mine own vineyard have I not kept; which still increased her blackness; through outward persecution, intestine broils, and a sinful compliance to human traditions, arising either from fear, or weakness, or both, her own vineyard, the church, or her own soul was neglected. Every believer has talents more or less given him to occupy, grace to exercise, gifts to use, and a part assigned him in the Lord's vineyard to labour in; and when these things are neglected by him, either through the fear of men, or the corruptions of his own heart, he may be said, not to have kept his vineyard; which, perhaps, sometimes is like his who was void of understanding, which was all grown over with thorns, and nettles had covered the face thereof; but when he is sensible of it, he will acknowledge and bewail it, as the church does here; she does not go about to extenuate her sin, by the anger of her mother's children, or their obliging her to keep other vineyards, but ingenuously acknowledges that it was her fault to neglect her own; which, as it was prejudicial to herself, so it was highly resented by Christ, who, perhaps, thereupon removed his presence from her, for she seems to be at a loss to know where he was, as is manifest from the following words.

Ver.

Ver. 7. Tell me (O thou whom my soul loveth) where thou feedest, where thou makest thy flocks to rest at noon: For why should I be as one, that turneth aside by the flocks of thy companions.

THE church having in the two former verses, directed her speech to the daughters of Jerusalem, and given them an account of herself, and present condition, with the reasons thereof, which she did, in order to solve their objections, and remove all discouragements from them that might arise from thence; and being sensible of her weakness and sinfulness in complying with, and embracing the traditions and doctrines of men, in which she found no solid food for her soul; she therefore makes application to Christ, the great shepherd of the sheep, that he would feed, refresh, guide, direct, and restore her wandering soul. In these words are,

I. A request made unto him.

II. Some arguments used by her to prevail upon him:

I. Here is a request made by the church to Christ, which consists of two parts. First, To know where he feedeth; tell me where thou feedest. Secondly, That he would inform her where he rested and refreshed his flock in the heat of the day, where thou makest thy flocks to rest at noon; both which we shall enter into a consideration of.

First, She desires to know where Christ fed; which is to be understood not passively, where he himself was fed, or where he fed himself; but actively, where he fed others, viz. his flock, which though not expressed in the original text, must be understood: and it may be observed here, that God's own children, sometimes, may be at a loss to know where Christ feeds; which may arise either from the prevailings of corruptions in them, whereby they have step'd out of the ways of Christ; or from the hidings of God's face, and the with-drawings of the sun of righteousness, or from the violent temptations of satan, and fierce persecutions of the world; but when they are hungry, and desirous of spiritual food, they will enquire after it, and are very jealous, lest they should not be fed by Christ, and with the wholesome words of faith and sound doctrine; therefore in these straits they make their application to Christ, and him only, who feeds his flock like a shepherd; which branch of Christ's work and office we shall now consider; and and shall endeavour to show, 1st. What this phrase supposes and intends as referr'd to Christ. 2dly. What he feeds his flock with. 3dly. How, after what manner, and by what means he feeds them. 4thly. Where he does so.

1st. It will be proper to enquire what is supposed and intended by Christ's feeding souls.

1. It supposes that Christ is a shepherd; and he frequently calls himself so, in John x. The scriptures, both of the old and new Testament, do abundantly testify that he bears this character, and stands in this relation to his people, where where he is called God's shepherd; awake, O sword, against my shepherd, and against the man that is my fellow, saith the Lord of hosts, Zech. xiii. 7. now he is so called, because he is the shepherd, whom God the father has approved of, chosen, appointed, set up and sent to be the shepherd of the sheep; who, as such, died for the sheep and rose again, and as such must give an account unto the Father, of all the sheep which he has intrusted him with; he must bring in the full number, yea, must not have one of them wanting. He is also called the chief shepherd; and when the chief shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory, which fadeth not away, 1 Pet. v. 4. which title he well deserves; for he that is God's shepherd, is also God's fellow, entirely equal to him in the dignity of his nature, and in the fulness of his power and glory; all other shepherds are under him, they receive their commissions from him, have their several flocks assigned to them by him, are furnished with abilities from him to feed them; to him, at last, must they give an account of themselves, their work, and the flocks that were put under their care, and from him shall they receive the never fading crown of glory. He likewise calls himself the good shepherd; I am the good shepherd, the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep, John x. 11. and he may very justly call himself so, for so he was to him that employ'd him, and so he is to those who are made his care and charge; he was faithful to his father, that appointed him, and is merciful and compassionate to, careful and tender of the sheep committed to his trust; of which, a greater proof cannot be given, than his laying down his life for them. He is called the great shepherd; now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, Heb. xiii. 20. which will manifestly appear, if we consider the dignity of his person, being the son of God; the nature of his flock, the souls of men, therefore he is called the shepherd and bishop of souls; and also the largeness of his abilities for this work; he has an exquisite knowledge of them, he can tell them all by name; he is endued with infinite wisdom and prudence to manage and order his flock aright; has an almighty arm to protect and defend them from all their enemies; is furnished with large supplies of grace for them, and bears an inexpressible love unto them. Finally, he is the one, and the only shepherd; I will set up one shepherd over them, and he shall feed them, Ezek. xxxiv. 23. not but that there are other shepherds, which are under Christ, and whom he employs in his service, to feed his flock; but Christ is the chief and principal; God the father never did, nor ever will set up any other, he is the only shepherd that owns the flock, having purchased it with his own blood, and he alone is able to take care of it.

2. Feeding being applied to Christ, not only supposes that he is a shepherd, but also that he has a flock to feed; he shall feed his flock like a shepherd, Isa. xl. 11. All the elect are Christ's flock, they are his people, and the sheep of his pasture; the father has given them to him, and has put them into his hands; he has also purchased them with his blood, and calls them by his grace: Hence they know his voice, follow his steps, believe in him, and therefore shall never perish, but have everlasting life. Which flock is, 1. A distinct one; it is distinguished from all others, by electing, redeeming, and efficacious grace; Christ's sheep are distinct from the world's goats, and satan's wolves in sheeps cloathing, and will one day be separated and manifestly distinguished, not only from the open enemies of Christ, but also from all painted hypocrites, and carnal professors. 2. Though this flock is divided into many parts and branches, yet it is but one flock; for as there are but one fold, and one shepherd, so there is but one flock under the care of this shepherd; though there are many particular flocks or churches here on earth, yet there is but one general assembly and church of the first born, whose names are written in heaven. 3. This is but a little flock; fear not little flock, &c. Luke xii. 32. Christ's flock of sheep are little and contemptible in the eyes of the world; and are low and mean in their own eyes; they are few in number, when compared with the world's goats, though when all appear together in glory, they'll be a great multitude, which no man can number. 4. It is called a flock of slaughter: Thus said the Father to the son, feed the flock of the slaughter, and he replied, I will feed the flock of slaughter, even you, O poor of the flock, Zech. xi. 4—7. and it is so called, because it is exposed to the cruelty and barbarity of open and avowed enemies, and to the ravings of wolves in sheeps cloathing; the saints, for the sake of Christ and his gospel, have been killed all the day long, and accounted as sheep for the slaughter, Rom. viii. 36. 5. Nevertheless 'tis a beautiful flock, as the people of the Jews are called in Jer. xiii. 20. the saints are beautiful in Christ's eyes, being cloathed with his spotless righteousness, washed in his precious blood, and sanctified by his spirit; therefore, however black they may be in their own eyes, or in the eyes of others, they are comely and delightful in the eyes of Christ.

3. This act of feeding takes in, and comprehends the whole work and business of a faithful shepherd towards his flock; all which Christ fully and exactly performs. 1. He knows them distinctly, and takes a particular account of them; he knows them so, that he can call them all by name; he knew them full well in his father's gift of them to him, and so he did when he shed his precious blood for them; he knew distinctly all that he died for; and in effectual calling, he sets his mark, stamps his image on them, that it may also appear both to themselves and others, to whose flock they belong; he took a particular account of them, when the father put them into his hands, and made them his care and charge; and they shall again pass under the hands of him that telleth them; for he'll take care that not one of them shall be lost, but shall be all safely folded in heaven. 2. He not only as a shepherd takes a particular account of his flock, but he also leads them out, goes before them, and they follow him; he leads them out of the barren pastures of sin, and leads them into the green pastures of his love and grace; he goes before them as an example to the flock, of love, meekness, humility, patience, &c. and they follow him, in an observance of his ordinances, and in an obedience to his commands, till he has safely conducted them to glory. 3. He protects them from all their enemies; Christ's flock is exposed unto, and surrounded by many a roaring lion; ravenous ravenous wolves, and snarling dogs stand ready to devour it, had they but as large a permission, and as good an opportunity as they desire; but as David defended his father's sheep from the lion and the bear, so does Christ defend his; he has power enough to do it, and there is not wanting in him, either will, courage, or diligence. 4. He restores his sheep, when they have wander'd and stray'd from the fold; as it is natural for sheep to go astray, so it is common to Christ's sheep, not only before, but after conversion; I have gone astray like a lost sheep, says David, Psal. cxix. 176. seek thy servant; Christ does so, when his sheep go astray, he seeks every where, until he has found them; when he lays them upon his shoulders, and brings them into his fold again, rejoicing; he restores their souls to their former life and liveliness, and leads them in the paths of righteousness, for his own name's sake. 5. He heals all their diseases: There are many diseases which sheep are liable to, and therefore had need to be well looked after; so there are many diseases which Christ's sheep are liable to, but they are all healed by him; he binds up the broken hearted, strengthens the weak, heals the sick and wounded; none ever die of their diseases; he is a sovereign, free, universal and infallible physician. 6. He watches over them in the night seasons, as the shepherds of Bethlehem did over their flocks; he watches over them night and day, in the dark and cloudy day, in the night of affliction, temptation or desertion; he never leaves them nor forsakes them. 7. In short, he makes all necessary provisions for them; so that they shall not, neither can they want any good thing; he takes care that they shall have the best of food, and what is most suitable and proper for them; he has all fullness of grace treasured up in him, and he freely distributes it among them, as they stand in need. Having thus took notice of what is supposed and intended in this act of feeding, I shall now consider, zdy, What Christ feeds his flock with, and that is, 1. With himself, who is the bread of life, which being fed upon by faith, supports and maintains the life of God's children; and such are the nature, virtue, and efficacy of it, that if a man eat thereof, he shall never hunger after the sinful pleasures of this life, so as he has heretofore done; he shall also never die the second death, but shall live spiritually here, and eternally with Christ hereafter, Christ's flesh is meat indeed, and his blood is drink indeed; and the believing soul tastes a sweetness herein, and receives nourishment from hence. Christ is the hidden manna, the food of the wilderness, which faith lives upon, whilst travelling through it. O how richly are the saints fed, whose food is Christ himself! 2. He feeds them with the gospel, the doctrines and promises of it; the doctrines of the gospel are the wholesome words of our Lord Jesus Christ, in which believers are nourished up; these are sweet to their taste, the joy and rejoicing of their hearts, and are esteemed by them more than their necessary food; the promises of the gospel are exceeding great and precious, faith often lives upon them; the whole gospel furnishes the believer with a variety of food; in it are milk for babes and meat for strong men; there's what is suitable to the dispositions, tastes and constitutions of all God's children. 3. He feeds them with the discoveries of his love and grace; he brings them into his his banqueting-house, and his banner over them is love; there he gives his best wine, and revives and refreshes their fainting and drooping souls with it; he not only feeds them with himself, the bread of life, but he also sheds abroad his love in their hearts, which is better than wine; and thus with both these, from time to time, does he regale them; and in making such comfortable repasts for them, which they largely feed upon, they grow stronger and stronger, until, at length, they become perfect men in Christ Jesus. But,

3dly, How, after what manner, and by what means does Christ feed his flock? This is a part of the church's request; for so the words may be read, tell me how thou feedest, and how thou makest thy flocks to rest at noon. Now, Christ feeds his flock: 1. By his ministers, who are his under-shepherds, to whom he gives commissions to feed his flock, saying, as he did to Peter, John xxi. 15, 16, 17. feed my lambs, feed my sheep; who receive food from Christ, the great shepherd, and have suitable gifts and grace bestowed upon them, that they may feed souls with knowledge and understanding, i. e. with the doctrines of the gospel; which is the food Christ would have his fed with, as has been shown already. 2. He feeds them by his ordinances, which are breasts of consolation to his people, out of which they suck, and are satisfied. Christ oftentimes makes a feast for his people, in his ordinances, and bids them welcome, and says, eat, O friends, yea, drink abundantly, O beloved; and their faith feeds heartily upon the goodness and fatness of his house. 3. He does all this by his spirit; 'tis the spirit of Christ that takes Christ, and the things of Christ, and sets them before us, for faith to feed and live upon; 'tis he that applies the doctrines, and seals the promises of the gospel to us; and 'tis he that sheds abroad the love of Christ in our souls; the ministry of the word, and the ordinances of the gospel, are the means of feeding souls; but these would be dry breasts, and would fall short of satisfying and refreshing them, were they not attended with the spirit of Christ.

4thly, The last enquiry is, where does Christ feed? To this I answer, in the gardens, his several and particular churches, according to Gb. vi. 2. My beloved is gone down into his garden, to the beds of spices, to feed in the gardens. Would any, with the church, know where Christ feeds? 'Tis where his gospel is powerfully preached, his ordinances purely administered, and the laws of his house faithfully put in execution: This may then serve as a direction to such enquiring souls, that would be glad to know where Christ feeds, that they may feed with him; let such seek after a gospel ministry, and sit under it; or a church in gospel order, and give up themselves unto it, to walk with the saints in all the ordinances, and commands of Christ. So much for the first part of the request. It remains to be observed, Secondly, That the church is also desirous to know where Christ makes his flock to rest at noon; and there was a great deal of reason for her to make such a request as this, for it was noon with her; the sun was in its meridian, in its full strength, and had looked upon her, as she declares in the former verse.

verse. <sup>b</sup> Some by noon understand the noon of the everlasting day of the saints happiness and felicity in heaven, where Christ feeds his elect with joys that will never end; leads them to fountains of living water, wipes all tears from their eyes, and gives them an everlasting rest from all their toil and labour; but I think, by it we are rather to understand, either, 1. The noon of temptation, which is sometimes very hot, fierce and violent; satan throws his fiery darts, thick and fast, which oftentimes give the believer much uneasiness; he is in heaviness through manifold temptations; but Christ makes him to lie down quietly, and rest safely; which he does, either by shading him from the violent heat thereof, or by supporting him under it, or else by giving him deliverance from it. Christ has sweet resting places for his people, in the time of temptation; and would you know where and what they are? I answer, the fulness and all-sufficiency of grace, which is in him, is what he makes a believing soul sweetly to rest in, at such a time; when he is pleased to say unto it, as he did to the apostle Paul, when in such a case, my grace is sufficient for thee: such sweet resting places, in times of temptation, are also his precious blood, which always speaks peace and pardon, and is of an eternal efficacy; his spotless righteousness, in which, as neither law nor justice, so neither can satan find any flaw; as likewise, his atoning sacrifice, by which he has effectually put away sin, and perfected, for ever, them that are sanctified; and so is his advocateship and intercession, in the discharge of which, he pleads the believers cause, answers all satan's charges and accusations exhibited against him, and prays for him, that his faith fail not; moreover, the covenant of grace is another resting place, which stands firm and sure, and the promises thereof are absolute, unconditional, and shall never fail. Now these are some of those sweet resting places, in which Christ causes his people to lie down and rest, in the noon time of temptation: Or else, by noon may be meant, 2. The noon of affliction, which is sometimes very sharp and severe upon God's children; so that as Job says, Ch. xxx. 30. their skin is black upon them, and their bones are burnt with the heat thereof; they have generally a large share of afflictions in this world; this sun oftentimes smites them very severely: but Christ has his resting places for them, where he makes them lie down and rest, which are such as the world know nothing of; he grants them his presence, and goes along with them, when they walk through the fire, or through the water; so that the one shall not kindle upon them, nor the other overflow them; he puts underneath his everlasting arms, and supports them under all their trials; he makes their bed in their affliction, so that it becomes easy to them; he discovers his love and grace to their souls, and gives them views of their interest in him; he remembers his word of promise to them, on which he has caused them to hope; lets them see that all their afflictions are in love, that they are all working for their good, and when he thinks proper, he delivers them; and upon such pillows, and in such resting places as these, does he cause his people to lie down, where he gives his beloved sleep, in the noon time of affliction: Or else, 3. By the noon may be meant the noon of persecution; and this, indeed, seems to be the case of the church here; the sun of persecution had scorched her, and her mother's children were angry with her; and therefore, being in distress and anguish of soul, she desires to know, unto what cooling and refreshing shades Christ used to lead his flock, at such a time. 'Tis an allusion to shepherds, who, in those hot countries, used to lead their flocks in the heat of the day, which is at noon, to some cool and shady place, where they might repose themselves, and be preserved from the vehemency of the scorching sun. Most of the Jewish writers interpret it of the captivity of the people of Israel, which was a time of tribulation and distress unto them: The heat of persecution seems chiefly intended, which fiery trial oftentimes befalls God's children; but Christ has his resting places for them, at such a time, and under such a trial; he'll recompense tribulation to them that trouble his people, but to those that are troubled, i. e. with persecution, he'll give rest with us, says the apostle, 2 Thes. i. 6, 7. rest here, and rest hereafter; he gives liberty of soul, when in prison, and fills with an unspeakable joy, even when both their goods and good names are spoiled, and taken away from them; he gives them a peace under all the racks and tortures, cruelty and barbarity that are exercised upon them by their enemies, which passeth all understanding; they find such rest, satisfaction and contentment in the person, blood and righteousness of Christ, that they choose rather, with Moses, to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin; which are but for a season, Heb. xi. 25.

Thirdly, The arguments she makes use of to obtain her request, which are these, 1st, She argues from her strong love and affection to him; tell me, O thou whom my soul loveth: 'Tis true, these words may be consider'd as an endearing title, which she gave to him; but yet they seem more strongly to express her singular esteem of him, and her sincere and unfeigned love and affection to him, than those usual titles, my love, or my beloved, do; which love of hers might very well be improved as an argument to obtain her request, thus; "O thou who art the great shepherd of the sheep, tell me in " what pastures thou art graciously pleased to feed thy flock, and to what " cooling shades thou dost lead them, in the heat of the day, to screen
 " them from the scorching sun. She who makes this humble request unto thee, " though mean and unworthy of thy notice, yet is one that loves thee with " all her heart and soul; who, though of late, through the weakness and " sinfulness of her own heart, and through the fear and force of others, has " step'd aside from thy commandments to the doctrines and traditions of " men; yet, being made sensible of her weakness and folly therein, cannot " be easy to continue among those false teachers and worshippers, and there" fore, from a real love to thy person, a respect to thine ordinances, and a
 " regard to thy glory, humbly desires to be informed of these things." Now though the church knew full well that her love to Christ could merit nothing, nor deserve a gracious answer from him; yet she was sensible that expressions of love were very pleasing to him, and therefore she takes this method. The nature, causes and actions of a soul's love to Christ have been

shewn on ver. 3. 2dly. She argues and expostulates with him, on the account of her present case, and what was likely to befall her, if he did not give her some speedy directions; for why should I be as one that turneth aside by the flocks of thy companions? there is much <sup>a</sup> difficulty and difference in the rendering of the Hebrew word, which we translate as one that turneth aside; some render it as one that covereth her self, or is covered, either as an harlot; so Tamar covered herself, which made Judah take her to be an harlot, Gen. xxxviii. 14. or as a widow <sup>b</sup> in mourning, it being the custom of mourners to cover themselves, Ezek. xxiv. 17, 22. and then the sense is, “why should I be suspected to be an harlot, and look’d upon as an unchaste woman that has left her own husband to follow strangers; when thou, who art the searcher of hearts and trier of reins, knowest that I love thee in sincerity, and am heartily desirous of following thee in thine own ways:” Or else the sense is, “why should I appear in a widow’s dress, and go mourning and forrowing as if I had no husband; O tell me where thou art, and where I may enjoy thy presence, and be delighted with thy company.” Junius and Tremellius translate the words thus, why should I be as one that spreadeth the tent with the flocks of thy companions; and give this as the sense, “why should I? I would not, though but for a time, have any conversation with such persons, who pretend to be thy friends, and are not; I cannot bear it, my soul abhors and detests the thoughts of it, though, perhaps, through my weakness and infirmities, I may do it; O therefore tell me quickly, speedily, where thou feedest:” Others render it as one that wanders about, declines, or turns aside by the flocks of thy companions: This agrees with our version; and from these words we may observe, 1. That there are some who would be the associates and companions of Christ, who indeed are not; these were not really so, but usurped to themselves an equal power and authority with Christ: Such are those who take upon them an arbitrary and lordly government of Christ’s flock, who make and impose laws on the consciences of men, which Christ never established, and who teach doctrines contrary to those which Christ taught, and which are derogatory to his honour and glory: Such rivals with, and pretended companions of Christ, are, the pope of Rome, who exalts himself above all that is called God; Arians, who deny Christ’s divinity; Socinians, that oppose his satisfaction; and all self-Justiciaries, that advance the doctrine of justification by works, in opposition to justification by his imputed righteousness: but such Christ will not own as his friends, nor suffer to be his rivals and companions; for as his own arm brought salvation to him, so the government is alone upon his shoulders; as he was alone in the purchase and salvation of his flock, so he will be in the government, and feeding of it; for his glory, which arises from thence, he’ll not give to another. Christ never did, nor never will impower any to make new laws, or coin new doctrines for his church and people. 2. These false and pretended friends and companions nions of Christ, who are no other than wolves in sheep's clothing, have their flocks. Hereticks and false teachers, in all ages, have had their followers, and sometimes large numbers have been drawn away after them; and this God suffers in a judicial way; he gives them up to believe a lie, because they loved not the truth; but having itching ears, grew weary of it and wanted something new: also these are permitted to have their flocks, by themselves, that Christ's little flock might be distinguished from them, and that those who are chosen, loved and approved by God, might be made manifest; as also to animate and excite the faithful ministers of the gospel to be constant and assiduous, bold and faithful to preach the doctrines of Christ, and to oppose others. 3. Believers are very fearful, lest they should, and are very desirous that they might not go aside, from the ways of Christ; they are jealous of their own hearts, and are sensible that there is in them a propensity thereunto; they know that satan uses all the crafty methods, and takes all the opportunities he can to draw them aside, and corrupt their minds from the simplicity that is in Christ; they are apprized of their own weakness, and know that they are not kept by their own power, but that if they are left to themselves, they shall soon divert to crooked paths; and the present case of the church also manifestly shews that God may, for a time, suffer his own children to be carried away with the error of the wicked; but when they are made sensible of it, they'll be filled with an holy indignation against it, and make it their principal request at the throne of grace to be delivered out of it, and that their feet may be guided and directed in the paths of Christ: Now those who are desirous that they may be kept from turning aside unto, and joining with the flocks of false teachers, who vainly pretend to be the friends and companions of Christ, should abide in the Lord's inheritance, keep close to Christ's ways and ordinances, and not believe every spirit, but try them according to the word of God, as the noble Bereans did; they should earnestly beg that the gospel which is preached unto them might effectually work in them, and make deep impressions upon them; so shall they not be like children tossed about with every wind of doctrine. But let us hear what directions Christ himself gives to the church in the following words.

Ver. 8. If thou know not (O thou fairest among women) go thy way forth by the footsteps of the flock, and feed thy kids besides the shepherds tents.

SOME<sup>a</sup> think that these are the words of the chorus of virgins or daughters of Jerusalem, by whom she is called the fairest among women, in Cb. v. 9. and vi. 1. who here instruct and direct her where she might find and come at the sight of her beloved; but the note of R. Solomon Jarchi is much preferable, which is, that this is the answer of the shepherd; for it was to him, and not to the virgins, that she made her application; nor were they capable of giving her any directions in this case, but rather stood in need of some from her, as is manifest from Cb. v. 9. and vi. 1. In this answer of Christ's unto the church, are these three things,

- I. The commendation he gives her; O thou fairest among women.
- II. A supposition of her ignorance; if thou know not.
- III. A direction to her; go thy way, &c.

I. Christ in these words gives the church an excellent commendation, O thou fairest among women; in what sense the church is fair and comely has been shown, on ver. 5. who though black in her self, and in her own eyes, yet having Christ's righteousness imputed to her, and his grace wrought in her, is fair and comely: which commendation here, both in itself, and as it follows upon the account which she gave of herself and state, in the preceding verses, may teach us the following things. 1. That the beauty of the church is very great and exceedingly admired by Christ; as some men are eminent for their strength, courage and valour, so are some women for their beauty and comeliness; and she being said to be the fairest among women, shews that her beauty must be excellent and surpassing; as he is fairer in her eyes than all the sons, so she is fairer in his than all the daughters of Adam. 2. That believers are fairest in Christ's eyes, when blackest in their own; she had asserted of herself, in ver. 5. that she was black; but here Christ says that she was the fairest among women. The humble believer that has low and mean thoughts of himself, on the account of the corruption of his nature, the imperfection of his obedience, the weakness and insufficiency of his righteousness, is much more esteemed and valued by Christ, than the proud, haughty and vain-glorious Pharisee; an instance of this we have in Luke xviii. 13, 14. An humble soul is one that looks upon it self the least of saints, and the chief of sinners; the countenance of such an one blushing at its sins and infirmities, is beautiful and comely in the eyes of Christ, and is a sight exceeding desirable to him; and therefore he says, in Cb. ii. 14. let me see thy countenance, let me hear thy voice, for sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely. 3. That Christ's thoughts of believers are not according to those which they have of themselves, nor according to those which the world entertains of them; he seeth not as man seeth, neither does he look upon, or judge according to the outward appearance: The believer oftentimes looks upon and judges of himself according to his indwelling corruptions, and the inward frames of his soul, and draws black conclusions against himself: The world looks upon the outward, mean and abject appearance of the saints, and so they become black and contemptible in their eyes; but Christ views them in himself, and in his own righteousness, and considers them in all that glory in which he saw them in the glass of his Father's purposes and decrees, which glory he has fully resolved on, and designed to bring them to the actual possession of; and on this account they appear exceeding fair and beautiful in his eyes. 4. This excellent commendation of the church given by Christ, shews his amazing and unalterable love to her; he loved her now as well as ever; notwithstanding all her blackness through sins and sufferings, she was as fair in his eyes as ever, nay surpassingly fair, fairer than all others; though she had been negligent of her her duty, and had sinfully complied with false and superstitious worship, with the doctrines and traditions of men, and hereby wandered from Christ and his ways, and knew not where he fed, and caused his flock to rest; yet upon her first application to him, he gives her such a character, as expresses much love and tenderness, as well as manifests a very great regard to her, in directing and instructing of her: O matchless love! boundless grace!

II. Here is a supposition of her ignorance, if thou know not; which is not to be understood, either by way of hesitation or reprehension, as if Christ either doubted of her ignorance, or reproved her for it, but by way of inference from what she had suggested; for this particle if, is not always hypothetic or conditional, but is sometimes illative, see Phil. ii. 1. and thus the words may be rendered, seeing thou knowest not, so Junius, or because thou knowest not; and may be considered as a reason, why Christ gave her the following direction and advice, and will lead us to observe these two things.

1. That believers may, in some measure, be ignorant of a great many things in this life; this life is a state of imperfection, both with respect to holiness and knowledge; the greatest believer knows but in part, and sees things but through a glass, darkly: He is ignorant of himself in a great measure, tho' he may know much of the plague of his own heart, of the corruptions and treachery of it, yet he does not know all; for the heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked, who can know it? These words may be render'd from the Hebrew text, thus, if thou know not to thee, or for thyself, so Ainsworth; or if thou knowest not thyself; it is generally look'd upon as a pleonasm, yet it may intend, not only the ignorance which was in herself, but also her ignorance of herself. Again, a believer may be, in some measure, ignorant of Christ and his gospel; he may not so fully know his relation and union to him or interest in him: Many of those truths, which concern Christ's person, grace and kingdom, may be but obscurely revealed unto him; he may have but a small insight into them: Though he may have been long in Christ's school, yet he may be but a babe in knowledge, and need to be taught the first principles of the oracles of God: Our knowledge of these things, at best, is but imperfect; and when compar'd with that which saints shall have in glory, is very dark and obscure: All believers sometimes may be at a very great loss to know where Christ feeds his church and people; and this has been the case of the saints, as it was of the church here, in times of persecution, darkness and superstition; they have not only been at a loss for his presence, but they have also been at a loss for his ordinances; they have not only been ignorant, where he was, but also they have not known where his gospel was preached in the power, and his ordinances administered in the purity of them. 2. That though Christ's people are ignorant of a great many things, and of such, which, as one would think, they should not be ignorant of, but should make it their principal business to be acquainted with, yet Christ does not upbraid them with it; for he has compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way: as their merciful and faithful high-priest, he has atoned for their sins, both of ignorance and presumption; and as their prophet he instructs them by his word and spirit, and guides their feet in the way of peace; and therefore the most ignorant soul need not be discouraged from going to Christ for wisdom, counsel and direction; but let him that lacketh wisdom, ask it of him, who giveth liberally to all men, and upbraidelth not, and it shall be given him, Jam. i. 6.

III. Here's a direction which Christ gives her, in answer to her request, which consists of two parts; First, To go forth by the footsteps of the flock. Secondly, To feed her kids beside the shepherds tents.

First, The first thing which Christ directs and advises her to, is, to go her way forth, by the footsteps of the flock. Some<sup>1</sup> consider those words, not as a direction to the church, but as spoken by way of resentment to her. Christ, observing the church was growing uneasy under her trials and temptations, and, as it were, threatening, that if he did not relieve her, she would join herself to the flocks of his companions; being ignorant, both of her own beauty, which she had received from him, and of that relation which she stood in to him; as also, that she must expect to meet with troubles, temptations and trials with him, and for him; Christ, I say, observing and resenting this froward temper of hers, and the ignorance that was in her, bids her be gone from his presence, and follow the steps of those flocks, which she had mentioned, and see what would be the consequence of it, and whether she would find her account in it or no; and feed her kids, i. e. give a loose to, and indulge her carnal lusts and corruptions among those persons, whom she seem'd to have an inclination to: But they seem rather to be spoken by way of direction than resentment; and there are some, who, though they look upon the words as a direction of Christ to the church, yet by the footsteps of the flock, understand the paths and ways of those sheep and shepherds, among which she was, and by whom she was in danger of being carried away, and read the words thus, <sup>m</sup> go out from those footsteps of the flock, so Junius and Tremellius; but though, no doubt, the church is here directed and exhorted to depart from the ways of sin, to leave all superstition and idolatry, and come out from among false worshippers; yet I cannot but think, that the footsteps of the flock are the rule and mark by which she was to go, and keep her eye upon, in finding Christ: And it may be enquired, 1st. What is meant by the flock. 2<sup>dly</sup>. What by the footsteps of it, by and in which the church was to go.

1st, What is meant by the flock; and by it we are to understand, the flock which the father has committed into the hands of Christ, which he has purchased with his own blood, and continually feeds like a shepherd; this is called a flock, in the singular number, in opposition to the numerous flocks of those other shepherds, mentioned in ver. 7. for as there is but one shepherd, who is Christ, so there is but one flock, which is the church; of which flock I have given a more large account on the former verse.

2<sup>dly</sup>, By the footsteps of the flock, are meant the ways and ordinances, in which saints by faith walk, in obedience to Christ Jesus; he has left us an example that we should follow his steps; so far as believers walk therein, we should should follow and walk in the steps of the same faith, which they have done, and in so doing, may and shall find the presence of Christ Jesus; from whence may be observed, 1. That we have no reason to expect a new gospel or new ordinances; but we should enquire for the good old way, in which the saints, in all ages, have trod; no new lights or new revelations, that have no foundation in the word of God, are to be regarded by us; for we have a more sure word of prophecy, to which we do well if we take heed. Christ has in his word established the order of his churches, fixed the ordinances thereof, till his second coming, and marked out the paths in which he would have his people walk; and these are the footsteps of the flock, which saints, in all ages, should go by. 2. That the faith and obedience of God's children, as to the substance of them, have been the same in all ages: There is but one faith, one Lord, one baptism; the object of faith has been always the same; so have the spirit and author of faith, and also the grace itself, as to its nature and actings: There has been but one Lord, who has established laws and ordinances, has a power to require obedience, and to whom, in all ages, it has been given by his saints, both in a way of doing and suffering. 3. That the practices of former saints, both as to their faith and obedience, are to be imitated by us: See Heb. vi. 12. and xiii. 7. but always with this limitation, given by the apostle Paul, be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ, 1 Cor. xi. i. and indeed, no farther should we follow the most eminent saints, for faith and holiness, than as they have trod in those steps, which Christ has marked out for them and us. 4. In so doing, we may expect to have our souls fed and nourished as theirs were, and to enjoy the presence of Christ, as they did; for though our faith and obedience deserve none of all this, yet in walking in Christ's ways, we have most reason to expect it, being encouraged both by Christ's promises, and by those many instances and cloud of witnesses that have gone before us. The Targum and R. Sol. Jarchi, understand this part of the direction, of the righteous, in whose steps those that come after, should tread.

Secondly, The other part of the direction is, to feed her kids beside the shepherds tents. 1st. By shepherds may be meant<sup>a</sup> such who are called the companions of Christ in ver. 7. who only had the appearance of shepherds, but were inwardly ravenous wolves: The words may be rendred, feed thy kids above the shepherds tents, or above the tents of other shepherds; so R. Aben Ezra, and Junius; i.e. go beyond their tents, and do not pitch thine where theirs are, but carry thy kids farther, into other pastures, and feed them with better and more wholesome food than they give; or else, by them, may be meant the ministers of the gospel, who are Christ's under shepherds, whose business is to feed Christ's sheep and lambs, with the soul refreshing doctrines of the everlasting gospel; who receive their commission from Christ to feed the flock, are furnished with abilities from him for that work, and must give an account unto him; and by or near the tents of these shepherds, the church is directed to feed her kids. 2. By the tents of these shepherds, shepherds, may be meant those places of divine worship, where the ministers of Christ usually preach his gospel, and administer his ordinances; which tents or tabernacles are amiable and lovely to believers; the * Jewish writers generally understand them of their schools or synagogues. It is an allusion to shepherds tents, which are usually pitched where they feed their flocks.

3. By kids may be meant young converts, who, though they are desirous of the sincere milk of the word, that they may grow thereby, yet are but weak in faith, and have but a small degree of knowledge; and therefore should be near the shepherds tents, that they may be under their immediate care and inspection; as Christ himself has the strongest affection for these, and takes a special care of them, as in Isa. xl. 11. so he would have his ministers and churches be particularly tender and careful of them: These kids R. Aben Ezra calls אֲמֵנִי קִטְנֵי דְלִיּוּנִים, persons of little faith; the very character which Christ gives of his disciples, Mat. vi. 30. young converts are not only called kids, because of their faith and knowledge; but kids being young goats, may intimate, that notwithstanding the grace which is wrought in them at conversion, yet there still remain sin and corruption in them; as also, that being called by divine grace out of the world, and having separated from the men of it, they did male olere, stink, and were become abominable, and contemptible to them, and therefore needed much refreshment and encouragement from the church and ministers, that they might not be discouraged and cast down at their own corruptions, or at the frowns and reproaches of the world. This direction to the church, to feed her kids, beside the shepherds tents, where the gospel was preached by Christ's ministers, shews the necessity and perpetuity of a gospel ministry, and of gospel ordinances, and what a value saints should have for them, and also what use they should make of them, as well as informs us of the wretched mistake of those persons who think themselves above hearing the word, and regarding ordinances.

Ver. 9. I have compared thee, O my love, to a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariots.

CHRIST having returned a suitable answer, and given proper directions to the church in her present difficulties, enters upon a commendation of her, which is begun in this verse, and continued in the following one. In these words are,

- I. An affectionate title given to her; O my love.
- II. A comparison which Christ makes of her, to a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariots. And,
- III. It may be enquired why such a comparison is made and mentioned in this place.

I. Here,

* Targum in loc. & Zohar, in Lev. fol. 7. 3; and in Num. fol. 69. 4. and 80. 1.

I. Here is a very loving and endearing title given unto her, my love; it may be rendered my friend; there's a mutual friendship between Christ and believers: The church owns Christ to be her beloved and her friend, and Christ welcomes his church and people to the entertainments of his grace, under the characters of his beloved, and his friends, saying, eat O friends, drink, yea, drink abundantly, O beloved; and he not only calls them so, but uses and treats them as such; he converses with them, and discloses the secrets of his heart unto them; he is a friend to them at all times, in adversity as well as prosperity, and has given the most incontestable proofs of it in his suffering and dying for them. The Septuagint render it, my neighbour: The church is Christ's neighbour; they dwell near to each other, he dwells in their hearts by faith, and they by faith dwell in him: He shews, that he regards his church as his neighbour, by loving her as himself; nay, he has so loved her, as to give himself for her. Again, if we consider this title, according to our version, it well suits the church, who is Christ's love.

1. Objectively; She is the object of his love, was so from eternity, will be so throughout all time, and when time shall be no more; he has given the fullest proofs of it in his undertaking, as a surety for her, in his assumption of her nature, in dying in her room and stead, and in making satisfaction for all her transgressions. The nature of this love has been shown already, on ver. 2. 2. She is Christ's love subjectively; Christ's love is fixed upon her, and is shed abroad in her heart, by the spirit, and this causes love in her soul to him; that so as Christ loves her, she loves him, with a real, hearty, sincere, and superlative love; she is therefore Christ's love, both because he loves her, and also because she loves him.

II. Here is made, by Christ, a comparison of her, to a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariots: I have compared thee, O my love, &c. i. e. I thought and imagined thee to be like unto them, or I have made thee like unto them; which shows that she was not only like unto them, he having asserted her to be so, who must certainly know, but also that this was owing to him, that she was so. Now the church is compared to a company of horses, to set forth her greatness and excellency, and to Egyptian ones, which were esteemed the best, and to those in Pharaoh's chariots, which, no doubt, were best of all: All believers may very well be compared to a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariots. 1. Because the horses in Pharaoh's chariots, were a choice and select company, pick'd and singled out from others, peculiarly for his service: so R. Sol. Jarchi interprets it, a collection of horses, which, no doubt, was a choice and curious one; for if there were any better than others, it is very reasonable to suppose, that they were in Pharaoh's chariots. The church of Christ is a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, and a peculiar people; they are distinguished and separated from others, by electing, redeeming and calling grace; they are a collection from the rest of mankind, made by the free, sovereign and distinguishing grace of God; they are a remnant, according to the election of grace, chosen and singled out from others in Christ, before the foundation of the world; they are redeemed from among men, and that out of every kindred, tongue, people and nation; whom God is pleased by his mighty, powerful and efficacious grace to call, even, one of a city, and two of a family, and bring to the participation of peculiar favours and privileges, through Christ, in the church on earth, and with Christ for ever in glory. These horses in Pharaoh's chariots were, no doubt, bought at a very great price; Egyptian horses went at a very great price, in Solomon's time; a single one was valued at a hundred and fifty shekels of silver: See 1 Kings x. 29. and therefore those, which were bought for Pharaoh's service, who was king of Egypt, being the best, must be supposed to be bought at a very great price. The church and people of God are bought with a price, and that with a very considerable one, such an one, that angels and men could never have given; they are purchased, not with corruptible things; as silver and gold; no, all the riches in the world amass'd together, could not have purchased a single soul, nor have given to God a ransom for it; but they are bought with the precious blood of the unblemished and unspotted son of God; they are bought for the service of the King of kings, and at no less a rate, than at the expence of his own blood and life; the ransom which is given for them is himself; O how valuable must they be to Christ, and how much must they be esteemed by him! 3. These horses, being well fed, look'd very beautiful and pleasant. Believers are fed with the finest of the wheat, with Christ and his fulness; Christ himself is the bread of life, and the bidden manna, which being fed upon by faith, removes hunger, supports life, and preserves from the second death; his flesh is meat indeed, and his blood is drink indeed, which give spiritual and divine refreshment to believers; his grace is represented by wine, milk, and honey, on which his people feeding plentifully, grow and look exceeding delightful and beautiful in his sight. 4. These horses, being the king's horses, as they were well fed, so, no doubt, they were well taken care of; they had proper persons appointed on purpose to attend upon them, and to supply them with what was necessary for them. Believers in Christ have a guard of angels to attend upon them, who encamp about them, and minister to them; for these ministering spirits are sent forth to minister for them, who shall be the heirs of salvation; also the ministers of the gospel, being furnished with suitable grace and abilities, are appointed to feed them with the doctrines of the everlasting gospel, and to give to every one their portion of meat in due season. Moreover they are not left merely to the care of angels and ministers, but the Lord himself likewise concerns himself for them; when his church is represented as a vineyard, he is said to be the keeper of it; who watches over it night and day lest any hurt it; when it is compared to a city, he is the wall of fire round about it; and when to a flock of sheep, he is the shepherd of it; and being here compared to a company of horses, 'tis owing to the food that he gives them, and the care he takes of them, that they appear as his goodly horse in the battle, Zech. x. 3. 5. Horses have been and are much delighted in by princes; and there's no reason to question but that those which ran in Pharaoh's chariots, were so by him; Solomon's fancy and inclinations ran so strongly this way, and he took so great a delight in in those creatures, that he broke through a divine command, Deut. xvii. 16. compared with 1 Kings x. 29. to satisfy and indulge his carnal pleasure; and many other princes have run prodigious and excessive lengths this way. <sup>a</sup> Julius Cæsar set up a marble effigy of his horse in the temple; Antoninus Verus erected a golden image for his. Nero clothed his with a senator's robe, and told him out a weekly stipend; Poppea Sabina, Nero's wife, had golden shoes made for hers; Caligula used to invite his to supper, and held out his golden cups to him; he would have made him a consul, as he afterwards made himself a priest, and his horse his colleague; Alexander the great built a city in honour of his Bucephalus; Cimon the Athenian, buried his mares by his own sepulchre; and Commodus the emperor, buried his horse in the Vatican. These instances, though vain and sinful, and not to be imitated, yet shew how much some princes have delighted in those sort of creatures. Now, as these creatures were the delight of princes, and, perhaps, of Pharaoh, so are believers the delight of Christ; he first makes them beautiful, and then delights in that beauty which he has put upon them; the Lord taketh pleasure in his people, he will beautify the meek with salvation; his heart is often ravished with his own grace in them, and his soul delights in that which he himself has given them; there's nothing in them which can render them acceptable to him, and yet they are his jewels, the apple of his eye, and the delight of his heart. 6. Horses are stately and majestic creatures, especially a company of choice and well fed ones, that run in a chariot, as these were. There is a stateliness and majesty in believers, especially when they are united together in gospel order, in a church state; and the majesty, stateliness and glory of a church of Christ, does not consist in the multitude of members, nor in their outward riches, pomp, and splendor; but in their being all clothed with Christ's righteousness, and possess of his grace; in the enjoyment of his presence in ordinances; in their walking in love and unity with each other, and wisely towards them that are without; in having their conversation as becometh the gospel of Christ, and the profession which they make of it, and in shewing a becoming zeal for the truths and ordinances thereof; being thus blessed with these things, they may be truly said to be as stately and majestic, as a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariot, which were well fed, and harnessed in a splendid manner. 7. Horses are very strong creatures, especially a company of them joined together, as these were; concerning the strength of the horse, the Lord says to Job, Ch. xxxix. 19. Hast thou given the horse strength? hast thou clothed his neck with thunder? Believers are strong, not in themselves, but in Christ; their strength lies in their head, and in their union to him; they can do nothing of themselves, but can do all things through Christ, which strength becometh them; having strength communicated to them from him, they can endure all hardships, go through all difficulties, withstand all temptations, and perform all duties, which he calls them to; and next to their union to Christ, the strength of a society, and company of believers, or a church of Christ, lies in their union and close adherence to each other; they they are like the bundle of sticks in the fable, which, whilst kept bound together, could not easily be broke, but when separated from each other, were soon snap'd asunder; which consideration should excite mutual love among believers, and an endeavour to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace; by doing which, they'll not so easily fall a prey to their enemies, but will appear terrible as an army with banners. 8. Horses are of an undaunted courage, especially such that are well fed, as these were; an elegant description of the majesty, and undaunted courage of the horse, as given by God himself, may be read in Job xxxix. 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25. Believers in Christ are bold as a lion, whilst the wicked flee, when no man pursueth; they remain undaunted at all the reproaches, threatnings and menaces of men, and cannot be deterred thereby, from the service of Christ; they fear not the wrath of kings and princes, neither can confiscation of goods, imprisonment of body, racks, tortures, or death itself, scare them from a profession of Christ and his gospel; but viewing all these with an undaunted courage, say, who shall separate us from the love of Christ; instances of this we have in Daniel and his companions, the apostles of Christ, the believing Hebrews, whom Paul wrote to, and thousands of martyrs for, and confessors of the truth in all ages. 9. These Horses were not employed in ordinary service, in meer drudgery, but were selected for the service of Pharaoh, to run in his chariots. The elect of God being called by divine grace, are not, or at least, they should not be employed in the service and drudgery of sin and satan; but being subjected to Christ, whom they acknowledge to be their Lord and King, are directed and guided by him, into those paths in which he would have them go, and so readily, cheerfully, and swiftly, run the ways of his commandments. These are not common, servile horses, which the church is here compared to, but royal ones, such that were in the service of a king. 10. These horses were not wild, nor loose, running at random, but being fitted for service, were joined and coupled together, and so peaceably and orderly drew one way; and perhaps, were all of the same colour, and of an equal size and bigness, which is usual in the chariots of princes. The church is not a company of wild and unconverted sinners, running loose, and enjoying their carnal liberty; but of persons, who, by divine grace, are put under the yoke of Christ, being joined together in gospel bonds, and strive together for the faith of the gospel, worshipping the Lord with one shoulder and one consent; and when they are all of the same faith, of the same mind and judgment, speak the same things, and harmoniously agree together, without disorders, contentions and divisions, then may they be said to be like a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariots. But,

III. It may be enquired, why this comparison is made and mentioned here, which was, 1. To comfort and support her under the mean apprehensions she had of herself, and also to strengthen her against the reproach and scandal that was thrown upon her by others; therefore Christ lets her know, that though she was black in her own eyes, and slighted and despised by her mother's children, yet she was glorious in his, for he had compared her to a company of horses, &c. 2. To inform her, that she was in a militant state, and that she must not expect much ease and rest, which she seem'd to be seeking for in ver. 7. therefore he would have her know, that this was a time for fighting the Lord's battles against sin, satan and the world; and for that purpose he had made her as his goodly horse in the battle, Zech. x. 3. 3. Christ having directed her to tread in the foot-steps of the flock, and to feed her kids besides the shepherds tents, would have her consider, that she must expect trouble, opposition and persecution from those other shepherds, whose flocks are mentioned as distinct from Christ's, in ver. 7. and therefore, to support her under, and comfort her against these, he tells her, that he had compar'd her, or made her like to a company of horses, stout, strong, couragious, warlike and victorious; and therefore, seeing he had not given her the spirit of fear, but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind, she should not be discouraged and dismay'd at those troubles and afflictions that came upon her.

Ver. 10. Thy cheeks are comely with rows of jewels, thy neck with chains of gold.

CHRIST in these words continues to give an account of the church's beauty and glory; and that, either in opposition to what she had said in ver. 5, 6. and assures her that her cheeks and neck were not so black as she imagined; but were like the blushing cheeks of a beautiful woman, adorned with jewels, and her fair neck adorned with bracelets, necklaces and chains of gold or pearl; see Ezek. xvi. 11. 12. or else he continues the metaphor used in the preceding verse, where he compares her to a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariots; whose bridles being richly adorned, having chains of gold hung about their necks, as the camels of the kings of Midian had, Judg. viii. 26. gloriously set forth the beauty of the church; and perhaps, the church's glory under the old Testament dispensation is represented in this verse, and a further increase and display of it under the new Testament dispensation promised in the next. And here,

- I. Her cheeks are said to be comely, with rows of Jewels.
- II. Her neck with chains of gold.

I. Her cheeks are said to be comely with rows of jewels: The word jewels is not in the Hebrew text, but supplied by our translators; and the word Torim, translated rows, sometimes signifies turtles, which gave occasion to the Septuagint to render the words thus; how beautiful are thy cheeks, as the turtle dove's. R. Aben Ezra thinks that the bridles of those horses, to which she is compared, had the images of turtles upon them; * others, that these were some ornaments of women, as jewels and ear-rings, which had the figures of turtles upon them, and therefore were called turtles, or turturella's according to Drusus; even as those pieces of money, which had the figure of

of a lamb upon them, are called lamb's, Gen. xxxiii. 19. Job xlii. 11. Now the cheeks of the church being said to be comely with these, shew her innocency and harmlesness, her love, chastity, faithfulness and beauty; all which appear in this creature. The Targum renders it bridles, and very well refers it to the law given on mount Sinai, to the people of Israel; which is as a bridle, both to restrain persons from sin, who are by nature as the horse and mule, without understanding, and also to guide and direct them in the right way, that they may not depart from it; and on these bridles were rows of jewels or precious stones. The word Tor, which is the singular of this in our text, signifies <sup>b</sup> an order or disposition, and course of things; see Ezt. ii. 12, 15. and is not amiss rendered by our translators, rows, i. e. of jewels or precious stones; and by them are intended, either,

1st, The precepts of the moral law, <sup>c</sup> which, 1. Are beautifully rank'd and disposed in order; the precepts thereof are so strictly and closely join'd together, that he that offends in one point, breaks the link, and so is guilty of all. 2. These are as so many rows of jewels, valuable and excellent, and are more to be desired than gold, yea, than much fine gold. Or else,

2<sup>dly</sup>, The ordinances of the ceremonial law, which may be compared to rows of jewels. 1. For the variety of them; this law is a law of commandments, of many commandments, contained in ordinances, which, as they were carnal, so they were divers, see Eph. ii. 15. Heb. ix. 10. 2. For the excellency of them, as they prefigured the Lord Jesus Christ; 'tis true, after Christ, the substance was come, they were weak and beggarly elements, useless and insignificant, but before Christ's coming, they were lively representations of him, exceeding useful to the saints, and highly valued by them.

Now the church's cheeks, i. e. the outward face and appearance of the church, were comely, and desirable in the eyes of Christ, being adorned with these rows of jewels; her outward conversation being according to the laws of God, she appeared beautiful and delightful, for holiness becomes the house of God for ever; there was a beauty in ceremonial worship; the tabernacles of God were amiable to the saints, and the saints themselves were so to Christ, in their attendance on the service and ordinances of God: The statutes and ordinances with which the external face of the church was beautified, were such as were not given to other people, during that dispensation; which manifestly shew'd that God had a peculiar regard for them.

II. Her neck is said to be comely, with chains of gold. The word gold is not in the Hebrew text, but supplied by our translators; and the word Charuzim, which is only found in this place, is generally interpreted, by the <sup>a</sup> Jewish doctors, chains of gold, or jewels and precious stones, bored through and hung in a string, to be wore about the neck. And, 1st, I shall enquire what is meant by her neck. 2<sup>dly</sup>, What by those chains of gold, or precious stones, with which it is adorned and made comely.

1st, By her neck may be meant, either the grace of faith, by which the church cleaves to Christ, the head, and exalts him; this is also accompanied with other graces, which are linked together as a chain, and is attended with good works: Or else, by it is meant the ministers of the gospel, who, as the neck, are placed in the more eminent part of the body, the church, and are the means of conveying spiritual food from Christ, the head, to the members thereof. But of this, see more on Ch. iv. 4.

2dly, By those chains of gold, with which the church's neck is beautified and adorned, may be meant, 1. The laws and ordinances of God, which the ministers of the gospel and members of churches should be careful to observe; and are, as Solomon says, Prov. i. 9. an ornament of grace unto the head, and chains about the neck, of those who regard them. Or, 2. Those diversities of gifts, which are bestowed on the ministers of Christ, by which they are made able ministers of the New Testament; and so become useful to many, and appear comely and beautiful, both in the eyes of Christ, and of such souls to whom they minister. Or, 3. The various graces of the spirit, with which, not only ministers, but all believers are adorned; for as sins and vices are so chained and linked together, that where there's one, there's all; so the graces of the spirit are like chains of gold, which are so closely link'd together, that they cannot be separated, but where there's one grace there's every grace; which very much beautify and adorn the believer. This golden chain of grace which is put about the church's neck, consists of these ten links: The first is faith; that precious pearl, and valuable jewel, which is alike precious in all the saints, as to its nature and object; the fruit of electing love, the father's gift, the son's grace, and the spirit's work. The second is hope; which is called good hope through grace; this carries the soul cheerfully through all the difficulties of life, and makes not ashamed at death; it is both the christian's anchor and his helmet; 'tis valuable in its nature, and useful in its actings. The third link in this golden chain is love; which is the fulfilling of the law; this is highly valued by Christ; see Ch. iv. 10. and is of so great a price, that if a man would give all the substance of his house for it, it would utterly be contemned, Ch. viii. 7. The fourth is humility; which is, in the sight of God, of great price; and the believer being clothed with it, appears very beautiful, and comely; it is a sparkling gem in this necklace. The fifth is patience, which is of exceeding use in the believer's life, much recommends his character and profession, and is greatly took notice of by Christ; see Rev. ii. 2, 3, 19. The sixth is self-denial, which is required of, and should be in exercise in all Christ's followers, but seldom appears in its lustre and splendor, being frequently sullied by carnal and selfish principles and actions. The seventh is contentment in every state of life; this is an exceeding great rarity; few persons are possess'd of this jewel; the apostle Paul had it, as appears from what he says, I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content. The eighth is a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ; this is eternal life itself, and is by believers preferred to all the things of this life; who with the apostle, count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus, their Lord.

The ninth is long-suffering and forbearance; whereby saints are not easily provoked, and do readily forgive those who have offended them; this gives great grace, and is exceeding ornamental to the believer. The tenth and last link in this golden chain is sincerity; this runs through all other graces, and makes them so glorious as they are; this was exceeding bright, and shone with a great deal of lustre in Nathaniel, of whom Christ said, behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile. Or, 4. Those blessings of grace, which are laid up in an everlasting covenant, come through the blood of Christ, and are communicated to all his people, may be meant by these chains; they go inseparably together; where a person is blessed with one, he's blessed with all; for though our interest in them may be gradually discovered to us, yet are we bless'd at once, with all spiritual blessings, in heavenly places in Christ. Not one of these links can be broken; this golden chain of grace and salvation is excellently described by the apostle, when he says, Rom. viii. 30. whom he did predestinate, them he also called; and whom he called, them he also justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified: Where we may observe, how all the blessings of grace are inseparably link'd together; and which being put about the believer's neck, must needs make him look very beautiful and comely.

Ver. 11. We will make thee borders of gold with studs of silver.

CHRIST having described the church's comeliness in the former verse, as she was beautified under the legal dispensation, with the precepts of the moral and ceremonial law, and with that measure of grace which was then bestowed on her; proceeds in this verse, to promise in his own, and in the name of the other two persons, a greater glory and a larger measure of grace unto her, under the gospel dispensation. And,

- I. The thing promised, is, to make her borders of gold, with studs of silver.
- II. The persons by whom this is to be performed, who are more than one; we will make thee, &c.

I. The thing promised, is, that she shall have borders of gold, with studs of silver made her: Some read it, turtles of gold: The Septuagint render it similitudes, or likenesses of gold; and it is probable that they mean the images of some things, perhaps turtles, which might be wrought in silver studs, with pieces or plates of gold, which also R. Aben Ezra seems to intimate; others translate it rows of gold, as in the former verse, it being the same word which is used there; our translators render it borders, respecting the borders of garments, where the Jews wore their fringes, and which, in Christ's time, the Pharisees, who were ambitious of being esteemed more holy than others, wore very large. Now a promise of golden borders may here intend the glorious righteousness of Christ, that golden and silver studded work of his, that raiment of needlework and curious piece of embroidery, with which the church and all believers are beautified and adorned; in which the church, the queen, stands at the right-hand of the King, the Lord Jesus Christ, as one clad in gold of Ophir. Moreover, by those borders or rows of gold, with studs of silver, may be meant, either, 1st, The ordinances of the gospel, which are far preferable to those under the law; the church's cheeks and neck were comely with those rows and chains, under the legal dispensation; but these are not said to be rows or chains, of gold; the words jewels and gold are not in the original, but supplied by our translators, as has been there observed; but when he speaks of gospel ordinances, which he would appoint, and his church should enjoy under the gospel dispensation, he makes mention of gold and silver; as the Lord does in the prophecy of Isaiah, when he is speaking of, and promising glory to the church in those times, saying, Isa. lx. 17. for brass I will bring gold, and for iron I will bring silver, and for wood brass, and for stones iron. Gospel ordinances are preferable to those under the law.

1. They are more easy, pleasant and delightful; the ceremonial law was a yoke of bondage, and some of the ordinances of it intolerable; but Christ's yoke, under the gospel dispensation, is easy, and his burden light; if those ways were ways of pleasantness, in which God would have his people walk under the law, much more are those which they are directed to under the gospel; if those statutes and carnal ordinances were more to be desired than gold, yea than fine gold, much more are those, which believers enjoy now; the ordinances of that legal dispensation were servile and slavish, and suited to persons who were under a spirit of bondage, but those of the gospel become Christ's freemen, to be found in obedience to, and are no ways an infringement of their spiritual liberty, but rather an advancement of it; these commandments are no ways grievous, but every way delightful and pleasant, and are suited to a free, ingenuous and gospel spirit. 2. They are more lasting and durable; the ordinances of the Mosaic dispensation were imposed upon the Jewish church until the time of reformation, i. e. until the coming of Christ in the flesh, and the oblation of his sacrifice; for when he, the substance of all those shadows, was come, they vanished and disappeared; the middle wall of partition is now broken down; the law of commandments, contained in ordinances, is entirely abolished, and the whole œconomy is at an end; but the ordinances of the gospel will last, till time shall be no more; when there will be no more need of such helps as these to assist our sight, or such lights as these to direct us in our way; they'll last till the second coming of Christ, till the sun of righteousness arises with healing in his wings: These are things which will remain, till then, unshaken and immovable; the gospel dispensation is a kingdom which cannot be moved, in opposition to the legal one, which is already moved, and intirely abrogated. 3. They are more clear and perspicuous; there was a great deal of obscurity in the legal dispensation; the faith of God's children was led to Christ through dark representations and cloudy types and figures; but now, under the gospel dispensation, we all with open face, beholding, through those ordinances, which we now enjoy, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory. 4. They are more spiritual; the ordinances of the ceremonial law are called carnal ordinances, Heb. ix. 10. The external worship of the Jews was attended with a great deal of pomp and splendor, but not with so much spirituality and power of godliness as that of believers, under the gospel, who worship God in the spirit, rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh.

5. The obedience which was performed under the legal dispensation, was not so free and ingenuous as this, which is performed by believers under the gospel; that sprang from fear, and was performed under a spirit of bondage, but this from principles of love and grace. Believers, in their obedience to Christ, as under the constraints of love, are guided, influenced and assisted by the spirit of God, who is a free spirit, or a spirit of liberty; for where the spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. Or else, 2dly, The doctrines of the gospel may be here intended; which being words fitly spoken, are like apples of gold in pictures of silver: These may be called rows or borders of gold studded with silver; for the doctrines of grace are, by the apostle, in 1 Cor. iii. 12. compared to gold, silver, and precious stones, as are the doctrines of man's invention to wood, hay, and stubble. Now these may be very well called borders of gold studded with silver. 1. For their valuableness; they are valued by souls who have tasted the sweetness, and felt the power of them, more than thousands of gold and silver, yea, more than their necessary food, nay more than life it self; they contain riches of grace and glory, yea, the unspeakable riches of Christ. 2. For the glory and splendor of them; they give a glorious display of the divine perfections, and in a resplendent manner represent the glory of Christ's person, office and grace; and therefore the gospel is called the glorious gospel of God and Christ, 1 Tim. i. 11. 2 Cor. iv. 4. 3. For their being tried ones; the words of the Lord, says the psalmist, Psal. xii. 6. are pure words: as silver tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times: they have been tried by saints, and have never failed to support and comfort them, nor to guide and direct them in the right way; they have been tried by enemies, and have stood the brunt of all their rage, malice and persecution. 4. For their durableness: they are as lasting as borders of gold studded with silver. Attempts have been made to destroy the gospel, and remove it out of the world, but have all proved abortive; 'tis an everlasting gospel, 'tis immovable, a burdensome stone to all those who endeavour to subvert or remove it; though all things in nature are fading, perishing, and subject to change and alteration, yet the word of God liveth and abideth for ever. 5. They may be called rows of gold, for their orderly disposition and connection; there's an intire harmony and agreement between the truths of the gospel; one truth has an intire dependance upon another, and they have all close connection with each other; this is what the apostle calls the proportion or analogy of faith, Rom. xii. 6. 6. The gospel is full of the silver specks or studs of exceeding great and precious promises; it abounds with them, and is delightfully studded by them; it's filled with such a variety of them as are both useful and pleasant to believers.

Now there being such a display of the doctrines of grace under the gospel dispensation, it appears to be far more glorious than the legal one; 'tis true, the law had a glory attending it, but the gospel has an excelling one; the law was the killing letter, and the ministration of death, but the gospel is the ministration of life, the spirit that quickens; the law is the ministration of condemnation, but the gospel is the ministration of righteousness; the law is that which is done away, but but the gospel is that which remaineth, and will abide for ever. Or else, 3dly, By these borders of gold, with studs of silver, may be meant the rich and glorious graces of the blessed spirit, and a larger increase of them under the gospel dispensation; which are, 1. Rich and enriching, excellent and valuable as gold and silver; nay, grace is much more precious than gold that perisheth; it is rich in its own nature, and enriches all that are possessors of it; therefore, says Christ, Rev. iii. 18. I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayst be rich. 2. The graces of the spirit adorn and beautify a soul, as much, nay, more than borders of gold studded with silver do the body; on the account of these the church is said to be all glorious within; and though believers in their nature were black, like those who have been among the pots, yet being called by, and adorned with the grace of God, are like the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold. 3. The graces of the spirit are as lasting and durable as golden borders with silver studs; nay, more so, they shall not perish, can never be lost; grace is an immortal and incorruptible seed, which remains in the believer, and shall do so for ever. 4. A larger measure of grace is dispensed under the gospel dispensation than was under the legal one; it was neither so clearly revealed, nor so largely communicated before Christ appeared in the flesh, full of grace and truth, as it was afterwards; and such a larger revelation and increase of grace must needs make the church look more glorious under the one than it did under the other. Or else, 4thly, These borders of gold intend the ground-work of a believer's faith and hope, which is Christ, as Jehovah our righteousness, who is the only sure and safe foundation, and the chief corner stone; as the silver studs may the curious work of sanctification, with all the delightful fruits thereof, even those beauties of holiness which are so ornamental to, and do so much become the believer; Christ's righteousness, imputed to us, is the ground-work and foundation of faith and hope, and his grace imparted to and wrought in us, is the superstructure that's raised upon it; the one the golden borders, the other the silver studs. Or, 5thly, Souls called by divine grace, even the precious sons of Zion, are comparable to fine gold; and as a great number of these being called in, enlarge the borders of the church, so they likewise increase the glory of it; this is one way by which Christ beautifies the place of his sanctuary, and makes the place of his feet glorious. Or, 6thly, and lastly, The glories of heaven may be here intended; for as Christ gives his people grace here, so he'll give them glory hereafter, which he and the other two persons are preparing and making ready for them; and we need not wonder that these heavenly glories are represented by borders of gold, studded with silver; when the new Jerusalem is described, Rev. xxi. 18, 19, 21. as a city of pure gold, like unto clear glass, and the street of it pure gold, as transparent glass, the wall of it of jasper, the foundations thereof garnished with all manner of precious stones, and the twelve gates, said to be twelve pearls. Can any thing appear more glorious and magnificent than this account of that city, which has foundations, whose builder and maker is God? and those, who are enriched by divine grace here, need not doubt of being partakers of the celestial glory hereafter; but let us now consider who they are that promise and will perform all this. For,

II. As the things promised are here mentioned, which are borders of gold with studs of silver; so the persons who promise to make these, are intimated in those words, we will make thee, &c. 'Tis not the chorus of virgins, or daughters of Jerusalem, who here speak, nor angels, who are both incapable of and unfit for such an undertaking; nor is God introduced here speaking regio more, in the manner of kings, who sometimes use to speak in the plural number, when they only mean themselves; but a trinity of persons is, no doubt, here intended, even the father, the word, and the holy Ghost, which three are one, and are jointly concerned in all the works of grace, as they were in the works of creation; it is a way of speaking, much like that in Gen. i. 26. R. Sol. Jarchi paraphrases it thus, I and my house of judgment, as he also does Gen. xix. 24. Now the ancient Jews by this speech meant a trinity of persons, though the modern unbelieving ones, as Ainsworth observes, are ignorant of it, yet still retain the phrase, and use it as the forementioned Rabbi does, in those places, where a trinity of persons manifestly appear; for the house of judgment never consisted of less than three persons. Now this work may very well be ascribed to them; for, 1st. The ordinances of the gospel are the institutions of all the three persons; divine adoration is given to them in all; and they are enjoined on believers, and are regarded by them, as being all equally concerned in authorizing them, and in sharing the glory which arises from them; thus for instance, baptism is required to be performed in the name of the father, and of the son, and of the holy Ghost, Mat. xxviii. 19. and accordingly is performed in this manner. 2<sup>dly</sup>. The gospel itself is the work of all the three persons; God the father is the author of it, and therefore it is called the gospel of God, Rom. i. 1. and so is Christ; hence it is also called his, ver. 16. and so is the spirit, and therefore it is called the ministration of the spirit, 2 Cor. iii. 8. The grace of all the three persons is discovered by it, and the glory of them all concerned in it; the father sends it, Christ is the sum and substance of it, and the spirit powerfully applies it. 3<sup>dly</sup>. The work of grace upon the soul is performed by all the three persons; thus the regeneration and quickening of a sinner, dead in trespasses and sins, is ascribed to God the father; 1 Pet. i. 3. to the son, John v. 21. and to the spirit, John iii. 5. 4<sup>thly</sup>. The increase of grace, which seems to be the thing here intended, is owing to them all; thus grace and peace, i. e. a larger measure of them, is wished and prayed for by John, for the seven churches of Asia, from all the three persons, Rev. i. 4, 5. 5<sup>thly</sup>. All that glory which saints shall have hereafter, is procured and prepared by them all; the father, he has prepared the kingdom for them from the foundation of the world, and it is his pleasure to give it to them; the son, he has opened the way to it with his blood, and is gone to prepare a place for them; and the spirit, he is the earnest and pledge of it, he discovers the invisible glories of it to them, and will never leave them till he has made them meet for, and brought them into the enjoyment of them. So that all the three persons, in all these senses, may be very well understood as promising to make for the church, these borders of gold, with studs of silver: Which shows, 1. That believers should have a great value for the gospel, and the ordinances thereof; seeing they are not only so valuable in themselves, being preferable to gold and silver, and are so useful and ornamental to the church, but are also the work of all the three persons. 2. That the work of grace upon the heart of a sinner, and the carrying it on to perfection, is done by an almighty power, and is the work of the eternal three; the renewing of men requires the same power, and is effected by the same hands, as the first making of them did; those who said at the creation of man, let us make man, say at his new creation, and in the carrying on and perfecting of the work, we will make thee borders of gold, &c. as they were all jointly concerned in the one, so they are in the other, which shows the greatness and glory of it. 3. That all these borders of gold with studs of silver, are made for the comfort, glory, and happiness of the church, we will make thee, or for thee, &c. the whole gospel, with all its doctrines and promises, are given for their instruction and consolation; all the ordinances thereof, for their comfort and improvement, as well as for God's glory; all the grace which is provided in Christ, wrought by the spirit in their hearts, as well as the glory which is laid up in heaven; all, I say, is to make them a glorious church, without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing.

CHRIST having given very large commendations of his church, and promised a great deal of grace and glory to her; she in this and the two following verses, declares what advantages she received by him, how lovely his person, and how delightful his company were to her. These words may be understood either,

First, Of the time of Christ's not being manifested in the flesh, after the promise of it, and of the exercise of the faith, hope, love, desire, expectation, &c. of the old Testament saints, respecting his coming in the flesh; and then the sense is this, whilst he, who is constituted king of saints, is appointed to be the mediator between God and man, the promised Messiah and saviour of the world, is with God, as the only begotten son in the bosom of the father, and not yet manifested in the flesh; my spikenard sendeth forth the smell thereof, i. e. my grace is in exercise; my soul is breathing with earnest desires after him; I long for his coming, and am in earnest expectation of it; I live in the hope of enjoying this valuable blessing; I firmly believe that he will come according to the divine promise, though his stay is long, and therefore will patiently wait the appointed time. Christ did exist from eternity, as the son of God; was set up as the head and mediator of God's elect, and was appointed and constituted king over God's holy hill of Zion: He bore this character throughout all the old Testament dispensation; and being promised to be the Messiah and saviour of sinners, from the time of the first declaration and publication of it, the old Testament saints lived in the faith, hope, and earnest expectation of his coming in the flesh. Or else, gospel was preached, and the sweet odour of it diffused throughout all the parts thereof. Christ was promised to come into the world as the church's King; behold thy King cometh, &c. Zech. ix. 9. and as such he did come; the wise men of the East sought him under the character of the King of the Jews: He was accused of making himself King, and for it was put to death: Hence this superscription was wrote on the cross, this is the King of the Jews; though most were ignorant of the nature of his office and kingdom, which were not of this world. Now whilst this great King was here on earth, the favour of the gospel was spread abroad; it was preached by Christ himself, in the temple, in the synagogues of the Jews, and in several parts of the land; for he was not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel: He sent out his disciples to preach it, but limited them to Judea's land, and forbid them to go in the way of the Gentiles, or enter into any of the cities of the Samaritans. So that this sweet odour was then confined within that land; though after his resurrection, he enlarged the commission of his disciples, and bid them go and preach the gospel to every creature, beginning at Jerusalem; which they accordingly did, and their ministry was owned for the conversion of many, but afterwards being rejected by the Jews, they turned to the Gentiles; for it was proper and necessary, that the word should be first preached to them, that out of Zion might go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. Or,

Thirdly, These words may be understood of Christ's being now in heaven, whither, after his resurrection, he ascended, where he now is, and will continue till his second coming, whom the heaven must receive, until the times of the restitution of all things; 'tis from thence that saints expect him: Now these words, while the King sitteth at his table, very well suit with Christ's exalted state in heaven; his kingly office and power appear more manifest, he is now declared to be both Lord and Christ; his posture, there, is, sitting at the right hand of God, where he is in his circuit, as the words may be read; it being the usual custom anciently, among the Jews, to sit at table in a circular form, 1 Sam. xvi. 11. Christ being in heaven, is in his circuit, encompassed about with angels and glorified saints; thus in Rev. v. 6—11, 12. a large number of angels and saints are said to be round about the throne (and Christ, the lamb, in the midst of them) singing his praises, and feasting with him on those joys, which will never end.

Now, while Christ is thus solacing himself with saints above, at such a distance from his church below, he is not unmindful of her, but gives such large communications of his grace, as causes her spikenard to send forth the smell thereof: Which may be meant, either,

1st. Of the graces of the church being in exercise on Christ; Christ, though now in heaven, and so invisible to the bodily eye, yet is the object of faith, love, hope, and joy; whom having not seen, ye love; in whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory, 1 Pet. i. 8. The distance of place no ways hinders either the communications of grace to us from Christ, or the exercise of our grace on him, but while he is there, he is giving it forth to us, and we are exercising it upon him; 'tis the manifestation of Christ's love and grace to us that makes our spikenard send forth its smell. Or else;

2dly. The prayers of the saints may be intended by it, which are odorous, and of a sweet smelling savour to God, being perfumed with Christ's mediation, and offered up with his much incense; and therefore says David, Psal. cxli. 2. let my prayer be set forth before thee as incense. R. Aben Ezra thinks, that by the smell of the spikenard, is meant the smell of the incense, which was burnt under the law. Now while Christ is in heaven, the saints put their prayers into his hands, who takes notice of them, and is always ready, with his golden censer, to offer them up to his father on the golden altar, in which he smells a sweet savour; and therefore the prayers of the saints are called odours, Rev. v. 8. See also Rev. viii. 3, 4. Or rather,

3dly. This may be expressive of the gospel, and the sweet savour of the knowledge of Christ, which by it is made manifest in every place, wherever it comes, 2 Cor. ii. 14. Now the gospel may be compared to spikenard.

1. Spikenard is but a small, low plant or shrub, the gospel is mean and contemptible in the eyes of the world; it is accounted foolishness by them, and the preachers of it are abject and despicable persons in their esteem. Yet, 2. Is very excellent; it is by Pliny<sup>a</sup> accounted the chief and principal ingredient in ointments; and therefore, John xii. 3. the ointment of spikenard, which Mary took and anointed the feet of Christ with, is said to be very precious and costly: The gospel is valuable and excellent, both in its nature and effects; it is a rich and an enriching gospel; and therefore called the unsearchable riches of Christ, an exceeding valuable treasure, that is put in earthen vessels; it is a revelation and declaration of the riches of grace, which Christ bestows upon sinners here, and of those riches of glory which saints shall be made partakers of hereafter. 3. It is of an exceeding sweet smell; so is the gospel; there is such an efficacy in the odour of it, that it enlivens dead sinners, and therefore is said to be the savour of life unto life, and will revive the spirits of fainting believers; though it is reported of spikenard that by its being carried over sea, it grows mouldy and rots, whereby it loses its sweet smell, and stinks exceedingly; so the gospel, to those that perish, is not only of an ill smell, and abhorred by them, but is the savour of death unto death. Many of the<sup>d</sup> Jewish writers understand the smell of the spikenard here, as an ill one. 4. Spikenard is of a<sup>e</sup> hot nature, and digestive of cold humours; it is hot in the first, and dry in the second degree: The gospel being powerfully applied by the spirit of God, warms the hearts of God's children, makes them burn within them, and drives away lukewarmness, deadness and dulness, occasioned by indwelling sin. 5. It is of a very comforting and<sup>f</sup> strengthening nature to the stomach, it exhilarates the spirits; so are the doctrines and promises of the gospel to the souls of believers; these strengthen and nourish, comfort and and refresh them; they, like Jeremiah, find the word, and eat it, and it is the joy and rejoicing of their hearts. For these reasons the gospel may be compared to spikenard; which <sup>a</sup> some of the Jewish writers think is musk, others a kind of spice, somewhat like saffron; but it's best to understand it of Nard, of which there are many sorts; the best of which is that which grows up in spikes, and therefore is called spikenard, which is what is here intended. Again,

Fourthly, These words may be understood of Christ's feasting with his saints here below, during which time their grace is in exercise; there's a mutual feasting between Christ and believers, he sups with them, and they with him; Christ has furnished a table for his people in this wilderness, with plenty, and variety of, suitable food; and though he is a King, constituted by his father, and acknowledged by his church, yet he sits at this table, with poor, mean and worthless creatures, and welcomes them to those sweet provisions, saying, eat, O friends; drink, yea, drink abundantly, O beloved. Moreover, Christ's presence with his people, and his grace manifested to them, have a mighty influence to draw forth their graces into exercise, even as the rising sun opens the flowers, and exhales the odour thereof, and agreeable breezes spread it abroad. Thus when the graces of believers are in exercise under the influences of Christ, and the enjoyment of his presence, they are exceeding odorous, both to Christ and others; their spikenard may then be said to send forth the sweet smell thereof: On this table, which is sometimes called the table of the Lord, are set the body and blood of Christ, whose flesh is meat indeed, and whose blood is drink indeed; on which believers, being encouraged by Christ's presence, and assisted by his spirit, feed plentifully; and he sits there and delights himself in viewing the graces of his own spirit in exercise; thus at this table they are both mutually feasted and delighted.

The conjecture of <sup>b</sup> a certain Expositor, that Christ himself is intended by the spikenard, is not to be slighted, he being called a bundle of myrrh, and a cluster of camphire in the following verses: It was usual in feasts to anoint the head or feet of persons invited thereunto, and ointment of spikenard was often used, as is manifest from Mark xiv. 3. John xii. 3. to this custom the Psalmist alludes, Psal. xxiii. 5. Now the church was at table with Christ, as a guest, and was entertained with the most delicious fare; here was nothing wanting to render the entertainment delightful and pleasant; Christ himself, as he is both the master and the feast, so he is the ointment of spikenard to his guests; and 'tis as if she should say, I am now at a sweet and heavenly repast with my beloved, he sits at the table, and I with him; and as he is my food, so he's my spikenard; he's my all in all; as long as he is here, I need no flowers to delight me, no spikenard, myrrh, cypress, or unguents, made of these to refresh me, for he is all this, and much more unto me. Christ's person and grace, his sacrifice, blood and righteousness are, like spikenard, of an exceeding sweet smell; his person is altogether lovely; the savour of his graces or ointments attract the the love of his people ; his sacrifice is of a sweet smelling savour to God, and to all believers ; his garments, or robe of righteousness smell of myrrh, aloes, and cassia, and in them believers are acceptable and well pleasing to God.

Ver. 13. A bundle of myrrh is my well-beloved unto me ; he shall lie all night betwixt my breasts.

THE Church in these words continues the account of that comfort, delight and satisfaction which she had in Christ, expressing the greatest love and strongest affection for him ; and therefore she compares him to the very best herbs and spices, and declares that if her spikenard, or the graces of the spirit in her sent forth an agreeable smell to him, whilst he was at his table, much more grateful and odorous was he, being as a bundle of myrrh unto her.

I. Here's a title or character which she gives him ; my well beloved.

II. What Christ is unto her ; a bundle of myrrh.

III. The entertainment she is resolved to give him ; he shall lie all night betwixt my breasts.

I. Here is a title or character, which she gives unto him, my well beloved. Ainsworth observes, that the Hebrew word Dodi, which is thus translated, is written with the same letters as David is, a name which is frequently given to Christ in the old Testament. See Jer. xxx. 9. Ezek. xxxiv. 23, 24. Hos. iii. 5. David was a type of Christ, and of him, according to the flesh, he came ; for he is the root and offspring of David ; as he is God, he is David's Lord ; and as he is man, David's son ; both words, Dodi and David, signify beloved, and both David and Christ are beloved of God. David was a man after God's own heart, and Christ, his beloved son, in whom he is well pleased, and both of them beloved of God's people. The Septuagint render it by a word which signifies <sup>1</sup> a nephew, a brother or sister's son. Christ is near akin to his church, he is partaker of the same flesh and blood as they are, is of the same nature with them ; they are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones ; the Hebrew word Goel, which is frequently rendered a redeemer, signifies also a near kinsman ; and being applied to Christ, as it is in Job. xix. 25. shews, that he, who is our redeemer, is also our near kinsman : but the word is very well render'd here, my beloved, or well beloved, and is expressive, <sup>1st</sup>. Of Christ's love to the church ; he is her well beloved, and has shewn his love by undertaking her cause, espousing her person, assuming her nature, and dying in her room and stead ; which love of his is eternal, free, sovereign, unchangeable and unparallel'd, and is the strongest motive to, and has the greatest influence upon her love to him ; therefore she may well call him her well beloved. <sup>2dly</sup>. It is expressive of her love to Christ, which springs and arises from the manifestations of his to her, for we love him,

because he first loved us; which love was now in exercise in her soul, he being present with her; and therefore she gives him this affectionate title as an evidence of it. 3dly, It shews that she had a sense of her interest in him, and his love; a greater blessing a soul cannot be possess'd of, than an interest in Christ and his love, whose person is the chiefest among ten thousands, and whose loving kindness is better than life, and all the comforts and blessings of it; and next to this is a knowledge and sense of it; a soul may have an interest in Christ, and yet not have the sense of it; the former renders his state safe and secure, the latter makes his life comfortable and pleasant, and is an additional blessing and favour; for a person is then able to say, he hath loved me, and hath given himself for me.

II. She declares that Christ her well beloved, was a bundle of myrrh unto her. By a bundle of myrrh, we are not, I think, to understand the twigs or branches of the myrrh tree bound up in faggots, which the Arabians used to make fires with, the fumes whereof were very noxious and pernicious, as the <sup>h</sup>istorian tells us, and unless they burnt the gum, called storax, would produce incurable diseases; but either the little sprigs or flowers thereof bound up together, and put in the bosom as a pleasant nosegay to smell to, may be meant; for Christ is exceeding sweet and delightful to the believer, being the rose of Sharon, and the lily of the vallies; or else, the gum stacte, which springs from the myrrh tree, and so the Septuagint read it, a bundle of stacte; or liquid myrrh, which sweats from the tree of its own accord, without incision, and is accounted the best; and then by a bundle of it is meant a bag or bottle of it, the same word which is used, is translated a bag, in Hag. i. 6. Job xiv. 17. and is an allusion to persons who carry bags of perfumes, and sweet powders, or smelling bottles in their bosoms, for the reviving of their spirits; now what these are to such persons, that and much more is Christ to his church. R. David Kimchi <sup>1</sup> relates out of Midrash Chazith, that Abraham, the father of the faithful is there compared to myrrh; the words are these; as myrrh is the chief of all spices, so Abraham, our father, is the chief of all the righteous; as he that gathers myrrh has his hands made bitter therewith, so Abraham, our father, embittered himself; as myrrh does not send forth its smell, but in the light, so Abraham our father, did not make known his good works, but in the furnace of fire; but Christ, who was the object of Abraham's faith and joy, may be much better, and more aptly compared thereunto, which I shall now consider. And,

1st, Christ may be compared to myrrh, if we regard the nature and properties of it; it being, 1. An excellent spice, and one of the most precious and principal spices; it is reckoned among the chief spices, Cb. iv. 14. and as such Moses is ordered to use it in the anointing oyl, Exod. xxx. 23. Christ is the chiefest among ten thousands, and exceeding precious to every believer, in his person, office and grace; there's none among the angels in heaven, or saints on earth, so desirable to them as he is; nor none who deserves to have the pre-eminence in, and over all things, as he does; seeing he is the image of the invisible God, and the first born of every creature. 2. It is very odorous, it is called sweet smelling myrrh, Ch. v. 5. and the church is said to be perfumed with with it, Cb. iii. 6. Christ, in his person, sacrifice, and righteousness, is of a sweet smelling savour, both to God and believers, as has been shewn on ver. 12. Believers, smell a sweet smell in all his offices, characters and relations; he is in all these as a bundle of myrrh, exceeding delightful to them.

3. Yet it is somewhat bitter in taste, it is gustu leniter amara, as Pliny<sup>m</sup> observes; which may be expressive, 1. Of the sufferings of Christ; which, though they were grateful, and of a sweet smelling savour to God, for it pleased the Lord to bruise him; here was not only voluntas Dei, the will of God, but here was also voluptas Dei, the pleasure of God; yet they were bitter to Christ, witness his agonies in the garden, his sorrows on the cross, and the spittings, buffetings, scourgings, and revilings of his enemies; his head being crown'd with thorns, and his hands and feet pierced with nails; being forsaken by his God, and by his friends, could not be grateful and pleasant to him; but though these were so bitter to Christ, yet like myrrh, how sweet and odorous is a crucified Christ to believers! they desire to know none but Christ, and him crucified; the bitter cup, which he drank, is the ground of their joy and triumph; his death and sufferings are the foundation of their comfort, and which only can secure them against the fears of hell and wrath; 'tis this which embitters sin unto them; sin never appears more odious than in the glass of Christ's sufferings; and they never mourn for it in a better and truer sense, than when they look upon him, whom they have pierced; repentance is a tear that drops from faith's eye, and is never more evangelic than when faith views a sin-bearing, and sin-atoning saviour; now from the sufferings of Christ, or from a crucified Christ, distil and drop down the sweet swelling myrrh of spiritual blessings, as justification, sanctification, adoption, pardon of sin, peace, reconciliation, and a right to eternal glory; all which come to us through the blood, sufferings and death of a crucified Jesus. (2.) The myrrh, being bitter in taste, though sweet in smell, may shew, that the cross goes along with Christ; for as Luther says, Christianus est Crucianus, a Christian is a cross bearer; it is required of every one that will follow Christ, that he take up the cross, for he that would wear the crown, must bear the cross; and he who would have the sweet, must have the bitter; indeed, the Christian generally has his share of afflictions, crosses and trials in this life. The passover lamb was eaten with bitter herbs, to shew, that he that will live godly in Christ Jesus, must suffer persecution; yet so sweet is Christ, this bundle of myrrh, to believers, and communion with him, under all afflictions, so delightful, that they would not be without him, though they might be freed from them; this tree of life sweetens these bitter waters of Marah; they have peace in him, when in the world, they have tribulation; they are contented with, and rejoice in their portion, and are willing to have the bitter, so they may but have the sweet; for these bitter afflictions and tribulations, which they endure for Christ's sake, distil and drop down some precious gums of faith, patience, experience and hope; see Rom. v. 3, 4, 5.

2dly, Christ may be compared to myrrh, for the use that has been made of it. 1. It being very valuable, and highly esteemed of, was used in gifts and and presents to great persons; thus we find it in the present that Jacob made to his son unknown, then governor of Egypt, Gen. xliii. 11. and it was part of that which the wise men of the East brought to Christ at his incarnation, Mat. ii. 11. Christ is the great gift of God's grace to sinners, and an unspeakable one he is, which does not go alone, for with him he freely gives all things: When God gave Christ, he gave a manifest proof of his greatness and goodness; he gave like himself, and what was suitable to us sinners; a favour which we neither deserved, desired nor expected. O boundless grace! amazing love! 2. It was used, and was a principal ingredient in the anointing oil; see Exod. xxx. 23. and may signify that oil of gladness, which Christ is anointed with above his fellows, which being poured upon his head, in its fulness, runs down to all his members, like the oil on Aaron's head, which ran down to the skirts of his garments; for it is from him that we receive that anointing which teacheth all things. 3. The stacte, which is the gum that drops from the myrrh tree, was used in the sweet incense; see Exod. xxx. 34. and may represent the intercession of Christ, who stands at the golden altar, with a golden censer in his hand, to offer up the prayers of all his people, which he perfumes with his much incense; which is exceeding grateful and odorous, like sweet smelling myrrh unto the saints. 4. It was used to render persons comely and acceptable in the eyes of others; thus Esther, and the rest of the maidens, were purified and prepared with oil of myrrh, for their admission into the presence of king Abasuerus. Esth. ii. 12. it is in Christ the beloved, that saints only are accepted with God, being clothed with those garments of his, which smell of myrrh, aloes and cassia: Thus they have liberty of access into God's presence now, and shall have a ready admittance into his kingdom and glory hereafter. 5. It was used in the embalming of dead bodies, being useful to keep them from putrefaction and corruption; for this purpose Nicodemus brought a mixture of myrrh and aloes to preserve the body of Jesus, John xix. 39, 40. an interest in Christ, this bundle of myrrh, and an application of him to our souls, will secure us from going down into the pit of corruption, and will eternally save us from perishing; nothing safer and better than to have this in our bosoms, without which, sinners, dead in trespasses and sins, will stink, rot and putrify. 6. It is very useful in <sup>a</sup> healing wounds and ulcers. Christ is the great physician that heals all the diseases of his people, freely, perfectly, and infallibly, which he does in an uncommon and unusual way; he performs his cures by his blood and stripes; his blood is a panacea, a sovereign medicine for all diseases, and by his stripes we are healed, Isa. liii. 5.

3dly, Christ may be compared to a bundle of myrrh. 1. To denote the abundance of the spiritual odours of divine grace in him, he is full of grace and truth, as man and mediator; for it hath pleased the father, that all fulness should dwell in him; which is communicated to believers, as they stand in need of; who sometimes receive such large measures of it, that they can say, the grace of our Lord is exceeding abundant in them; Christ is a bundle of myrrh unto them; they have large views of his love, and sweet communications of his grace. 2. To shew the security of this grace in Christ; our life is sure in Christ's hands, being bound up in the bundle of life with the Lord our God, with all the mercies and blessings of it, both for time and eternity; therefore they are called the sure mercies of David, being hid with Christ in God, so that they can never be taken away from us. 3. To shew the inseparableness of Christ and his grace; Christ and the blessings of his grace never go separate; where God gives his son, he gives all things with him; and where a soul enjoys Christ, he possesses all things; peace, pardon, righteousness and life are all in Christ; and the believer is blessed with all spiritual blessings, in heavenly places in him.

Now Christ is not so to all persons, only to them that believe he is precious, and to none but them; Christ is a bundle of myrrh to none but his church; my beloved is unto me, &c. which shows not only the strength of her affection to Christ, the value that she had for him, and the delight she took in him; but also a particular application of him by faith, to her own soul; which is also expressed in the following verse, my beloved is unto me as a cluster of camphire, &c.

III. In these words we have also the entertainment which she resolves to give him; he shall lie all night betwixt my breasts: Wherein is to be considered, 1st, The place she appoints him, betwixt her breasts. 2<sup>dly</sup>, How long she would have him lie there, all night. And, 3<sup>dly</sup>, For what ends and purposes.

1st, The place allotted Christ, by the church, is, betwixt her breasts. R. Aben Ezra understands by them the two cherubim, or the midst of the camp of Israel; R. Sol. Jarchi, the two bars of the ark; but it would be much better to understand them either of the two Testaments, the old and new, which are both full of Christ, where he is to be found, and does abide; or else of the two ordinances of the gospel, baptism, and the Lord's supper, which may be called the church's breasts of consolation; see Ch. iv. 5, in these ordinances Christ shews himself, and grants his presence to his people: or rather by Christ's lying betwixt her breasts, is meant his dwelling in her heart by faith, than which, nothing is more desirable to the saints; they have no better room than their own hearts, and therefore are desirous that he would lodge there; as Christ lays them in his bosom to testify his love to them, so they would have him dwell in their hearts, to testify their love to him; and a wonderful condescension it is in Christ, who is the high and lofty one, that inhabiteth eternity, to take up with such a residence as this. So R. Alshech explains the phrase betwixt her breasts, of being in her heart.

2<sup>dly</sup>, The time she mentions, is all night; by which may be meant the night of affliction, temptation, &c. it being in Christ alone, that she could meet with any relief or comfort, under such dispensations; or else it means that she would have him with her, not as a stranger, sojourner, or guest, for a short time, but would have him dwell in her heart, lie in her bosom, and grant her intimate communion with himself, all the night of this life, until the everlasting day of glory breaks: Communion with Christ here is frequently interrupted, which the church had a large experience of, to her grief and sorrow; and therefore she desires to enjoy it without interruption.

3dly, The ends and purposes for which she was desirous that he should lie all night betwixt her breasts, were, 1. For ornament; sweet flowers in the bosom are ornamental, and are placed there often for that purpose. Christ, the rose of Sharon, and the lily of the vallies, being carried in the hand of faith, or in the bosom of love, exceedingly adorns the believer. 2. For delight, pleasure and refreshment; nosegays are carried in the bosom, to delight the eye and refresh the spirits. Nothing more delightful to the eye of faith than Christ; and nothing more savory and of a sweeter smell to a believer, than his person, blood, and righteousness; the most delightful and sweet smelling flowers fall short of expressing Christ's beauty and favour. 3. That she might always have him in her eye, mind and memory; persons out of sight are too apt to be forgotten, even our dearest friends and best enjoyments: The church had, no doubt, some experience of this, and therefore to remedy it, she would have Christ, this bundle of myrrb, always in her bosom, and in her sight, to contemplate upon, and wonder at; as the Psalmist did, who says, Psal. xvi. 8. I have set the Lord always before me. 4. That she might keep him safe; thus persons often put things into their bosoms, which they would not lose; she had often lost a sight of Christ, and been without an enjoyment of his presence, which had given her a great deal of uneasiness; and for the future, was therefore resolved to be more careful in keeping him, and for that reason would have him lie in her bosom. 5. To show her singular value for Christ, and her inviolable chastity to him; she sets him in the highest place, and gives him the best entertainment; she gives him admittance where she would allow none else; he, and none but he shall lie all night betwixt my breasts; these were inaccessible to any but to Christ.

Ver. 14. My beloved is unto me as a cluster of campfire, in the vineyards of Engedi.

THE church having had such sweet communion with Christ, at his table, ver. 12. which excited and drew forth her grace into exercise, enters into a commendation of him, ver. 13. and finding so much sweetness in him, she scarcely knew what was excellent enough to compare him to, that thereby she might express his excellency in himself, his usefulness to her, and that delight and pleasure which she took in him; having declared that he was a bundle of myrrb to her, which she desired might always have a place in her bosom, she does, in these words, compare him to a cluster of campfire.

I. She gives him the same title or character as before; my beloved.

II. Says, that he was, to her, as a cluster of campfire in the vineyards of Engedi.

I. She gives the same title or character to Christ here, which she had in the former verse, my beloved; which teaches us, 1. That Christ being once the believer's beloved, is always so; he has always an interest in Christ, and can never lose it; 'tis true, he may not always have the manifestations of Christ's love, but he has always an interest in him, as his beloved; for nothing can separate him from the love of Christ. 2. This shews, that her faith in him, and her love towards him, still continued; these two graces are never separate; they are implanted in the heart at one and the same time; they grow up and increase together, faith works by love; they continue together, and can never be lost; they are not indeed always alike in exercise, but they are always in being; but here they were in exercise as before, and rather increased, whilst she was contemplating and commending her beloved's excellencies. 3. From hence it appears, that she was not ashamed of Christ under this character, and therefore she repeats it, and indeed, she had no reason; for her maker was her husband, the Lord of hosts is his name, the God of the whole earth shall be called; he had more reason to be ashamed of her, she being a poor, sinful and despicable creature in herself, and he the creator of all things, and the holy one of Israel; and indeed, she was so far from being ashamed of Christ as her beloved, that she took a pleasure in looking on him, and conversing with him as such. 4. Her repeating it shews not only the vehemence of her love to him, but also the singular esteem that she had for him; that he was her beloved, and none else; that she chose, approved of, and valued him above all others; he was to her the chiefest among ten thousands, and preferable to all other beloveds.

II. She compares him to a cluster of camphire in the vineyards of Engedi: it is somewhat puzzling and perplexing to interpreters, to know what this copher, which is translated camphire, was.

First, It is, by the Septuagint, rendred Cyprus, by which is meant either the island so called, of which we read, Acts xi. 19, 20. and xxvii. 4. and then we must understand, by a cluster of Cyprus, a cluster of the grapes of those vines which grew in Cyprus, which were the best and largest vines, as <sup>a</sup> Pliny observes; and these being said to be in the vineyards of Engedi, mean either those vines that were brought from Cyprus, perhaps, in Solomon's time, and planted in the vineyards of Engedi; or else, some of the best vines in the land of Canaan, which were much like to those in Cyprus: The land of Canaan was very fruitful of vines, and some of the best sort, which bore very large clusters; such an one was that which was carried by two men, upon a staff, who were sent by Moses to spy the land, Numb. xiii. 23, 24. in memory of which, the place from whence it was taken was called Esfocol, the same word that, in this text, is rendred a cluster; and it is highly probable, that those vines, which grew in the vineyards of Engedi, were the best of all: R. Sol. Jarchi relates, out of the Agadah, <sup>b</sup> that these vineyards brought forth fruit four or five times in a year, and R. Alshech says seven times. Now Christ may be compared to a cluster of grapes, which grew in these vineyards; he compares himself to a vine, John xv. 1: and therefore may be very well compared to a cluster of grapes that grew upon the vine. And that, fulness of the Godhead bodily; every divine perfection is to be found in him; eternity, immutability, omniscience, omnipresence, omnipotence, &c. are, as it were in a cluster, in him: and as all divine, so all human perfections are in him; for he is perfectly man, as well as perfectly God; he is God manifest in the flesh; he was made in all things like unto us, sin only excepted, which is the greatest imperfection of human nature. 2. In Christ is a cluster of all spiritual graces; he is full of grace and truth; he is full of grace to communicate to others, as mediator; and has all grace habitually in his human nature, God having not given the spirit by measure to him; for he is anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows; a cluster of the graces of the spirit, which are in the human nature of Christ, may be seen in Isa. xi. 1, 2, 3. The Jews used to call such men who had all excellencies and virtues in them, אשכול Eshcoloth, clusters; hence they have a saying, <sup>c</sup> that after the death of Jose Ben Joezer, a man of Tzereda, and Jose Ben Jochanan, a man of Jerusalem, the clusters ceased, according to Mic. vii. 1. and say they, <sup>d</sup> what is אשכול Eshcol, a cluster? why, say they, it is איש שהכל בו Isb shehaccol bo, a man that has all things him, i. e. that has all virtues, a perfect knowledge of the law, &c. Now Christ is such a cluster that has all moral and spiritual perfections in him; all virtues and every grace are clustered together in him. 3. In Christ is a cluster of all spiritual blessings; all the blessings of the everlasting covenant are in his hands, and at his dispose; and saints are blessed with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in him; he is the believer's wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption; there is not a mercy we want, but is in him, or a blessing we enjoy, but what we have received from him; he is the believer's all in all. 4. In Christ is a cluster of exceeding great and precious promises, all suited to the various cases of God's children, and to advance his glory; for in him are all the promises, yea, and in him, Amen, to the glory of God by us; and these look like a cluster of grapes growing in the vineyards of Engedi.

2dly, Christ may be compared to a cluster of grapes for the abundance of juice that is in them. 1. The cluster is squeezed and pressed, that the juice may be obtained; so Christ was wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities, under the severe strokes of justice, and pressure of his father's wrath; for it pleased the Lord to bruise him, and all this for our good, that our sins might be expiated, our souls comforted, and persons accepted with God. 2. The juice squeezed out of this cluster may denote the blood of Christ and the efficacy of it; which being sbed for the remission of sin, perfectly procured it, it cleanseth from all sin, and purgeth the conscience from dead works, and has an influence in our justification, and in every other blessing of grace. 3. As the wine, which is the blood of the grape, is of a chearing, and refreshing nature, so is a crucified Christ to a poor sinner; that there are salvation, righteousness, peace and pardon through his blood, for the chief of sinners, is a reviving cordial to those that see themselves so, and the best and most acceptable news that they can hear of; this is more chearing and refreshing than the choicest wine. Or else,

By Cyprus, is meant the Cyprus tree <sup>e</sup> which grew upon the banks of the Nile, and at Ascalon in Judea, and very probably, in the vineyards of Engedi, here mentioned, as it did also in the island of Cyprus, from whence, perhaps it had its Name. The word Copper is used in the Misna <sup>f</sup> and translated Cyprus; and Maimon and Bartenora <sup>g</sup> say, it is the same which in Arabic is called אלחנא, the Cyprus, and refer to this place; and observe, that there are some that say it is the spice called the clove. And, 1. <sup>h</sup> The seed of it is much like a coriander seed, which the manna also resembled, Numb. xi. 7. which was typical of Christ, who is called the hidden manna, Rev. ii. 17. being exceeding sweet, delightful, pleasant, and nourishing to believers. 2. <sup>i</sup> The flower of this Cyprus tree is of a white colour, and a sweet smell; and may denote the purity of Christ's nature, and the innocence and holiness of his life, who in both appeared to be holy, harmless and undefiled; as also the sweet fragrant of his person, blood, sacrifice and righteousness. 3. <sup>k</sup> The leaves thereof are good for the healing of ulcers, &c. So the leaves of the tree of life, which is Jesus Christ, are said to be for the healing of the nations, i. e. for the healing of their spiritual maladies and diseases. 4. An excellent <sup>l</sup> oil was made out of it, and of this with other things was made an ointment, which, by Pliny, is called the royal ointment. Christ is by the holy spirit anointed above measure, with the oil of gladness, and is possessor of those good ointments, which are exceeding savoury; and from him do saints receive that anointing, which teacheth all things.

Secondly, Some <sup>m</sup> think that the Cyperus or Cypirus, of which Pliny writes, lib. 21. c. 18. is here meant, which is a kind of rush, or sword grass, is of a sweet smell, and has bulbous roots, to which 'tis thought the allusion is here made. And, 1. The smell of it, as Pliny, in the place before cited, writes, is much like that of spikenard; and for the same reasons that Christ may be compared to the spikenard, in ver. 12. may he be compared to the Cyperus here. 2. The smell of it, as the same Naturalist observes, makes men vegetiores & firmiores, more lively and strong, active and robust: In Christ is all a believer's strength, and from him they receive fresh supplies of it; and the more they exercise faith on him, the stronger they are; so that, though they are poor weak creatures in themselves, yet they can do all things through Christ, which strengtheneth them. 3. The root of it, as is observed by the same author, is good against the bitings of serpents, especially scorpions. Christ, who is the root of Jesse, was typified by the brazen serpent, which Moses, by a divine command, erected upon a pole, that every Israelite that was bitten by the fiery serpents, might look to it and have a cure. Christ was lifted up on the cross, and now is in the gospel, that whosoever looks unto him, may live and not perish; see John iii. 14, 15. he is a sovereign and infallible remedy against the bitings of those fiery serpents within, our own sins and corruptions, and of that old serpent without, the Devil.

Thirdly, Others have thought, that a cluster of dates, the fruit of the palm tree, is here intended, which is the opinion of R. Aben Ezra, and other Jewish writers; and indeed, Engedi, as is manifest from Pliny,<sup>a</sup> was famous for those sort of trees, as was Jericho, which is therefore called the city of the palm-trees, Deut. xxxiv. 3. and it is very probable, that Engedi was called Hazzazon Tamar, as it is 2 Chron. xx. 2. for the same reason: also the<sup>b</sup> fruit of this tree grows in clusters, and is very sweet and luscious, and may be expressive of Christ, and the fruits of divine grace, which souls receive in clusters from him, and are exceeding sweet to their taste.

Fourthly, Others think, and particularly Sanctius, that the balsam tree is here intended, which only<sup>c</sup> grew in the land of Judea; this place, Engedi,<sup>d</sup> was remarkably famous, both for that and palm-trees; from this tree drop'd the precious balsam, which was of a sweet smell, and of an healing nature; to which Christ may be very well compared, who is the great and only physician of souls, whose blood is a balsam for every sore; and has a vertue to cure every disease.

Fifthly, The word Copher is, by our translators, render'd camphire; and so it is by Pagnine, David de Pomis, and others; which<sup>e</sup> is of a sweet smell, is a very good remedy against the pains and aches of the head, a reviver of the spirits, and refresher of the brain; and if intended here, may be expressive of that sweet consolation, and divine refreshment which believers enjoy, resulting from views of acceptance in Christ's person, pardon through his blood, and justification by his righteousness: though what we call camphire seems not to be known to the ancients, nor does it grow in clusters; but is the tear or gum, or something of a resinous nature, which drops from an Indian tree.

Sixthly, There is one thing more to be remarked, and that is, that the Hebrew word כופר Copher signifies an atonement or propitiation; and so may very well be applied to Christ, who is the propitiation for our sins, and has made full atonement for them, by the blood of his cross. Bishop Patrick<sup>f</sup> observes, that the ancient Hebrew doctors, by dividing the first word אשכול, Eshcol, a cluster, found out the mystery of the Messiah, in these words; and consider them as if they were read thus, איש כל כופר Ish col copher, my beloved is unto me the man that propitiates or expiates all things, i. e. all sins and transgressions. In the Talmud<sup>g</sup> it is explained, "he, whose all things are, has atoned for my iniquity." Both the Targum and R. Sol. Jarchi carry it in the sense of atonement, though not as made by the Messiah: But it is certain, that the great atonement for sin was to be, and is completely made by the Lord Jesus Christ, the true Messiah, in which appeared a cluster of all the divine perfections, shining in equal glory; here grace and mercy, justice and holiness, truth and faithfulness, sweetly join'd and harmoniz'd together; whereby whereby also a cluster of divine blessings was procured and eternally secured to all his redeemed ones; such as peace, pardon, justification, &c. all which are sweet and comfortable, and fill them with unspeakable joy and pleasure.

Ver. 15. Behold thou art fair, my love: Behold, thou art fair, thou hast doves eyes.

THE church having spoken in the three former verses of the glory, excellency and sweetness which she saw and experienced in Christ; he re-assumes his part in this verse, and sets off the fairness and beauty of the church: In which,

- I. Is a general assertion, that she is fair; Behold thou art fair, my love: Behold thou art fair.
- II. A particular instance of her beauty given; thou hast doves eyes.

I. Here is a general assertion of her fairness; in which we have, 1st, The thing asserted, that she is fair. 2<sup>dly</sup>, An ecce, a behold prefixed to it; behold thou art fair. 3<sup>dly</sup>, A loving character given, my love. 4<sup>thly</sup>, The assertion repeated.

1st, The general assertion is, that she is fair; not on the account of her good works, or any righteousness performed by her, which is as filthy rags, and an unclean thing, as the Targum and R. Sol. Yarchi interpret it; but on the account of her being clothed with Christ's righteousness, washed in his blood, and sanctified by his spirit, as has been shewn on ver. 5.

2<sup>dly</sup>, To this general assertion is prefixed an ecce, a behold; which is sometimes, 1. A note of attention; and may be here designed to stir her up more seriously to consider her own beauty, which she had in and from him: Believers are too apt to keep their eyes upon their blackness, sins and imperfections, which fills them with sorrow, weakens their faith, and inclines them to diffidence; and though a consideration of this is sometimes necessary for the humbling of our souls, and the magnifying of divine grace; yet we should not have our eyes so fixed upon these things, as to be unmindful of, and not regard our perfection, completeness, beauty and comeliness we have in Christ, who is both our sanctification and our righteousness. 2. It is sometimes a note of admiration: Christ here, setting forth the greatness and excellency of the church's beauty, is introduced wondering at that comeliness which he himself had put upon her, she being in his eyes, the fairest among women; and much more reason have we to wonder at it, that we, who are by nature children of wrath, whose natures are corrupted and depraved, who are both by actual and original sin, black, uncomely and deformed, yet are now fair and beautiful in Christ, through his blood and righteousness; that we who were clothed with the rags of sin, are now arrayed with the sun of righteousness; that we who were cast out into the open field; to the loathing of our persons, in the day that we were born, yet now should be clothed with raiment of fine linen, linen, silk, and brodered work, and be adorned with bracelets, chains, jewels, and earrings; O stupendous grace! astonishing love! 3. It is sometimes a note of asseveration; and may be so used here, to assure her of the truth of what he asserted concerning her. Believers are very apt to call in question their fairness and compleatness in Christ, and to indulge themselves in fears, doubts, and unbelief about it, especially when they consider how full they are of imperfections, sins and spots; in the view of which there are very hardly brought to believe, that they are all fair, and there is no spot in them. Christ therefore to remove his Church's doubts and fears, banish her unbelief, and strengthen her faith, uses this way of speaking.

3dly, Christ gives his church here a very affectionate title, my love, which has been already considered and explained on ver. 9. and is here mentioned again, to let her know, that she was still the object of his love, pleasure and delight; that his love towards her was great, strong, lasting and unchangeable; as also how much his heart was ravished with her.

4thly, This assertion of Christ's, respecting the church's beauty, is repeated, behold thou art fair; which repetition is, 1. To shew the exceeding greatness of it; she was fair, fair, i. e. exceeding fair; no such beauty to be found in any, as in Christ, he's fairer than the children of men; and next to him is the church; she's the fairest among women; it is a superlative, surpassing and excelling beauty that she is possessed of. 2. It being repeated, shews the reality of it; this is inward and real, and not merely outward or painted; outward favour is deceitful, and natural beauty is vain; but such is not the church's, which is supernatural, spiritual, glorious and perfect. 3. It manifests the great value and esteem which Christ has for her, and her beauty, and how much he desired it; none so beautiful in his sight as she is; nor any beauty so desirable to him as her's; his thoughts are fixed upon, his eyes are sweetly delighted, and his heart surprizingly and divinely ravished with it; therefore he repeats it here, and elsewhere, again and again in this song. 4. It is repeated to shew that she was both inwardly and outwardly fair; she was fair, both with respect to justification and sanctification.

II. He gives a particular instance of her beauty, thou hast doves eyes; by which may be meant, either,

1st, The ministers of the gospel; who are that to Christ's body, the church, as eyes are to an human body; and what Job says of himself, may, with as much justness, be applied to them; I was, says he, Job xxix. 15. eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame; and the apostle seems to intimate this in 1 Cor. xii. 16, 17—21. Now these may be called the church's eyes. 1. Because as the eyes are placed in the eminent part of the body, so are ministers set in the highest post and place in the church; and therefore are said, 1 Thes. v. 12. to be over others in the Lord; and it is necessary and proper that they should be so, as it is, that the eyes should be in the head. 2. As the eyes are set there to watch and observe, lest any hurt comes to the body, so ministers of the gospel are placed in the church for much the same purpose; for this reason they are frequently called watchmen, and their business represented to be a watching for or over the souls of men committed to their care, and to give them warning and notice of any danger that is like to befall them ; of which we have instances, both in the Old and New Testament ; see Iſa. lii. 8. and lxii. 6. Ezek. xxxiii. 7, 8, 9. Heb. xiii. 17. 2 Tim. iv. 5. 3. They may be called the churches eyes, because they pry, search into, and make a discovery of gospel truths to others ; for which reason they are called the light of the world, and more especially are the lights of the church ; they are the stars which Christ holds in his right-hand, and makes use of to hold forth the word of life, and light to others ; they shine not in their own but in a borrowed light ; they receive all from Christ ; they would not be capable of looking into and discovering the precious truths of the gospel, nor be able to shew to others the way of salvation, did not the spirit of truth ὁ ἀληθὺς πνεῦμα, go before, lead the way, and guide into all truth. 4. As the eyes observe, order and direct the members of the body in their several actions ; so the ministers of the gospel being appointed inspectors and overseers, observe the life and conversations of the members of the church ; and if any thing disorderly appears, in a proper way correct, admonish, and reprove them for it ; they make it their business to teach the whole church all things which Christ has commanded, to guide, direct and instruct them how to behave themselves in their whole walk and conversation, both in the church and towards them that are without.

Now, these eyes of the church may be very fitly compared to doves. 1. For clearness and perspicuity ; * the eyes of doves are clear and sharp sighted, so are ministers to search and penetrate into gospel truths ; 'tis with much more clearness they behold, and plainness they deliver gospel truths now, than they could under the legal dispensation ; and there's a time coming, when they shall do it with much greater evidence and perspicuity, when the watchmen shall see eye to eye ; though in this imperfect state we know but in part, and prophecy but in part, and see through a glass darkly, in comparison of that light and evidence, in which those glorious truths shall appear to all believers in another world. 2. For their sincerity and simplicity ; when Christ sent forth his disciples to preach the gospel, he bid them be wise as serpents, and harmless as doves : Those who are his faithful ministers, act with all simplicity and godly sincerity, and dare not, as many, corrupt the word of God, but as of sincerity, but as of God, in the sight of God, speak they in Christ ; they use no artful methods to conceal their principles, and bring off persons from the plain truths of the gospel into a reception of erroneous doctrines ; but they are such who have renounced the bidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully ; but by manifestation of the truth, commending themselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God : They are exceeding careful and jealous, lest souls, who are under their care, and are made their charge, should by any means be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ. 3. For bringing in the olive leaf of the gospel ; Noah's dove brought an olive leaf in its mouth, which was an indication that the waters of the flood were abated : The ministers of the gospel bring the good tidings of good things ; they publish salvation by Christ, and bring bring the news of peace and pardon by his blood, justification by his righteousness, life through his death, and acceptance in his person. 4. For those dove-like gifts of the spirit, with which they are endowed, and by which they are qualified for that work, which they are called unto; there are diversities of them, of which one and the same spirit is the author; and these being given unto them, make them able ministers of the new Testament; so that they become both useful and beautiful. The Jews interpret those eyes of the Sanhedrim. Or else, 2dly, By the church's eyes may be meant the eyes of her understanding being enlightened by the spirit of God, and more especially the eye of faith, by which a soul takes a view of Christ's glory, fulness and suitableness, and looks unto him alone for life and salvation; which may be compared to doves eyes. 1. For the clearness and perspicuity of it; the dove, as has been already observed, is a quick and sharp sighted creature; the eye of faith penetrates into those things within the veil, brings distant things near, and makes unseen things manifest unto the soul; for it is the substance of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not seen: The things which the eye of nature and carnal reason could never take cognizance of, are observed by faith, whose object is an unseen Christ, and the invisible things of another world, which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard. 2. For its singleness and simplicity in looking only to Christ; the dove is an exceeding chaste and loving creature to its mate: The eyes of doves look only to their mates, to whom they keep an inviolable chastity. Faith looks only to Christ, and nothing else; it looks only to his person for acceptance with God, and not either to its duties or its graces; it looks only to Christ's righteousness for justification, and not to its own works, whether they be moral or evangelical, works done before or after conversion; it looks only to his blood for pardon and cleansing, and not to its tears of humiliation and repentance; it looks not to its frames, or grace received, for its supply and support, but to an all-sufficient and inexhaustible fulness of grace in Christ: Now this is the pure, single and chaste look of faith, which is so pleasant and delightful to Christ Jesus. 3. For finding out and feeding upon the pure and wholesome doctrines of the gospel; the dove singles out and feeds upon only pure seed and grain, and rejects all other, as not being agreeable and proper food: so a believing soul cannot feed and live upon any thing; he cannot live upon husks, which swine eat, but upon the wholesome words of our Lord Jesus Christ; any food will not do, none but the bread of life, and the hidden manna: It is the earnest desire of such a soul, that the life which he lives in the flesh, might be by the faith of the son of God; he would always live on Christ and with Christ, and cannot be satisfied with any thing short of him; for having once tasted that the Lord is gracious, he evermore desires this bread. 4. For the exceeding beautifulness of it in Christ's eye; as the eyes of doves are beautiful and delightful, so is this eye of faith to Christ; his heart is even ravished with it; thou hast ravished my heart, says he,

he, in Ch. iv. 9. with one of thine eyes. Christ's eyes, for the beauty and glory of them, are said to be in Ch. v. 12. as the eyes of doves, by the rivers of water, washed with milk, and fitly set, and so are the church's here; nothing more beautiful than the eye of faith. 5. For the meekness and humility of it; doves eyes are meek and humble, not fiery, fierce and furious, as some creatures; nor proud and lofty, as others. Faith is a low and humble grace, it takes nothing to itself, but ascribes all the glory to Christ; it renders the disposition of a soul possessor of it, mild and meek, not fierce and cruel, for faith works by love: A fiery temper, and a furious disposition do not become a believer; nor is it either excited or encouraged by faith; which promotes a meek, humble and lowly spirit, of which Christ, the object of faith, is the best example, who says; learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart; who checks the furious, and resists the proud, but takes delight and pleasure in the humble soul, whose eyes are up unto him alone.

Ver. 16. Behold thou art fair, my beloved, yea, pleasant: Also our bed is green.

THE church having heard her own praises in the former verse, and being conscious to herself of her sins and infirmities, and that what beauty was in her, came from him; she, as it were, breaks in upon his discourse, and ascribes it all to him; and it is as if she should say, Dost thou say that I am fair? thou only art eminently, essentially, and originally so; for all the beauty which I am possessor of, as it is by way of eminency in thee, so it is derived from thee; therefore the praise of it is not due to me, but to thyself, to whom be all the glory. In these words,

- I. The same thing is asserted by the church, concerning Christ, which he had asserted concerning her in the former verse; behold thou art fair, my beloved.
- II. An addition to it; yea, pleasant.
- III. That their bed, which belonged in common to them both, was green.

I. The same thing is here asserted by the church concerning Christ, which he had asserted concerning her, and that much in the same manner. For, 1st, The title which she gave her, is, my love; and that which she here gives him, is my beloved: They seem, not only in these two verses, but indeed throughout the whole song, to be as it were striving to out-do each other in their mutual expressions of love; but this title has been already explained, on ver 13.

2<sup>dly</sup>, She asserts of this beloved of her's in the very same words, that he is fair; she returns it to him, to whom she judged it more properly belong'd; whose beauty is natural and essential, her's not so; his original and underived, but her's derived from him; his infinite, inconceivable, inexpressible and transcending all others, but her's of an inferior nature. Now her returning the same commendation back to Christ, shows not only that she look'd on her beauty as far inferior to Christ's, and not to be mentioned with it; as also, that it was derived from him, and that if she was, in any sense, comely, it was through that comeliness which he had put upon her; but likewise it shews her modesty and humility, as well as the nature of true faith, which gives all the glory of what the soul is, or has, to Christ and his grace; its usual and common language is, not I, but the grace of God which was with me, and it is by the grace of God I am what I am. Now Christ may be said to be fair.

1st, As he is man; and so he is, both in body and soul; that body which was prepared him by the father, and which was in an unspeakable and surprising manner conceived in the virgin's womb, by the power of the Holy Ghost, as it was free from sin, so was, no doubt, free from all the blemishes and defects of nature; and in this sense, as well as in some other, may he be said to be fairer than the children of Adam; and more especially, he was so at his transfiguration, when his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light; though, what with sorrows and sufferings, with tears, dust, sweat and blood, his visage was marred more than any man, and his form more than the sons of men; yet now being raised from the dead, and exalted at his father's right hand, is beautiful and glorious; for that same human nature, which here below was the ridicule of men, is now the wonder of angels; that head which was crowned with thorns, is now crowned with glory and honour; and that face which was spit upon, will be the delightful object of the saints everlasting vision, after the resurrection morn; when, with their bodily eyes, they shall gaze on the glory of Christ's human nature, whom they shall see for themselves, and not another: In short, Christ's glorious human body will then be the pattern and exemplar, to which our bodies shall then be fashioned and made like. Moreover, as he is fair in his human body, so likewise in his soul; the powers and faculties of which, act in an agreeable order, nothing being misplaced, nor any disorder in the whole frame and contexture of it, being free from all sin, and full of every grace: Holiness here appears in its beauty, and knowledge, and wisdom in their perfection; all which were manifest and evident throughout the whole of his life: In short, the whole human nature had an immeasurable unction of the holy spirit, on the account of which he is said to be fairer than others; he was anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows; grace was poured plentifully into his lips, from whence it freely drop'd like sweet smelling myrrh.

2<sup>dly</sup>, He may be said to be fair, as God-man and mediator, which I suppose is chiefly designed here; for as such, this branch of the Lord is exceeding beautiful and glorious in the eyes of believers: For, 1. The glory of all the divine perfections are resplendent in him; as such, he's the brightness of his father's glory, and the express image of his person; all God's creatures, works and actions, shew forth the glory of his perfections in some measure, but they are no where so clearly discerned, nor so gloriously display'd as they are in the person and office of Christ, as mediator; for the light light of the knowledge of the glory of God, is given us in the face or person of Jesus Christ; and a glorious, delightful and ravishing sight it is to a believer. 2. There's a mediatorial glory which he's possess'd of, which makes him look exceeding fair and beautiful; this is what was given him before the world began, when he first enter'd into covenant with his father, became our surety, and was set up as the mediator of God's elect; which, when he had finished his work, he desired might be given to him, that is, might be more clearly manifested, and a greater display of it given to the world, and is what shall feed the eyes of his saints with wonder and pleasure, to all eternity; this is what Christ desires that they may be with him for, namely, to behold his glory; for then, indeed, shall they see him as he is; now, in the glass of the gospel, saints behold a great deal of the glory of Christ Jesus, which gives them much pleasure and delight; but this is but little in comparison of what they shall be everlastingly indulg'd with. 3. Christ appears with much fairness and beauty to believers, as he is possess'd of all grace; this was the glorious and soul ravishing sight, which the Evangelist John, together with others, had of him, which he takes notice of, saying, John i. 14. we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the father, full of grace and truth; and what makes it still more delightful, is, that all this grace is treasur'd up in him for them, that they, from his fulness, may receive, and grace for grace; there's every thing in him that souls want, and every thing they want they may have from him; for he is of God made unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption; which consideration must needs render him very fair, beautiful and delightful in the believer's eye. 4. Christ is fair in believers eyes, in all he is unto them, or has done and suffered for them; their souls are delighted in the views of him, as their prophet to teach and instruct them, whose lips are like lilies, dropping sweet smelling myrrh of gospel doctrines, counsels, and promises; as their priest, who, by his active and passive obedience, has made full satisfaction to the righteous law, an atonement for their sins by his blood, and is now interceding for them in heaven; and therefore his bands are as gold rings set with the beryl, and his legs as pillars of marble, set upon sockets of fine gold; and as their king to rule, govern, protect and defend them, whose head is as the most fine gold, his locks are bushy, and black as a raven. Moreover, he is exceeding fair and beautiful in their eyes, considered in all the relations he bears to them; as he is their indulgent father, their tender husband, loving brother, and faithful friend; and so he is to them, in all that he has done and suffered for them: It is an exceeding delightful sight to view him undertaking their cause, espousing their persons, assuming their nature, bleeding and dying in their room and stead, rising again as a victorious conqueror, sitting at God's right hand, where he ever lives to make intercession for transgressors.

3dly, The same word behold is prefixed by her to this commendation, as was to the other by him; as wondering at that beauty she saw in him, and that one so fair should take any notice of her; and being affected with his glory herself, she stirs up others to a contemplation of it; for all have reason, upon a-view thereof, to say, how great is his goodness, and how great is his beauty? Zech. ix. 17.

II. She not only asserts the same of him, as he had done of her, but also makes an addition to his character, saying, behold thou art fair, yea pleasant: This shows the exceeding great value and esteem that she had for him, and that she found it difficult to find words fully expressive of his excellency; and indeed, all words fall short of expressing his worth; she was not contented with the former commendation of him, and therefore adds another word, striving, as it were, to exceed him in her commendations: They were not mere words of compliment she used, for her heart and affections went along with them; nay, she laboured under a difficulty of finding out words, apt, strong and full enough to express the real and just sentiments of her mind concerning him: and therefore, as she thought one word was not enough, she adds another, yea pleasant. 1. The person of Christ is so to a believer: He looks pleasantly upon believers with an eye of love and grace; his eyes are as the eyes of doves by the rivers of water, washed with milk, and fully set upon them; he don't look upon them in a frowning, furious and angry manner, but as having the greatest respect for, and taking the greatest delight in them; and whilst they are enabled by faith to view him with love in his heart, and smiles in his countenance, their souls are filled with an universal pleasure; for if it is a pleasant thing for the eyes to behold the sun, in the firmament, it is much more pleasant to behold the sun of righteousness, arising with healing in his wings; to see our acceptance in his person, pardon through his blood, justification by his righteousness, reconciliation with God through his atoning sacrifice, and every needful supply of grace from his infinite fulness; O how pleasant must Christ be to a believer under all these sweet considerations! 2. Christ's covenant and promises are exceeding pleasant to them. What can be a more delightful sight, than to view Christ as the mediator, surety and messenger of the covenant of grace, to see all the blessings, and the exceeding great and precious promises of it, all secured in his hands; as also their interest in it and in him as their covenant head? so that they can say as David did, 2 Sam. xxi. 5. although my house be not so with God; yet he hath made with me an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things, and sure: For this is all my salvation and all my desire, although he make it not to grow; 'tis this will give satisfaction and content, under all the troubles and exercises of life, and fortify against the fears of death. 3. The doctrines of Christ are pleasant to believers: Pleasant words are as an honey-comb, sweet to the soul, and heal to the bones; such are the wholesome words of our Lord Jesus, the doctrines of the everlasting gospel; these are sweeter to a believer's taste than the honey, or the honey-comb; they are salutary and nourishing, and therefore valued by him more than his necessary food; he often, with Jeremy, finds these words and eats them, and they are unto him the joy and rejoicing of his heart. 4. The ordinances of Christ are pleasant to them: The commands of Christ are far from being grievous, his yoke is easy, and his burden light, all his tabernacles are amiable and lovely, his ways are ways of pleasantness, and his paths are paths of peace; especially when they enjoy his presence, fence, have communion with him, and are assisted by his spirit in an attendance on them. 5. Christ's company and conversation are exceeding pleasant and delectable; no fellowship like fellowship with the father, and with his son Jesus Christ; this is the believer's peculiar privilege, his sole delight, and the matter of his glorying; no presence like the presence of Christ, in whose presence is fulness of joy, and at whose right hand are pleasures for evermore; communion with angels, and fellowship with saints, must needs be very pleasant and delightful to believers, but not to be compared with the enjoyment of his presence, who is the head of angels, and the king of saints; this is the saints comfort here, and will be their eternal happiness hereafter.

III. Having thus given this great and glorious commendation of her beloved, she asserts that their bed, which was common to them, and which made for the glory of them both, was green, also our bed is green; where we are to consider, 1st, What this bed is. 2<sup>dly</sup>, whose it is. And, 3<sup>dly</sup>, What is said of it.

1st, It will be proper to enquire what is meant by this bed. R. Sol. Jarchi observes, that the tabernacle and temple were called so; and for this purpose cites Cant. iii. 7. 2 Kings xi. 2, 3. and so it is explained in Talkut. Theodorēt * thinks, that the scriptures are here intended, which are oftentimes the instrumental means of begetting souls to Christ; see Jam. i. 18. 1 Pet. i. 23. But it seems better to understand it of the church itself, and the seat of it; where Christ and believers comfortably rest together, enjoy sweet fellowship and communion with each other; and where many souls are begotten and born again; for of Zion it shall be said, this and that man was born in her.

2<sup>dly</sup>, Whose bed this is; she calls it our bed, which denotes a mutual propriety and interest that Christ and believers have in the church; 'tis what the father has given him, which he has purchased with his blood, and is the author and maker of; behold his bed, which is Solomon's; this he has chose for his rest, solace and refreshment, saying, this is my rest for ever, here will I dwell. Moreover, it is the bed which believers have a right to, and therefore are admitted to all the privileges of it; here they enjoy the presence and company of Christ their beloved; they have an interest in him, therefore the apostle says, if Christ be ours, all things are ours.

3<sup>dly</sup>, It is said of this bed, that it is green, i. e. flourishing and fruitful; so the word is used in Dan. iv. 4. Psal. lxxviii. 8. and xxxvii. 35, and intends either, 1. The fruitfulness of the saints in grace and holiness, who being planted in the house of the Lord, flourish in the courts of our God, as trees of righteousness, which are filled and laden with the fruits thereof; which is owing to the refreshing dews and influences of divine grace. Or else, 2. The numerous increase of converts in the church; and so the Targum and R. Sol. Jarchi, explain it; and it may be an allusion to a custom used in the Eastern nations in strowing the nuptial bed with green leaves and flowers: And with the Latines, torus a bed is so called from tortis herbis, from herbs writhed and twisted together and put under the shoulders of those that lay on them; and it was usual to strow them with green herbs, grass, and leaves of trees<sup>c</sup>. A numerous increase of converts, which makes the bed, the church, look so green and flourishing, was frequently promised and prophesied of in the Old Testament; and had a glorious fulfilment in the first dawn of the gospel, when three thousand souls were converted under one sermon; and will be gloriously and compleatly fulfilled in the latter day, when the church shall say, the place is too strait for me, give place to me that I may dwell.

Ver. 17. The beams of our house are cedar, and our rafters of fir.

THESE are either the words of Christ inviting the church into their house, which was so firmly and delightfully built; or else the words of the church continuing the praise of Christ, and all that were about him, or belonged unto him; or rather they are the words of the bride and bridegroom, and the virgins, her companions, all joining together in a chorus, to set forth the glory and excellency of the church: In which may be considered,

- I. What is meant by this house, which they seem to have a common interest in, and therefore call it our house.
- II. What those beams are, which are said to be cedar.
- III. What those rafters are, which are said to be of fir.

I. I shall consider what is meant by the house, whose beams are cedar, and whose rafters are of fir. R. Sol. Jarchi understands it of the tabernacle, the glory and praise of which, he thinks, is here set forth; and so the Targum refers it to the temple, built by Solomon, but yet acknowledges that that which shall be built in the days of the king Messiah, shall be much more glorious and beautiful; but it is much better to understand it, either,

1st, Of our house, which is from heaven,<sup>d</sup> which saints know, that after their dissolution, they shall enter into. The word in the Hebrew is in the plural number, our houses; and so may intend those many mansions which are in Christ's father's house, preparing by him for all his people, for their everlasting entertainment; and the beams and rafters of these houses, being of cedar and fir, which are trees of a sweet smell, and durable nature, may represent that fulness of joy, and those delightful pleasures which are in Christ's presence, and at his right-hand for evermore: It shews that this house is not made with hands, but eternal in the heavens; that these habitations, which Christ has prepared for them, and will bring them into, are everlasting; and that that inheritance, which they are born heirs unto, and shall certainly enjoy, is incorruptible, undefiled, and fadeth not away. Now if we suppose these to be the words of Christ, his design then seems to be, by commending the endless joys and never-ceasing pleasures of the saints above, to raise the affections, and quicken the desires of his church, after the enjoyment

ment of the same, that they with him may enter the nuptial chamber, and spend an eternity in everlasting communion with each other: But if they are the words of the church, then they seem to intimate the comfortable views she had of the heavenly joys, and her interest in them; she knew that when this earthly house was dissolved, she had an house not made with hands, firmly built and delightfully furnished, which she should have admittance into, and which is eternal in the heavens; as also, the earnest desires of her soul to be there; she saw this house afar off, what a goodly structure it was, what soul ravishing delights it was filled with, therefore longed to be within the walls of it, and groaned earnestly, being burdened with a body of sin and death, desiring to be clothed upon with her house, which is from heaven; likewise she seems to speak of this house with the utmost thankfulness to her Lord and Spouse, and adoration of his grace, that had provided so convenient and delightful an habitation for her. Or else,

2dly, By this house may be meant the church of God here below, which seems most agreeable; for so it is called in 1 Tim. iii. 15. where the apostle promises Timothy to instruct him, how he should behave himself in the house of God, which says he, is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth; and so believers are said to be Christ's house, in Heb. iii. 6. but Christ, as a son over his own house, whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence, and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end. Now the church may be said to be Christ's house. 1. Because it is of his building: The ministers of the gospel are instruments in building up his church; but he's the great master builder; the materials of this building are living stones, which are the saints; but he himself is both the foundation and the corner stone; 'tis upon this rock he builds his church, and the gates of hell shall not be able to prevail against it. 2. Having built it, he dwells in it, and makes it the place of his residence: The church is the habitation of all the three persons, and particularly of Jesus Christ. Saints are built up for an habitation of God through the spirit, they are the temples of the Holy Ghost, and in their hearts Christ dwells by faith: The church is the habitation of his holiness, and the place where his honour dwelleth; here he delights to be, and condescends to shew himself; here souls may expect to find him and enjoy his presence, for he has promised to be here until the end of time. 3. Here he eats, feeds and feasts with his people; 'tis not an empty house he keeps, but having built it, he furnishes it with suitable provisions, which are called the goodness and fatness of his house; here he makes a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined. This is his banqueting house, into which he brings his people, and sups with them, and they with him. 4. Here he takes his rest with the church, his bride; this, says he, is my rest for ever: Here will I dwell, for I have desired it; here he solaces himself, and takes the utmost delight and pleasure; as houses are not only to feed in, but to rest in; so this use does Christ make of his church. 5. Here he lays up his treasure, and what he esteems his portion, and the chief part of his riches; for the Lord's portion is his people, Jacob is the lot of his inheritance; the saints are his jewels, and peculiar treasure, and these he brings into and preserves safe in his house below, until he removes removes them into his house above. 6. As his house, he fills, repairs and beautifies it at pleasure; he fills it with members, and these he fills with gifts and grace suitable to their places in this house, for he is, ascended to fill all things; when any breaches are made he makes them up; when it is fallen to decay, he repairs it, by bringing in a large number of converts, and beautifies this house of his glory with his own presence. 7. He is the master of it, and manages all the affairs of it; the key of it is in his hands, and the government of it upon his shoulders; he's sole king and ruler here; he enacts laws, demands obedience to them, and places officers here to see them put in execution; he's the high priest over this house of God, and transacts all affairs between God and his people; he's the great prophet that teaches and instructs them; the careful husband and indulgent father that provides all for them; in short, of him the whole family in heaven and earth is named; so that the church may be very well called Christ's house.

But then this house is said to be the church's also; the beams of our house, &c. Saints are the materials of this house; Christ is the builder, the foundation and the corner stone; but they are the lively stones which are laid on this foundation, and so are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ; they have a right to and are in the enjoyment of all the privileges of this house; they are fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; here they are born and brought up, have their food and education; thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side, Isa. lx. 4. here they dwell, rest, feed, feast, and enjoy sweet communion with Christ Jesus; and therefore they may say, as David did, Psal. lxxxiv. 4. blessed are they that dwell in thy house, they will be still praising thee; as they have a great deal of reason so to do.

Also the word being in the plural number, and render'd our houses, may intend the particular churches of Christ, which are all his houses, where he dwells; his golden candlesticks, among whom he walks, which hold forth the word of light and life to others; and his gardens, where he delights to be, eating those pleasant fruits, and feeding among those lilies, which grow there; for though there is but one general assembly and church of the first born, which are written in heaven, yet there are many particular churches and congregations of saints here on earth.

II. The beams of this house are said to be of cedar: By cedar beams we are not to understand angels, who encamp about, protect and bear up the saints, and are ministering spirits to them, which is the opinion of <sup>b</sup> some; but rather the <sup>c</sup> ministers of the gospel, who may be called pillars in Christ's house, as James, Cephas and John were; who by their exemplary lives, savoury doctrines, and undaunted courage, add much strength and glory to the church of Christ; as by rafters afterwards may be meant weaker believers, who have all their proper places, work and usefulness in the house of God: or else, by cedar beams may be meant in general, the saints and people of God, which are all beams and pillars in this house, and serve to support it; for being fity framed together, they grow up unto an holy temple in the Lord; and being joined and cemented to each other in faith and love, they worship the Lord

Lord with one shoulder, or with one consent; and these are compared to cedars in scripture; see Psal. xcii. 12. Numb. xxiv. 5, 6. and may be very well compared unto them. 1. For the height and tallness of them; the cedar-tree is a very tall tree, as may be learnt from 2 Kings xix. 23. Amos ii. 9. The saints, though they are mean, abject, poor and low, by nature, even beggars on the dunghil, yet by divine grace, they are raised on high, set among princes, and made to inherit the throne of glory; they are higher than others in their gifts and graces, faith, knowledge, and experience, as well as in their privileges and attainments; they are growing up higher still in their head Christ Jesus, and are reaching forwards and upwards in their affections and desires, in hope of enjoying the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. 2. For their straitness and uprightness; for which reason, perhaps, the righteous are said to grow, not only like the palm-tree, but also like the cedar in Lebanon; the saints are upright, both in heart and conversation; they both speak and walk uprightly. 3. For its durableness; Pliny <sup>a</sup> ascribes even eternity unto it; it will not rot, nor admit any worm into it: the saints will endure for ever; for though they have much corruption in them, yet they themselves shall never corrupt; they have that grace in them which will keep them from putrefaction, and which will never decay itself; for it is an incorruptible, immortal, and never dying seed. 4. For the sweet odour which it sends forth; <sup>e</sup> it is of an excellent smell; so are the persons of the saints to God the father, being clothed with the garments of salvation, and robe of Christ's righteousness, which smell of myrrh, aloes, and cassia; so are the graces which are wrought in them by the spirit to Christ himself; see Ch. iv. 10. and so are all their sacrifices of a sweet smelling favour, being offered up in Christ's name, and perfumed with the sweet incense of his mediation. 5. The cedar tree is well rooted, <sup>f</sup> always green, and the older the more fruitful; believers are rooted in Christ Jesus, so as all the winds and storms of sin and temptation cannot tear them up; they are always green, and their leaf doth not wither, because they are planted by rivers of water; where being refreshed with continued supplies of divine grace, they bring forth fruit in old age, because the Lord, he is upright, he is their rock, and there's no unrighteousness in him.

III. The rafters of this house are said to be of fir. By rafters may be meant the ordinances of the gospel, which are administered in the church, and are for the comfort and edification of it. The Hebrew word here, translated rafters, is in Gen. xxx. 38, 41. Exod. ii. 16. render'd gutters and troughs of water, where sheep used to be water'd; and some of the <sup>g</sup> Jewish writers would have it understood in this sense here. R. Aben Ezra observes, that if it is took in this sense, then the word render'd fir, should signify marble stone, and be read thus, our canals are of marble stone. Now these canals or gutters of water are called רֶהֱטִים Rehatim <sup>h</sup> from the Chaldee word רֶהַט Rebat, which signifies signifies to run, because waters run in them. The grace of the spirit is frequently, both in the Old and New Testament, represented by water; which for its purity, and purifying nature, is called clean water; for its quickening virtue and efficacy, water of life and living water; and for its plenty and abundance, rivers of water: This grace is commonly convey'd and communicated to us in the use of ordinances; these are the canals or conduit pipes in which this water runs, and is brought unto us; the first conveyance of it is usually this way; faith, conversion, and every grace that attends it, come by bearing, and bearing by the word of God; and as this, so other ordinances are the means of increasing faith, joy and comfort, and of conveying fresh supplies of grace and strength. Christ's fulness is the fountain, from whence all grace springs; and his ordinances are the golden pipes, through which the golden oil and grace of divine love run and empty themselves into our souls. Also the same word is translated galleries, in Ch. vii. 5. the king is beld in the galleries. R. David Kimchi says, that <sup>1</sup> they were buildings in high houses, in which they walked from house to house, or from one part of the house to the other; they were such as our balconies; and they may be called by this name, because they run along the sides of houses; agreeable to this, Junius and Tremellius translate it, ambulacra nostra, our walking places. Now the ordinances are the galleries, or walking places, where Christ and believers walk and converse together; here he grants them fellowship with himself, tells them all his mind, and discloses the secrets of his heart unto them: In these galleries they behold the king in his beauty; here he shows them his covenant-love and grace, and from hence they take a prospect of the good land that is very far off. But the word may be very well translated rafters, which are jointed together, and run in each other; and so the Targum renders it, and in this sense is the word used both in the <sup>2</sup> Mishnah and in <sup>3</sup> the Midrash. Now, as rafters are for the strength and support of buildings, so are the ordinances to the church of Christ; by them oftentimes saints are supported and refreshed; and whilst they are waiting on Christ in them, they renew their strength, they mount up with wings as eagles, they run and are not weary, they walk and faint not, as it is promised to them in Isa. xl. 31.

Now these rafters are said to be of fir: The word is only used in this place, and is so render'd by Arias Montanus, Pagnine, and others, and is so understood by most of the <sup>4</sup> Jewish writers; the word being by the change of a single letter, viz. ש into ת, which is usual in the Chaldee and Syriack languages, the same with that which is commonly used for the fir; and this <sup>5</sup> Pliny says, is the best and strongest wood for roofing or raftering: now these rafters, the ordinances of the gospel, may be said to be of this, because, 1. The fir tree is <sup>6</sup> bilaris aspectu, of a pleasant, chearful and delightful look; the ordinances of the gospel are exceeding delightful to believers, when they have the presence of Christ with them, and the communications of his love unto them; then are those tabernacles amiable and lovely, wisdom's ways are then ways of pleasantness; their souls are filled with joy and pleasure, nothing so desirable to them as these, neither does any thing give them such satisfaction and contentment; and therefore with the disciples they think it is good for them to be here, and would always abide under such a roof as this, whose rafters are of fir. 2. It is a very shady tree, <sup>P</sup> folio pinnato densa, ut imbras non transmittat; it is so thick with leaves, that it will not let through showers of rain; the ordinances of Christ are a delightful shade under which souls oftentimes sit with pleasure, have much spiritual consolation and refreshment, in which, being protected from the enemies of their souls, they serve the Lord with liberty and enlargement of heart. 3. It is always green <sup>1</sup>, and never casts its leaf, and therefore is called the green fir-tree, in Hos. xiv. 8. Ordinances are those green pastures, into which the great shepherd leads his sheep, and in which he causes them to lie down; which being blest and owned by the spirit of grace unto believers, make them fat and flourishing, fruitful in every good work, even in old age, so that their leaf does not wither in the winter season.

Others think that the Cypress tree is here intended, and so read the words, and our rafters or galleries of Cypress; so the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and and Tigurine versions, David de Pomis, and others. Now these rafters may be said to be of this, because the <sup>1</sup> Cypress wood is very lasting and durable; it admits of no worms, it will not rot, nor is it sensible of old age; which may be expressive of the durability and continuance of gospel-ordinances, until the second coming of Christ; for as long as Christ has an house on earth, these Cypress rafters will last, it will never need new roofing; as long as there is a church there will be those ordinances, which are now in force, and will continue so to the end of time, without any change or alteration in them. This wood is also of a very <sup>2</sup> pleasant smell; which may signify the delight and pleasure which believers take in ordinances, and how grateful they are to them.

Others think that the brutine tree is meant; so Ainsworth, Brightman, Junius, and Cocceius; and may be that which Pliny <sup>3</sup> calls Bruta, which some take to be the tree of paradise, and its name is near in sound to the Hebrew word Brotim here used, the singular of which is Brot; which he says is much like the Cypress, and of a smell like cedar; and being applied to the ordinances of the Gospel may signify, as before, the durability and delightfulness of them; and now who, but would desire to dwell in such an house, and under such a roof as this? What encouragement is here, and what an inducement should this be, to souls to come into the house of the Lord, and wait upon him there, the beams of whose house are cedar, and the rafters of fir?

C H A P. II.

Ver. 1. I am the rose of Sharon, and the lily of the vallies.

HERE begins a new colloquy between Christ and his church; in which they alternately set forth the praises and excellencies of each other, discover the strength of their mutual affection; and express the delight and pleasure they take in each others company; but who begins this colloquy is not so easily determined. What is here said; may be applied either to Christ or the church; and therefore I shall consider the words in both senses.

First, The words may be considered as the words of the church, expressing the excellency of her grace, loveliness and beauty, which she had received from Christ; and at the same time intimating her being exposed in the open field and low vallies to many dangers, and enemies; and therefore tacitly desires his protection over her, which he seems to promise in ver. 2. That these are the words of the church seems to be the general opinion of the <sup>a</sup> Jewish doctors, and is also embraced by some <sup>b</sup> Christian interpreters. And,

1st, The church may be compared to the rose of Sharon. 1. For its beautiful and delightful colour; <sup>c</sup> no rose of Sharon can be more beautiful in colour, and delightful to the eye, than the church is in the eyes of Christ; as she is clothed with his pure and spotless righteousness, adorned with the graces of his spirit, and standing at his right hand in cloth of gold, bespangled with the sparkling gems of divine grace, her beauty is desirable to him; she being, in his eye, the fairest among women. 2. For its sweet odour; the church, and all believers, are as the fragrant and sweet smelling rose; their persons are so, as considered in Christ, and all their graces, especially when in exercise; and all their duties and services, when performed in faith, and perfumed with Christ's mediation; see Ch. iv. 10. Phil. iv. 18. Rev. v. 8. and viii. 3, 4. 3. For its delight in <sup>d</sup> sunny places; it thrives and flourishes the best there, and has the most fragrant smell: Christ is the sun of righteousness, under whose warming, comforting and refreshing beams, believers delight to be, and under which their souls grow, thrive, blossom exceedingly, and bring forth much fruit. 4. For its blossoming and flourishing, the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose; the church may be said to do so, when there is a large increase of members, and these much in the exercise of grace, and fruitful in every good work; then may the church be said to be as the blossoming rose.

2dly, She may be compared to the lily of the vallies; she is compared to the lily among thorns, in the next verse, and faints are frequently compared to lilies in this song. And, 1. She may be likened to a lily, for the glory, beauty, and sweet odour of it: Christ says, Mat. vi. 29. of the lilies of the field,

field, that Solomon, in all his glory, was not array'd like one of these; and for the same reasons that she is compared to the beautiful and sweet smelling rose, is she likewise to the lily; which Pliny<sup>c</sup> says, rosæ nobilitate proximum est, is next in nobleness or excellency to the rose. 2. For its whiteness; there are various sorts of lilies, and they are of different colours; some are of red and purple colours, others are white, and it seems to be the white lily which is intended here; for this seems best to express her beauty; for the red rose, and the white lily, make her look somewhat like her beloved, white and ruddy, a perfect beauty; and of the white lily, Pliny says, candor ejus eximius, that its whiteness is singularly excellent; the church, and all believers in Christ, are very aptly resembled by the white lily, who are clothed with fine linen, clean and white, which is the righteousness of the saints, wrought out by Christ, imputed by God the father, and laid hold on by faith; this is so exceeding white, that being array'd with it, they are all fair, and there is no spot in them. 3. For its fruitfulness; Pliny says, nihil est fecundius, una radice quinquagenos sæpe emittente bulbos; nothing is more fruitful, for oftentimes one root sends forth fifty bulbs; and as fruitful are believers, when the sun of righteousness shines upon them, and Christ is as the dew unto them; for then they grow as the lily, and cast forth their roots as Lebanon; their branches spread, and their beauty is as the olive tree. The church brings forth many souls to Christ, and these bring forth much fruit to the glory both of him and his father. 4. For its height; the lily grows very high; Pliny says, nec ulli florum excelstas major, interdiu cubitorum trium; no flower exceeds it in height, for in the day time, i. e. when it erects itself, it is three cubits high. Believers are trees of righteousness and plants of Christ's father's planting, which do not run along the ground, and cleave to earthly things, but lift up their heads heaven-wards, and grow up on high in their desires and affections, having their hearts above, where their treasure is: Believers are like the flowers of the lily, open towards heaven, but shut towards the earth. 5. For the weakness of its body, and largeness of its head. Pliny says<sup>d</sup> of the lily, languido semper collo & non sufficiente capitis oneri; that it has a weak neck or body, which is not sufficient to bear the weight of the head: Christ is the head of the body the church, and far greater; he is not supported by it, but he supports it. The church's strength lies in her head, as Sampson's did in his locks; she is weak in herself, but strong in Christ her head, and therefore says, surely in the Lord have I righteousness and strength. 6. The church may be compared not only to a lily, but to a lily of the vallies. There is a lily which is called lilium convallium, the lily of the vallies; but this seems not so much to intend the distinguishing name of some particular lily, as it does the place where it grows. And, 1. Vallies are low places; and when the church is called the lily of the vallies, it may be expressive of the low estate and condition which she is sometimes in: Believers are Christ's myrtle trees, and these are sometimes in the bottom, in a low condition; but he grants his presence with them, and the discoveries of his love to them; they are his doves, and they are often like doves of the vallies, mourning every one for their iniquity, being humbled and pressed down in their souls under a sense of sin and unworthiness; they are not only

only humble in themselves, and low in their own eyes, but are often in the deeps of affliction, sorrow and distress, and out of these depths cry unto the Lord; see Psal. cxxx. 1. 2. Lilies that grow in the vallies, are exposed to danger; they are liable to be pluck'd by every one that passes by, to be trodden upon and eaten by the beasts that feed there, and also to be washed away, and destroyed by hasty showers of rain, that run from the hills and mountains, down into the vallies, with force and violence: So the church of Christ here on earth, in her low estate, is exposed to the rage of her adversaries, to be trodden under the feet, and tore in pieces by the teeth of those bulls of Bashan, that beset her around, and to be carried away by the flood of persecution, which satan, the old serpent, casts out of his mouth after her. Now it is a glorious instance of God's mighty grace and power in protecting and defending his church, that this lily grows and abides in the vallies notwithstanding all this danger. 3. Lilies of the vallies have more moisture, verdure and greenness in them, than those upon the hills and mountains; because the sun has not that power over them, as R. Sol. Jarchi observes, to scorch and dry them up, and therefore are much more beautiful and excellent; so believers, being planted by rivers of water, are green, flourishing and fruitful; whilst others look like the heath in the desert, dried and parched up. Christ is to the saints as rivers of water in a dry place, and as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land; by the one he refreshes them, and makes them fruitful; and by being the other, he shades from that which would scorch them and make them barren and unfruitful: And thus is the church, the lily of the vallies, as well as the rose of Sharon. But,

Secondly, The more commonly received opinion is, that these words are the words of Christ; owning all the glory and praises the church had given him in the former chapter, and setting forth more largely the beauties and excellencies of his person, the more to affect, enamour and ravish her soul, and make her seek and long for him; and indeed it seems best to understand them of Christ; for self condemnation does not so well agree with the church, as with him: What Solomon says, Prov. xxvii. 2. is worth regarding, let another praise thee, and not thine own mouth; a stranger, and not thine own lips; though it is lawful for the saints to speak of their glory, beauty and excellency, as considered in Christ, in order to magnify the riches of his grace, for the instruction and encouragement of others, and in vindication of themselves, against the calumnies of the world, and to obviate their mistakes concerning them, as in Ch. i. 5. She says, I am black but comely: but her chief province and design in this song, appears to be to set forth his praises, and not her own; and indeed, the majesty, and agreeableness of the stile with Christ's language in the new Testament, such as, I am the door, I am the good shepherd, I am the vine, I am the way, the truth and the life, &c. as well as the connection of the words with the following verse, as * one well observes, manifestly bespeak them to be the words of Christ; who may very well be called,

1st, The rose of Sharon. 1. Because of its red colour; which may be expressive of the truth of his humanity, and signify that he is really and truly man, having took part of the same flesh and blood, that his people are partakers of; as also of his bloody sufferings in the same nature, on the account of which, he is said to be red in his apparel. Likewise, both these together, the red rose and the white lily, make up that character which is given him, Ch. v. 10. that he is white and ruddy, a compleat beauty, like the charming lily and blushing rose, fairer than the children of men. 2. He may be compared to the rose for its sweet smell; and for the same reason he is compared in the former chapter to spikenard, myrrh, and camphire; his person, sacrifice, grace and righteousness, have a delightful odour in them; no rose smells so sweet, as Christ does to a believer, This Sharon rose refreshes them, quickens their spiritual senses, and ravishes and delights their souls. 3. The rose is of a <sup>1</sup> cooling nature, and therefore useful in burning fevers, inflammations, &c. Christ, by the effusion of his blood, by the oblation of himself, and by his dying in the room and stead of sinners, has appeased and removed his father's fierce and burning wrath from them; and it is only an application of this Sharon rose, the person, blood and righteousness of Christ, which can cool and comfort the conscience of a sinner set on fire, and terrified by the law of God; the discoveries of his love and grace can only remove those dreadful terrors, and fire of divine wrath, which is kindled by a fiery law, and cure those inflammations raised thereby. 4. He is called the rose of Sharon for the excellency of it; the roses which grew there, perhaps were the best of any. Sharon is the name of a fruitful plain or country where herds and flocks were kept, as appears from 1 Chron. xxvii. 29. Isa. xxxv. 2. and lxx. 10. This plain or country lay between mount Tabor and the lake of Tiberias, and thence from Cæsarea to Joppa. Pliny <sup>m</sup> says, that the rose does not delight in fat soils, rich clays, or well watered grounds, but thrives the best in poor lean ground; and that those are of the sweetest smell, which grow in dry places; for rudratum agrum amat, it loves rubbishy earth. Now such dry and rubbishy earth was that which was about Sharon; for we read of such a place as inhabited, 1 Chron. v. 16. A<sup>h</sup>s ix. 35. as the <sup>n</sup> Talmudic doctors assert; who also tell us, that those who built a brick house in Sharon, had no benefit of the law, mentioned in Deut. xx. 5. because the earth thereabout was not fit to make bricks of, nor would houses made of them continue long. Hence they also say, that the high priest, on the day of atonement, pray'd particularly for the Sharonites, that their houses might not become their graves. Now these being the best and sweetest roses which grew in this soil, and Christ being compared to one of them, denotes the excellency and preferableness of Christ to all others.

<sup>o</sup> Some think that some other plant or flower is here intended; the Targum renders it the Narcissus or Daffodil; and the Septuagint translate the words thus, I am the flower of the field, as do also the Vulgate Latin, and Pagnine; now Christ may be called so. 1. as being the chiefest and most excellent flower in the field ; there is no such flower in the heavenly paradise as he is ; among all the holy angels and glorified saints, there are none to be compared with him ; and in his garden here below, no such flower grows as this ; he is the flower, the choicest, the best, and the most excellent in the whole field or garden. 2. The flower of the field is liable to be plucked up or trodden under feet by beasts ; Christ was exposed to the rage and fury of his enemies, those strong bulls of Bashan, of which he complains, Psal. xxii. 13, 14. This sweet flower was laid hold on by wicked hands, and crop'd ; and still his precious person, blood and righteousness are slighted, contemned, and trodden under foot by Christless and unconverted sinners. 3. This may be expressive of the meanness of Christ, in the esteem of the world ; a field-flower is little regarded ; Christ is as a root out of a dry ground, and therefore they say, he hath no form nor comeliness, and when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him : Hence he is despised and rejected of men, they not knowing the real worth and value of this precious flower ; see Isa. liii. 2, 3. 4. The flower of the field is not of man's planting, nor is it raised by his care and industry : Christ was conceived in the womb of a virgin, and born of her without the help of man ; as the flower of the field, he had no father but his father in heaven, and no mother, but the virgin on earth ; and so was Melchizedek's antitype, without father as man, and without mother, as God. 5. The flower of the field is open to all ; whoever will may come to Christ for life and salvation ; there is liberty of access to all sorts of sinners, to come to him and partake of his sweetness and benefits ; he is not a flower in an enclosed garden, that cannot be come at, but stands in the open field ; every sinner that labours under a sense of sin, and is heavy laden with the weight and burden of it, may come to him, and not fear a rejection from him ; he is not a fountain sealed, but opened to the house of David, and inhabitants of Jerusalem, for sin and for uncleanness.

2dly, Christ may be very well compared to the lily of the vallies. 1. For its whiteness ; the lily, as has been already observed, is exceeding white, which may intend the purity and holiness of Christ, who both in nature and life, is holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners ; he is the lamb without blemish, and without spot, without the blemish of original, or spot of actual sin ; for he never knew it in his nature, nor did he ever commit it in his life, either in thought, word, or deed : Or else the whiteness of the lily may signify his eternity ; for so his head and his hairs are described by John, Rev. i. 14. to be white, like wool, as white as snow ; which represents him as the ancient of days, and as existing from everlasting to everlasting. 2. For its tallness ; the lily grows up very high, as has been taken notice of. Christ, as mediator, is the rock that is higher than we are ; from whence the waters of divine grace flow, to the refreshment of our souls, when overwhelmed : He is higher than the kings of the earth ; nay, he is higher than the heavens, and all the angels there ; for he is set far above all principality and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come, Eph. i. 21. 3. For its fruitfulness ; fulness; the lily is very fruitful, as has been before observed. Christ is filled with all the fruits of righteousness, and is possessor of all the blessings of grace; he is like a tree richly laden with fruit, and therefore is compared to an apple tree, in ver. 3. all the church's fruit and fruitfulness come from him; he is the green fir tree, from whom all her fruit is found. 4. He may be compared to the lily for its excellency and glory; it being the next flower to the rose, and which is preferred by Christ, to the glory of Solomon. Christ is the brightness of his father's glory, is now, in our nature, crowned with glory and honour, and will shortly appear in his own glory, and in the glory of his father, and of the holy angels. 5. He may be said to be the lily of the vallies, because of his wonderful humility and condescension, in assuming our nature, suffering in our stead, and in humbling himself unto the death of the cross for us; his whole life was one continued series of humility, as was his death an undeniable instance of it; Christ here on earth did not appear as the lofty cedar, but as the lowly lily, and that not of the mountains, but of the vallies; and it is with humble souls he delights to dwell; for though he is the high and lofty one, in his divine nature, yet he condescends to dwell with such who are of an humble and of a contrite spirit.

Ver. 2. As the lily among thorns, so is my love among the daughters.

THOUGH it may not be so evident whose are the former words, whether Christ's or the church's, yet these manifestly appear to be his; and if we take the preceding verse as the words of the church, then we may consider this as the words of Christ, either owning and confirming what she had said of herself in it; as that she was indeed the most beautiful of all the roses and lilies which grew in fields and vallies, and that all others were but like thorns and briers, when compared to her; and also, at the same time that he owns and commends her beauty, puts her in mind of her present state and condition, in this life, as being attended with afflictions, sorrows, and sufferings: Or else the words may be regarded as the answer of Christ to her complaint in the former verse, where she says, that she was indeed the blushing rose and charming lily, but then she was as the rose and lily in the open fields and vallies, liable to be pluck'd by every one that passed by, and to be devoured or trodden under feet by the beasts of the field; to this Christ replies here, by owning it all to be true, and promising that he will keep and preserve her safe in the midst of her enemies, as the lily among thorns; nay, that her very enemies should be her protection, these thorns should be as an hedge about her. But if we take the former verse to be the words of Christ, which seems most agreeable, then we are to consider these as his also; who having in the former verse set forth his own beauties and excellencies, which was proper to be done in the first place, does in this set forth his church's; in which may be observed,

I. What

* Vid. R. Aben Ezram and Brightman in loc.

- I. What he compares her to; a lily among thorns.
- II. The Title which he gives her, my love; which discovers his regard unto her, and affection for her.
- III. Her excellency and preferableness to all others in his esteem.

I. The church is here compared, by Christ, to a lily among thorns. The Targum renders it the rose, and so it is in <sup>b</sup> Zohar; and that this is intended, some strenuously contend for, which, and not the lily, they say, grows among thorns: Amfworth would have what we call the woodbind or boney suckle here meant, which grows in hedges; and indeed this is sometimes called lilium inter spinas, the lily among thorns <sup>c</sup>; to which the church may be compared, because of its sweet smell; the flower of it gives an exceeding sweet smell, and makes those fields, where it grows in abundance, very delightful: Believers in their persons, grace and conversation, are like the smell of a field which the Lord hath blessed; being clothed with the sweet smelling garments of Christ's righteousness, and anointed with the savoury ointments of the spirit's grace. Also the woodbind or boney suckle cannot bear up itself, but has its dependance on others; it does not grow up erect, but for its support wraps itself about the body, branches and twigs of other trees, convolvens se adminiculis quibuscunque, as Pliny <sup>d</sup> observes; therefore we call it woodbind, from its binding about other trees, and for the same reason it is in Greek called Perichlymenon, which is also used by Latin writers. Believers are weak, and cannot support themselves, and therefore, by faith, lean on Christ, who is their beloved; and are upheld by him, with the right hand of his righteousness; they cleave close unto him, and depend upon him for all grace here, and for glory hereafter. But the word will very well bear to be translated a lily, being the same that is so in the former verse; where it has been shown in what sense the church may be compared to one; and therefore I shall only observe, 1. That Christ and the church bear the same names; is he a lily? so is she; the church being married to Christ, and they two becoming one flesh, have one and the same name; hence the church is called Christ, 1 Cor. xii. 12. So the same name, Jehovah, our righteousness, which Christ is called by, Jer. xxiii. 6. is given to her in Cb. xxxiii. 16. Again, Christ is called Israel, Isa. xlix. 3. which is the name of his church and people; for being espoused together, and having partook of each other's natures, they also bear each other's names. 2. That there is a very great likeness and near resemblance between Christ and his church; for when he says, she is as the lily, he means, she is as himself, who is the lily of the vallies, ver. 1. and therefore, as one <sup>e</sup> well observes, he does not say she is the lily, but as or like the lily; for as he is, so are we, i. e. believers, in this world. Christ and the church are both lilies in God's eye, and are loved by him with the same love; believers bear the image of Christ, wear his righteousness, have the same spirit, though in measure, and are exposed to the same hatred, malice,

and persecution of the world, being wounded with those thorns, even as he was; and they shall be much more like him in another world; for they shall then be like him, and see him as he is; they shall then have everlasting and transforming views of him, which will change them into the same image, from glory to glory: For as they will then have more communion with him, so they'll have a greater conformity to him, who is the first-born among many brethren. 3. That all the church's beauty and loveliness come from Christ; it is because he is the lily that she looks like one; her beauty is not natural to her, but is derived from him, who is her head and husband; she is indeed a perfect beauty, but then it arises from that comeliness which he has put upon her.

Moreover, she is not only said to be as the lily, but as the lily among thorns: By thorns may be meant, 1. Wicked and ungodly men, sons of Belial, which are as thorns thrust away, because they cannot be taken with hands, 2 Sam. xxiii. 6. These, like thorns and briers, are the curse of the earth, are worthless and unfruitful in themselves, and hurtful and grieving to the saints: David, Isaiah, and others have complained of them: Righteous Lot was pricked with these thorns; his soul was vexed and grieved from day to day with their unlawful deeds; also like thorns their end is to be burned, and that by the fierceness and fury of God's wrath, who says, Isa. xxvii. 4. Who would set the briers and thorns against me in battle? I would go through them, I would burn them together; which he will do at the last day, when he'll bind up those thorns in bundles, and cast them into the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; where the people shall be as the burnings of lime: As thorns cut up, shall they be burnt in the fire; the terror of which sometimes surprises the sinners in Zion, who therefore say, who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings? Isa. xxxiii. 12—14. 2. By thorns may be meant the reproaches, revilings and persecutions of wicked men, whereby they afflict and disturb the saints. The Targum explains these thorns of the wicked edicts and decrees of princes, by which the congregation of Israel was oppressed in captivity. The prophet Ezekiel is encouraged by the Lord, faithfully to deliver his message to the people of Israel, though briers and thorns were with him, and though he had his dwelling among scorpions, i.e. though he was reproached, reviled and persecuted by them for it. Christ's lily in all ages has more or less been attended with, and has grown up among such thorns as these; for every one that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution of one kind or another; and yet they abide like the lily among thorns, in their faith, purity and holiness; so that neither the frowns nor flatteries of the world can prevail upon them to desert the Redeemer's interest, forsake the gospel, or turn aside from the true worship of God; to which agrees R. Sol. Jarchi's gloss on the text, which is this; As the lily among thorns, which prick it, yet stands continually in its beauty and redness, so is my love among the daughters, who entice her to follow after them, and go a whoring after other gods, but yet continues in her religion. 3. By thorns may be meant hereticks and heretical doctrines, which pierce, prick and grieve the children of God. Now these false teachers, these wolves in sheeps cloathing, may be known by their fruits, which are none at all that are good for any thing, for do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? There's no fruit of faith, sound doctrine, or a gospel conversation to be found upon them, but are like unfruitful thorns, whom God suffers to grow up in his churches, that those which are filled with the fruits of righteousness might be made manifest; and in all ages, more or less, Christ's lily, the church, has grown up among, and been pricked by, and pester'd with such thorns as these. 4. The corruptions of our nature may be called so: These Canaanites remaining in the land, dwelling in our hearts, are pricks in our eyes, and thorns in our sides; these grieve and disturb us, and they make us groan with the anguish our souls are filled with by them. Perhaps the breaking forth of some corruption is intended by the thorn in the flesh, and messenger of satan, that the apostle speaks of, 2 Cor. xii. 7. Though the temptations of satan may also be called by these names, which often give the saints a great deal of uneasiness, and throw them into much heaviness; and it may be that both the corruption of nature, and the temptations of satan, which the apostle might then labour under, are intended; and the thorn in the flesh may be expressive of the breaking out of some corruption; and the messenger of satan may intend his temptations by which it was stirred up and encouraged; though I rather think, that both phrases are only expressive of the corruption of nature, which was wont to be called by the Jews, The messenger of hell; a phrase much like this used by the apostle. So in Midrash Hanneelam we read that R. Hona, in his sermons, used to advise persons thus, O ye children of men, take care of the messenger of hell: But who is this? The evil imagination (by which the Jews always intend the vitiosity of nature) is the messenger of hell. Now this being a phrase that was well known, the apostle adds it by way of apposition to the thorn in the flesh, as explanative of it. Moreover worldly cares are compared to thorns which choke the word; they are pernicious to saints, and make them barren and unfruitful, as well as grieve and disturb them, Mat. xiii. 22. But though Christ's lilies here on earth grow up among, and are annoy'd by those thorns of sin and corruption, yet when they are transplanted into Christ's garden above, there shall be no more a pricking brier, nor a grieving thorn, to give them the least disturbance.

II. Whilst Christ is comparing his church to a lily among thorns, he gives her a loving and affectionate title, my love, which has been already explained in Cb. i. 9. and his mentioning it here, shows, that even in her present state and condition, she was a beauty in his eye; and that her being among thorns was so far from detracting from it, that it rather served as a foil to set it off the more; as also, that she was still the object of his love, though in the midst of wicked and ungodly men, men of unclean lips, and lives, haters of peace, religion and godliness; though she was reviled, reproached and persecuted by them, yet she was loved, valued and esteemed by him; nay, though she was attended with many infirmities, sins and corruptions, that were grieving to her, and dishonouring to him, yet neither these, nor any thing else, should ever

III. He sets forth her excellency and preferableness to all the daughters; by whom we are to understand the nations and men of the world; for it is usual in the Hebrew tongue, to call the inhabitants of countries the daughters thereof: Thus we read of the daughters of Tyre, Edom, Babylon, &c. none of which are to be compared with the church; these are like thorns to Christ's lily: or else carnal, hypocritical and formal professors may be intended, whom she calls in Cb. i. 6. Mothers children; who made an external profession of religion, but wanted that real and internal beauty which she was possess'd of, and differ'd only in name from the rest of the sons and daughters of fallen Adam; but she, being distinguished by divine grace from them all, was preferable to them, 1. In beauty. These look'd like thorns, she like a lily; they were black and uncomely, she the perfection of beauty, and the fairest among women. 2. In harmlessness. Though there are thorns about, yet none upon the lily. Ungodly persons are not only uncomely in themselves, but like thorns pricking and hurtful to others; but as for the saints, they are blameless and harmless, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, like lilies among thorns. 3. In fruitfulness. No fruit grows on thorns, but on Christ's lilies grow all sorts of precious fruit; they are laden with them. 4. In their last end. Christ's lilies will be gather'd by himself and his angels, and be put in his garden above; but the wicked, which are satan's tares and thorns, shall be bundled together, and cast into everlasting burnings; the one being highly valued and prized by Christ, the other hated and rejected by him; for as much as the lily exceeds the thorns which grow about it, so much does the church of Christ excel the men of the world, among whom it is here on earth; and as there is a difference now between them, though growing up together, so there will be one, and that far greater and more visible, when separated; the one will be everlastingly glorified, the other everlastingly punished.

Ver. 3. As the apple tree among the trees of the wood, so is my beloved among the sons. I sat down under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit was sweet to my taste.

CHRIST having commended the church in the former verse, and declared that she was as preferable to all others, as the lily was to the thorns; she in this verse returns the commendation to him, and asserts that he as much excelled all the sons, as the fruitful apple tree did the wild and barren trees of the wood; and at the same time gives an account of that sweet experience she had of his excellency, preciousness and usefulness to her. Now in the words may be observed,

- I. A comparison which she makes of him to an apple tree; in which she sets forth his excellency and preferableness to all others.
- II. She Instances in two particular things, in which, by good experience, she found him to be so to her own soul. First, The shadow of this apple tree was delightful to her; I sat down under his shadow with great delight. Secondly, The fruit thereof was exceeding sweet to her; his fruit was sweet to my taste.

I. She compares him to an apple tree, and that no doubt of the best sort. The Targum renders it a pome citron, or citron apple tree; which, 1. is a very large tree, and so may be fitly used to express the greatness and excellency of Christ, who is possessor of all divine perfections, and is over all, God blessed for ever. He is a saviour, and a great one, who has, as an instance of his great love, condescension and power, wrought out a great salvation for great sinners. He is an high priest, and he is a great one, both in the glory of his person, and in the virtue and efficacy of his sacrifice and intercession. He is the king of saints, and as such is higher than the kings of the earth: He is equal with God, therefore greater than angels, and more excellent than all the sons of men. 2. It is a very fruitful tree; it is sometimes so full of fruit, that it is <sup>b</sup> even press'd down with the weight thereof, and is as Pliny <sup>c</sup> says, Omniibus horis pomifera, always bearing fruit: It has, at one and the same time, flowers, ripe and unripe fruit; whilst some are putting forth, others are dropping off: so Christ abounds with the fruits of divine grace; he's not the barren fig tree, but the green fir tree, from whom our fruit is found, and that at all times; for he is that tree of life which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month: And the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations, Rev. xxii. 2. Here may believers come, at all times, and pluck and eat; for here's not any deficiency of fruit, 'tis always growing, always plucking, and yet never lessen'd. 3. <sup>d</sup> The fruit of this tree is of a bitter taste, but of an exceeding sweet smell, as are also the leaves, which being put among garments, not only give them a delightful odour, but also drive away noxious creatures from them; for the same reason is Christ compared to myrrh in Cb. i. 13. for though his sacrifice, death and sufferings, are sweet and savoury, both to his father and to his people, yet they were bitter unto him, who not only tasted of, but drunk up the whole cup of his father's wrath. And though the blessings which spring from hence are of a sweet smell, exceeding grateful and delightful to believers, yet are they enjoyed in this life with a variety of crosses, afflictions and tribulations. This passover lamb is eaten with bitter herbs. 4. It is an excellent <sup>e</sup> remedy against poison. Sin is that poison of asps which has infected all human nature, and spread itself over all the powers and faculties of the souls of men, as well as over all the members of their bodies: Now Christ he is the sovereign antidote against it; this fruit of the citron apple tree is the most proper remedy for it; his righteousness justifies, his blood cleanses, and his grace will eternally clear his his people from their sins. 5. It is very good <sup>f</sup> for shortness of breath, and to remove a stinking one; hence the Parthian nobles used to boil the kernels of it in their food for that purpose. 'Tis the presence of Christ, and communion with him, that only can cure our panting souls when we are wearied, and almost out of breath in seeking him. And 'tis the sweet incense of his mediation that perfumes our prayers, which are the breath of our souls, and which otherwise would be so far from being grateful to God, that it would be strange unto him. And thus may Christ be compar'd to a citron apple tree; though perhaps the common apple tree is here intended, which the Talmud <sup>g</sup> interprets of the Israelites, but R. Aben Ezra understands it of the Shechinah. As do the Targum and R. Sol. Jarchi of the holy and blessed God, and Lord of the world. As also does R. Chaiya in the book Zohar <sup>h</sup>, who says, that the congregation of Israel set forth the praises of the holy and blessed God by an apple, because of its colours, smell and taste; and also says, that as the apple is an healing to all, so is God. As the apple is found with many colours, so is he. As it has a finer smell than the rest of the trees, so is he, of whom it is written, and his smell as Lebanon; and as the taste of it is sweet, so is he, of whom it is written, and his mouth is most sweet. Christ, he is this Shechinah, the holy and blessed God, and Lord of the world, who may be compared to an apple tree. (1.) Because it is a very fruitful tree. There are various sorts of fruit which it bears; Christ is full of fruit; he is Joseph's antitype, who is called a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well, whose branches run over the wall. All the fruits of righteousness grow on him; every grace is in him; he is that tree of life which bear twelve manner of fruits; there are justifying and pardoning grace, sanctifying and adopting grace in him; all that a believer can want here, and all that can make him happy hereafter: And as fruitful boughs bend downwards, being laden with fruit, and may be easily reach'd, so Christ, being full of grace and truth, gives to sinners the utmost liberty of access to him, for grace from him; for though, as God, he is the high and lofty one, yet as man and mediator, he is meek and lowly, and condescends to take notice of, and admits into familiarity, poor, mean and abject creatures; he gives them a gracious allowance to approach near unto him, that apple tree, whose fruitful boughs of divine grace hang so low, that the hand of faith may easily reach them, where the poor sinner is heartily welcome to pluck and eat at pleasure. (2.) It is of a very beautiful aspect, when laden with fruit, and especially as growing among the trees of the forest. Some have thought, that the fruit of this tree is what was forbidden our first parents; which being so pleasant to the eyes, was a temptation to the woman to eat thereof, therefore is in Latin called malum, evil, because sin entred into the world hereby; though others think it was another sort of fruit. The Jewish writers differ much about it; some say it was the fig tree, so R. Sol. Jarchi, and some others, in R. Aben Ezra on Gen. iii. 6. which they gather from Adam and Eve's immediate sewing of fig leaves together, as soon as they had sinned, to cover themselves with.

Others, that it was the pome citron, or citron apple tree, so Baal Hatturim in Gen. i. 29. but the same author on Numb. v. 3. seems to intimate, as if it was the grape, the fruit of the vine; which is also the opinion of the Jews in Zobar<sup>1</sup>, who think that it is particularly the black grape; though others have thought it to be the apple, as the author of the old Nizzachon<sup>2</sup>, which was either his own, and the opinion of some other Jews, or else he took it from the common notion of christians. But whether it was the apple tree or no, which was so pleasant and desirable to the eyes of the woman, yet it is certain that this is very pleasant and delightful to the sight, when laden with fruit. Christ as mediator is a beautiful sight to believers, as he stands in all his endearing characters and relations; as he may be viewed undertaking their cause, assuming their nature, suffering, bleeding and dying in their stead, rising again for their justification, ascending into heaven, and entering there with their names and persons upon his heart, and there ever living to make intercession for them. Christ, as possessor of all the blessings of the everlasting covenant, being the surety, mediator and messenger of it, is exceeding delightful to the eye of faith; his glory is as the glory of the only begotten of the father, when he appears to souls full of grace and truth. (3.) The fruit which grows upon the apple tree, as it is of various sorts, and of a beautiful aspect to the eye, so it is of a cooling and comforting nature. Christ has cooled, turned away and appeased the fierceness of his father's fiery wrath, by his death and blood; and does, by his mighty grace, sweetly cool and refresh the heart of a poor sinner, inflamed by a fiery law, and commands serenity, and peace in its conscience, filled with wrath and terror; and when his people are ready to faint and sink, he comforts them with his apples, the sweet discoveries of his love and grace, of which the church having had some experience, and desiring some renewed instances thereof, says in v. 5. Comfort me with apples; where I shall more largely take notice of this, as well as of their pleasant and delightful smell. (4.) The apple tree has been accounted an hieroglyphic of love; under it lovers used to meet, with the fruit thereof they entertain'd each other, under its delightful shade they sat; to which, perhaps, an allusion is not only made in this verse, but also in Cb. viii. 5. I raised thee up under the apple tree. Christ and his church are throughout this song introduced as lovers, and the subject of their whole conversation is love: He who is the apple tree is the church's beloved, whom she loves and prefers before all others; 'tis his love her soul is ravished with; his fruit she feeds upon; his shade that she with so much content and pleasure sits under, where she is delighted with his love and grace; and sensibly feels her soul all enamoured with him. Some other things might have been taken notice of, particularly the fruit and shadow of this tree, which are both mentioned in the text; but these will be considered under another head.

Now Christ, whom the church here compares to an apple tree, is, by her preferred to all others; and she signifies, that as much as the apple tree excels the wild and unfruitful trees of the wood, so much does Christ excel all the sons: by whom may be meant either the angels, so the Targum, who are by creation creation the sons of God; but not in so high and eminent a sense as Christ is; he has a more excellent name and nature than they; as God he is their lord and creator, and the object of their highest worship and adoration; and as mediator they are obliged unto him, being upheld and secured by his grace in that state wherein they are; and though, in his human nature, he was made a little lower than they, yet now in the very same nature he is exalted above them; for to which of the angels said he at any time, sit at my right-hand. Or else, by them may be meant the saints, who are the sons of God by adopting grace; Christ, the eternal son of God, has the prebeminence in and over these; he is their creator and redeemer, their lord and king, their head and husband, their everlasting father, and glorious mediator, to whom they are infinitely obliged for all the needful supplies of grace here, and for all the glory they expect hereafter. Or else, by them may be meant the men of the world, the sons of Adam; and these Christ infinitely excels, as much as the apple tree does the trees of the wood; for he is fairer than the children of men; there's none like him in all the armies of beaven, nor any to be compared with him among all the inhabitants of the earth; if both worlds were to be searched with the utmost scrutiny, not one single individual person could be found comparable to him: and perhaps, particularly by these may be meant the great princes and monarchs of the world, who are sometimes in scripture compared to large and lofty trees; see Ezek. xxxi. 3, 5, 6, 8. Dan. iv. 20, 21, 22. But Christ is far preferable to these in beauty, glory and majesty; he is higher than the kings of the earth; they receive their crowns and kingdoms from him; they are at his command, and under his dominion; he sets them up and puts them down at pleasure; these must all submit to his awful judgment, even as the poorest peasant; and will be equally as fearful of the great day of his wrath, which when come, they'll call to the rocks and mountains to fall on them, and hide them from the face of this omnipotent judge. Moreover, with respect to the saints, the fruits of Christ's grace are to them far preferable to the kingdoms, crowns and scepters of the greatest monarchs; nay, reproach for Christ's sake, is more highly esteem'd of by them, and accounted greater riches than all the treasures of this world. Though it seems as well to be understood in general of all wicked, Christless, and unconverted sinners, who are like to the trees of the wood, wild, barren and unfruitful; and what fruit they do bring forth, is sour, wild, and unprofitable; and though like the trees of the wood they may run up a great height, yet they shall be cut down and thrown into everlasting burnings; for the ax is laid to the root of the trees: Therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down and cast into the fire, Mat. iii. 10. Thus the church, by this comparison, sets forth the excellency and preferableness of Christ to all others. But,

II. She instances in two excellent properties of this apple tree, of which she had had some comfortable experience. First, The shade of it was delightful to her; I sat down under his shadow with great delight. Secondly, The fruit of it was sweet unto her; his fruit was sweet to my taste.

First,

First, The shade of this apple tree was very delightful to her; I sat down under his shadow with great delight: in which may be enquired, 1st, What is meant by the shadow under which she sat. 2dly, What her sitting there intends or supposes. 3dly, What she desired to sit there for. 4thly, From whence that pleasure and delight arose, which she was filled with.

1st, It will be proper to enquire what is meant by the shadow of Christ, under which she sat: some have thought that the ceremonial law is here intended, which was a shadow of good things to come, of which Christ was the sum and substance; under this shadow the Old Testament saints sat, during the legal dispensation, where their souls were much delighted and sweetly refreshed, by viewing Christ, represented in the types and sacrifices of that law. The Targum understands it of the shadow of God's Shechinah or divine majesty, under which the congregation of Israel desired to sit, when God gave the law on mount Sinai; but that dispensation was not so desirable; the law which was then given, was a fiery one; and the words which were then spoke, were such, that they that heard them, entreated that they should not be spoken to them any more: therefore it may be better understood of the gospel and the ordinances of it, than either of the moral or ceremonial law; under this refreshing shadow saints delight to sit; here they enjoy sweet communion and fellowship with Christ; the sound of the gospel is joyful to them; the truths and doctrines of it are nourishing; the ordinances of it are comfortable and delightful; these tabernacles are amiable and lovely, and all wisdom's ways are ways of pleasantness; and therefore, 'tis no wonder that souls desire to sit under this shadow, and when they do, it is with delight.

Moreover, some <sup>m</sup> think, that an allusion is here made to the nuptial ceremony of spreading the skirt, used by the Jews at the time of marriage; of which, see Ruth iii. 9. and to which an allusion is made in Ezek. xvi. 8. or to that veil, which being born up with four rods or staves, was carried over the heads of the new married couple, at the time that the bridegroom brought home the bride into his own house, where the whole solemnity was finished: This nuptial ceremony, perhaps, may give the best light to Luke i. 35. the Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the highest shall overshadow thee. So that this phrase of sitting under Christ's shadow, may be expressive of the church's being married to Christ, and of that delightful communion which she enjoys with him as her husband, when brought home to his own house; of which we have an account in the next verse, where she is entertained after a noble manner, and has as much of his love manifested to her, as she is capable of bearing; nay, so much, that she is overcome with it. But I rather think that the metaphor is continued from the former part of the verse; and that the allusion is made to the shadow of an apple tree, such an one as Christ was; whose shadow arises from his person, blood and righteousness; which shadow is, 1. A protecting one from heat; such as Jonah's gourd was to him, or as the pillar of cloud was to the Israelites in the wilderness, or as a great rock to a weary traveller in a hot country. Christ and his righteousness ness are a shadow, which protect souls from the heat of his father's wrath; he, by making atonement for sin and satisfaction to divine justice, hath delivered his own people from the wrath to come, and will eternally screen them from it; for though showers of divine wrath will fall on Christless sinners, yet those that are under this shadow of Christ's righteousness, shall not have one drop of it fall on them; for being justified by his blood, they shall be saved from wrath through him; also 'tis this, laid hold on by faith, which steers from the curses of a fiery law, and from the heat of that wrath which it sometimes works in the conscience; which is only rightly removed by the sprinklings of that blood, which speaks peace and pardon, and by the application of that righteousness, which justifies from all sin, and produces a peace, which passeth all understanding: Likewise Christ is the shadow which protects and shelters from the fiery darts of satan; he is as a shadow from the heat, when the blast of the terrible ones, those fiends of hell, is as a storm against the wall; his blood and righteousness keep off satan's fiery darts, preserve from his suggestions, and protect from the violence of his temptations; and the soul is still more secured by the prevalent mediation and intercession of Christ in heaven; which is founded upon his blood and righteousness; so that what faith makes use of on earth to oppose to satan's temptations, Christ does in heaven to secure his people from his false charges and accusations: To this might also be added, that he is the shadow which protects from the heat of persecution, under which he causes his flock to rest at noon; when this sun smites them with the greatest violence, he is then their shade on their right-hand, so that the sun shall not smite them by day; and this is their comfort and support under all their fiery trials, that they have such a shadow to have recourse to. 2. It is also a refreshing one; for if it is a shadow from the heat of God's wrath, the terrors of the law, the temptations of satan, and the persecutions of the world, it must needs be so; what can be more refreshing to a weary traveller, that is almost scorched and ready to faint with heat, than a cooling and delightful shade? So refreshing is Christ to poor sinners, who is as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land; nay, is as a large spreading apple tree, that at once furnishes them with an agreeable shelter and suitable provisions. 3. It is a fructifying one; the shadows of some trees, as Pliny informs us, are very hurtful and noxious to some plants that grow under them, and others are very nourishing and fructifying; Christ's shadow is such an one, for they that dwell under his shadow, shall return: They shall revive as the corn, and grow as the vine; the scent thereof shall be as the wine of Lebanon, Hos. xiv. 7. and indeed all the fruitfulness of those who are the Lord's planting, comes from Christ; for unless they abide in and under him, they can bring forth no fruit.

2dly, It may also be enquired, what her sitting under this shadow is expressive of, or does suppose. And, 1. It shews the sense she had of herself, and present condition, and the need she stood in of Christ; as a shadow she was not only scorched with the sun of persecution, with afflictions, temptations, &c. but she was likewise sensible thereof, and therefore betook herself

to a proper shade. 2. It manifestly appears from her sitting under this shadow, that she look'd upon Christ to be a suitable one for her in such cases; and that as the idolaters in Hos. iv. 13. sacrificed on mountains, and burnt incense under oaks, poplars, and elms, because the shadow thereof was good; so the church here sat under this shadow of Christ's, because she look'd upon it to be a good one, and preferable to all others. 3. It is expressive of her faith and confidence in Christ: The vain confidence of the Israelites in an arm of flesh, is called their trust in the shadow of Egypt, Isa. xxx. 2, 3. and the holy confidence and faith of God's children in him, is frequently called a trusting in the shadow of his wings; see Psal. xxxvi. 7. and lviii. 1. which seems to be the same with sitting under it here; the church did not sit idle under Christ, but her faith was in exercise upon him, and she was rejoicing alone in him, having no confidence in the flesh. 4. It seems to intimate that security, peace, quietness and satisfaction of soul, she enjoyed; here she sat as under her own vine and fig tree, and none to make her afraid; where being safe and secure from all her enemies, she solaced herself under this delightful shade, enjoying much peace of conscience and satisfaction of mind; for she did not sit here with any manner of uneasiness, but with the utmost delight and pleasure. 5. It denotes her continuance here; faith takes up its dwelling in Christ, it won't move from hence, and is desirous of always enjoying sensible communion with him; be that dwelleth in the secret of the most high, shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty, Psal. xci. 1. But,

3dly, What was it she desired to sit here for? for thus may the words be render'd, I desired and I sat down, i. e. I desired to sit down, and I did sit down; I had what I wished for; and what was that? No doubt protection from heat, rest and refreshment for her weary and fainting soul; that she might be comforted with those apples which grew on this tree, and be revived by tasting of, and feeding upon the sweet fruit thereof, as well as be comforted with its delightful shade.

4thly, She sat here with delight; and indeed it could not be otherways; when its shade was so agreeable, and the fruit so sweet: this pleasure and delight of her's arose from the enjoyment of Christ's presence, in whose presence is fulness of joy, and at whose right-hand are pleasures for evermore; from the discoveries of his love to her soul, which is better than life, and all the comforts of it; and were had in the exercise of faith upon him, in the actings of which grace, the soul is filled with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

Secondly, The fruit of this apple tree was sweet unto her taste: by his fruit, are either meant, the fruit of his doings, what his hands have wrought out, and his blood has procured for sinners, even all the blessings of grace, such as peace and reconciliation, justification, sanctification, pardon of sin, adoption, nearness of access to God, &c. Or else, the fruit of his lips; such as his word and gospel, preached by himself, which is sweet to a believer's taste, and is preferred to his necessary food; his promises, which are exceeding great and precious, and are highly valued by believers, for his mouth is most sweet, from whence they proceed; and his ordinances and commands, in which they enjoy sweet communion with him, and have the discoveries of his love to their souls; and therefore are more to be desired than gold, yea, than much fine gold; sweeter also than the honey or the honey comb.

These are called his fruits: they are his in a covenant way; all the blessings of grace, which ~~make up~~ the everlasting covenant, are in Christ's hands, and at his dispose, being placed there for that purpose, by God the father; and they are also his, being procured by him; for though they are all the gifts of free grace, yet are they all obtained by Christ, and come to us through his blood: Likewise they may be said to be his, because in his possession; every grace in its fulness is in him, he's full of grace and truth, and is communicated to us from him, for from him all our fruit is found: Remission of sin, justifying righteousness, adopting grace, &c. come to us through and by him; and we are indulged with the gospel-promises and ordinances, as instances of his grace to us.

Now these are all sweet to the taste of a believer, though not to a natural man, who hath a vitiated taste, and calls evil good, and good evil; puts bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter; he savours the things of the flesh; sin is his food, from whence he receives an imaginary pleasure; and therefore disrelishes all spiritual things, looks upon them as poor and insipid, and finds no more taste in them than in the white of an egg; which arises from the predominancy of sin, that hinders from tasting any sweetness in divine things, and will do so whilst their taste remain in them, and their scant is not changed. But as for a spiritual man, he savours the things of the spirit, and disrelishes others; sin is render'd odious, bitter, and unpleasant to him; it is, in some measure, expelled, so that he can taste that the Lord is gracious; and therefore every thing he says or does is sweet unto him; for as his taste can discern perverse things, so it can relish spiritual ones; such as the fruit before mentioned is, which grows upon and drops from the apple tree, Christ Jesus: This delightful shade and excellent fruit, which believers find in Christ, render him very acceptable to them, and preferable to all others. Now when souls at any time have some experience of Christ's love and grace, in such a way and manner, it is very proper to speak of it, for the glory of Christ, and the encouragement of other souls, as the church does here; which she also continues to do in the following verse, where she meets with a larger display of it.

Ver. 4. He brought me to the banqueting house, and his banner over me was love.

THE church here goes on to give an account of some larger experiences of Christ's love, which she had met with from him; for she is not only indulged with his shadow, and refreshed with his fruit, as in the former verse, but is also brought into his banqueting house, where she is entertained by him, of which she gives an account in this; where may be observed,

I. What is meant by the banqueting house.

II. What by being brought into it.

III. The manner in which she was brought; his banner over which was love.

I. I shall enquire what is meant by the banqueting house, into which the church was brought; it is in the Hebrew text a house of wine: by which may be meant, either the wine-cellar, * the place where wine is kept under ground; or else the place where wine is poured out, and where it is drank, according to R. Aben Ezra; and so may very well be rendered a banqueting house. Thus we read of a banquet of wine, which Esther invited king Abasuerus and Haman to; and wine being much used at feasts, may be put synecdochically, for all the other accommodations thereof: by which we may understand either,

1st, The covenant of grace; this is built for a banqueting house for souls; it is a superstructure of grace and mercy, whose foundation is the person of Christ; it is well stor'd with all needful provisions for a noble entertainment; it is ordered in all things, and sure; 'tis full of Christ, his love and grace; 'tis well stor'd with spiritual blessings, and precious promises, which will serve as an everlasting banquet, for those who are interested in it. Or else,

2<sup>dly</sup>, The sacred scripture, which is a true banqueting house; here's a variety of food, and plenty of it; here's milk for babes, and meat for strong men; which is exceeding pleasant and delicious, sweeter to the taste than the honey or the honey-comb; revives and refreshes those who participate thereof, and is also exceeding wholesome to the souls of men: Tho' there are vast numbers daily feasted here, yet there is no want; it abounds with the bread of gospel truths, with the wine of gospel promises, and is full of Christ, the bread of life; he is the Alpha and Omega of the scriptures, the sum and substance of them, on whom faith lives, and by whom, from time to time, it is sweetly refreshed. Or else,

3<sup>dly</sup>, The church is this banqueting house: The Targum refers it to the house of the school, where the Israelites learnt the law at mount Sinai, from the mouth of Moses. R. Albeck understands by it Sinai itself, and so it is interpreted in Talkut. R. Sol. Jarchi thinks the tabernacle of the congregation is intended, where the senses and explanations of the law were given; but it may much better be understood of the church of Christ, which is a house built by wisdom, and furnished with all the necessary provisions of grace; here's a feast of fat things prepared, of wines on the lees well refined. Christ is the master and provider of the feast, and he himself is the chief entertainment, his  flesh is meat indeed, and his  blood is drink indeed; to all which he gives his people a hearty welcome, meets them himself, at this well furnished table, and feasts with them, gives them spiritual appetites, and blesses all the provisions of his grace to them: hence those are the blessed persons who have admittance into, and a dwelling place in this house, for these shall be continually satisfied with the goodness and fatness thereof; hence it is that souls are so desirous of being here, and are so well pleased with their habitation, because 'tis a banqueting house unto them; and no wonder then is it, that those who are planted in the house of the Lord, flourish in the courts of our God.

II. What it is to be brought into this banqueting house; which may be considered according to the several senses before given. And,

1st, Seeing by the banqueting house may be meant the covenant of grace, it may be proper to enquire, What it is to be brought into that, and by what means? And now here observe, that water baptism, and a submission to it, under the New Testament, give a person no right unto, nor interest him in the covenant of grace; even as circumcision did not, nor could, under the Old; instances of both might be given of Persons, where there is no reason to believe, they have any share or lot in this matter: neither does church fellowship bring a person into it, nor a meer submission to any, or all the ordinances of the gospel, For they are not all Israel which are of Israel; nor are they all instances of covenant-grace, which are church members; for there are tares as well as wheat grow in Christ's field below; and goats as well as sheep are folded in his fold on earth, the church; there are foolish as well as wise virgins, and there are sinners in Zion, as well as the living in Jerusalem. Neither are faith and repentance terms and conditions of a man's entering into this covenant; for they are some of the blessings of grace contained in it; they don't bring a person into it, but are evidences of his being there before; but what brings a person into it is an act of sovereign and unchangeable grace before all time. All, interested in the everlasting covenant, before the world began, did by electing grace, pass under the rod of him that telleth them; for when God made a covenant of grace with his Son, on the account of these chosen ones, he brought them all into the bond of it, and put all grace and blessings into the hands of his Son for them. Now the Spirit of God, in time, does, in conversion, take and apply this covenant-grace to those persons, for the quickning, pardoning, justifying and sanctifying them; he shews them the covenant; and their interest in it, and enables them to lay hold upon it; and every time he does do so, he may be said to bring a soul into the covenant, as an effect and fruit of that original, ancient act, made before the world began; which is what the church might experience here, viz. a fresh manifestation of her covenant-interest; for the secret of the Lord is with them that fear him, and he will shew them his covenant. Christ led her into his banqueting house, and there feasted her with his royal dainties.

2<sup>dly</sup>, If we understand the scripture by the banqueting house; then to be brought into it, is, to have the understanding opened so as to behold wondrous things out of it; the heart affected with the glorious truths thereof, so as to taste the sweetness of the sincere milk of the word, and distinguish the doctrines of the gospel from those which are not so, and be capable of appropriating the promises of it to the comfort and satisfaction of our souls; and when we are enabled thus to do, we shall find the scripture to be a delightful banqueting house indeed. Now all this Christ does by his Spirit, who is the Spirit of truth, who guides and leads his people into all truth. But,

3dly, If by the banqueting house we understand the church of Christ; then to be brought into it, is to be made a partaker of all the privileges of it, as those who are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens of the saints, and of the household of God. Christ first calls men by his grace, then by his ministers invites them to come in, that his house may be filled, and by his spirit powerfully works upon their souls, sweetly inclining them not only to give up themselves to him, but likewise to one another by the will of God; he, as an instance of his distinguishing grace, takes one of a city, and two of a family, and brings them to Zion, where he invests them with all the privileges and immunities thereof; here he grants them his gracious presence, sheds abroad his love in their hearts, and often entertains them with a delightful banquet. Now Christ's thus bringing his church into his banqueting house, shews, 1. Inability on her part; we can't bring ourselves into the covenant of grace, nor can we take views of our interest in it at pleasure; but he who of his own grace plac'd us there, must shew us it; nor can we of ourselves know the depths and mysteries of the sacred writings; they will remain a sealed book to us, unless the spirit of Christ open the book, and our understandings to look into it; nor will his church, with all the ordinances of it, be a banqueting house unto us, unless he himself be present with us. 2. Wonderful grace and condescension on his side; that he, who is the king of kings, and lord of lords, should take one thus mean into his own apartments, and there entertain her with the best his house could afford. But this will still appear more manifestly, if we consider,

III. The manner in which she was brought; his banner over me was love. It was in a very stately and majestic manner, as well as loving one, that she was brought; and for the illustration of this, it will be proper to consider the use of banners, and how they may be applied here. And,

1st, The use of banners, standards or ensigns, is to gather persons together; thus Christ himself was lift up on the cross, and is now in the gospel as an ensign to gather souls unto him; and so his love being display'd in the preaching of the gospel, has a power and efficacy in it to draw souls after him; for, as a fruit and effect of everlasting love, with loving kindness he draws them; and in the same way and manner Christ here drew the church unto himself.

2dly, A banner display'd, or a standard set up, is an indication of war; it is to prepare for it, and to animate to it. See Jer. li. 12, 27. This may serve to inform us, that the church of Christ here on earth is militant, and therefore in Chap. vi. 4. is represented as formidable and terrible as an army with banners: She has many enemies to engage with, as sin, satan and the world, and yet has the greatest encouragement to fight, for she is banner'd under the Lord of hosts; Christ is commander in chief, he is given to be a leader and commander of the people, and is every way fit for it; he has courage enough to appear at the head of his armies, and conduct enough to lead them on and bring them off at pleasure. Those that are under him are well provided for, their bread is given them in due season, and their water is sure; they are furnished with the panoply, or whole armour of God; they may be assured of a crown and kingdom as soon as the battle's over, and even even of victory before hand, for they are more than conquerors through him that hath loved them; likewise the motto, which is written upon the banner, under which they are, is love; and if all this will not encourage them to fight, what will?

3dly, A banner display'd is also a sign of victory; sometimes when a town, city or castle is taken, the flag is hung out as an indication of it. See Jer. l. 2. Christ has got the victory over all his and our enemies; he has conquered sin, Satan and the world, and given his church and people a share in all his conquests, and as an evidence of it, has set up his banner over them. Or this may principally intend the conquest, which he, by love, had got over her heart; she surrenders herself into the victor's hands; and now as an instance of his mighty grace, he introduces her into his own house, under the banner of love, by which she was conquered.

4thly, A banner is for protection and defence; hence Moses built an altar, and called it Jehovah nissi, i. e. the Lord is my banner; because the Lord had been on the side of him, and the people of Israel, and defended them from the Amalekites. The church was now enjoying sweet communion with Christ, in his banqueting house; and that she might be safe and secure from her enemies, and abide there during his pleasure, without any molestation or disturbance, he sets up his banner over her; thus when the enemy comes in like a flood, to disturb our peace, joy and comfort, the spirit of the Lord lifts up a standard against him, Isa. lix. 19.

5thly, It is to direct soldiers where to stand, when to march, and whom to follow. See Numb. i. 52. and ii. 2. which may teach us who are enlisted in Christ's service, not to fly from our colours, but adhere closely to Christ and his gospel, his cause and interest, his church and people, and to follow him, the standard-bearer, where-ever he goes; and nothing can more strongly engage us to do so than love, which is the motto of his banner; this first drew us to him, this animates us in his service, and keeps us close to his person and interest.

6thly, It is to distinguish one band from another. See Numb. ii. 2. As one band has one motto upon its banner or ensign, by which it is distinguished from another, so the motto on Christ's banner is love, by which his band or company is distinguished from all others; 'tis this which has made them to differ from others, has distinguished them in electing, redeeming and calling grace, and will keep them a distinct and peculiar people to all eternity; it is not any works which they have done; but Christ's boundless love and grace alone, that make the difference between them and others.

Ver. 5. Stay me with flagons, comfort me with apples, for I am sick of love.

THE church being brought into Christ's banqueting house, or house of wine, and having there such large discoveries of his love, she falls into a deliquium or fainting fit, not being able to bear up under the present enjoyment; and therefore calls to her friends and acquaintance that were about her, to give her their assistance in her present circumstances. In these words may be considered,

- I. The church's case and condition in which she was ; sick of love.
- II. What relief she asks for. 1st, To be stayed with flagons. 2dly, To be comforted with apples.
- III. Who the persons are to whom she makes application.

I. We have in these words, the present case and condition in which the church was ; she was sick of love. This was a sickness of the soul, and not of the body, though the one has oftentimes an influence upon the other ; for as there are various bodily sicknesses and diseases, so there are various spiritual ones. 1. There is the sickness of sin, which if mighty grace prevent not, is a sickness unto death ; it is in its own nature mortal, and can only be cured by Christ, the great physician, who heals diseases by forgiving iniquity. This is what is natural and hereditary to us ; we bring it into the world with us ; for we are all shapen in iniquity, and in sin did our mothers conceive us : It is an epidemical distemper, which has infected all human nature ; all are diseased with it, though all are not sensible of it ; and it has overspread all the powers and faculties of the souls of men, as well as all the members of the body, so that there is no part nor place exempted from it ; for the whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint. But this is not the sickness intended here. 2. There is a sickness which souls are incident to, that arises from a sense of sin, want of the fresh manifestations of pardoning grace, absence of Christ Jesus, and a longing after the enjoyment of his person, and the discoveries of his love ; which though it is not a sickness unto death, yet is very painful and afflicting, and can only be cured by the enjoyment of the object loved : This discovers itself by a violent panting after Christ ; a carefulness and activity, in the use of means, to enjoy his presence and company ; a resolution to go through all difficulties for the sake of him, and an uneasiness until it receives some instances of favour from him ; with such souls, Christ is the subject of all their discourse, they love to hear his name mentioned, especially with commendation ; their thoughts are continually upon him, and their minds are not easy till they enjoy him. This is the sickness which the church was attended with in Chap. v. 8. where see more of it. 3. There is a sickness which springs from views of Christ's Person, discoveries of his love, and manifestations of his grace ; which sometimes overpower the soul, and throw it into the utmost amazement, at the consideration of the greatness of Christ's person and grace, and its unworthiness to be interested in it ; so that it becomes like the queen of Sheba, who when she saw the riches, glory and wisdom of Solomon, it is said of her, that there was no more spirit in her. And this I take to be the case of the church here ; it did not arise from the want of Christ's presence, or discoveries of his love, but from the enjoyment of them both : He had introduced her in a most stately manner into his banqueting house, and gave her a noble entertainment ; yea, he plentifully shed abroad his love in her heart, which occasioned her to speak after this manner, manner; his person appeared so glorious and lovely, the entertainment was so large and sumptuous, the motto of love upon the banner, so bright and glittering, and what she felt in her own soul so powerful and inconceivable, that she was quite overcome therewith; or, as the Septuagint<sup>a</sup> renders it, she was wounded with love: Not that this arises from the nature of love itself, which is not painful and grievous, but is owing to our weakness and imperfection, who cannot bear large views, nor support up, under the mighty power of boundless love. We are but poor narrow earthen vessels, that can receive and retain but little of it. This was that pressure under which she now labour'd, and for which she seeks relief; which brings me,

II. To consider what it is she calls for to relieve her at this time. 1st, She desires to be stay'd with flagons. 2. To be comforted with apples.

1st, Her request is, that some person or other would stay her with flagons. The word translated flagons is differently rendered by interpreters; some render it flowers, as Jerom and the Vulgate Latin; and so she may be considered as having reference to sweet flowers bound up in nosegays, the odour of which is very refreshing and reviving: Stay me, revive or support me with these; perhaps chiefly regarding Christ, who is the only strength and support of believers, who only can keep them both from falling and fainting; for having heard him speak of himself under the names of those delightful flowers, the rose and lily, in ver. 1. she is desirous that she might be stay'd by and supported with them. The Septuagint render the words thus, <sup>b</sup> Strengthen me with ointments; by which may be meant the graces of Christ, which are called so in Chap. i. 3. Ointments were used at feasts, and are of a chearing, reviving and strengthening nature, and may very well express the grace of Christ, by which souls are cheared, revived, established, strengthened and settled. Our translators have rendered it flagons, and that very well; for according to the best of <sup>c</sup> Jewish writers, it signifies vessels in which either wine or fine flower are put; and perhaps may be comprehensive of all the entertainments of a banquet, which are proper to satisfy, delight and exhilarate; and wine being a principal one, may chiefly intend flagons of that. See 1 Chron. xvi. 3. Hof. iii. 1. Flagons are, by a metonymy, put for wine contained in them, as the cup is, Luke xxii. 20. for the church was desirous of those that were full and not empty, such as were full of the wine of Christ's love, which is as reviving, chearing and refreshing as the best wine. In what sense Christ's love may be compared to wine, and is preferable to it, has been shewn on Chap. i. 2. and by flagons of it may be meant the doctrines of grace, in which Christ's love is display'd; or the ordinances of the gospel, by which it is communicated to the saints; and may also intimate, that though the love and grace of Christ are given forth in measure to them, yet that they are large measures, which believers are desirous of receiving; those who have most grace would have still more, and those who have the greatest sense of Christ's love would have a larger experience of it, and are not content without it; they are like the two daughters of the horseleach, crying, give, give. And it may be also, that the church may have in view the glories and joys of another world, where she should have her fill of love, drink freely and plentifully of this wine new with Christ in his father's kingdom, and continue in the uninterrupted enjoyment of his presence. Now it ought to be observed, that she is desirous of more of that which had brought her into this condition: Christ's love had wounded her, and that only could heal her; what had brought her into this sick and fainting condition could only bring her out of it; this wounds and heals, kills and makes alive, and is the only reviving cordial.

2dly, she desires that she might be comforted with apples; as in the former request, she had a regard to the banqueting-house, where she now was; so in this to the apple tree, whose delicious fruit she had lately tasted: Apples<sup>a</sup> are of a cooling and comforting nature, and are good against a syncope and palpitation of the heart, and the smell of them is very reviving.<sup>e</sup> Solinus tells us of a certain people who eat no food, but odore vivunt pomorum sylvestrium, live by the smell of apples that grow in woods; and that when they go long journies, carry them with them, ut olfactu alantur, that by the smell of them they may be nourished and sustained. By these apples may be meant, either the blessings of grace procured by the blood of Christ, which remove the fierceness of divine wrath, and being powerfully applied by the spirit of God, do abundantly comfort and refresh the soul; or else the doctrines of the gospel, which when fitly spoken, and fitly applied, are like apples of gold, in pictures of silver; how comfortable and reviving are the doctrines of justification, pardon, perseverance, &c. The church had found them so by good experience, and therefore desires them. The Targum; by flagons, understands the words of the law, and by apples, the interpretations of them, which, it says, are sweet to the taste as the apples of the garden of Eden; but it is much better to understand them as we have done, of the doctrines of the gospel, which have often been experienced to have relieved persons in a fainting condition, such as the church was now in; and who knowing the virtue and efficacy thereof, call for them. And,

III. The persons she makes application to, the word being in the plural number, are either the chorus of virgins or daughters of Jerusalem, her dear friends and acquaintance, to whom she often told her case, especially when in distress, and desired their assistance, who seem to be near to her, by that solemn adjuration given unto them, in ver. 7. or else, any other Christian friends that might be standing by her; for they that fear the Lord, speak often one to another, converse together, and comfort each other; or rather the ministers of the gospel, who by preaching the glorious doctrines of it, are instrumental in the hand of the spirit for comforting the distressed, and reviving the fainting souls of God's children; though, perhaps, she principally

Ver. 6. His left hand is under my head, and his right hand doth embrace me.

THESE are still the words of the church, declaring what experience she had of Christ's grace and presence; who immediately upon the notice she gave of her distress came to her assistance, and with both hands, supported her in her fainting fit, and brought her out of it: And it may be observed, that she called to others for relief, in the former verse; but it was Christ only that could help her: The flagons and apples of a gospel ministry and gospel ordinances will not be effectual to comfort and sustain the saints in such circumstances, unless Christ himself appears in them, and gives a blessing to them; which is what the church comfortably experienced here, and therefore speaks of it. And,

I. I shall consider what these words are expressive of.

II. In what manner they are deliver'd by her.

III. To whom they are directed, and for what reasons.

I. It may be proper to consider what Christ's left hand, being under her head, and his right hand being said to embrace her, are expressive of. And,

1st. They are expressive of Christ's tender love unto, care and regard for his church and people; he acts the part of a loving husband, who seeing his bride and spouse ready to sink and faint, hastens to her relief, embraces her in his arms, lays her in his bosom, and discovers the strongest and most endeared affection to her: Christ had a love for his church from all eternity; his heart was then ravished with her, and he took the utmost delight in her, viewing her in all the glory his father meant to bring her to; and therefore requested of his father, that she might be his spouse and bride, which was accordingly granted to him; who has ever since remained a faithful and loving husband, and has given her the fullest and most incontestable proofs of it; he has assumed her nature, died in her room and stead, paid all her debts, procured every needful blessing for her, has given her right unto, and will put her into the possession of all that he has; he has raised her from the dungbil, the depths of sin and misery, taken off her filthy garments, clothed her in rich attire, and royal apparel, and set her at his own right hand, in gold of Ophir.

This love of his remains the same as ever it was, and will do so for ever, notwithstanding all her failings and infirmities, her revoltings from him, and unkindness to him: for he is Jesus, the same yesterday, to day, and for ever. Tho' 'tis true, he does not always manifest his love to his people, but sometimes hides his face from them, and kindly chides them, for their good, and his own glory; But yet he cannot always withhold his love in the manifestations of it to their souls; for tho' he seems to treat them severely for a while, yet his heart is full of love, pity and concern; his bowels earn, and Joseph like, cannot refrain himself, but must make himself known unto his brethren. Christ now has various ways of shewing his love to his people, which he does the most suitably and seasonably; when tempted he succours them; when disconsolate he comforts them; and when afflicted, he sympathizes with them; when hungry, he feeds them; when naked, he clothes them; when sick, he, as the great physician, heals them; when weak, he supports and upholds them with the right hand of his righteousness; and when fainting he cheers and revives them; he giveth power to the faint, and to them who have no might he increases strength; and this he does by putting his left hand under their head, and by embracing them with his right hand; the doing of which is an amazing and surprizing instance of his grace.

2dly, These phrases are expressive of that near fellowship and communion the church has with Christ; which is variously expressed in scripture, as by supping, walking with him, and leaning on his bosom, and here by lying in his arms; which is an indication of very near and intimate communion indeed: To be admitted into Christ's banqueting house, and there sit with him at his table, or into his privy chambers, and there have converse and communion with him, argue great nearness to him, and intimacy with him; but to lie in his arms, and have a place in his bosom, what can be nearer? This is the effect of that near and indissoluble union souls have with Christ; and what, by divine grace, they are called to the enjoyment of, are frequently indulged with in their attendance on ordinances, and is that one thing they are desirous of, and uneasy without, but which, when obtained, gives them the greatest pleasure and highest satisfaction.

4thly, They are expressive of the safety and security of the church: They must needs be safe from all enemies, and secure from falling, who are encircled in the arms of almighty grace, sustained by Christ's left hand, and embraced by his right hand, for out of his hands none can pluck them; such are, and will be preserved in Christ Jesus, until they are safely brought to glory. The Targum and R. Sol. Jarchi expound these words of the divine care and protection which the Israelites enjoy'd in the wilderness; whereby they were not only provided with every thing that was useful and necessary, but also defended from every thing that was noxious and hurtful.

II. We may now consider the manner in which these words were delivered, and they may be considered, either, 1. As a prayer, and be read thus, O that his left hand was under my head, and that his right hand would embrace me; and so suppose her still in the same case, in which she was, in the former verse; and seem to intimate that she had a sense of her present state and condition, and a desire to be out of it; also that she was without Christ's presence and communion with him, though she had a value for it, and an earnest desire after it, and 'did firmly believe that the enjoyment of it would relieve her. Or, 2. They may be considered as spoken in the strength of faith, that it would be so; and then the words may be read thus, his left-hand will be under my head, and his right-hand will embrace me; and the sense of them is, as if she should say, 'Tis true, I am now in a very weak, feeble and fainting condition; yet I know I shall not totally sink, fall and perish, for he will hold me up and support me so that I shall not be moved; the words seem then to be spoke much in the same manner, and to argue the same strength of faith, as those spoke by the church, in Mic. vii. 7, 8. Or else, 3. As expressing her present experience that it was so; and then the words may be read as they are rendered by our translators, his left-hand is under my head, &c. which experience of her's she mentions with thankfulness, as she ought to do, to the glory of his love and grace, who had so kindly and graciously appeared for her in a time of distress; and this she does also in an exulting manner, and with a kind of boasting; for though we are not allowed to glory in ourselves, nor have any reason to boast of any thing which we have done, yet we may glory in Christ, and boast of what he is unto us, and has done for us.

III. The persons to whom she speaks, are either the ministers of the gospel, whose assistance she had desired, and having enjoy'd the comforting and supporting presence of Christ, in the ordinances, and under the ministry of the word, she lets them know of it, to encourage them in their work, and that they, with her, might bless the Lord for it: Or else, the daughters of Jerusalem, whom she adjures in the following verse; who are persons newly converted, to whom she directs her discourse, and gives them this account of her experience, that she might allure them to the ordinances, and encourage them to walk in the ways of Christ, as well as engage them to join with her in giving thanks to him for the reception of so great a mercy; which is very agreeable to David's practice, in Psal. xxxiv. 2, 3. My soul shall make her boast in the Lord: The humble shall bear thereof and be glad. O magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt his name together.

Ver. 7. I charge you, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, by the roes and by the binds of the field, that ye stir not up, nor awake my love, till he please.

THERE is some difficulty in these words concerning the person speaking, who it is, whether Christ or the church; interpreters are divided about it; and there are reasons, not to be despised, given on both sides.

Some think that they are the words of the church, charging the daughters of Jerusalem, to give no disturbance to Christ, her love, and cause him to depart from her, with whom she now was, enjoying sweet communion with him; which seems to be the sense of our translators; and this sense of the words bids fair, if we consider. 1. The persons to whom these words are spoken, the daughters of Jerusalem; who were the friends of the church, the virgins, her companions, who attended and waited upon her: Christ is represented in this song as having his friends with him; and the church, as having hers with her, and that in allusion to a nuptial entertainment; and therefore it seems most reasonable that she should speak to her friends, and not his. 2. In all other places, where these words are used, they seem to be the words of the church, and not of Christ; see Cb. iii. 5. and viii. 4. 3. The manner of the speech shews it, which is not by way of command, which is proper to Christ, but by way of adjuration, or giving a charge with an oath, which is usual with the church to these persons; for which, beside the places before mentioned, see Cb. v. 8. 4. If we also consider the matter, it suits well with the church's language; the character, my love, is very applicable to Christ, he being the person whom her soul loved; the charge that this love should not be stirred up, but at pleasure, agrees with Christ, who is endued with sovereignty, and ought to be at his own liberty to stay with, or remove from his people when he pleases. 5. It suits with the context and scope of the place: The church was now in Christ's arms, where she lay with a great deal of pleasure and satisfaction, and being willing to have communion with Christ continued, and not interrupted by these persons, she solemnly adjures them, after this manner; which carefulness and sollicitude of her's seems also to be the scope and design of those other places, Cb. iii. 5. and viii. 4.

But there are others who think that they are the words of Christ, and not without some reason; for, 1. It was the church, who having solace and ease in Christ's arms, was fallen asleep there, and not he in her's; and therefore, that she might have no disturbance, he charges the daughters of Jerusalem, by no means to awake her, till she herself thought meet. 2. The church in this song, when she gives Christ a character, which is expressive of her love, does not use this word אהבה Ahabab, love, which is of the feminine gender; but another דודי Dodi, my beloved, or well beloved, which is of the masculine; but Christ makes use of this same word in giving a loving title to his church, as in Cb. vii. 6. and therefore, they seem to be the words of Christ, speaking concerning and in behalf of his church. 3. Both the word אהבה Ahabab, love, and תהפץ Tehphatz, which is in construction with it, and is render'd, be please, are both of the feminine gender, and so best agree with her, and may be render'd, that ye stir not up nor awake my love till she please. 4. The following words seem to confirm this sense, the voice of my beloved! What voice was this she heard? why, the charge he gave to the daughters of Jerusalem, not to disturb her; which discovered so much love and goodness in him, and her heart was so much affected with it, that she breaks out into this pathetic exclamation, the voice of my beloved! And now though the former sense is not to be despised, yet I must confess, I chiefly incline to the latter;

latter ; and having thus considered whose words they are, I shall now consider the words themselves ; in which may be observed,

- I. The charge given ; not to stir up, nor awake the love, till he or she please.
- II. The persons to whom this charge is given ; the daughters of Jerusalem.
- III. The manner in which it is delivered ; I charge you by the roes and by the binds of the field.

I. Here's a solemn charge given not to stir up, nor awake the love, till he or she please ; which I have observed may be understood, either as the church's charge to these persons, not to disturb Christ, in whose company she now was ; or else, as Christ's charge to them, not to awake the church, who was now sleeping in his arms ; and both these senses being press'd with such reasons as have been before observed, I shall consider the words both ways : and then if we consider them as the church's charge, not to disturb Christ, her love, they will lead us to observe, 1. That Christ is the object of the church's love, and of all true believers ; there's none in heaven or on earth, that has so great a share in their love as he has ; they love him with all their hearts and souls, and above all things else whatever, and that so sincerely, and unfeignedly, that they can appeal with Peter, to the searcher of hearts, and say, Lord, thou knowest all things, thou knowest that I love thee ; which arises from the discoveries of Christ's love to them, and the views which they have of his loveliness, and is still more and more increased by having nearer communion and more intimacy and acquaintance with him. 2. That Christ sleeps and takes his rest among his church and people : This is manifest from her carefulness, not to have him stirred up and awake ; the Lord is sometimes said to sleep, and not to awake, when he does not arise to deliver his people from danger, or out of the hands of their enemies ; see Psal. xxxv. 22, 23. and xliv. 22, 23. and sometimes when he grants his presence to them and communion with them, as here ; the church is Christ's resting place, where he rests in his love towards his people, grants his presence to them, converses with them, and lies all night betwixt their breasts. 3. That Christ may be disturb'd and raised up from hence, by the sins of his people ; their vexatious contentions one with another ; their unfriendly and ungrateful carriage to him, often provoke him to remove from them ; they grieve his spirit, and cause him to hide his face, which is no ways for their honour or comfort. 4. That believers should be very careful that they do not provoke Christ to depart from them ; and therefore should watch against the very first motions of sin, and abstain from all appearance of it ; for sinful thoughts, as well as sinful actions, are an abomination to him, and lead on to the commission of them ; and it is the desire of believers, under the influences, and by the assistance of the spirit of grace, so to do ; which shows that communion with Christ is highly valued by them, and what they would not have by any means interrupted. 5. That communion which souls have with Christ, is entirely at his pleasure ; they cannot have it, when and as long as they please, but when and as long as he pleases ; for when he giveth quietness, who then can make trouble? So when he hideth his face, who then can behold him? as Elibu says, Job xxxiv. 29. the discoveries of Christ's love and grace to his people, the grants of his presence to them, and communion with them, as much depend upon his sovereign will and pleasure, as the first actings of his grace towards and upon sinners, do. He may withdraw from his people without any provocation, as he sometimes does; for he is a God that hideth his face from the house of Jacob; and is not obliged to give any reason for it, but his own sovereign will, though he always designs their good and his own glory by it; yet he is oftner caused to arise, and remove from them thro' their carnality, lukewarmness, ingratitude and unbelief.

But if we consider the words as the charge of Christ to the daughters of Jerusalem, not to disturb the church, then we may observe, 1. That the church is Christ's love; she is frequently called so by him in this song, as in Cb. i. 9. 15. and ii. 10. and in other places; She has the greatest share in his affections, as he has in her's, and has given the fullest proofs of his love to her; which put it beyond all dispute, that she is the object of it, and will always continue so, notwithstanding all her failings and infirmities. 2. That the church sleeps and takes her rest in Christ's arms. There's a sleepiness or drowsiness which attends God's children, that is a sinful one; when they fold their own arms together, and do not lie in Christ's; in this frame was the church, Cb. iii. 1. and v. 2. but this here is a rest which Christ gives, a sleep which he brings his into, when he puts under his everlasting arms, and embraces them in his bosom; for so he giveth his beloved sleep, Psal. cxxvii. 2. 3. That Christ values the company and conversation of his children; these are the excellent in the earth, in whom is all his delight; he loves to see their persons, and hear their voice; the actings of their grace upon him are exceeding delightful to him, and therefore would not have them be disturbed: Hence it can never be a work well pleasing to Christ, for any to sadden the hearts, lessen the joys, and weaken the faith of God's children. 4. That Christ would not have his church's peace disturbed; though it oftentimes is, by quarrelsome and contentious persons, who are always uneasy themselves, and endeavour to make others so; by carnal professors, whose lives and conversations are wounding and grieving to pious souls; by errors and heresies which springing up in churches, trouble some, and defile others; and often by inward corruptions, those domestic enemies, which are of all the worst and most afflicting; as well as by Satan, that unwearied enemy; who, tho' he cannot devour, yet will disturb; but whether this be done one way or another, it is no ways pleasing and grateful to Christ. 5. Though believers, when under the gracious influences of the blessed spirit, are desirous of communion with Christ, and if they might have it as long as they please, they would have it always, and say as the disciples did, Lord, it is good for us to be here; yet when they begin to be sleepy and drowsy, they grow careless and indifferent about it; which justly provokes Christ to deprive them of it. So much for the charge itself.

II. The persons to whom this charge is given, are the daughters of Jerusalem; by whom we are to understand young converts, as has been observed in

Cb. i. 5. Now these are very apt to disturb Christ, by their impatience; who like new born babes, are unwilling to wait till their food is prepared for them; till Christ's own time is come, when he will more fully reveal himself unto them, and give them larger discoveries of his love; and also by their frowardness, who when their food is prepared for them, grow fullen and will not eat it; and like Racbel of old, refuse to be comforted: Or else, through the weakness of their faith, and living upon their frames, which young converts are very apt to do; for no longer than they have the discoveries of Christ's love, and sensible communion with him, can they believe their interest in him; and therefore like froward and impatient children, or poor weaklings, give him a great deal of disturbance: and so taking them as the words of the church, she seems here to act the part of a mother; and charges these, her children, to be still and quiet, and give her loving husband no disturbance, whilst she enjoy'd his delightful company.

Moreover, these daughters of Jerusalem, or young converts, are very apt to give the church disturbance; and therefore Christ may be represented as charging them not to do it; this they sometimes do through weakness, not being able to bear the doctrines of the gospel; such, some of the Corinthians were, who were babes in Christ, and therefore the apostle fed them with milk, and not with meat; for they were not able to bear it; by reason of which, many contentions, divisions, and disturbances were raised in that church: As also, sometimes through ignorance of gospel-order, not being so well versed in, and acquainted with the rules, laws and ordinances of Christ's house; so that oftentimes, for want of knowledge in gospel-discipline, as well as in gospel-doctrine, they give disturbance to the church of Christ; all which, Christ knowing full well, gives them this solemn charge.

III. The manner in which this charge is given, which is very solemn and awful; it is with an oath, I adjure you, or I cause you to swear by the roes and by the hinds of the field, that ye give no disturbance to my love. The meaning is not as if either Christ or his church swore by those creatures; for swearing by heaven or earth, or by any creature in them, is condemned by Christ, Mat. v. 34, 35, 36, 37. an oath ought not to be taken in trifling cases, nor in any other name than in the name of God; which, perhaps, is the reason why the Targum thus paraphrases the words here; I adjure you, O ye congregation of Israel, by the Lord of hosts, or Tzebaoth, which same word is used for roes here, and by the strengths or fortresses of the land of Israel, &c. And either, 1. The words may be paraphrased thus, I charge you, who are among the roes and hinds of the fields, you daughters of Jerusalem, who are shepherdesses, and keep your flocks, where roes and hinds skip and play; I charge you that you give my love no disturbance: Or else, 2. Thus, I charge you, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, that ye remain or abide with the roes and hinds of the field, so Junius; mind your own business, keep your flocks, stand without, whilst I and my love enjoy each others delightful conversation, without any interruption or molestation from you. Or, 3. Those creatures, the roes and hinds, it may be, are called in as witnesses to this solemn charge, and to be produced against them, if ever they should break it, as to which, sometimes heaven and earth, animate and inanimate creatures, are called in scripture.

ture. See Deut. xxx. 19. Job. xxiv. 27. Or, 4. This adjuration or charge is made by all that's dear, the roes and hinds being pleasant and lovely creatures, as in Prov. v. 19. as if he or she should say, I charge you, O ye lovely daughters of Jerusalem, by the hinds and roes, which for beauty and loveliness are like to you, as R. Aben Ezra observes; if, O ye lovely ones, ye have any love for me, I beg, I earnestly entreat of you, that you will cause neither me nor my love any interruption. Or, 5. It may be considered as a severe threatening to those persons, if they should be unmindful of the charge given; and 'tis as if he should say, I swear, that if you stir up, or awake my love, that you shall be food as common to all, as the roes and hinds are; to which purpose is R. Sol. Jarchi's gloss: and these creatures being very swift ones, may note the suddenness and swiftness of those judgments which should come upon them, in case of disobedience. Or, 6. The sense may be this; that as ye would, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, be cautious how you start those timorous creatures, the roes and hinds; so would I have you be as cautious how you stir up and awake my love, which is as easily and as quickly done. Or, 7. And lastly, I charge you, for the sake of these roes and hinds, the Gentiles and nations of the world, that ye do not disturb the peace of my church, by fomenting and increasing divisions in it, and so cause my name to be dishonoured, my ways to be spoken evil of, and me to depart from you; but rather keep peace within, walk in wisdom towards them that are without; and by so doing, you will gratify me, and allure these Gentiles to your society and fellowship; who otherwise, like timorous roes and hinds, will be frighted and scared from it.

Ver. 8. The voice of my beloved! behold! he cometh leaping upon the mountains, skipping upon the bills.

THOUGH there was some difficulty in understanding the former words, whose they were, whether Christ's or the church's; yet 'tis certain that these are spoken by the church, who hearing Christ, her beloved, give such a solemn charge to the daughters of Jerusalem, not to awake her, is so affected with his love to her, and care of her, that she could not forbear breaking out into this pathetic exclamation upon it; and not only takes notice of this, but also of some other instances of his love and regard unto her: Or else, it may be supposed, that that sweet and comfortable communion which she had before enjoyed with Christ, mentioned in the preceding verses, had been for some time interrupted, he having withdrawn himself, and she being fallen into a spiritual drowsiness; but he returning again to her, and calling her out of this state, as in ver. 10. She awakes and takes notice of the several steps and procedures of his grace, and records several instances of his love unto her; two of which we have mentioned in these words.

I. He calls unto her, and she hears and knows his voice, and says, 'Tis the voice of my beloved.

II. He

II. He not only calls, but comes, and she spies him coming; the manner of which she describes to be leaping upon the mountains, skipping upon the hills.

I. The first thing she remarks, is his voice, with which she seems to be wonderfully affected; the voice of my beloved! some Jewish writers interpret this of the voice of the Messiah; by which may be meant, the gospel of Christ, by which he speaks both to saints and sinners; and which has a virtue and efficacy in it, to quicken dead sinners, and comfort living saints; for though 'tis powerful, yet alluring; though full of majesty, yet soft and charming, and makes delightful music in the ears of believers; concerning which may be observed.

1st, That the voice of Christ is known and distinguished by believers, from the voice of others; the church was capable of doing this, and therefore says, the voice of my beloved; she could know it to be his voice, and distinguish it from another's, even though but just raised out of her sleep; nay, she could do this, when she was, as it were, between sleeping and waking; when indulging herself in drowsiness and security, as in Cb. v. 2. and thus Christ says, John x. 4, 5. of all his sheep, that they not only heard his voice, but knew it; and therefore followed him and not strangers; for, says he, the voice of strangers they know not. Now if any should ask how Christ's voice can be known and distinguished from others; I answer, 1. By the majesty of it; by this we know the scriptures to be the word of God; there appearing such a shine of majesty in them, as does not in any other writings; and hereby we know the gospel to be the voice of Christ, and can distinguish it from that which is not so. Christ speaks in the gospel, as one having authority, and not as the scribes; there's a vast difference between the words, which man's wisdom teacheth, and those which the Holy Ghost teacheth; the one are low, mean, dead and lifeless; the other not only come with evidence, and the demonstration of the spirit and of power to believers; but even fasten convictions of the original and authority of them upon the minds of wicked men; see 1 Cor. xiv. 24, 25. 2. By the power and efficacy of it: The gospel, which is Christ's voice, comes not in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost; and so not only reaches the ear, but also the heart; it opens blind eyes, unstops deaf ears, quickens dead sinners, awakes sleepy, and comforts distressed saints, and is in fine, the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believes. 3. By the spiritual food and divine refreshment it affords to believers; who find Christ's word and eat it, and it becomes the joy and rejoicing of their hearts; that which is not Christ's word and gospel, is like the chaff to this wheat; and that which is opposite to those wholesome words of our Lord Jesus, instead of nourishing and refreshing, as these do, eat as doth a canker. 4. Believers know this voice of Christ, and can distinguish it from others, by its bringing them to him, and not sending them from him; that voice which sends me to my own righteousness, and not to Christ's, for acceptance with God and justification before him; which sends me to my tears of repentance, and not to Christ's blood, for pardon and cleansing, can never be the voice of Christ; that voice which bids me keep off from Christ, till I have prepared and qualified my self for him, by my own acts of humiliation and obedience, is contrary to that voice of Christ, which bids me come to him, as a poor, vile, filthy and perishing sinner, in myself, without him, and venture on him for life and salvation; and therefore that cannot be the voice of Christ. Thus may it be known from the voice of a stranger. 5. Believers have the spirit of Christ, who is the spirit of truth, whose work and office it is to guide them into all truth, and enable them to distinguish truth from error; and this he accordingly does, for he searches the deep things of God, and reveals them to the saints, and abides in them as a spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Christ. 6. They know it by the scriptures of truth, which they diligently search, and by which they examine every doctrine; and whatsoever sound or language is disagreeable thereunto, they reject, as not being the voice of Christ; to the law and to the testimony they appeal, and whosoever does not speak according to this word, they judge it is because there is no light in them, 1Ja. viii. 20.

2dly, It may be observed, that this voice of Christ, as it may be known and distinguished, by believers, from the voice of others, so it is exceeding pleasant and delightful to them. The church seems to speak of it, as being so to her; and no wonder it was, for it is, 1. A voice of love, grace and mercy to poor sinners; 'tis not like the law, a voice of terror, wrath and fury; no, it speaks peace and pardon to rebellious creatures, and publishes life and salvation to lost sinners. Christ came leaping and skipping like a roe or a young hart; or as it is said of Naphtali, like a hind let loose, who giveth goodly words; and no wonder then that his voice was so delightful. 2. It was also the voice of her beloved one, who dearly loved her, and had given incontestable proofs of it, and whom she loved with all her heart and soul; and therefore his voice, as well as his countenance and person, was sweet unto her; it was the voice of the bridegroom, and therefore need not be thought strange, that the bride, as well as her friends, should rejoice at it.

3dly, We may learn from hence, that Christ's voice may be heard before he is seen. The church first heard his voice, and then she saw him come leaping and skipping over the mountains and hills; and this indeed is one way by which souls are brought to a sight of Christ, viz. by the preaching of the gospel; nay, believers, even when they are without sights of Christ, and sensible communion with him; yet in hearing the word, can distinguish Christ's voice, and can set to their seals, that it is his, though, perhaps, they cannot immediately take in the comfort of it.

4thly, Believers would have others know Christ's voice as well as they. The church knew this to be the voice of Christ; but she is not content with the knowledge of it herself, and therefore speaks of it, for the information of the daughters of Jerusalem. But,

II. She not only heard his voice, but also spied him coming to her, though at some distance; and perhaps, as soon as ever she had heard his voice, or the

the noise of his feet, as R. Aben Ezra explains it, she lift up her eyes, or turned herself and saw him upon the march towards her. Here must be considered, 1st, What is meant by his coming. 2<sup>dly</sup>, The manner of it, leaping upon the mountains, and skipping upon the hills. 3<sup>dly</sup>, Why she prefixes an ecce, or a behold unto it; behold he cometh, &c.

1st. It will be proper to consider what is here meant by Christ's coming; which must be understood, either of his coming in the flesh, which the church had then a distant sight of, and is since accomplished. This coming of Christ from heaven, and out of his father's bosom, into this sinful world, was not by a change of place, but by assumption of nature, whose great end in it was, to save sinners, which is entirely answered. Now as this had been long promised, frequently prophesied of, and nothing was more earnestly expected, passionately wished and prayed for, so nothing was more delightful to the old Testament saints, than the near approach of it, or more welcome than when it was accomplished. Or else, by his coming here, may be meant, his spiritual coming; for though he withdraws and absents himself from his people, for a time, yet he will not leave them altogether, and always comfortless, but will come unto them: And the church's spying him as coming, supposes that he was at some distance from her, with respect to sensible communion or enjoyment of his presence, though not with respect, either to union or affection; for in this sense she is always near unto him: And also, that he was upon the return to her, whom faith spy'd, though at a distance, which is agreeable enough to the nature of it; this filled her soul with joy and pleasure; for even distant sights of Christ, are pleasant; though his nearer approaches give a greater satisfaction: His presence is always welcome to a believer, and there's a great deal of reason for it; for he always brings something along with him, never comes empty handed; yea, never visits without leaving something behind him.

2<sup>dly</sup>, The manner of his coming is expressed by leaping upon the mountains, skipping upon the hills; which, if understood of his coming in the flesh, shews, 1. That there were many difficulties in the way, and such that were comparable to hills and mountains. The greatness of his person was no inconsiderable one; nay, such an one, that it could never have been thought that it should have been got over, had not God himself declared it should be; and we have undeniable evidence, that it has been; for God to become man, the creator a creature, and the word to be made flesh, and dwell among us, is such an amazing stoop of deity, and surprising instance of divine condescension, that it is even the wonder of men and angels. Also the greatness of the work he was to do, when come, was no small difficulty; here were a broken law to fulfil, angry justice to satisfy, sin to atone for, the wrath of God to bear, many enemies to grapple with, and a cursed death to undergo; and all this for the vilest of miscreants, the worst of creatures, whose characters are sinners, ungodly persons, and such who were enemies to him in their minds by wicked works. Yet, 2, These difficulties which seem insuperable to us, were easily surmounted by him; he leap'd and skip'd over those mountains and hills, which all became a plain before our great Zerubbabel; what appear mountains to us, were mole-hills to him: Therefore he readily engaged, and voluntarily undertook before time, to assume human nature, which, in time he did with the utmost cheerfulness; and shewed his eager desires after it, long before his incarnation, in often appearing in human forms; and when he was actually become incarnate, how eager was he for the accomplishment of the work he came about? How easily did he break through all difficulties, discouragements, and impediments that lay in his way? and nothing could stop him till he could say the work was finished, which he undertook; and thus, with the utmost swiftness and celerity, he came leaping upon the mountains, and skipping upon the bills. If we understand it of his spiritual coming, it shews, 1. That there are impediments in the way of Christ's visiting his people; such as their unbelief, carnality and lukewarmness, their want of faith in him, and affection to him, their backslidings from him, and ingratitude towards him; yet all these mountains and hills he leaps and skips over, resolving that nothing shall separate him and them. 2. That Christ's coming to his people in a way of grace, is very conspicuous to them; the eye of faith spies him at a distance, as it were, upon the mountains: And also, that it is very glorious and beautiful; for if beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth glad tidings, much more beautiful must the feet of Christ, or Christ himself be, when he comes and grants his gracious presence to his people. 3. It denotes the speediness, swiftness and readiness of Christ to help his people; he makes haste and delays not, and therefore is said to leap and skip; his heart is set upon it; and nothing shall prevent him, though mountains and hills are between them.

3dly, She prefixes an ecce, a behold, to this coming of Christ unto her; which, if applied to his coming in the flesh, may be considered, either, 1. As a note of admiration; as in Isa. vii. 14. Behold a virgin shall conceive and bear a son: The incarnation of Christ, though it was confirmed to the church by promises, types and prophecies, yet was so strange and stupendous a thing, that nothing but faith could receive it, and that with the most profound admiration. 2. As a note of attention or asseveration; and so is used by her to stir up the daughters of Jerusalem to an observation of his near approach, and to encourage them in their faith and expectation of it, as well as that they might participate of her joy in the views thereof; see Zeck. ix. 9.

Again, if we understand it of Christ's spiritual coming; this is, (1.) Matter of admiration, and therefore may well have an ecce, a behold, prefixed to it; we have all, who know any thing of this, reason to say with Judas, not Iscariot, in John xiv. 22. Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifest thyself to us, and not unto the world? (2.) It is also worthy of observation: Christ's special grace and favour, in this regard, ought not to be carelessly overlook'd; but we should take notice of it with thankfulness, and wonder at it ourselves, and remark it to others, that they may join with us in magnifying the Lord on such an occasion, as the psalmist did, in Psal. xxxiv. 1, 2, 3. who, as the church here was so affected with the loving kindness of the Lord, in this instance of it, that he tells it to others for this purpose.

Ver. 9. My beloved is like a roe, or a young hart : Behold he standeth behind our wall, he looketh forth at the windows, shewing himself through the lattices.

THE church continues her discourse concerning Christ, and takes notice of the several steps he took in manifesting himself unto her.

I. She compares him to a roe or a young hart.

II. Declares the several gradual discoveries of himself unto her.

I. She compares him to a roe or a young hart; which seems to be occasioned by his swift and speedy approach unto her, mentioned in the former verse; for these are creatures remarkable for their swiftness; see 2 Sam. ii. 18. and may have reference to Christ's celerity in his coming in the flesh, who, as soon as ever the fulness of time was come, made no delay, but immediately clothed himself with human nature, in order to dispatch, with the utmost speed, the work which he had agreed to do; and with no less speed does he haste to the assistance of his people, when under trials, desertions, temptations and afflictions, and shews himself to be a very present help in trouble: Likewise his second coming to raise the dead, judge the world, reward his saints, and punish his enemies, will be equally as swift and sudden; for which reason it is compared, Mat. xxiv. 27. to the lightning which cometh out of the east, and in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, shineth even unto the west: But besides, the swiftness of these creatures, Christ may be compared to them; or be said to be like to them on some other accounts; as, 1. For their pleasantness and lovingness: They are pleasant and loving creatures, as appears from Prov. v. 19. Christ is pleasant and desirable in his person, to his people, being white and ruddy, and the chiefest among ten thousand; he is loving in his carriage and deportment to them, and has given the most undeniable proofs of the reality, sincerity, strength and immutability of his love, in shedding his blood, and by giving his life for them. 2. For their choiceness and excellency, as R. Sol. Jarchi observes, young roes and harts being the most choice and excellent; Christ is so in his nature, person, office, people, and ordinances; he is so in the esteem of his father, and in the esteem of men and angels; for though he's disallow'd by some, yet he is highly valued by others. 3. For the antipathy there is between these creatures and serpents: Historians report of them, that they search out the lurking places of serpents, and not being able to come at them in their holes, do, by the very breath of their nostrils, draw them out from thence, and then trample upon them, tear them in pieces, and eat them: This may, in some measure, represent that enmity there is between that old serpent, satan, and Christ Jesus, the seed of the woman, who was manifested

in human nature, to break his head, and destroy his works, which he has accordingly done. It is also further <sup>b</sup> reported of the hart, that after eating serpents, it grows prodigious thirsty, which occasions dreadful cries and lamentations, and violent pantings after the water brooks; to which an allusion is made, in Psal. xlii. 1. And yet knowing, by an instinct in nature, that it is dangerous to drink until it has digested them, forbears a while: Thus Christ, when he destroy'd that old serpent, the devil, sustained the weight of his father's wrath, which occasioned a bloody sweat in the garden, piteous moans upon the cross, a violent consumption of the radical moisture; so that his strength was dried up like a postherd, and his tongue cleaved to his jaws, with the violent thirst that was upon him; such an one he had, as is manifest from those words of his, when suffering upon the cross, I thirst. Moreover, it is reported <sup>c</sup>, in Lybia, where there is a great number of serpents, that when they see a hart lying along, will, in great numbers at once, attack him; some wrapping themselves about his feet, others about his horns, his neck, and belly, and bite him dreadfully, upon which he gets up and runs about, here and there, in great distress; but at length, throws himself upon his back; some he rubs to death, and others he devours, and then hastens to the water brooks to cleanse and refresh himself. Thus Christ was beset by all the infernal powers, yet spoiled them all, got an entire victory over them, and now enjoys the glories of it. These were creatures fit for food, and were allowed to be so by the levitical law; naturalists <sup>d</sup> say, that by their being hunted, their flesh becomes softer. Christ is the bread of life, and the bidden manna, he is very agreeable food for souls; his flesh is meat indeed, and his blood is drink indeed; and by reason of the sufferings which he underwent in our nature, is become very suitable food for faith. 5. These creatures are long liv'd ones: It is <sup>e</sup> reported, that Alexander the great having taken some of them, put golden chains about them, with which they were bound, covered with fat, a hundred years afterwards, and scarce any appearance of old age in them. Christ lives and will live for ever; he died once for the sins of men, but will never die more; I am he, Rev. i. 18. says he, that liveth and was dead, and behold, I am alive for evermore; for such reasons as these, and perhaps some others, Christ may be said to be like a roe or a young hart. The Septuagint here adds, upon the mountains of Bethel, which is not in the Hebrew text.

II. She declares the several gradual discoveries of himself unto her. In the former verse, she tells us, that she first heard his voice, and then saw him come leaping upon the mountains, and skipping upon the hills; and here she observes some nearer approaches of him to her. 1st, She says, that he stood behind their wall. 2<sup>dly</sup>, Looked forth at the windows. 3<sup>dly</sup>, Shewed himself through the lattices.

1st, She says, that he stood behind their wall; by which is meant, either, 1. The incarnation of Christ, whose glorious deity was covered and hid under the wall of our humanity; which is called our wall, because he was made partaker partaker of the same flesh and blood with us. Or, 2. The walls of our hearts, of which we read, Jer. iv. 19. I am pained at my very heart: In the Hebrew, it is, I am pained at the walls of my heart; such are our sins and transgressions, which are as so many walls of separation between Christ and us, particularly unbelief, lukewarmness, carnal reasonings, &c. behind which Christ stands, and which, by the mighty power of his grace and spirit, he batters down and demands an entrance. Or else, 3. The ceremonial law, which the apostle calls, Eph. ii. 14. the middle wall of partition: This separated between Jew and Gentile, and was made up of many hard and difficult precepts; behind this wall Christ stood under the old Testament-dispensation, and shew'd himself to his people, though but darkly and obscurely, in comparison of the gospel-revelation. Or else, 4. By it may be meant the church's defence and protection. The church is a city, and a walled one. God himself is a wall of fire round about it; and has also appointed salvation for walls and bulwarks: His ministering servants, he has not only set upon Zion's walls, but has made them as walls of brass unto them; he has set them both for the defence of the church and of the gospel; now Christ's standing behind her wall, may show that he is ready to protect his people, redress their grievances, and revenge himself upon their enemies. Or rather, 5. In general, it shews, that Christ was nearer unto her than he had been before; she then saw him, but at some distance, upon the hills and mountains afar off; but now he was come nearer, even to her very home, and stands behind the wall, being desirous to enter in: But still there was some distance of communion, a wall between them, and a wall of her own building; it was owing to her own infidelity, carnality and sleepiness, that Christ stood at a distance, and drew no nearer than he was; and yet, notwithstanding this, he stands waiting, as it were, for invitation to enter in.

2dly, She takes notice of a further discovery of himself. He comes from behind the wall, and looks in at the windows, to see in what posture his church was, and how things were managed in his house. By windows, we are not to understand the windows of the heavens, through which the Lord looks down upon his people, and beholds them under all their afflictions, and in their several cases and circumstances, as some of the Jewish writers do; but rather the ordinances of the gospel, which are that to the church, as windows are to a house, they let in light to souls; which windows, for the glory and excellency of them, are said, Isa. liv. 12. to be as agates. Christ looks forth at these, and shews himself in his glory and beauty to his saints, even as kings and great men look forth at the windows to be seen in their majesty and splendor, by their people: Also in at these windows Christ looks and takes notice how his children behave themselves under the ordinances; with what reverence and attention, faith and affection, they hear the word; and in what becoming manner they carry themselves at the table of the Lord; and there's not the least motion of the heart, that escapes his notice.

3dly, She takes notice of his showing himself through the lattices; which seems to intend a more clear and glorious discovery of himself in the means and ordinances of the gospel; though indeed, our clearest sights of Christ here, are but through a glass darkly, through windows and lattices, and not face to face; as they will be in another world: And it may be observed from hence, that unless Christ shows himself unto us, we can get no sight of him; for when he hideth his face, who then can behold him? As also, that Christ usually discovers himself in the use of means, through the ordinances; and therefore these are to be observed carefully, and attended on constantly. Moreover, a behold is prefixed to all these gradual manifestations of himself, which shews us, that Christ's discoveries of himself to his people, are exceeding wonderful and ravishing; a glimpse of him behind the wall, is a surprising instance of his grace, much more his looking forth at the windows; and his shewing or flourishing <sup>a</sup> himself, in all his beauty and glory, through the lattices, as the word signifies, this is enough to throw us into the greatest raptures and extacies of mind, and fill us with a joy unspeakable and full of glory.

Ver. 10. My beloved spake, and said unto me, rise up my love, my fair one, and come away.

CHRIST having made so near an approach to his church, as to come to her very wall, nay, to look in at the windows, and shew himself to her through the lattices, calls aloud to her to arise from her sleep, and come away with him; which she distinctly heard and understood, and therefore relates the very words he said to her, which she might be capable of; for if she could say it was the voice of her beloved, when he was a great way off, at a distance from her, upon the hills and mountains; she must needs know and understand distinctly what he said now, when he was so near her. These then are the words of the church, giving an account of what her beloved said to her, when he made her this kind and indulgent visit; in which may be considered,

- I. The preface to the following discourse; my beloved spake, and said unto me.
- II. The exhortation which he presses a compliance to; rise up, and come away.
- III. Some affectionate titles which he gives her; my love, my fair one.

I. The preface which she makes to this discourse, of Christ to her, of which she gives an account in this and the following verses, is, my beloved spake, and said unto me: In which may be considered, 1. The person speaking, my beloved; which title has been frequently met with, and explained, particularly in Ch. i. 13. 2. The mode of expression in this preface, which in the Hebrew text is thus, my beloved answered and said unto me; which mode of speaking is frequently made use of by Christ in the new Testament, and, perhaps, is an Hebraism in all those places, where it is there used; but here it seems to be expressive of an answer to a secret petition of her's. There is undoubtedly such a thing as mental, as well as vocal prayer, in which the desires of the soul are put up to God; and that under the influences of the spirit, who maketh intercession for the saints, with groanings which cannot be uttered; and such mental petitions and desires, are heard, regarded and answered by Christ Jesus, who is privy to the secret motions of our souls Godward, and understands full well the language of a sigh and groan; which shews him to be the omniscient God; gives a manifest proof of his deity, as well as evidences his tender regard to his people, and his readiness to help them under all their distresses. 3. The notice which she takes of it. As Christ is not always dumb, but opens his mouth, and returns suitable answers, gives proper directions and instructions, and speaks peace and consolation to his people; so they are not always deaf, but have ears to hear, they listen to what he says, and as they can distinguish his voice from another's, so they regard it above all others: What he speaks unto them, is received with much pleasure and delight; his words are not harsh and austere, but full of love, grace, pity and compassion. Now it may be observed from hence, that there is such a thing as souls being satisfied when Christ speaks to them, and that it is not a delusion; the church knew that it was her beloved that spake and not another; and that he spake to her in particular, my beloved spake, and said unto me: and so every believer may, in some measure, know when Christ speaks unto him, and that it is not a delusion; as when it makes us love Christ more, and quickens us to our duty; or when it discovers Christ's love to us and our interest in him; when it excites our faith, our hope and joy, has a tendency to promote holiness of heart and life, puts us upon glorifying Christ, and makes us more active and vigorous in his service; all which seem to be the effect of Christ's speaking to the church here. But,

II. What Christ says unto her, is by way of exhortation; which consists of two parts. 1st, To rise up. 2<sup>dly</sup>, To come away.

1st, He exhorts her to rise up, and that in the most tender and affectionate manner, as will be observed hereafter; which supposes either that she was asleep upon a bed of carnal security, indulging herself in ease and sloth: Or else, that she was cast down in her soul, under a sense of sin, and for want of his presence, sitting in darkness, without the light of his countenance, bemoaning her sorrowful and disconsolate condition. As also, that walking in the path of faith, and running in the ways of Christ's commandments, better became her, than sitting still, and being indolent; and likewise, that to lift up the head, and being of a cheerful spirit, better suited with the spouse of Christ, than a sad and dejected countenance; who had no need to sit in the dust, and clothe herself with sackcloth and ashes, when she is the king's daughter, nay, the queen herself, whose clothing is the gold of Ophir. So that neither an indolent and unactive, nor a sorrowful and dejected spirit becomes the people of God and spouse of Christ.

2<sup>dly</sup>, He exhorts her also to come away; from whence? why, from off her sluggish bed, or from out of her prison of darkness and unbelief, or from the company and conversation of wicked and ungodly men; and, in short, from every thing that might bring a dishonour to him, or be prejudicial to herself; which shows the great regard that Christ had for her. But whither would he have her come? Why, to himself, where she might have peace and comfort, enjoy sweet communion with him, but out of the reach of enemies, and free from danger by them; he would have her quit her former companions, her former ease and pleasures, and go with him, where she should enjoy ease, pleasure and conversation superior to these; he would have her be up and about her duty, following him, the lamb, whithersoever he went: In giving which advice, he sought her own good and comfort, as well as his own glory. The Jewish<sup>1</sup> writers understand it as God's call to the people of Israel to come out of Egypt.

III. The loving and affectionate titles which he gives her, are, 1. My love, which has been already explained, in Cb. i. 9. 2. My fair one; in what sense the church is fair and comely, has been shown in Cb. i. 5. The church is Christ's fair one, not upon the account of her works of righteousness, as the Targum explains it; but upon the account of the imputation of Christ's righteousness, the pardon of her sins through his blood, and the sanctification of his spirit. The Septuagint add a third character, my dove, but this is not in the Hebrew text. Now he uses these titles, (1.) To show her his ardent love and tender affections to her; that though she was in a carnal and secure frame, and negligent in her duty, yet she was his love and fair one still. (2.) To remove all discouragements from her that might arise from the consideration of her present state and condition. (3.) To prevail upon her to arise and go with him; and indeed, an exhortation expressed in such moving language, delivered in such an affectionate manner, one would think, could not fail of succeeding; especially when press'd with a claim of interest in her, my love and my fair one; as also when designed for her own good, for so the words may be read<sup>2</sup>, rise up for thy self, and come away for thy self; it will turn to thy advantage if thou dost do so; if not, it will be detrimental to thee. What other arguments he makes use of to enforce this upon her, will be seen in the following verses.

CHRIST here presses upon and encourages his church to rise up from her present state of sleep and sloth, and come away with him, where she might enjoy peace and pleasure; and this he does by informing her that it was now spring time, that the winter was past, and the spring was come, in which every thing look'd gay, pleasant and delightful; that the rain was over and gone, which made journeys difficult, and rivers unpassable, and in the room of it, fair and sunshine weather; that that time of the year was over, which was bad to travel in, as Christ says, pray ye that your flight be not in the winter; and therefore she might, without fear, and with the utmost safety, as well as pleasure, venture abroad with him. Now by this winter, which is said to be past, and the rain that is said to be over and gone, may be meant, either,

First, The state and condition, both of the Jews and Gentiles, before the coming of Christ in the flesh; when it was a winter, a rainy and stormy dispensation with both of them. And,

1st, It may be expressive of the state of the Jews before Christ's coming; 'Tis true, they were a people peculiarly chosen by God, and were indulged by him with special favours above the Gentiles; they had the knowledge of the true God, and were instructed in his mind and will; for he gave them his law to direct them, and sent his prophets, time after time, to inform, teach, rebuke, warn and admonish them, whilst the Gentiles lived without the law, and had only the dim light of nature to guide them: and yet the dispensation which the Jews were under, before Christ's coming, when compared with the gospel dispensation, may be said to be a winter, a rainy and stormy one; which began when the law was given on mount Sinai, which was attended with blackness, darkness and tempest: These people were all along treated by God, as if they had been under a covenant of works; for whilst they lived in obedience to the Divine Will, they enjoyed, without disturbance their civil and religious privileges; but when they broke and transgressed the Divine Laws, the clouds of God's wrath gathered thick and black about them, and stormy judgments descended on them, which begat in them a spirit of bondage; so that their services, which they performed to God, were not attended with that spirit of liberty and ingenuity, with that faith and cheerfulness, as now appear in the saints in this spring time of the gospel: it was a time of coldness and barrenness, the sun of righteousness not having as yet arisen in their Horizon, with his warming and fructifying influences, as he has done since; it was a time of much darkness and obscurity; for tho' there were some discoveries of Christ and his grace to believers then, yet these were made through dark shadows, cloudy and smoky sacrifices: a little before Christ's coming in the flesh, and appearing in his publick ministry, there was a violent rain, nay, a flood of error, infidelity and prophaneness, came pouring in among them; the law of God was corrupted with false glosses, his institutions and ordinances changed and alter'd, and his temple prophaned: One sort set up the traditions of the elders, against the positive commands of God; another denied the resurrection of the dead, and a future judgment; and both obstinately persisted in their infidelity, concerning the Messiah, when he appeared among them. This was the face of things when Christ was manifested in the flesh; who, by his ministry, check'd the infidelity and prophaneness of the age; and by his death, put a period to the mosaic dispensation: So that now those cloudy and shadowish ceremonies are gone; the night of Jewish darkness is ended, and the old covenant is waxen old, and vanished away.

2<sup>dly</sup>, It may also point out the state and condition of the Gentiles before Christ's coming. The times, before the gospel came among them, were times of ignorance; they were strangers to the knowledge of the true God; to his mind, will, or worship; darkness covered them, yea, gross darkness was all around them; storms of Divine wrath hung over their heads; they were under the manifest tokens of God's displeasure, being given up to judicial blindness and hardness of heart, and were shut up in sin and unbelief; their hearts were frozen up, and seem'd scarce capable of having any impressions made upon them; the Gentile world looked like an heath, a desert, or a wilderness, all barren and unfruitful, like the earth in winter time; and an impetuous rain and flood of prophaneness, error and seduction, overflowed it: God suffered them to walk in their own ways, and to follow the imaginations of their own hearts; they were left to worship birds, four footed beasts, and creeping things; to fall down to stocks and stones, and graven images, and pray to a God that could not save. But when the gospel was sent among them, by Christ, the face of the Gentile world was quite altered, and appeared like the earth after a winter season, upon the returning spring: Gospel-light diffused itself through all the parts thereof, and dispelled the shades of darkness, blindness, ignorance, prophaneness and infidelity; gospel-grace with its warming influences, thaw'd their frozen hearts, and left some deep and lasting impressions on them. That which look'd like a wilderness is become a fruitful field; and that which was as a desert, now appears as the garden of the Lord. Such a mighty change has the spring-time of the gospel made in the Gentile world. Or else,

Secondly, This winter and rain, which Christ says, were past and gone, may be understood of the spiritual state of souls; and that either before or after conversion. The state of believers, before conversion, may be represented by it, which is a time of darkness, deadness, coldness, barrenness and unfruitfulness, and is only removed by the powerful and efficacious grace of Christ; and often after conversion, it is a winter season with them; they are frequently annoy'd with the blustering winds and rains of satan's temptations, which beat upon them, like a storm against a wall: This enemy of their souls often comes in like a flood upon them, and would bear them away, were it not for the power and grace of the spirit of God, which are opposed unto it: They are often under the fearful apprehensions of storms of impending wrath, for their sins and transgressions against God: They are seldom free from sharp crosses and afflictions, and are often under the nipping blasts of persecution; which may be compared to the winter season for its sharpness and severity, though exceeding wholesome.

Moreover, they are sometimes in a great deal of darkness of soul; the clouds interpose between Christ and them, so as they cannot behold him and their interest in him; their hearts are often hard and frozen up, so as no impressions are made, either by the preaching of the word, or by the providences of God; a great deal of coldness frequently attends them; there's a chill upon their love to God, to Christ, to his people, ordinances, cause and interest, which is occasioned by the prevailings of sin and corruption in them. Sometimes they look like trees in winter, barren and unfruitful, with no appearance of the fruit of grace, or leaves of profession, but as if they were entirely dead and lifeless; and when this is their case, it may be said to be a winter season with them: but though this is sometimes their case, it is not always; they have their returning seasons of peace, joy and comfort, when it may be said, the winter is past, and the rain is over and gone, then light breaks in upon their souls, and their hearts are melted with a sense of Divine love; they become lively in their frames and in the exercise of their

grace, and fruitful in every good word and work; calmness and serenity of mind, peace of conscience, and joy in the Holy Ghost, are the delightful blessings which the soul now enjoys: All these, and much more, does the sun of righteousness bring along with him, and produce in us, when he ariseeth with healing in his wings, and turns a cold and nipping winter into a pleasant and delightful spring. But when it is a winter season with believers, they have little or no communion with Christ, which was the church's case here; the rains that fall, and the floods occasioned thereby, interrupt their fellowship; and the clouds of darkness, and doubts and fears, which hang over their heads, hinder them from beholding Christ, or their interest in him. Now this must needs be a very melancholy and uncomfortable time unto them; and therefore to hear that the winter is past, and the spring is come, that the rain is over and gone, that the clouds are dispersed, and the air is clear, bright and serene, must needs be good news and glad tidings to them. Moreover, souls, whilst in such a state, are usually indolent and inactive; they have neither hearts nor hands to work, but both are sealed up; they are neither diligent in the way of their duty, nor active in the exercise of grace, as the church appears to be here. Also they are ready to think that the winter is not over when it is, but fear that there are more storms behind; not only of crosses, afflictions, persecutions and temptations, but which are worse than all the rest, that there are storms of divine wrath and anger behind, which will fall upon them; though these have been all born by Christ, and are effectually and eternally removed by him; and believers may be assured of this, whatever their fears are, that not a drop of wrath shall fall upon them; for Christ has satisfied law and justice, and so hath delivered them from the wrath which is to come; and he that has done this, says, the winter is past, and the rain is over and gone: This is the voice of the gospel, and a joyful sound it is. The <sup>a</sup> Jewish writers interpret this of the bondage of the people of Israel in Egypt, and their deliverance out of it; as do some Christian <sup>b</sup> interpreters, of the Babylonish captivity, and the Jews deliverance from thence, it being a Chaldee <sup>c</sup> word that is here used to express the season of the year by; but the senses before given, seem to be much preferable to either of them; though 'tis true that the two former deliverances did produce a spring time of joy and rejoicing after a cold and nipping winter of trouble and sorrow, and were indeed wrought in the spring of the year; as was also our redemption by Christ Jesus.

Ver. 12. The flowers appear on the earth, the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land.

THE church goes on to give an account of the pressing instances that Christ made unto her, to arise and come away, which he had done in the former verse, by assuring her that the winter was past, and therefore, she need not be afraid of nipping blasts and blustering storms, nor of heavy rains, which would make travelling difficult, as well as unpleasant; and here he encourages her to arise and come with him, from the pleasantness of the spring, of which he gives the following account, in this and the next verse, enough to tempt her to a compliance. In this verse he says,

- I. That the flowers appear on the earth.
- II. That the time of the singing of birds was come.
- III. That the voice of the turtle was heard in their land. All which are so many evident demonstrations of the spring-time of the year, which of all others is the most pleasant.

I. The first sign of the spring, and which he mentions to prevail upon her to quit her present place and posture, and go with him, is, that the flowers appear in the earth: In the winter season the earth appears barren and unfruitful, being nipp'd with cold winds, frost and rain; but when the sun returns with its warming influences, it quickens those herbs and plants which before lay hid, and causes them to spring forth and flourish; so that the fields and meadows, as well as gardens, are covered with a variety of herbs, plants and beautiful flowers, which are very pleasant to the eye, and cause walking in the fields to be very delightful. Now by these flowers may be meant, either the graces of the spirit in the saints, which, when it is a winter season with them, lie dormant, and are, as it were, dead and lifeless, and are scarcely discernable, either to themselves or others; but upon the return of the sun of righteousness, they revive and shew themselves in all their glory, send forth a grateful odour, and give a delightful prospect to all beholders; such are those flowers of faith, hope, love, humility, self-denial, patience, long suffering, forbearance with and forgiveness of each other. Or else, by these flowers may be meant the saints themselves: The Targum interprets them of Moses and Aaron, which, perhaps, for their grace and uprightness, are there compared to palm-tree branches, as do also R. Sol. Jarchi and R. Albeck of the two Messiahs, but R. Aben Ezra thinks, that all the righteous men of Israel are intended; and 'tis best to understand it of all the saints, especially when in a flourishing condition, and in the exercise of grace; who may be compared to the flowers of the field. 1. For the production of them. The covering of the earth with grass, herbs, plants, and beautiful flowers, in the spring-season, is a great instance of God's mighty power; it is no other than

than a kind of a re-creation. This strange, though common change that is made in the earth, by the returning spring, is elegantly described, as well as entirely referred to the Divine Spirit, by the royal Psalmist, thus Psal. civ. 30. Thou sendest forth thy spirit, they are created: And thou renewest the face of the earth. Saints are flowers, not of man's, but of God's raising; they are not born of the will of man, nor of the will of the flesh, but of God: Their grace, and all the flourishings of it, are not owing to their own care, diligence and industry, but to the power and spirit of God, who worketh in them, both to will and to do, of his good pleasure; for this work of grace upon their souls, is a work of almighty power, and is no less than a new creation; and whether we consider it in its first beginning, or in its after growth and increase, it must be referred to a power superior to ours. 2. For their fragrancy. The persons of believers are of a sweet smelling savour, being perfumed with Christ's mediation, and covered with the sweet smelling garment of Christ's righteousness; and so are their services, their prayers and praises, put up and performed in the faith of Jesus. 3. For their beauty and ornament. How beautiful and glorious must those fields look, where roses are, and lilies grow, which in glory are equal with, nay, superior to the greatest of princes; for Solomon in all his glory, was not array'd like one of these; such as Sharon's field, and the roses and lilies there, which are here alluded to. Saints are exceeding beautiful and glorious in Christ, and ornamental to him, being sanctified by his spirit, and clothed with his righteousness. 4. Saints may be compared to flowers, which appear in the earth, in the spring season, with an air of gayety and cheerfulness, on the account of that joy and consolation which their souls are possess'd of, when their grace is revived and in exercise, particularly when faith is, and when Christ returns to them, and they enjoy his presence. Thus the blossoming and flourishing estate of the church is join'd with joy and rejoicing, in Isa. xxxv. 1, 2. Now all this fragrancy, beauty and flourishing condition of the saints, are owing to the arising of the sun of righteousness upon them, to the dews of divine grace, showers of boundless love, frequent waterings of heaven, and to their being planted and growing in a fruitful soil, Christ Jesus; and, perhaps, it may not be amiss to interpret this of that large production and conversion of souls to Christ, and of that appearance of many beautiful flowers in the church of Christ in the first ages of christianity, when saints appeared in the beauties of holiness, and Christ had the dew of his youth; and which time was a delightful spring-season, after a long winter of Jewish and Gentile darkness.

II. Another indication of the spring's being come, and which he makes use of as an argument to induce her to arise and come away, is, that the time of the singing of birds was come. Some <sup>a</sup> understand this of the time of cutting and pruning vines, or lopping trees; and to this purpose the Septuagint read the words thus, the time of cutting is come; which agrees well enough with the first times of the gospel, when Christ's Father acted the part of an husbandman, and lopp'd off the unfruitful branches the Jews, engrafted the Gentiles, caused them to bring forth fruit, and pruned them, that they might bring forth more; which seems well enough to agree with the season of the year<sup>1</sup>, the spring, at which time, especially at the beginning of it, vines were usually cut and pruned: though by the Targum, it is referred to the time of cutting or gathering in the first fruits, as it is also by <sup>a</sup> some, to the gathering of flowers, making of garlands, &c. as well as applied by others, <sup>b</sup> to the time of making incisions in the Balsam or Cyprus trees, in the vineyards of Engedi; but nothing is more agreeable than our version, and which is the sense that is given of the word by several Jewish<sup>1</sup> writers; and exactly suits with the gospel dispensation, in which, from the uttermost parts of the earth, songs are heard, sung in warbling notes and tuneful lays, by souls called by divine grace; whose usual themes are, the grace and mercy of God the Father, the redeeming love of God the Son, the spiritual blessings in him, the glory of his righteousness to justify them, and the fulness of his grace and power to keep and preserve them: Like little birds they sit, and chirp and sing the praises of the Lord, in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, making melody in their hearts unto him; and this they do as well as they can in this imperfect life, though their hearts are often out of tune, and they sing with faint and feeble notes; but the time is coming, when they shall be clothed in white, have harps in their hands, Hallelujah's in their mouths, and be employ'd in this delightful service for evermore. But however, this present gospel dispensation may well be called a time of the singing of birds, a time of joy and rejoicing, in comparison of the legal one, in which was heard, not the chirping and singing of birds, but the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words, which were awful and terrible.

Gentiles,

III. As a further evidence of the spring's being come, and the more to allure her to arise and go with him<sup>a</sup>, he says, that the voice of the turtle was heard in their land; which is a kind of dove, that, as naturalists<sup>1</sup> tell us, lies hid in the winter time, and appears in the spring; by which may be meant, either the church, which is compared to a turtle dove, Psal. lxxiv. 19. whose voice is heard in prayer to Christ, and who, in the preaching of the gospel, speaks of him, and in the public profession of his cause and interest, speaks for him; which voice, in ver. 14. is very pleasant to him: Or else, the voice of the Holy Ghost, according to the Targum, who once appeared in the form of a dove, and whose voice, in the hearts of believers, is very comfortable; for he speaks peace and pardon through Christ's blood, bears witness to our sonship, and is the pledge of our future inheritance: or the voice of God the Father, declaring his well pleasedness in Christ, which was heard in Judea, both at his baptism, and at his transfiguration upon the mount; or the voice of John the Baptist, who was the forerunner of Christ, and

Simeon Ben Jochai*<sup>n</sup> understands it of the voice of the law, in the days of the Messiah ; but rather the gospel itself, that joyful sound of peace, pardon, righteousness, life and salvation by Christ, is meant ; which was heard, for a while, only in Judea, which, perhaps, is the land here intended, called by way of eminency and specialty, our land, though afterwards this voice was heard throughout the Gentile world ; for Christ gave his disciples a commission to go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature ; who accordingly did, and their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world ; and a joyful season it was, and still is to the poor Gentiles, where this voice is heard ; and blessed be God, it is heard in our land.

Ver. 13. The fig-tree putteth forth her green figs, and the vines with the tender grape give a good smell. Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away.

TO the three former evidences of the spring, here are added two more.

I. The fig-tree putteth forth her green figs.

II. The vines with the tender grape give a good smell. As also,

III. The former call is repeated, Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away.

I. As a fourth evidence of the winter being over, and the spring being come, Christ tells his church that the fig-tree was putting forth her green figs ; which is a full confirmation of its being come, nay, of its being pretty well advanced ; for Christ, in Mat. xxiv. 32. makes it a sign of the summer's being at hand, when the fig-tree shoots out its tender branches, and puts forth its leaves. R. Aben Ezra thinks that the word translated, putteth forth, signifies the sweetning of the figs, and so points out the time when the green or unripe figs begin to grow sweet and eatable. So that as the flowry fields would be delightful to her eye, and the chirping birds affect her ear ; there were also figs ripening apace to please her taste ; as the vines with the tender grape in the following instance, would give a refreshing odour to her smell ; all which would be very entertaining to her, and one would think enough to invite her to arise and go with him. By the fig-tree, both the Targum and R. Aben Ezra understand the congregation of Israel ; who, they say, is here compared unto it, as indeed, Israel is to the first ripe fruit of this tree, Hof. ix. 10. and the godly among the captive Jews are, in Jer. xxiv. 2—5. and therefore by it may be meant, the saints putting forth their grace in exercise on Christ ; who may be compared to fig-trees for the following reasons.

1. The fig-tree is a tree full of large leaves, so large, that our first parents, after their fall, by sewing them together, made themselves aprons to cover their nakedness; which may be an emblem of a profession of religion, and of a conversation agreeable to it; which, though they ought to be found in us, yet are not sufficient to cover us; for we must also have Christ's righteousness put upon us, and his grace wrought in us, otherwise we shall be like the fig-tree, to which Christ came, Mat. xxi. 19. and found nothing thereon but leaves only: and therefore, as the saints are like fig-trees that have the large ever green and flourishing leaves of a Christian profession and gospel conversation upon them, so, 2. They may be compared to them for their fruitfulness. The fig-tree is a tree that bears fruit as well as leaves, and that which is very wholesome, pleasant and delightful: and if the Egyptian fig-tree is meant that is said<sup>a</sup> to bear fruit seven times a year, and as soon as you gather one fig, immediately there's another. 'Tis true, there are barren fig-trees, that have no fruit upon them; such an one is mentioned in Luke xiii. 6, 7. as there are also barren professors, but such are not the saints, who are filled and laden with the fruits of righteousness, and graces of the spirit, which they receive from Christ Jesus, from whom all their fruit is found. Now as this is to be found from none but him, so neither is it found in any but in them; for do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? It is impossible; this fruit appears upon no other tree but the fig-tree, and therefore by their fruits ye may know them. 3. It is a tree that puts forth its fruit before its leaves; which shews us, that though we ought to have the leaves of profession upon us, yet the fruit of grace ought to precede it; and therefore, when persons take upon them a profession of religion, and submit to the ordinances of Christ, care should be taken that they, as John says, Mat. iii. 7. both have, and bring forth fruits meet for repentance. There must be faith in the heart, as well as a confession of it in the mouth, and the one ought to go before the other, and both these make souls to appear honourable believers and professors, and such Christ's fig-trees are. 4. It may not be amiss to observe that the Egyptian fig-tree, which is no other than the sycamore, into which Zachew climbed, to see Christ, Luke xix. 4. may be here intended; seeing that there was great plenty of them in Judea, as is manifest from 1 Kings x. 27. Tho' 'tis true another word is used here, than what is there. Now of this tree, Pliny says<sup>b</sup>, that when it is cut down and cast into the water, it sinks, being dry; but when it is thorough wet, it will swim: So saints, when they first enter the waters of affliction, like Peter, they sink; but when they have been more used to them, they lift up their heads above the waters of tribulation; and as good soldiers, with courage and magnanimity of mind, endure hardness, and do not sink in their spirits, under the weight of reproaches, persecutions, and afflictions laid upon them, being supported and born up by Christ and his grace. 5. The same author<sup>c</sup> says, that this kind of fig-tree, will not ripen any other way than by scratching it with iron hooks. Souls do not begin to grow in grace, or become fruitful in good works, until their hearts are pricked with the goads and nails of God's word,

or till the fallow ground of their hearts is thrown up by the spirit of God ; nor will they grow afterwards to any purpose, unless Christ's father, who is the husbandman, takes his pruning knife in his hand, and uses it ; and indeed some saints never grow better than when they are attended with tribulations and afflictions, like the people of Israel in Egypt, or like Christ's lilies among thorns.

Moreover, the green figs, which the fig-tree is said to put forth, may intend, (1.) The beginnings of grace in the soul, which are like the young, green and unripe figs, that the fig-tree first puts forth ; such as, stirrings of affection to Christ, desires after a saving knowledge of him, and interest in him, pantings and breathings after the ordinances of Christ, and love to his people ; all which appear very soon in the soul, and discover the work of grace begun ; though as yet, it is but very imperfect. For, (2.) These green and unripe figs, shew the imperfection of grace in the saints ; grace in the best is very imperfect, in this state of life ; much more must it be, when it is first put forth ; the work of grace in us, though it will be performed, yet at present is but a begun one, and not a finished one. Saints are not arrived to the perfection they shall ; they are but like green figs, and especially young converts. (3.) These beginnings of grace in the soul, being compared to green figs, shew, that grace is liable to be lost, and would be so, was it not for the almighty power, which preserves it and increases it ; for of all fruit, none is more easily shaken off by the wind, and lost, than green and unripe figs are : See Nabum iii. 12. It is no less than a miracle of grace, that those first impressions are not wholly erased by the impetuous force of corruptions within ; or that these precious blossoms are not intirely blown off by the blustering winds of satan's temptations ; or that our naughty hearts do not, of themselves, as the fig-tree, cast off this unripe fruit : This is all owing to mighty, powerful and efficacious grace. (4.) It may also be observed, that grace, though imperfect, is took notice of by Christ ; yea, in the very infancy of it, as soon as ever it begins to appear, even when in its bud and blossom. So far is he from despising the day of small things, where there is but little grace, and little strength, as in the church of Philadelphia, he observes it, and does not crush it, but increases it ; for a bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking flax shall he not quench, Isa. xlii. 3. (5.) It may be remarked from hence, that grace being in exercise in others, though weak, should be an argument and motive to excite and stir up ours ; and indeed, it is disgraceful and dishonourable to old professors, for young converts to be more active and lively in the exercise of grace than they. Christ seems to press this argument here upon the church.

Again, the putting forth these green figs, signifies the exercise of grace on Christ, which saints put forth unto him, not by virtue of a Power of their own, but by virtue of his grace, which enables them to do it ; for the putting forth of these green figs, is owing to the warming and quickning influences of the sun of righteousness. The beginning, increase, and perfection of grace, are all from Christ ; the implantation of it in the soul, and the exercise of it depend upon him. But,

II. As a fifth and last evidence of the spring's being come, and which puts it beyond all doubt, is the flourishing of the vines ; the vines, with the ten- der grape, give a good smell. Fig-trees and vines are frequently mentioned together in scripture, as in Psal. cv. 33. Mic. iv. 4. and in many other places; and one reason is, because they grew together; for fig-trees were planted in vineyards, as is manifest from Luke xiii. 6. Nay, it is judged by naturalists to be very proper that they should grow together.

By vines may be meant, the several distinct congregated churches of Christ, or else particular believers: See Psal. lxxx. 14, 15. Isa. v. 7. and xxviii. 3. who may be called so. 1. Because of their fruitfulness. The vine is a fruit-bearing tree, it produces very fine and excellent fruit, especially the vines in the land of Canaan did, of which there is a famous instance, in Numb. xiii. 23. Saints being ingrafted in Christ Jesus, the true vine, and receiving life and nourishment from him, do, by abiding in him, bring forth much fruit, and such as is not to be found in others; not wild and sour grapes, such as Christ's father takes no delight in, but such as he is pleased with and glorified by. 2. Because of their dependance on Christ. The vine tree does not grow up erect of itself; for if it is not fixed to a wall, or supported by something else, it creeps along the ground. Saints do not grow up erect of themselves, but lean upon Christ, are supported by him, and so grow up in him. 3. For their tallness in Christ: Vines being propp'd, will run up a great height: Saints being ingrafted in, and upheld by Christ, who is himself higher than the heavens, grow up from shrubs, to taller trees; from babes in Christ, to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ; and by virtue of grace and strength, received from him, arise from a low and mean state and condition unto a much higher one, until at length they arrive unto the full possession of the prize of the high calling of God, in Christ Jesus. 4. For their weakness and unusefulness in themselves. The vine is a weak tree, and as has been observed, cannot bear up itself. Saints, they are weak in themselves, though strong in Christ; they can do nothing of themselves, neither perform duties, subdue corruptions, or withstand temptations; but they can do all things through Christ strengthening them. The wood of the vine is of very little worth or use, as appears from Ezek. xv. 2, 3. and is obvious enough to every one's observation. Saints are but poor, worthless and unprofitable creatures of themselves; their best works and most excellent performances, are neither profitable to God, nor can they procure salvation to themselves; but are all as an unclean thing, and as filthy rags; they are unworthy of the least mercy they enjoy, and therefore 'tis a wonder of grace, that God should, in any respect, be mindful of them. 5. For their durability. Though the wood of the vine is but weak and worthless, yet it is said to be very lasting and durable. Pliny ascribes eternity to it, and says of it, Nec est ligno ulli æternior natura, no wood is of a more eternal or durable nature than this is. Saints, however weak and worthless in themselves, yet shall continue and abide for ever in Christ; they are born of an incorruptible seed; they are built upon a rock, and secured by almighty power, so as they shall never perish; but shall for ever enjoy the incorruptible inheritance that is reserved for them.

Also

Also these vines are said to have the tender grape upon them. The word translated the tender grape, is only used in this song, and that but in two other places besides this, viz. ver. 15. of this chapter, and Cb. vii. 12. but is used both in the Targum<sup>r</sup> and Mishna<sup>s</sup>, in the same sense. Most of the Jewish writers<sup>t</sup> think, that by it is meant the small and tender grape, which appears as soon as ever the flower is fallen off, when the vines begin to knot, and one grape can be known, and may be distinguished from another, which sense our version expresses; but I am rather inclined to think, that it means the flower itself; for in the Targum, on Isa. xviii. 5. this word סמדר smadar, is used to express the Hebrew word נציר nitzab, which signifies a flower; and not only Pliny<sup>u</sup>, but the scripture also testifies, that vines do blossom and flower, as in the aforementioned place, Isa. xviii. 5. and in Gen. xl. 10. and the good smell which these vines are said to give, seems best to be understood of their time of flowering, than of any other time; for it is reported of<sup>v</sup> some vines, and perhaps may be true of the vines which grew in Judea, seeing that the wine of Lebanon is commended for its agreeable odour, in Hof. xiv. 7. I say, it is reported of some vines, that in the time of their flowering, they send forth so sweet a smell, that not only the vineyards themselves, but the country round about is refreshed with the sweet savour thereof; so that walking or sitting among them is both wholesome and delightful; nay, that the smell of them is so great, that serpents, and other venomous creatures, are driven away by it. So then the words may be rendered thus, the vines, being in flower, give a good smell. Now by these tender grapes, flowers, or blossoms of the vines, may be meant, either the graces of the spirit in their first appearance, as before; or else, young converts, to which I rather incline, who are the fruit of Christ's vine, the church; and though very weak and tender, yet are very dear unto, and are much regarded by Christ; and when there is a large appearance of them, it is a great encouragement to the church, and promises a glorious vintage. So the Targum interprets it of young men and babes praising the Lord at the red sea, for their deliverance out of the hands of the Egyptians. And R. Sol. Jarchi says, it is explained of repenting sinners, in an ancient book of theirs, called Peskta; and so I find it is also in another book of theirs, called Raya Mebimna<sup>r</sup>.

Moreover, these vines having their tender grapes upon them, or being in flower, are said to give a good smell; which must be understood of the fragrantcy of the persons of believers, being clothed with the sweet smelling garments of Christ's righteousness, and the delightful odour of their graces being exercised on his person, as well as of their sweet savour, which their pious and godly conversations send forth to all that know them, or are about them.

III. Christ having given such full demonstrations of the spring being come, renews his call to the church, and says again, Arise my love, my fair one, and come away; which repetition shews, 1. Our backwardness and sluggishness. We need one call after another, one exhortation upon another, and all will not do, unless the power of divine grace is exerted; for after repeated calls, we shall sleep on and take no notice, as the disciples did, being overborn with a body of sin and death. 2. It manifests the exceeding greatness of his love to us, and care of us, that though we have backslidden from him, yet he calls us back again; and though backward to his calls, yet he persists in them, and all along uses the most endearing and tender language to work upon us; he gives no other words but such as these, my love, and my fair one. 3. It is a plain indication that he is unwilling that we should be without him, or he without us; and therefore having took the most winning methods, and used the most prevailing arguments, he repeats the call. 4. It shews his importunity, and that he will have no denial; and indeed, one would think there could be none given, when both our pleasure and profit are so much concerned in it; and what he calls us to, tends so much to advance both; and there will be none, and can be none when he exerts the mighty power of his grace.

Ver. 14. O my dove! that art in the clefts of the rock, in the secret places of the stairs: Let me see thy countenance, let me hear thy voice; for sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely.

THESE are the words of Christ to his church; and may be considered either as coming immediately out of his own mouth; or else, as recorded and related by her, as the former were; in which may be considered,

- I. The title or character which Christ gives to his church; my dove.
- II. Her then present place of residence; in the clefts of the rock, in the secret places of the stairs.
- III. A request which he makes, which consists of two parts. 1st, That he might see her countenance. 2<sup>dly</sup>, Hear her voice.
- IV. The motives or arguments that he makes use of to prevail with her; which are also of two sorts, suited to both parts of the request. 1st, Because her voice was sweet. 2<sup>dly</sup>, Her countenance was comely.

I. Here we meet with a new title or character, given by Christ to his church, my dove; he had called her his love, and his fair one before, but not his dove, till now; though 'tis true, he had compared her eyes to doves eyes, in Cb. i. 15. Now the church may be compared to the dove, for the following reasons: 1. The dove is a very beautiful creature; so is the church, as she is washed in Christ's blood, justified by his righteousness, and sanctified by his grace; for though, while in a state of nature, she lay among the pots, and so look'd black and uncomely; yet now being called by, and made a partaker of of divine grace, she looks like the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold. 2. It is a very cleanly creature<sup>a</sup>; it loves cleanliness; it keeps its own body clean, and teaches its young to carry their dung out of their nests; it feeds only upon pure grain, and delights in clean water. The church or believers in Christ, are not only clean through the word, which Christ has spoken, but also have their hearts purified by faith in his blood, and delight in purity of life and conversation. 3. It is a very innocent and harmless creature; and therefore Christ says to his disciples, Mat. x. 16. Be ye wise as serpents, and harmless as doves. Believers are, or at least should be, blameless, harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation; they should live, not only inoffensive to the world, but also peaceably and quietly among themselves; not biting and devouring one another; not acting the part of wolves and tygers, but behaving themselves as Christ's innocent sheep and harmless doves. 4. It is an exceeding loving and chaste creature to its mate<sup>b</sup>; it inviolably keeps its conjugal faith; adultery is rarely known among these creatures, and whenever committed, is punished with death; for males will tear a male to pieces, and a female a female, that is found guilty of it: 'Tis also reported<sup>c</sup> of the turtle dove, that upon the loss of its mate, it remains inconsolable; does not couple again, but continues a widow, and lives a mournful and sorrowful life, avoiding every thing that might tend to remove it, and create pleasure; and that whereas before it delighted in pure and clean water, it now will not drink until it has first bemudded it; nor will it sit upon green and flourishing, but upon dry and withered branches of trees; all which is a lively emblem of the church, who is presented as a chaste virgin to Christ, who bears an exceeding great love and affection to him; and whose absence is, what she cannot bear. 5. It is a very fruitful creature; though it has not<sup>d</sup> many young ones at a time, yet has them very often: Ælianus<sup>e</sup> says, that it has young ones ten times in a year; nay, in Egypt, twelve times. The church, who is married to Christ, is not only fruitful in grace and good works, but also brings forth many souls unto him, which has been and will be still more eminently seen in the Gentile church; see Isa. liv. 1. 6. It is a sociable creature; they flock together as birds of a feather usually do: So saints delight to be in each other's company; they join in fellowship one with another, and carry on a social worship together, and do not forsake the assembling of themselves together, as the manner of some too often is. 7. It is a weak and impotent creature, and is often oppressed by birds of prey. The church is often distressed and persecuted by the men of the world, and forced to fly into holes and corners, as the dove does. 8. It is a very fearful and timorous creature: Hence Ephraim is compared to the trembling dove, in Hos. xi. 11. Saints are often in trembling fits, at the word of God, and in the exercise of their faith on Christ, under a sense of their own vileness, and in the apprehension of their weakness and want of power to keep and preserve them-themselves. 9. It has a mournful voice. Saints are like doves of the vallies, mourning every one for their iniquities, and often for the loss of Christ's presence, which they are frequently deprived of, through their unbecoming carriage to him. 10. It feeds only upon pure grain. The church feeds only on Christ, and on the wholesome words or comfortable doctrines of the everlasting gospel; she cannot live upon husks that swine eat, nor will she be fed with the chaff of man's inventions. 11. It is also very swift in flying; and therefore David wished for the wings of a dove, that he might fly away, and be at rest. Souls in their first fleeing to Christ, for life and salvation, move as swift as the manslayer did from the avenger of blood, to the city of refuge; and afterwards, under all their trials and afflictions, he is the strong tower, whither they run, and are safe; and then, more especially may they be said to be as doves, when they are upon the wing of faith, and mount up as eagles do, run and are not weary, and walk, and faint not.

Lastly, It is reported of the dove, that it will allure wild doves by its familiar converse into the dove-house with it. Those who are called by grace, will use all proper ways and methods to allure and gain others to Christ, and to a compliance with his ways and ordinances, as the church does the daughters of Jerusalem in this song; she being a great lover of the society of saints, and of the glory of Christ therein, as the dove is of its own country, particularly of its own dove-house, and especially when near the habitations of men.

Now, Christ's calling the church by this name, my dove, not only shews his interest in her, but also his affection to her; and perhaps, the principal thing he had in view, was to assure her of it, and to encourage her in her present condition, though she was in the cleft of the rock, in a poor desolate and forlorn condition, yet she was his dove still; which is the next thing to be considered. For,

II. She is said to be in the clefts of the rock, in the secret places of the stairs; which may be understood, either in allusion to the usual place where the dove makes her nest, which is in the rock, and in the sides of the hole's mouth; see Jer. xlviii. 28. And Adrichomius * tells us, that there was a stone tower near Jerusalem, southward of the mount of Olives, called Petra Columbarum, the rock of the doves, where often five thousand doves were kept at one time; and perhaps, here may be an allusion to it: Or else, it may be understood of the place where doves are forced to fly, when pursued by the hawk; and so may be expressive of the state of the church under persecution; when they are forced to flee into holes and corners, and cannot openly and publickly worship God, as they used to do, according to his mind and will; but even then, God has his hiding places for them, where he protects and preserves them until the heat of the persecution is over; for at such a time God will have a church, it shall never be entirely rooted out, neither shall his people be without his presence, and some visible manifestations of himself unto them; for he has as great a love for them as ever. The church is his dove then, and her countenance is as comely, and her voice as sweet as ever; nor would he have her be disconsolate and disheartened in her present condition. Most of the Jewish <sup>a</sup> writers refer the words to the condition that the people of Israel were in, when they were pursued by Pharaoh at the red sea ; which seems, in some measure, to agree with the former sense, which has been given. Or else, by the clefts of the rock, may be meant, either, 1. The eternal decree of election, in which, as in an immoveable and inaccessible rock, the church dwelt from all eternity, and will do so unto all eternity ; which is the sense that Junius gives of these words. God's eternal decree of election is as immoveable as a rock ; 'tis a foundation that stands sure, being laid, not upon the conditions of faith and holiness in the creature, but upon the sovereign will and pleasure of that God, who will have mercy on whom he will have mercy, and will be gracious to whom he will be gracious ; whose purposes cannot be disannulled, nor his counsel made void, nor he ever be frustrated of his end ; for the thoughts of his heart shall stand to all generations ; and as the decree of election is immoveable, irrevocable, and cannot be altered, so the doctrine of it will stand, naugre all opposition, and will prove a burdensome stone to all those that set themselves against it. Now in the clefts of this rock, the people of God dwell as in a hidden and secret place, before conversion ; it being neither known to themselves or others, that they are the objects of it, until called by divine grace ; and here they dwell secure, and are safely preserved, notwithstanding the fall of Adam, and their own actual sins and transgressions, until the grace that is laid up for them is actually bestowed upon them ; for every one that dwells here, shall be called and sanctified, and at last eternally glorified ; not one shall be lost, nor any one link in the golden chain of salvation ever be broken, of which we have an account in Rom. viii. 30. Whom he did predestinate, them he also called : And whom he called, them he also justified : And whom he justified, them he also glorified. Moreover, these persons are, and ever were the objects of Christ's love, and so they ever shall be ; his love was set upon them, and his delights were with them before the world began ; these are his doves, and this the place of their habitation. Or else, 2. By this rock may be meant Christ, who frequently bears this character in scripture, and particularly is said, 1 Cor. x. 4. to be that spiritual rock, of which the Jews drank in the wilderness ; and by the clefts thereof, may be meant <sup>1</sup>, the wounds of Christ, which were opened for the salvation of sinners, and in which believers dwell by faith ; and perhaps, to this the allusion is made, in Exod. xxxiii. 22. where 'tis said, that God put Moses into the cleft of the rock, and made his glory to pass before him ; for the glory of all the divine perfections is no where so manifestly seen, as in a crucified Christ. Now saints are the inhabitants of this rock ; here Christ's church dwells, and that safely, being built upon a rock, against which the gates of hell cannot prevail ; this is her fortress and strong hold, where she need not be afraid of any enemy whatever ; for her place of defence is the munition of rocks ; and therefore, whenever under any apprehension of danger, she betakes herself to her strong hold, to Christ the rock, that is higher than she. Moreover, the church being said to dwell here, not only shews the safety of her her state, but also her majesty and greatness, and her exaltation above others; see Jer. xlix. 16. for dwelling in a rock, she dwells on high; she's not now in the miry clay, but her feet are set upon a rock; and her goings are established; she's not now upon the dunghil, but upon the throne; not in a mean cottage, but in a well built, strong and fortified castle: Indeed the other phrase, the secret of the stairs, seems to denote abasement and humiliation; though it may be better understood of Christ, as the former expression seems to be; for Christ is the stairs or ladder which Jacob saw in a vision, which reached from earth to heaven; he being God and man in one person, has, by his mediation, blood and sacrifice, made peace between God and sinful man, reconciled those two contending parties, brought heaven and earth, as it were together, and filled up that vast distance that there was between them; he is the ladder, or those stairs also, on which the angels of God ascended and descended; see Gen. xxviii. 12. compared with John i. 51. He is likewise our way of access to God, by whom, as by steps, we ascend to him, have admittance into his presence, and are indulged with communion with him; now in the secret of these stairs or steps, did the church lie, as the dove is said to do, in some hidden place, during the winter season, which was the case of Christ's dove here, see ver. 11. for Christ is the hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; and if any thing is particularly intended by the secret of the stairs, Christ's justifying righteousness seems not unlikely; which is secret and hidden to the men of the world, and is only revealed in the gospel from faith to faith: Hither souls betake themselves in times of distress, and by it they are screened and sheltered from sin, law, hell and death; and dwelling here, they are in safety; for he that dwelleth in the secret place of the most high, shall abide under the shadow of the almighty; which seems to be a better sense, than what some Jewish writers * give of the words, who interpret them of the sanctuary or temple, and of the holy of holies, which was in it. But,

III. I shall now consider the request which he makes unto her, which consists of two parts. 1st, That he might see her countenance. 2<sup>dly</sup>, Hear her voice.

1st, he desires that she would shew him her countenance, which supposes that she had either covered her face, as mourners do, and was bemoaning her present state and condition, bewailing her inward corruptions, as well as her outward afflictions; or else, that she was filled with shame, under a sense of sin, and blushed, as Ezra did, and could not lift up her head and eyes to Christ; but smiting upon her breast, like the poor publican, discovered the inward confusion of her mind; or else, that she was attended with fear, and that not so much with a fear of her enemies, as of his displeasure, being conscious to herself, that she had acted an unbecoming part towards him; or rather, that she was filled with shamefacedness and bashfulness, and could not, with an holy boldness, and an allowed freedom, approach his presence; unless we understand it of the state of the church, under the old testament, in opposition to this under the new; when the face of the church was veiled, and she only saw Christ through dark shadows and typical ordinances; whereas,

we now, with open face, behold, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord. And now, what Christ would have her do in opposition to all this, is, to lift up her head with joy, exercise faith upon him, use freedom with him, come with boldness to him, and look him full in the face, and keep always looking to him, for every fresh supply of grace, and whatever she might stand in need of; he would not have her be shy and bashful, fearful and faithless, but free and familiar with him, with whom, he would assure her, she might. Unless we would rather understand it of his desire, to appear more publicly in his worship, and not lurk in holes and corners, in the clefts of rocks, and under dusty stairs; but shew herself in his house, and in the courts of it, and present herself a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which was but her reasonable service; and especially seeing there was now no danger, for the storms were over, the winter was past, and the rain was over and gone.

2dly, He desires that he might bear her voice. Believers should not be dumb when Christ would have them speak; there is a dumbness or silence, which is laudable, and that is, either when they are under the afflicting hand of God, or are vilified and reproached for the sake of Christ and his gospel; but then there is a dumbness which is not so; for as there is a time to keep silence, so there is a time to speak. 1. Believers should speak of Christ; of what he is in himself, of the glory of his person, the excellency of his righteousness, the efficacy of his blood, and the sufficiency of his grace; they should also speak of what he is unto them, being of God made unto them, wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption; of what characters he bears, and what relations he stands in to them, as well as of what he has done for them, in redeeming them, and calling them by his grace. 2. They should speak for Christ, as well as of him; and he is a person that is much spoken against by the men of the world, therefore believers should speak for him, in vindication of his person, cause and interest; boldly assert the truths of his gospel, bravely bear a testimony against all errors, both in doctrine and worship, and not be afraid of men or their revilings. 3. They should speak to Christ; and this, perhaps, is the voice which Christ more especially desired to hear; they should speak to him in prayer, in praises and thanksgivings, and ascribe all the glory of their salvation to him; which is but just and reasonable in itself, becoming them, and makes for the advancement of Christ's glory.

IV. The motives or arguments he makes use of to prevail upon her, to grant him what he desired of her, are those two, 1st, The sweetness of her voice. 2dly, The comeliness of her countenance; which he mentions, not only to shew what induced him to make the request, but also to encourage her to grant it.

1st, He says, that her voice was sweet, i. e. grateful, acceptable and exceeding well pleasing, and therefore he desired to hear it; which she had no reason to be ashamed of. 1. Her voice in speaking of Christ, of what he is in himself, and what he is to her, and has done for her, is sweet unto him; he loves to hear his people speak of these things; we are told, Mal. iii. 16. that they that feared the Lord, spake often one to another, and what did they speak of? no doubt, of the excellency of Christ, of what he had done for, shewn unto, and wrought in them: Now what acceptance did this meet with from him? Why, he bearkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him, of all they spake of one to another. 2. Her voice in speaking for him, confessing his name, and bearing a testimony to his truths, is sweet unto him; for he says, Mat. x. 32. That whosoever shall confess him before men, him will he confess before his father which is in heaven; but as for those who are ashamed of him, and of his words, here on earth, he highly re-sents, and will be ashamed of them another day, and in another world. 3. Her voice in speaking to Christ is sweet; whether it be in prayer, or in praise; her voice in prayer is so; and thus the Targum paraphrases the words, Let me hear thy voice, for thy voice is sweet in prayer, in the house of the little sanctuary. The prayer of a poor believer makes sweet music in Christ's ears; nothing is so delightful to him; so little reason have souls to be discouraged, or fear a kind reception of their petitions with him: and so her voice in praise and thanksgiving is sweet unto him; praise is not only pleasant in itself, and comely in us, but is also exceeding delightful to him; this pleases the Lord better than an ox or bullock, that has horns and hoofs, Psal. lxxix. 30, 31.

2dly, He tells her, that her countenance was comely, i. e. beautiful, and much to be desired; and this Christ says, not only in opposition to what she was in the esteem of the world, who counted her as the off-scouring of it, but also to what she was in her own esteem, who looked upon herself as black and uncomely, and therefore was ashamed to lift up her head, or to have her countenance seen by him; therefore, in order to remove her unbelief, bashfulness and misgivings of heart, he declares what she was in his esteem, whose judgment is preferable to her own, and to all others beside; for in his opinion, she was the fairest among women, of a beautiful aspect and comely countenance being made perfectly comely through that comeliness which he had put upon her: He saw no iniquity in her, nor any spot upon her, as clothed with his righteousness; she was in his eye a perfection of beauty; having the most just symmetry and proportion of parts, the most agreeable shape, and the most lovely features in her face; her cheeks being comely with rows of jewels, and her neck with chains of gold, as in Cb. i. 10. Faith is most properly the believer's face or countenance, by which he looks on Christ, and views a fulness and suitableness in him, and expects all needful supplies from him; which look of faith on Christ for life and salvation, is exceeding pleasant, nay, ravishing to him, and therefore he would have his church behold him again and again; for souls never appear more comely in Christ's eye, than when they take a full view of him.

Ver. 15. Take us the foxes, the little foxes that spoil the vines: For our vines have tender grapes.

WHETHER these words are the words of Christ or of the church, is not so manifest. Some think that they are the words of the church, to whom the care of the vineyard was committed, which, though she had, in some measure, neglected, as appears from Cb. i. 6. yet now is heartily concerned for the flourishing of it; and therefore calls upon her attendants and companions to assist in destroying those noxious creatures, the foxes, which did so much mischief to the vines that grew in it: Tho' they rather seem to be the words of Christ, who is the owner of the vineyard, and has an authoritative power over the officers of the church, and ministers of the gospel, to stir them up, to be sedulous and careful in the discharge of their work; for the words seem to be directed, not to angels, nor to his bride, the church, nor to the civil magistrate, but to ministers, who are more particularly employ'd in the care of Christ's vineyard; and if we take them to be the words of Christ, it not only shows the power and authority of Christ over those he speaks to, and lays his commands on in so strict a manner, but also his love to, and care of his vines, the several churches, which his own right-hand has planted; though perhaps, they may be the words of them both jointly together; for the church with Christ, and under him, has a right to stir up her officers to perform their work, and fulfil their ministry, which they have received of the Lord Jesus; the doing of which will redound to his glory, and her good; they both having an interest in the vines here mentioned. Also the foxes, which they are ordered to take, were common enemies, both to Christ and his church; and therefore it is not said, take for me or thee, but take for us the foxes. In these words may be observed,

I. A command that is laid upon the ministers of the gospel, to take the foxes, even the little foxes.

II. Some arguments or motives proposed to stir them up to an observance of it.

I. The thing enjoined them, is to take the foxes. By foxes we are to understand, either,

1st, The sins and corruptions of our nature, which may be compared unto them, for the following reasons; 1. As foxes have their lurking holes in the earth, so have these in the hearts of men, where they lie a long time undiscovered; and that not only in the hearts of wicked men, but also in the hearts of God's own people; and therefore, says David, Psal. xix. 12. Who can understand his errors? Cleanse thou me from secret faults; now 'tis only the spirit of God, who searcheth the deep things of God, that can search the inmost recesses of our hearts, discover our vile corruptions, bring them out of their lurking holes, and slay them by the mighty power of his grace. 2. The sins and corruptions of our nature may be compared to foxes for their deceitfulness, therefore are they called deceitful lusts; and well they may, for we are often imposed upon by them, and deceived with them, and that under the notion, either of pleasure, profit, or honour, which they promise to us, but leave us intirely short of. There is a deceitfulness in sin, which makes our hearts so deceitful and desperately wicked as they be. 3. For the crooked ways which they take. * The fox does not walk straight forward, but with several windings and turnings. The ways of sin are all crooked ways; they are so many distortions from the ways of God and godliness, which are straight straight and even; and so many aberrations from the divine law, which is the rule of our obedience unto God. 4. For making places <sup>b</sup> barren and desert, wherever they come. Sin makes persons barren and unfruitful, both in the knowledge of Christ, and in the performance of duty; so that they look like the death in the desert, and like parched places in the wilderness. 5. For their <sup>c</sup> friendship with serpents. There is a secret correspondence held between satan, that old serpent, and the corruptions of our nature; by virtue of which, he often compasses his end, and gains his purpose, which he could not do on Christ, there being no such matter for him to work upon; he had none of his old friends there to let him in, as he has in our hearts.

Now the ministers of the gospel may be said to take these foxes, when they lift up their voices like a trumpet, and exclaim against them, expose the wickedness and deceitfulness of them, and shew souls the danger they are in by them; when they are made useful to bring persons under a conviction of them, and, as it were, to ferret them out of their lurking holes; moreover, by the power of the Spirit of God, attending the ministry, the strong holds of sin are pulled down, and the vain imaginations of men's hearts subdued, and every vile thought brought into captivity, to the obedience of Christ, and a revenge taken upon all disobedience. Not but that private Christians, as well as ministers, should watch and pray against them; fight in order to take them, and when taken, should bring them to Christ, as his and their enemies, to be slain by the mighty power of his grace; and not only gross sins, but even little foxes, the very first motions of sin, are to be watched against and struck at; we should abstain from all appearance of it, knowing that lesser sins will bring us into the commission of greater, and insensibly grow upon us. So R. Alshech interprets these little foxes of little sins. Or else, 2dly, By these foxes may be meant false teachers or hereticks. So the false prophets in Ezekiel's time were called by him, Ezek. xiii. 3, 4. O Israel, thy prophets are like the foxes in the deserts; and so may false apostles and false teachers now, and that for the following reasons; 1. For their craftiness and subtlety. The fox is remarkable for its cunning and craftiness, of which some writers give us many instances: Sometimes he feigns himself dead, lies upon his back; with his mouth open, and his tongue out; so that he looks every way as a dead carcass; by which means he invites the fowls of the air to feed upon him; but when come, devours them with open mouth<sup>d</sup>; for the same purpose, at other times, he rolls himself in the red earth, that he might appear as bloody, and then, as before, lays himself down upon the ground as dead, and thereby lays a bait for the unwary birds: So when he is taken in a snare, and finds that there is no escaping, he prostrates himself upon the ground, holds his breath, and in all appearance, seems dead, which the snare-fetter supposing to be real, looses the snare, without any suspicion of his escaping, but finding himself free, gets upon his legs, and away he runs. Also when hunted, he'll run among a flock of sheep or goats, and leap upon the back of some one of them, which puts the whole flock into a fright, and causes them to run one after another; and for fear of damage, the hunt-

man is obliged to call in his dogs. These, with many other instances of his subtlety, as his artful method of catching crabs and lobsters with his tail, destroying of wasps, clearing himself of fleas, tricking the hedge-hog, revenging himself upon the badger, and catching hares, are recorded by several writers. Hence false teachers may be very fully compared unto them, who act in disguise, lie in wait to deceive, walk in craftiness, and handle the word of God deceitfully; speak lies in hypocrisy, use good words and fair speeches, and thereby deceive the hearts of the simple. 2. For their malignity. Foxes are cruel as well as cunning; they are very noxious and hurtful creatures; and so are false teachers, they are wolves though in sheeps clothing; their heresies are damnable, their doctrines are pernicious, and their words eat as doth a canker; they subvert the faith of some, and bring ruin and destruction upon themselves and others. 3. For their hunger and voraciousness. All the cunning and cruelty that the fox uses, is to satisfy his greedy Appetite; and so the principal end of false teachers, is not to serve Christ, but their own bellies; to devour widows houses, and making merchandize of others, to enrich themselves, and indulge their own pride and vanity. 4. For their feigning themselves to be domesticks. It is reported of the fox, that when it draws nigh to a farm house, it will mimick the barking of a dog, which the hens and geese being used to, walk about with less guard, and with more confidence approach to him, and so are surprized and devoured by him: So false teachers put on sheeps clothing, transform themselves into angels of light, as their master before them has done; mimick the voice of Christ's ministers, use some phrases and expressions, which they do, which serve as a blind to the people; and so craftily do they put their words together, that it is not an easy thing to discover them. 5. As foxes are filthy, abominable and stinking creatures, so are these, not only to God, but to his people; and therefore are also compared to wolves and dogs, and are not so much as to be received into the houses of good people, nor to be bid God speed by them.

Now the ministers of the gospel are to take these foxes; they being overseers of the flock, and keepers of Christ's vineyard, are to watch against them, and make a discovery of them; they are to oppose and refute their erroneous doctrines; and being detected, and convicted of heresies, they are with the church, after proper admonitions given, to reject, and cut them off from the church, and communion with it: 'Tis true, they are not to take away their lives, but they are to exclude them from fellowship with them, and not suffer them to continue with them, either as members or officers; nay, even the little foxes are to be taken. Heresy is compared to leaven, the erroneous doctrines of the Scribes and Pharisees are called so, and a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump: Heresies and hereticks are to be nipp'd in the bud, otherwise they will increase to more ungodliness; great things have rose from small beginnings: These things should be taken in time; for errors, seemingly small at first, have grown larger, have spread themselves, and have been very fatal.

tal to the churches of Christ: Therefore no error or heresy should be connived at under a notion of its being a small or a harmless one; for even little foxes are to be taken.

3dly, Here are motives and arguments proposed to induce a compliance to this command of Christ's. 1. The mischief which these foxes do to the vines, is made use of as one, which spoil the vines; it has been observed by many*, that these kind of creatures do hurt to the vines; and that by destroying the fences, knawing the branches, biting the bark, making bare the roots of the vines, devouring the ripe grapes thereof, and infecting all with their noxious teeth and vitious breath: So hereticks and false teachers break down the church's fence, by making schisms and divisions, make bare her roots, sap the very foundation of religion, by corrupting the word of God, and denying the great doctrines of the gospel; and hurt her fruit, by disturbing the peace of her members, unsettling some, and subverting others. 2. Another argument that is made use of to stir them up to diligence, in taking the foxes, is, because the vines have tender grapes. By vines are meant the several distinct congregated churches of Christ; by the tender grapes or flowers thereof, we are to understand young converts, whom Christ is very tender of, and has a particular regard unto; see Isa. xl. 11. and xlii. 3. and these having but a small degree of faith, knowledge and experience, like children, are more easily tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness of these foxes, whereby they lie in wait to deceive: now generally they make their onset upon these, as being more easily wrought upon, and by whom they can with more facility, compass their end; and this being then the case, the ministers of Christ ought to be more sedulous and diligent in the discovering of those foxes, from whom so much mischief may be expected, and more bold, vigorous and courageous in opposing and rejecting them; seeing the churches of Christ are like to sustain so considerable a loss by them, and in danger of having a promising vintage spoiled. 'Tis true, the foxes love the ripe grapes, and devour them, and not when they are blossoming and knotting; which shews Christ's care of his vines to be the greater, that he would have little foxes taken, while the vines were blowing; for by such time as the grapes were ripe, these little foxes would be great ones, and would be capable of doing more damage, and not so easy to be taken neither; so that the consideration also of there being less difficulty now, than there would be hereafter, might animate them to set about the work immediately. 3. Christ seems to intimate as if they had some interest in these vines; for which reason they ought to be the more heartily and vigorously concerned for the welfare of them, therefore they are called our vines: 'Tis true, Christ has a sole right unto, and property in the vineyard; the vines are all of his planting, and the fruit of them belongs to him; yet those to whom the vineyard is let out, who are entrusted with the care of the vines, and who must give an account of them, to the chief and principal owner, have also an interest therein; for though our great Solomon must have a thousand, whose the vineyard is; yet those that keep the fruit thereof thereof must have two hundred, Cant. viii. 11, 12. so that if they should be negligent in their work, and suffer the foxes to over-run the vineyard, and spoil the vines, they would not only incur the displeasure of the owner of them, but sustain a loss themselves, by coming short of the fruit which otherwise would be distributed to them. Now such arguments as these, which have interest and profit contained in them, usually have the greatest influence upon persons; Christ knew this, and therefore uses such an one here.

Ver. 16. My beloved is mine, and I am his: He feedeth among the lilies.

CHRIST having given such evidences of his love, and instances of his care and kindness to the church, in the preceding verses, she, in this, declares her faith in him, and signifies the obligations which she lay under to observe his commands. My beloved is mine; he hath given himself to me, his heart is set upon me, and is always careful of me, and concerned for me, of which he has given the fullest proofs I could wish for: and I am his; I give up my self to him, and am at his dispose, and think my self obliged to observe whatever he enjoins me, and to follow him whither soever he calls me; especially seeing it is for my good; it makes both for my pleasure and profit, as well as for his glory; for he feedeth among the lilies. I need not fear his leading me into danger, or any desolate places; but where lilies grow, where's all delight and pleasure; he'll lead me into green pastures, where I may have food, and fulness of it. And,

First, These words are expressive of the mutual interest and propriety which Christ and the church have in each other; my beloved is mine, and I am his; he has interest in me, and I have the same in him.

1st, She says, my beloved is mine. She first asserts her interest in Christ, and then his interest in her; for Christ is first ours, and then we are his because he is ours; he loves us before we love him; he first gives himself to us, and then we give ourselves to him: But how comes Christ to be ours? I answer, 1. By the father's gift; he gave him for us, and he gave him to us, therefore Christ is called, John iv. 10. the gift of God, and that by way of eminence; he being the first and best gift, the most comprehensive one, that includes all others in it, and brings them with it; for he that gives the greater gift will give the lesser; if he gives his own son, he'll give all things with him; him he has given to be an husband to his church, and a head over her; he has given him to be a priest to offer up sacrifice, and make intercession for her, to be a prophet to teach, and a king to rule her; and surely such a gift as this deserves the utmost thanks; so that there's reason to say with the apostle, 2 Cor. ix. 15. Thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift; and thus Christ becomes ours. 2. By his own gift; he has given himself to us, as well as for us; he gave himself a sacrifice for us, and that as an instance of his love to us, as well as a fruit of his having given himself in covenant to us before. 3. By marriage. Christ has not only espoused our cause, but has also espoused our persons, and betrotted us to himself in righteousness and in judgment, and in loving kindness, and in mercies, and in faithfulness, and that for ever; so that, O astonishing grace! he that is our maker is become our husband. 4. By possession. We have him and all things pertaining to life and salvation with him; we have him in us as the hope of glory, dwelling in our hearts by faith, living there as in his own house and temple, and reigning there by his grace and spirit, as in his own palace; and those souls who can experience this, may say with the church, my beloved is mine; I have an interest in him, for I am in possession of him. Thus Christ is the church's. But, 2dly, She says also, that she was his, I am his, and that because he is mine. Now how come souls to be Christ's? I answer, 1. By the father's gift: He that gives Christ to us, gives us also to Christ; and this he did in the everlasting covenant, to be his bride and wife, to be his portion and inheritance, and to be kept and preserved by him safe to glory. Christ having pitched his love upon us, chose us for his own, and asked us of his father, who granted his request. Thine they were, says Christ, John xvii. 6. and thou gavest them me. 2. By purchase. He has bought us with a price, and that not with corruptible things, as silver and gold, but with his own most precious blood: So that he does, as he justly may, claim an interest in us upon this account. 3. By the conquests of his grace upon our hearts. He pulls down the strong holds of our hearts; enters in with his glorious train and retinue of grace; dispossesses satan, dethrones sin, sets up a throne for himself, and places his own spirit in the midst of us, which is the grand evidence of our being his; for if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his; from whence it may be inferred, that he that has the spirit of Christ, is one of his. 4. By a voluntary surrender of ourselves unto him; which cannot be better expressed, than it is in Isa. xlv. 5. One shall say, I am the Lord's; which is the language of the church here; another shall call himself by the name of Jacob, which is the name of Christ's church; and another shall subscribe with his hand unto the Lord, and surname himself by the name of Israel; and this, in new Testament language, is called a giving themselves to the Lord, and to the church by the will of God; so that as Christ is ours by his own consent, we are Christ's, by our consent, being made a willing people in the day of his power.

Now from Christ's being ours, it follows, 1. That all he has is ours; all his perfections are ours; not that they are communicated to us, for that would be to deify us; but they are all engaged for our eternal good and welfare, we have the comfort of them: Is he the almighty? then he is able to save us from law, sin, hell and death, and to keep and preserve us safe to his kingdom and glory: Is he omnipresent? Hence saints enjoy his gracious presence, in all places, in all his ordinances; he can be with them, when and where he pleases: Is he omniscient? He knows their persons, their wants, their enemies, &c. and is both able and willing to help them: Is he immutable? Is he Jesus, the same yesterday, to day, and for ever? They need not then fear any variation of his mind, any alteration in his love, or change in their state; and thus all other of his divine perfections serve to advance their comfort and happiness. 2. That all he has is their's; his person is their's, to render them acceptable to God; his blood their's, to cleanse and pardon them; his righteousness their's, to justify and acquit them before God; his fulness their's, to supply their wants ; and all covenant-blessings and promises which he has in his hands, are their's. Therefore, 3. It follows, that they can want no good thing ; for as he has ability to help them, he has a heart to do it, and will not withhold any thing that may be needful and proper for them, especially seeing they have an indisputable right to and interest in them.

Moreover, from our being Christ's, it follows, that we are not our own ; our persons, our time and talents, our gifts and graces, are not our own but his ; and therefore, we should give up all unto him, and glorify him with all ; nor are we any other's ; we are not satan's, for Christ has delivered us as lawful captives out of his hands ; nor sin's, for Christ has redeemed us from it ; nor the world's, for Christ has both chosen and called us out of it ; and therefore we should serve none but him, who has an incontestable right to us, and a sovereign power over us.

Secondly, These words are expressive of a near union that there is between Christ and his church ; these two are one, in a conjugal relation, as husband and wife are one ; my beloved is my husband, and I am his wife, and we are both one flesh. Which union is, 1. Personal : It is an union of persons, that is to say, the whole person of Christ, as God-man, is united to a believer ; and the whole person of a believer, body and soul, is united to Christ ; and by virtue of this union, as the souls of the saints shall be received into everlasting habitations, till the resurrection-morn, so the bodies of the saints shall be raised from their dusty beds, and shall then live with Christ for evermore. 2. 'Tis a spiritual union ; he that is joined to the Lord, is one spirit. Christ and his church being one, they have one and the same spirit ; Christ has it without measure, and the church in measure ; and this she has as the fruit of her union to Christ, and also as the evidence of it. 3. 'Tis a vital union ; such an one as is between the vine and branches. Where the spirit of Christ is given, a principle of life is implanted ; When souls are engrafted into Christ, they receive life from Christ ; nay, he lives in them, and maintains this spiritual life by fresh communications of life from himself, who is the fountain of it, and because he lives they shall live also ; as long as there's life in the head, there shall be in the members ; and because there is life in the root, the branches shall not wither. 4. 'Tis very mysterious. The union of the three persons in one divine essence, and that of two natures in Christ's person, are very mysterious ; these, without controversy, are the great mysteries of godliness : And next to them is this union of souls to Christ, which the apostle having spoken of, thus says, Eph. v. 32. This is a great mystery, but I speak of Christ and the church, i. e. of the union there is between Christ and the church ; that it is an ineffable and unconceivable one, appears from its being compared to the union of the divine persons in the God-head, John xvii. 21—23. 5. It is an indissoluble one. Christ and the church can never be separated ; the union-bond can never be broken ; And what is that ? The generality of divines say, that it is the spirit on Christ's side, and faith on ours ; but neither the spirit nor faith are the bond of union, but the fruits and effects of it : The reason why the spirit is given, or faith, or any other graces are wrought, is, because the soul is already united to Christ.

What

What then is the bond of union? I answer, Christ's everlasting love; 'tis this which is the cement, that knits and joins souls unto him: What was it that knit and united the souls of David and Jonathan together, and made them as if they had been but one soul, but love? What is it that knits the saints together, so as they appear to be of one heart and one soul, but love? This is the bond of union between them; and so it is between Christ and his church; and now who or what can separate from this love? This betrothment which was done in loving kindness and in mercies, can never be made void, this marriage-knot can never be loosed, this union-bond can never be broken; Christ's love is everlasting, unchangeable, and inseparable.

Now from this union flow, 1. An interest in all he has; he being ours, and we his by marriage; all his goods are ours, all the aforementioned things are ours. 2. A communication of names. The church is called by the name of Christ, 1 Cor. xii. 12. Jer. xxiii. 16. compared with Jer. xxxiii. 6. and Christ is called by the church's name, Isa. xlix. 3. which is somewhat remarkable; for tho' 'tis usual for the wife to take the name of the husband, yet not the husband the name of the wife. 3. Conformity to Christ. By virtue of this union, the soul receives the same spirit that Christ has, and has grace daily communicated from, is indulged with transforming views of, and therefore cannot but bear some resemblance to, him; which will more fully appear in the other world, when saints shall be like him, and shall see him as he is. 4. Communion and fellowship with him. Communion with Christ follows upon union to him; because his saints and he are both one, he is not ashamed to call them brethren; but takes them into his bosom, indulges them with his presence, grants them nearness to and familiarity with him.

Thirdly, These words are also expressive of the mutual affection, delight and complacency which Christ and his church have in each other: 'tis as if she should say, He is a beloved to me, and I am the same to him; he loves me, and I love him; yea, there is no love lost between us: He says, that the lines are fallen to him in pleasant places, and that he has a goodly heritage: He is well pleased with his portion, and I am well pleased with mine; for whom have I in heaven but him? and there is none upon earth that I desire, besides him. He says, that I am, in his eye, the fairest among women, the greatest beauty in the world, and so is he in mine; he is white and ruddy, a compleat beauty, the chiefest among ten thousand.

Fourthly, There is in them a manifest declaration of the assurance of that knowledge and faith which she had of her interest in Christ; it shews us that such a thing is attainable; and, sure I am, next to the enjoyment of the heavenly glory, nothing is more desirable; it is a mercy not only to have an interest in Christ, but also to know it, to be capable of saying, with Thomas, My Lord and my God; or with Job, I know that my redeemer liveth; or with the apostle Paul, I know whom I have believed; for this makes much for the comfort of souls. The church seems to speak this in the triumph of faith, rejoicing in the comfortable views of Christ as her own, and, as it were, boasting of it, excluding all other beloveds, as not worthy of her notice, and as not to be mentioned with her beloved.

Lastly, She tells us that this beloved of her's, was feeding among the lilies; he feedeth among the lilies; which may be regarded, either as an apostrophe to him, and may be read thus, O thou that feedest among the lilies; thou, and thou only, art mine, and I am thine. Or else, these words may be descriptive of his person, and prevents a question that might be asked, viz. who her beloved was, that she thus claimed an interest in? To which she answers, My beloved is that yonder person you see feeding among the lilies; and at the same time also points out to us the place where he was, and what he was about: His employment was feeding, that is either feeding himself; which Christ does when he delights and recreates himself in his gardens, the churches, and among his lilies, the saints, observing how their faith grows, and how that and all other graces are exercised upon himself: Or else, feeding his flock, as R. Sol. Jarchi observes; for as he bears the character of a shepherd, so he performs the work of one; he feeds his flock like a shepherd; see Ch. i. 7. The place where he is here said to feed, is among the lilies; by which may be meant, either a good, quiet, and delightful pasture, as R. Sol. Jarchi glosses it; Christ leads and feeds his people in green pastures, beside the still or quiet waters; and what can be more delightful than to lie down among, or to sit and feed where lilies grow? Or else, by these lilies may be meant the scriptures of truth, the precious promises and comfortable doctrines of the gospel, and the ordinances thereof, with which Christ feeds his church: Or rather by them may be meant the saints, who are compared thereunto, in ver. 2. of this Chapter. Now 'tis among these Christ feeds; and therefore do any want to know where Christ feeds, as the church did in Ch. i. 7. he feeds among his saints, where they are congregated in gospel-order, where his lilies grow.

Ver. 17. Until the day break, and the shadows flee away: Turn my beloved, and be thou like a roe, or a young hart, upon the mountains of Bethel.

THE former part of these words, until the day break, and the shadows flee away, may stand connected with either part of the preceding verse; either with those words, <sup>a</sup> My beloved is mine, and I am his; which are expressive, as has been observed, of that mutual interest, union, communion, satisfaction and delight, which Christ and his church have in, and with each other; and then the sense is, as long as day and night continue, and God's covenant with both stands sure, so long will my covenant interest in, and union to Christ, who is my beloved, abide solid and unshaken; I can no more be separated from his person, and from his love, than day and night can cease; and when they do, I shall be taken up into everlasting and uninterrupted communion with him, which is now subject to the same vicissitudes, as these returning seasons are: Or else, they may stand connected with the latter part of the preceding verse, <sup>b</sup> he feedeth among the lilies, until the day break, break, &c. and so are expressive of the continual presence of Christ in his church, until his second coming, when the everlasting day shall break, and all shadows of darkness flee away; till then, as in Cb. iv. 6. he'll be in his mountain of myrrh, and hill of frankincense; where he'll delight himself with, and feed among his saints, until all his elect ones are called by grace, and till all his lilies are grown up to their full maturity, when he'll gather them to himself. Though the words may be also considered as connected with the latter part of this verse, turn my beloved, &c. and so they contain a prayer of the church's, for Christ's speedy access unto her, and continued presence with her, until the day should break, and shadows flee away. In which may be considered,

- I. The favour which he requests of him, which is, 1st, To turn, i. e. unto her; and this she desires, that he would do speedily, and therefore says, be thou like a roe, or a young hart upon the mountains of Bether.
- II. The time, until which she desires this favour might be continued to her; and that is, until the day break, upon which, the shadows would flee away.

I. The favour which she desires of him is, that he would turn unto her; which seems to intimate, as though he was about to leave her, which, upon some account or other, she had a suspicion of, therefore importunes him to stay with her; and seeing him upon the motion, upon the turn, ready to depart, she desires that he would turn again, and continue with her: Or else, it supposes, that he was intirely gone, and that she was sensible of it; and having a great value for Christ's person and presence, desires that he would turn again to her: Such a petition as this, under a sense of desertion, is frequently put up by the psalmist, particularly in Psal. lx. 1. and lxix. 16, 17. and lxxxvi. 16. though the word may be render'd turn about or surround me, i. e. with thy favour and loving kindness; let me always be under thy care and protection; be thou a wall of fire round about me; so shall I be safe and secure from all enemies, until the glorious and wished for day breaks, when I shall be out of fear, as well as out of danger: And this favour she desires might be speedily granted to her, and therefore says, be thou like a roe or a young hart; which are not only loving and pleasant, but also swift and nimble creatures. She had experienc'd Christ to be so before, and therefore might the more comfortably hope that he would be so to her now: she adds, upon the mountains of Bether; by which, perhaps, may be meant Bitbron, of which we read, in 2. Sam. ii. 29. and was so called, because it was parted or separated from Judea, by the river Jordan. Though some think, it should be read Bethel, by a change of a letter; and so the Septuagint read it, in ver. 9. which is there an addition to the Hebrew text; though they here render it, ὄρη κοιλωμάτων, the mountains of cavities, i. e. such that were full of cliffs and hollow places; but be they what they will, 'tis certain that they were such places where roes and fawns used to skip and run. The words may be very well rendered, the mountains of division; which, if referred to Christ's first coming in the days of his flesh; may regard regard the ceremonial law, which made and kept up the division between Jew and Gentile, was the partition-wall between them, which was broken down by Christ Jesus: Or else, the two people divided by it, to whom Christ came, for whom he made peace, to whom he preached it, and thereby made both one. But if we refer the words to Christ's spiritual coming in a way of special grace, to visit his people; then these mountains of division, upon which Christ comes, and over which he leaps, as a roe or a young hart, may be our sins and corruptions, which often separate between him and our souls, though when he is pleased to come, are no obstacles in his way, but are easily surmounted or removed by him: But, if they be applied to Christ's second coming at the day of judgment; these mountains of division may intend the spacious heavens, in which Christ shall then appear, which, at present, interpose between him and us, and separate us from the enjoyment of his bodily presence; one part or branch of whose awful work then will be to separate the sheep from the goats. But,

II. How long does she desire to be indulged with this favour of enjoying his gracious presence, in the discoveries of himself, and of his love unto her, without which, she could not live, and therefore desires it might be speedily granted to her? And that is, until the day break, and the shadows flee away; which may be understood, either,

1st, Of Christ's coming in the flesh, which was the break and dawn of the gospel-day, until the day break; or, according to the Hebrew text, until the day breathe or blow: And naturalists<sup>c</sup> have observed, that, upon the sun's rising, an air or wind has been excited; so upon the rising of the sun of righteousness with healing in his wings, were raised some fine, cool, gentle and refreshing breezes of divine grace and consolation. Before Christ's coming in the flesh, it was night, not only in the Gentile, but in the Jewish world; there was a great deal of darkness, blindness and ignorance, infidelity, sleepiness and security; but upon the arising of this sun, and breaking or breathing of this day, all this was, in a great measure, dispelled, and light, nay a great light, was introduced; for Christ's coming was as the light of the morning, when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds; he came as the light of the world, and made that day, that gospel-day, which, by way of eminency is so often spoken of in the old Testament, when the shadows of the old law fled and disappeared: so the law is called a shadow of good things to come, and that because it was a representation of them, which were no sooner come, but this was gone, and like a shadow, appeared fleeting and transitory; and whilst it continued, was dark and obscure, though there was some glimmering of light in it, which led the faith of the old Testament-saints to Christ, who was represented by it: But now these shadows are gone, Christ the body and substance being come; this middle wall of partition is broken down; this hand-writing of ordinances is taken away, and the whole Mosaic dispensation and oeconomy is waxen old, and vanished; there being a disannulling of it, because of the weakness and unprofitableness thereof; and a glorious dispensation and bright day of gospel-grace introduced in the room of it, and all by the appearance of Christ, in our nature; which was the great thing promised, prophesied of, long expected, and earnestly wished for, by the old Testament-saints, as it was, perhaps, by the church here: Or else, 2dly, This may be understood of Christ's second coming to judgment, which, as the former is called that day in the old Testament, by way of eminency, as being that great, glorious and notable day of the Lord, so is this in the new; for the former, see Isa. xi. 10. and xxv. 9. and xxvi. 1. and xxvii. 1, 2, 13. and for this see Phil. i. 6. 2 Tim. i. 12. 1 Thes. v. 2, 4. and this as well suits, both with the Hebrew text, and with the natural philosophy of it, as the former: Christ's second coming will be at the evening, both of the world and of the gospel-dispensation; when the shadows of the evening are stretched out upon us, at a time when there will be a great deal of darkness and ignorance, much want of faith, and a very great steepidness and security, which will seize upon professors, as well as upon prophane; but upon Christ's appearance, a glorious and everlasting day will break, the shadows of darkness and ignorance will fly away; we shall know as we are known, and see him as he is; not as now, through a glass darkly, but face to face; all infidelity, doubts and fears, will be removed; everlasting joy will be upon our heads; no interposing clouds will be between Christ and our souls; but we shall have the everlasting enjoyment of him, and uninterrupted communion with him; there will then be no need of the sun and moon, of gospel-ordinances; for the glory of God will lighten both our persons, and the place of our residence, and the lamb himself will be the light thereof; so shall we ever be in his presence, see his face clearly, without any mixture of darkness and unbelief, and without any fear of the shadows of the evening returning upon us: There will be no more night, but one pure, bright and everlasting day. Moreover, naturalists<sup>a</sup> have observed, that the wind often blows fresh, and fine breezes of air are raised at the sun setting, as well as at the sun rising; so that the words, until the day blow or breathe, i. e. at the cool of the day, when the wind blows fresher, and there are gentle breezes of air, which often are in the evening, at which time it may be very well supposed, that God appeared to Adam in the garden, after his fall; I say, these words may be very well applied to the evening of the world, or second coming of Christ; which, though it will be with flames of fire, to take vengeance on the wicked, yet to the saints, it will be a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord; which time is earnestly wished for by them; their desire is, that Christ would be as a roe or young hart to hasten it; for, as he says, surely I come quickly, they return and say, Amen, even so; come Lord Jesus. So some Jewish<sup>b</sup> writers interpret these words of the day of judgment, and compare them with Mal. iv. 1.

C H A P. III.

Ver. 1. By night on my bed I sought him, whom my soul loveth, I sought him, but I found him not.

FROM hence it appears, that the day was not as yet broke, which the church had mentioned in the last verse of the preceding chapter, but that the night was still upon her, even the night of Jewish darkness, when the shadows of the ceremonial law were stretched out upon her; yet having some small knowledge of Christ, by types and prophecies, which had raised in her a desire of knowing more of him, as well as filled her with love to him, she sought after him; which, at present, was not attended with success, it not being his will, as yet, to appear to her in that manner she was desirous of; though indeed, the words may be taken in a more large and comprehensive sense, and may represent the state and condition of the church of Christ, and all true believers, in all ages of the world, at one time or another; and in them may be observed,

- I. The church's case, which was the absence of her beloved.
- II. How she behaved herself under it, or what she did in order to remove it; she sought him. And 1st. The person whom she sought is described; him whom my soul loveth. 2<sup>dly</sup>. The place where she sought him, is mentioned; on my bed. 3<sup>dly</sup>. The time when; by night. 4<sup>thly</sup>. The success she had in seeking; but I found him not.

I. The church's case here appears to be, absence of her beloved; which is not only manifest from her seeking of him, though that clearly shews, that he was absent from her, but also from the time in which she sought him, which was by night; for as Christ's presence makes the believers day, so his absence makes it night with them; as well as from the place where she sought him, and that is, upon her bed; which shews, that she was in a sleepy, slothful and secure frame of spirit, which is never attended with a lively sense and feeling of Christ's gracious presence. Now from this being the church's case, we may observe, 1. That the change of a believer's frame is often very sudden; not only their frames are changeable, but they are often suddenly changed: It was not long since, that the church was in the banqueting house with Christ, and there had her fill of love, and was sweetly refreshed with his gracious presence; and though she fell into a relapse of dulness and sleepiness, yet he, in love, visits her again, and recovers her out of it; insomuch that she became so lively in the exercise of her faith, that she could claim her interest in him, and relation to him, and say, My beloved is mine, and I am his; and yet, now she is at a loss for him, and knows not where he is; she's grown dull and sleepy, carnal and secure, and he withdraws himself from her; so that a believer can sometimes say, as the psalmist did, Psal. xxx. 7. Lord, by thy thy favour thou hast made my mountain to stand strong; and, perhaps, immediately, nay, almost at the very same time complain, thou didst hide thy face, and I was troubled. 2. That Christ absents himself from his own church and people; he hides his face from the house of Jacob, from his own flesh and blood, from his love, his bride and spouse; which he does both for her good and for the advancement of his glory. Though Christ's absence is very uncomfortable and disquieting to his people; they cannot tell how to bear it, especially when they are sensible of it; for sometimes they are not, but are attended with sleepiness, carelessness and security: He is gone from them, and they are not aware of it, and therefore are unconcerned about it, until such time as they are awakened by him; and then they are made sensible that he is withdrawn from them: Not but that Christ is always present with his church, in some sense, though they have not always the comfortable sense of it upon their souls. 3. That Christ's absence does not dissolve that covenant-interest and union which his people have in and with him; though there may be a distance, as to communion, yet there is a nearness as to union; she was his, and he was her's, now as much as ever, though absent from her; neither did it destroy that love and affection which she had in her heart towards him; for still 'tis him whom her soul loveth, though she could not see him nor hear of him.

II. What the church did in this case, comes next to be considered; she sought him; which shews, that she was sensible that he was gone from her. Believers are sometimes like Sampson, they wist or know not that the Lord is departed from them; but it seems that the church was apprized of it; perhaps she had slept quietly for some time, imagining that her beloved was with her, but finding herself mistaken, seeks for him. And from hence it also appears, that she saw her need of Christ's presence, had a value for it, and was in hopes of enjoying it again, otherwise she would never have sought for him. Now Christ's presence, when lost, should be sought after; 1. Timely, or while he may be found, as Isaiab says, Ch. lv. 6. for otherwise, by missing an opportunity, as Thomas did, he may be gone, as he was in Ch. v. 6. when the church opened to him. 2. With our whole hearts, not feignedly or hypocritically, as some did, of whom complaint is made in Isa. lviii. 2. nor with worldly ends and views; not for loaves, as some of Christ's followers did. 3. Fervently, and not in a careless and negligent manner; as it may be the church did here, and therefore did not immediately succeed. 4. With care, diligence and constancy, until he is found, as the church did afterwards, in ver. 2, 3, 4. 5. In proper places; as well as at proper times; as in the church of Christ, and in the publick ordinances of the gospel, as well as privately in the closet, by prayer, meditation and reading; and such seekers as these are most likely to meet with success. But it will be proper to consider more particularly the church's seeking of Christ here; where may be observed,

1st. The description of the person whom she sought; him whom her soul loved: which shews, not only the reality and sincerity of her love to Christ, whom she loved with all her heart and soul, as appears from her retaining an affection for him, even when in the worst of frames, and when he was departed from her; for nothing could separate her from the love of Christ; all the waters of afflictions, temptations, desertions, &c. could not extinguish that flame of love that was kindled in her soul. I say, it not only shews the heartiness and reality of her love to Christ, but also that she sought him from a principle of love, and not with sinister ends and views; she sought him because she loved him, and she loved him because he first loved her; and this is an indication that she was not wholly forsaken by him; seeing this grace of love was in her soul, and maintained there, by a secret and invisible hand, nay, brought into act and exercise, in some measure.

2dly, The place where she sought him is also mentioned, and that is, on her bed: By which we are not to understand the temple, or the church of Christ, and the publick ordinances thereof; for had she sought there, she had sought aright. Besides, these seem to be intended in the following verse, by the streets, and broad places of the city. This bed is distinguished both from that mentioned in Cb. i. 16. and also from that in Cb. iii. 7. in the former of which places it is called our bed, Christ having a joint property in it; and in the latter, it is said to be his bed, Christ being the only maker and principal owner of it: But this bed is said to be her's, by night on my bed; which was purely her own, and where she was without the presence of Christ, who was justly displeased with her for being there. Moreover a different word is here used than what is in either of those places: Some<sup>a</sup> by it understand the bed of contemplation; the bed being a proper place, as the night is a proper time, to have the thoughts composed in meditation; see Psal. iv. 4. but, it seems rather to intend a bed of affliction, sorrow and tribulation; which she was cast into, in which she sought the Lord, as it is usual with persons in such a condition; see Rev. ii. 22. Hos. v. 15. Though I should chuse to understand it of a bed of carnal ease and security, upon which she was fallen; and seems to be expressive of the manner in which she sought him, which was in a cold, lazy, lukewarm and formal way, rather than of the place where.

3dly, The time when she sought him, and that is, by night; which shews, that it was either a time of great affliction with her, or else, of darkness and desertion, this is manifest enough; as also that she was very uneasy and restless in her present condition, being brought, in some measure, to a sense of it; and that she had an exceeding great love for Christ, seeing, that at a time when others were taking their rest, she was seeking for him. In the Hebrew text the word is in the plural number, and may be render'd, by nights; i. e. one night after another successively, I sought him, but to no purpose; and so it may be expressive of her diligence and constancy in seeking, as well as of her condition when she sought.

4thly, The success she met with is here related, I found him not; either because she did not seek him aright, as James says, Cb. iv. 3. Ye ask and receive not, because ye ask amiss: So she sought and found not, because she sought amiss, in a cold and lifeless way and manner: Christ would not be found found in such a way of seeking : Or else it was the will of Christ, to be absent for a time, and not manifest himself upon first seeking ; not for want of love to her, or because he was regardless of her, but to exercise her grace, try her faith and patience, and to make her more earnest and diligent in her search ; as also that she might prize him the more when she had him, as well as be more careful to retain him ; which had the desired effect upon her, as appears from ver. 4.

Ver. 2. I will rise now, and go about the city, in the streets, and in the broad ways ; I will seek him whom my soul loveth : I sought him, but I found him not.

THE church finding that the former methods she had taken, were not attended with success, consults others, being sensible that she was wrong before, which she resolves to pursue without any more delay. In these words we have,

- I. The church's resolution, which consists of three parts ; 1st, To rise now, immediately. 2<sup>dly</sup>, To go about the city. 3<sup>dly</sup>, To seek Christ in the streets and broad ways thereof.
- II. Her performance of this resolution ; I sought him.
- III. Her success in it, which was as before ; but I found him not.

I. Here is the resolution of the church, to take other methods than what she had done before, in order to find her absent beloved ; which shews, not only that she was sensible that she had taken some wrong ones before, and that no good was to be obtained that way ; for Christ would not be found in such a way of seeking him, as upon the bed ; but also that her former disappointment had not discouraged her from pursuing her search of him ; nay, it had made her more lively and active, zealous and vigorous in it, as appears from this new resolution of her's, and her putting it into practice ; which consists of the three following things.

1st, She resolves now to rise ; that is, from her bed of sloth and carnal ease, and to appear more vigorous, and that now, without any more delay ; for resolutions are not to be breathed upon ; no time should be allowed them but the present ; we should immediately proceed to the performance of them, otherwise flesh and blood, which are too often consulted in such cases, will find many ways to elude them ; but these, as they are not to be made in our own strength, so neither are we to expect the performance of them by it : But however, the church resolving to quit her bed, and forego her own carnal ease and pleasure, in search of Christ, and that she might enjoy his presence and company, not only shews the exceeding greatness of her love to him, and the reality and sincerity of it, but also the uneasiness of her soul, and the distress of mind she was in ; she could not be easy and contented without him, and therefore resolves to seek until she found him.

2dly, She not only resolves to rise, and that directly, but also to go about the city. Her design in rising, was not to seek him in a superficial manner, but search the city, the streets thereof, and thus seek him whom her soul loved.

By city is here meant the church of God, which is frequently called so in scripture; see Psal. lxxxvii. 3. Heb. xii. 22, 23. and no doubt, but here is a regard had to the city of Jerusalem, by which name the church often goes, and to which it is frequently compared in scripture; but why it is so, will be shewn on Cb. vi. 4. and therefore I shall only, at present shew in what sense and for what reason the church may be said to be a city, which are as follow;

1. Cities being large and populous, and having in them great and spacious buildings, are generally built where there is a good foundation. The church of God is a city that is well founded; for the Lord himself hath founded Zion, and the foundation which he has laid there, is a sure one, and that is Christ himself, who is able to support the whole building, and will never fail; for he is that rock upon which his church being built, the gates of hell cannot prevail against it.
2. Cities are commonly delightfully situated, upon an eminence, in a good air, and by a pleasant river. The church of God is beautiful for situation; it stands upon rising ground; this mountain of the Lord's house is established upon the top of the mountains: It is in a good air, and is comfortably fanned with the gentle and refreshing breezes of the blessed spirit; it is situated by a pleasant river, even the river of God's boundless love and grace, the streams whereof make glad this city of our God.
3. In cities are usually fine, large, and magnificent buildings. The church is God's architecture; 'tis of his building, and therefore must needs be well built. Every believer is a temple, and that a temple of the Holy Ghost's. There is a great deal of glory, beauty and excellency in these buildings, as well as strength and firmness. See Isa. liv. 11, 12. Rev. xxi. 10, 11, 12, 18, 21.
4. Cities are very populous and numerous; there are a great many inhabitants in them; so is the church of God. 'Tis true, 'tis called but a little flock, when compared with the world, but yet, considered by itself, 'tis very large and numerous. John saw at once, after he had beheld the forty and four thousand, a great multitude, which no man could number; and that of such who belonged to Christ, and were saved by him; and so will the church, even on earth, appear very numerous, when those prophecies are fulfilled, which you may read in Isa. xlix. 19, 20. and lx. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8.
5. In cities, as there are large numbers of inhabitants, so there is a diversity of them, as rich and poor, good and bad; in Christ's church here on earth, there is a very great difference of its members; some have greater gifts and more grace than others have; some are more publick spirited than others, and so of a greater usefulness; some are real and hearty believers, others are only painted hypocrites; for there has been always tares among Christ's wheat, wolves and goats among his sheep, and some, who have had a name and place in this city, whose names were never written among the living in Jerusalem.
6. In well regulated cities there is a good order and decorum kept: There are good laws made, and proper officers appointed to put them in execution, as well as a good watch and guard provided for the security of the inhabitants. In the church of God, there are good and wholesome laws enacted by the great legislator, which concern the admission of persons into this city, their behaviour whilst in it, and their removal from it, if disagreeable; and these are preferable to all others, not only because God is the author of them, but also, because they are written upon the hearts of all those who are true citizens, according to that promise, Jer. xxxi. 33. I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts. Moreover, here are proper officers appointed, such as ministers of the gospel, who are to see that these laws are carefully observed and exactly complied with; who also bear the character of watchmen in the next verse, being set as well for the defence of the church, as to give direction and instruction to her. 7. In cities there are peculiar privileges which belong to the citizens thereof; and so there are in the church of God. All, who are Christ's freemen, and are fellow-citizens of the saints, have a right to all the ordinances of the gospel, to all the privileges and immunities of Christ's house; they shall never be arrested by justice, or be brought into a state of condemnation; nor is it possible for them ever to lose their freedom.

Now her going about the city, is, (1.) Expressive of her diligence and industry in seeking Christ; she lost no opportunity, she sought in all other places, as well as in the open streets, where ever she thought he might be found, or there was any probability of hearing of him. (2.) It shews the pains she took, as well as the diligence she used in seeking; for it must be very painful and laborious to go round about, or all over a city, especially a large one, such an one as Jerusalem was, to which the allusion is here made; her search was as sorrowful and as fatiguing, as that of Joseph and Mary, who, after three days search, in their company, among their kindred, and about the city, at length found Christ in the temple: But all this toil and labour, she regarded not, so she could but find him whom her soul loved. (3.) This being done in the night, which was an unseasonable time to walk about the city in, especially for women, is a further indication of the strength of her affection to him, in that she did not value the reproach that might attend her. (4.) She not only run the risque of reproach and scandal, but also of danger and mischief, which the night-season exposed her to, and which she experienc'd in Cb. v. 7. but being fired with love, and fearless of danger, she puts all to the hazard, regarding no inconveniencies that might ensue; for her heart was so set upon finding Christ, that she was resolved to try all ways, whatever she suffered in the experiment.

3dly, She resolves to seek him in the streets and broad ways; where we have, 1. The person, whom she was resolved to seek, described, him whom my soul loveth; which is the same character she gives of him in the former verse, and shews, that her love to him was still the same, was not abated, though she had been disappointed of finding him; nay, that it was rather increased, and therefore she repeats this over and over, as not knowing how to speak of him any other way. 2. The particular places in the city, where she resolved to seek him, in the streets and in the broad ways; by which, we are not to

to understand, places <sup>b</sup> where worldly business is transacted, and to which crowds of people flock for the same purpose; as the court, the market-place, or the exchange; for Christ is not to be found there; worldly employments, especially when immoderately pursued, rather draw souls from him than bring them near to him: Nor are the books, writings and <sup>c</sup> tenets of the Gentile philosophers, here intended; for she could not expect to find him there, where he was never known nor heard of: But by them we are to understand, either the Jewish synagogues, where prayer was wont to be made, and the word of God preached, there being a probability of finding him there; or rather the publick ordinances of the gospel, which are the streets and broad ways of this city, the church, in which Christ walks, and often shews himself to his people; and in seeking him here, she sought aright; though, for reasons hereafter to be mentioned, she did not meet with immediate success. But these phrases may, in general, intend the diligence and exquisiteness of her search, as in Jer. v. 1.

II. She gives an account of her performance of this resolution, I sought him, says she: She not only resolved upon it, but also did it; nay, she no sooner said it but likewise did it. Resolutions, without putting them in practice, avail little; and unless they are made in the strength of Christ, and are performed by the same, are never performed, either aright, or to any good purpose; but this of her's was quickly performed, she was soon enabled to set about it, being assisted by divine grace, and not left to consult with flesh and blood.

III. Her success is also mentioned by her, but I found him not; which she seems to take notice of, with much sorrow and concern, that though she had such an earnest desire after, so strong an affection for, and had been so diligent in her search of him, had spared no pains, and had run all risks of losing her good name, and of being exposed to danger, and yet he would not shew himself to her; she could not get sight of, or hear any tidings concerning him; and this still shews that strong was her love; for had she not dearly loved him, she would not have been so much concerned at her disappointment in not finding him. And now this was, 1. To chastise her for her former negligence in duty, and for her indulging herself in carnal ease and security; for he seems resolved, that as she had lost him through her ease, she should not find him without trouble; for we are not to suppose that he resented her present way of seeking, or her present behaviour to him, which seems very agreeable; but this he does to shew how much he was affronted with her former carriage. 2. To exercise her faith and try her patience. Thus, when the apostle Paul, 2 Cor. xii. 8, 9. was sorely buffeted by Satan, he besought the Lord thrice, that he might depart from him; but all the answer he could for the present, obtain, was, my grace is sufficient for thee. 3. To shew that even means themselves, though they are to be used, are not to be depended on; these cannot help souls to a sight of Christ, unless he is pleased, in them, to reveal himself; for when he hideth his face, who then can behold him? yet, nevertheless, they are to be carefully observed and diligently used by us.

Ver. 3. The watchmen that go about the city found me : To whom I said, Saw ye him whom my Soul loveth ?

THE church continues to give an account of her adventure, and what befel her when in the streets and broad ways of the city ; as how she was found by the watchmen, whose business is to take up and examine persons that they meet with in the night ; of whom she enquires after her lost spouse, but, for the present, can have no tidings of him. In these words we shall,

I. Enquire who are meant by the watchmen.

II. What by their finding of her.

III. Consider the question proposed by her to them ; Saw ye him whom my soul loveth ?

IV. Shew why no answer is mentioned, as returned to this question.

I. It will be proper to enquire, who are meant by the watchmen here : And by them we are not to understand angels, as <sup>a</sup> some, though these are thought to be called watchers, in Dan. iv. 13, 17. and are the saints life-guards ; attend upon their persons ; watch over them, and encamp about them : nor the princes and great men of the world, who have the care and government of kingdoms, provinces and cities, but are ignorant of Christ, and know not the Lord of glory, as <sup>b</sup> others ; nor false teachers, <sup>c</sup> who are called, Isa. lvi. 10, blind watchmen, dumb dogs, that cannot bark ; but rather the true ministers of the gospel ; the prophets under the Old Testament, and the apostles and faithful teachers under the new ; who frequently bear this title of watchmen, in scripture ; see Isa. lii. 8. and lxii. 6. Ezek. xxxiii. 7. The Jewish <sup>d</sup> writers interpret those words of Moses and Aaron with the Levites, who kept the watch of the tabernacle. The ministers of the gospel are called watchmen, either in allusion to shepherds, who watch over their flock by night, Luke ii. 8. or else, to watchmen in cities, as here ; and their work may be considered,

1. With regard to themselves : They are to watch over themselves as well as others ; they are to watch over their conversations, that they be as become the gospel they preach, and so they may give no ill examples to others, or cause the ways and doctrines of Christ to be evil spoken of, and render their ministry useless ; they are to watch over their doctrines, and take heed that they be agreeable to the oracles of God, that they deliver nothing but the wholesome words of Christ Jesus, and such as may be for the edifying of their hearers, and suitable to the cases of souls ; they are to watch all opportunities to preach this gospel, as the apostle says, 2 Tim. iv. 2. To be instant in season and out of season ; and then they are to watch and observe the success of it, and how it is blessed and made useful to souls. Moreover, they ought to have a very great guard upon themselves; for if the enemy can but surprize, decoy or corrupt them, it turns much to his advantage. Now ministers of the gospel should take heed to themselves, lest they fall asleep, or grow careless and indifferent in the work of the Lord; or are diverted from it, through the frowns or flatteries of the world; or be corrupted with errors and false doctrines; for these things tend much to the ruin of Christ's kingdom and interest.

2. With regard to others, their work is, 1. To give the time of night, as in Isa. xxi. 11, 12. The question is put, Watchman, what of the night? Watchman, what of the night? The answer is, the morning cometh and also the night. Sometimes it is night with the church: She is fallen asleep upon a bed of security. The wise virgins sleep as well as the foolish; it is then the work of ministers to give the time of the night, to apprise the church what a condition she is in, and to endeavour to awake her out of it: Tho' sometimes the ministers, the watchmen, are asleep, as well as the churches, and know not what time of the night it is, which is a dreadful case; and then are the churches of Christ in a poor plight and condition indeed. 2. Their work is to give notice of approaching danger; they are to give notice of the danger that sinners are in, who are walking in the broad road to destruction; and also the danger that churches may be in through errors and heresies springing up among them, as well as by indulging themselves in any vitious practices, which they are severely to check and reprehend. Now this work requires vigilance, prudence, courage and faithfulness; and also shews the necessity and usefulness of the publick ministry, which can no more be dispensed with than watchmen in a city; and likewise what care the Lord has of his churches, in placing such officers in them, as well as the awfulness of the work they are concerned in; for if the watchman does not discharge his duty, the blood of those he has to do with, will be required of him.

These watchmen are further described by their going about the city: By the city we are to understand the church of God, as in the former verse; and their going about it, is mentioned to distinguish them from those that were upon the walls, who kept their stands, and did not stir from their places; and also to shew their proper work and business, which, as it appears from hence, they were diligent in; and so it proves them to be true watchmen and faithful ministers of the gospel, who, in imitation of Christ, their Lord and master, go about doing good to the souls of men.

II. Being thus in the discharge of their duty, and using diligence therein, they found the church; which is the next thing to be enquired into; they found me, i. e. they fell upon the subject of my case and condition in their sermons, and exactly took notice of and spoke to my case, as if somebody had told them of it before hand, and as if they had particularly designed me above all the rest of their audience; which shews the power of the word, and its piercing and penetrating nature; it often finds out particular sinners in a congregation, and points out their particular sins unto them; it searches into the inward recesses cesses of their hearts, brings secret sins to light, sets them in order before them, and brings them to an open and ingenuous confession of them; likewise it finds and points out the particular cases of believers, oftentimes unknown to the minister, and unlook'd for by the believer, which seems to be the church's case here. 'Tis amazing how this is sometimes effected, insomuch that some have thought that some friend or other, to whom they have communicated their cases, have told the minister, and he has purposely treated on such a subject, to meet with them; tho' when they have more narrowly enquired into it, have found it otherwise, to their great surprize; nay, sometimes a minister, by stepping out of the way, going off from his subject, and making a digression, has met with souls, and hit their case, as Austin did with the Manichee. God has given many instances of the secret energy of the word, and the mighty power and grace of the spirit, in applying it to the different cases of persons. But,

III. Having met with something under the ministry of the word, suitable to her case, she is encouraged to take her opportunity, after publick worship was over, to speak privately to the ministers, and propose this question to them; Saw ye him whom my soul loveth? in which may be observed, 1. The person concerning whom she enquires, and that is, him whom her soul loveth. Christ is still the subject of her discourse and enquiry; whether she talks with ministers or private Christians, she's upon the search after him; and though she cannot as yet find him, she's not discouraged from seeking, nor is her love and affection towards him abated, though she cannot see him. 2. The manner in which she proposes this question, and that's very abrupt; for without giving them an opportunity to speak to her first, or using any preface to excuse her freedom with them, she immediately puts the question, as soon as she came up to them, Saw ye him, &c. where it may also be observed, as has been already, on Cb. i. 2. that she uses the relative him, without an antecedent, and does not express the person's name whom she enquires about; which shews the singular excellency of Christ, that he was the only him in the world; and likewise the singular esteem she had for him, the strength of her affection to him, how much her thoughts were upon him, and her desires after him; insomuch that she thought every body must know who she meant, and whom she loved, without mentioning his name; and more especially, it supposes that she concluded that these ministers knew whom she meant. 3. Her putting this question to them, shews, (1.) That she had a value for them, had entertained a good opinion of them, and judged them proper persons to apply to; which might arise from what she had met with under their publick ministry. (2.) That she was unwilling to let any opportunity slip, in which there was any likelihood of finding Christ; therefore she'll not only hear the ministers publickly, but converse with them privately; and such a practice is highly commendable in, and to be imitated by all the saints; oftentimes much is lost by missing an opportunity: What did Thomas lose by not being with the rest of the disciples when Christ appeared to them? Why, a sight of Christ; and not only so, but also fell into a fit of unbelief. (3.) That when persons apply to ministers, they should keep close to their own souls' cases, as the church does here, and not trouble them with long and tedious discourses, filled up with invectives against their fellow Christians, and animadversions upon their weaknesses and imperfections; but their chief concern should be the case of their own souls; and the subject of their discourse, Christ and his grace. (4.) That ministers had need to be well acquainted with the various cases of souls, that they may know how to speak aptly to them, and communicate a word in season to their refreshment; which, when fitly spoken, is like apples of gold in pictures of silver. But,

IV. Here's no answer returned to this question, that is here recorded; the reason of which is, not because they could not give one, or were those blind watchmen, which were without the light of faith and experience themselves, those dumb dogs, which cannot bark, and know not how to speak to the cases of souls, being unacquainted with them, of which we read in Isa. lvi. 10. Nor, it may be, was it because they did not return an answer, though she has not recorded it; and if they did not, it might be owing to her overhaste in not waiting for one; or if they did, yet she not being able to apply it with comfort to her own soul, takes no notice of it; and this might be, to let her see the need of a divine blessing upon means, and the power and grace of the blessed spirit to attend them; but yet, though she did not find immediate comfort and relief, she might get something from them, which was afterwards useful to her, as seems to appear from the following verse; for oftentimes the spirit of God brings to our remembrance, and sets home with power upon our souls, things which have been dropp'd in the ministry of the word, or in private conversation, which were of no use in the hearing of them.

Ver. 4. It was but a little that I passed from them, but I found him whom my soul loveth: I held him, and would not let him go, until I had brought him unto my mother's house, and into the chamber of her that conceived me.

THE church having sought about the city, in the streets and broad ways of it, for her beloved, and made enquiry of the watchmen concerning him, though attended with little success; yet is not discouraged, but keeps on seeking, till at length she finds him; which not only filled her with a transport of joy, but also put her upon using all the means she could to continue him with her, and secure his presence and company for the future. In these words are,

I. An Account of the church's finding Christ; I found him whom my soul loveth.

II. The

II. The place or time, where or when she found him ; It was but a little that I passed from them, but I found, &c.

III. Her behaviour towards him ; I beld him, &c.

I. The church gives an account of her finding Christ ; I found him, &c. She had sought, but not in vain ; that promise was made good to her, seek, and ye shall find ; which was also when all means failed. She had sought him privately, by prayer and meditation ; and publickly, by an attendance upon the ordinances of the gospel : She had heard the ministers of Christ preach, and had conferred with them alone, and yet could not find her beloved ; which may inform us, 1. That means, though they are to be used, yet not to be depended on ; they will not avail without a divine blessing ; Bethesda's pool must be moved by an angel, or no cure can be performed ; the spirit of God must move upon the waters, the ordinances, or they will not convey light and life to souls ; Paul may plant, and Apollo may water, but 'tis God only that giveth the increase. The most comfortable doctrines and precious promises of the gospel, opened and delivered in the most powerful manner, will not be useful without the special energy of the spirit. 2. That we should not be discouraged when all means fail, because he is found sometimes when they do so, as he was by the church here ; therefore, when, with Job, Ch. xxiii. 8, 9, 10. we have gone backward and forward, on the right-hand and on the left, and yet cannot behold him, we should with him rest contented, and say, He knoweth the way that I take, though I do not know which way he has taken ; and when he hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold. 3. This shews us, that unless Christ shew himself, there's no finding him ; for when he hideth his face, who can behold him ? 4. Finding Christ, when all means fail, gives the greatest discovery of Christ's love and grace, the freeness and sovereignty of it, and makes it appear that it does not depend upon our will or works, but upon his sovereign good will and pleasure. 5. Finding Christ after so many disappointments, must needs be joyful and welcome ; she seems to speak it with an air of pleasure, and in an exulting manner, as those disciples did, who said, John i. 41. We have found the Messiah, which is, being interpreted, the Christ ; for his long absence from her, and the fatigue she had endured in seeking of him, did but serve the more to endear and sweeten his presence to her.

II. She declares where or when she found him ; it was but a little that I had passed from them, i. e. either it was but a little space of time, as R. Aben Ezra observes, or I had got but a very little way e'er I found him. She is said to pass from the ministers, not out of disrespect unto them, for she had an intire value for them ; nor because she had received no benefit from them ; for they had hit her case ; though she had not present enjoyment of Christ ; nor was it because she was above ministers and ordinances ; for these will continue in the church, and are to be used by believers until the second coming of Christ : but this passing from them shews that she did not rest here ; that though she applied herself to ministers, and made use of ordinances, yet she did not forget Christ, but looked beyond all these to him ; and went a little further than she had done before, in the lively exercise of her faith upon him him ; also her meeting with Christ, when she had a little passed them, shews that Christ is not far from his ministers and ordinances ; for he has promised to be with them unto the end of the world : And therefore, there's very great encouragement for souls to attend upon them, not only from that promise, but also from the church's experience, here recorded by her.

III. Her behaviour to him is next mentioned. 1st, She held him fast, and would not let him go. 2dly, Brought him into her mother's house, and into the chamber of her that conceived her.

1st, As soon as she saw him, she laid hold on him, and cleaved so close to him, that he could not stir a step from her ; which, on her part, is expressive, 1. Of her faith in him. It is the nature of faith to lay hold on Christ ; the actings of it are frequently expressed by it ; see Prov. iii. 18. Heb. vi. 18. The believer lays hold on Christ as his saviour ; on his righteousness, and pleads it as his justifying righteousness before God ; on Christ as God's strength, to do all for him and in him, and on the covenant which is in Christ's hands, with all the blessings and promises of it, and appropriates them to himself ; Isa. xxvii. 5. and lvi. 4. 2. Of her love and affections to him ; and therefore she grasps him in her arms, will not let go her hold of him, nor suffer him to stir from her ; but could she have her will, would have him always in her sight ; and as Ruth said, Ch. i. 16. to Naomi, where he goes, she's resolved to go ; where he lodges, she will lodge ; his people shall be her people, and his God her God ; so pleased was she with, so dearly did she love him. 3. Of her fears and jealousies, lest he should remove from her. She knew the bitterness of Christ's absence, as well as had had experience of the sweetness of his presence, and therefore dreaded parting again ; was afraid of every thing that had a tendency to it, and therefore gives that solemn charge she does in the following verse. 4. Of her steadiness and resolution to hold him, whatever was the consequence ; though she might be reproached and persecuted for it, suffer the loss of her good name, and every thing else that was valuable in this world ; yet Christ, to her, was worth more than ten thousand worlds ; nothing could tempt her to part with him.

Moreover, on his part, these words are expressive, (1.) Of a seeming offer or desire to depart, such an one as the angel which wrestled with Jacob made, when he said, Let me go ; for the day breaketh, Gen. xxxii. 26. which, as it made him, so it made her cleave the closer to him, wrestle the more with him, and keep faster hold of him. (2.) Of a gracious allowance which he had granted her, to lay hold on him. It is a surprizing instance of his grace, that such vile, sinful creatures as we, should be suffered to come so near his person ; O astonishing grace ! that such should be invited to come, and should be welcome to lay hold on Christ and his righteousness, and not incur the crime of rudeness or presumption. (3.) Of his wonderful condescension, to be held by a creature, and that a sinful one. It was not because she was stronger than Christ, that she held him, and would not let him go, but because he condescended to let it be so ; for she received the strength from him, by which she held him : It shews indeed the great power and strength of faith, thus to hold Christ ; but then she had it all from him, who is the object of it. (4.) Of that delight and pleasure he took in the exercise of her faith upon him. As it does not argue weakness in him to be held by her, so neither does it unwillingness: he was no more held against his will than he was by a superior force; he was held by her because it was both his will, and well pleasing to him; without faith it is impossible to please God or Christ; in the exercise of it they are much delighted, and are well pleased to be held, as it were, by it.

2dly, The other part of her behaviour towards him, is, that she brought him into her mother's house, and into the most private and retired part of it, even into the chamber of her that conceived her; and this is indeed what she principally had in view in holding of him. By her mother's house and chamber, the Targum understands the school that was kept in the chambers of Moses and Joshua, where the children of Israel studied the law; R. Sol. Jarchi interprets them of the tabernacle in Shiloh; as does R. Aben Ezra of the ark of the testimony. Some<sup>a</sup> think, that by her mother's house, is meant the temple; and by the chamber, the holy of holies, which was accessible to none but the high priest: though Brightman thinks, that both these phrases are expressive of Christ's incarnation, which the church was importunately desirous of, which may be expressed by her mother's house, and the chamber of her that conceived her; because in becoming incarnate, he was a partaker of the same flesh and blood with her; and she may be said to bring him into it, because it was for her sake that he assumed human nature. But I think it should rather be understood, either of the visible church, which is the mother of all believers; see Gal. iv. 26. in which, many souls are born again, through the ministry of the word, and are nursed and nourished up with the words of faith and good doctrine, with the sincere milk of gospel truths, and the refreshing breasts of gospel ordinances; and Christ may be said to be brought in here, when his name is publicly professed in the congregation of his saints, his gospel asserted and vindicated, and his ordinances submitted to; when the mighty instances of his grace to his people are made known, and united praises, upon that account, are offered up unto him; and this, no doubt, the church had in view, in introducing him here, that she, and others with her, might magnify the Lord together, for all the special instances of his kindness to her; and that they might, in having fellowship one with another, in the house of God, have intimate fellowship with the father, and with the son: Or else, by her mother's house, may be meant, her heart, where the incorruptible seed of divine grace was cast, and where the new creature was conceived, born, and brought up, and where it grows, until it becomes a perfect man, and arrives to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ; and by the chamber of her that conceived her, the inmost recesses thereof, where she desired to bring him, that he might dwell there by faith; that he might live in her, and she in him, and so have intimate and uninterrupted communion with him; which is the purport and design of the solemn charge which is given to the daughters of Jerusalem in the following verse.

Ver. 5. I charge you, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, by the roes, and by the binds of the field, that ye stir not up, nor awake my love, till he please.

THESE are either the <sup>a</sup> words of Christ, adjuring the daughters of Jerusalem, young converts, who were the virgins, the companions of his bride, to give his church no disturbance, nor awake her, who was his love, before she pleased; for the church was now taking sweet repose, being weary and fatigued with running after and searching for him, till she found him: It is therefore the will of Christ, that now she be not disturbed: Or else, they are the words of the church, which is the more commonly received sense; who knew how to prize Christ's presence, having experienced a long absence, and had been at a great deal of pains and trouble to find him, and now having obtained her much wished for, and long desired end, she is not willing to part with him; but as she had had much trouble to find him, is willing to use some care and diligence to keep him; and being fearful, lest these young converts should by any unbecoming word or action, provoke him to depart, she gives this solemn charge; which is the same with that in Ch. ii. 7. where it is more largely explained. The Targum understands it as the charge of Moses to the people of Israel, not to go up into the land of Canaan, until the term of forty years was expired.

Ver. 6. Who is this that cometh out of the wilderness, like pillars of smoke, perfumed with myrrh and frankincense, with all powders of the merchant.

SOME of the <sup>b</sup> Jewish writers think, that these are the words of the nations of the earth, wondering at the coming of the Israelites out of the wilderness, before whom the Lord went in a pillar of cloud by day, and in a pillar of fire by night, which appearance was very surprizing to them. Though they are rather, as <sup>c</sup> some think, the words of the Jews, wondering at John the Baptist, and his ministry, of whom, all men mused in their hearts, whether he was the Christ or not; and therefore the Jews dispatched messengers to him, to know the truth of it. His first appearance was in the wilderness of Judea, which fulfilled an ancient prophecy concerning him, the voice of him that crieth in the wilderness; hither great numbers, like pillars of smoke, flock'd to him, to attend upon his ministry and baptism: He was a burning and shining light in his day: There was a great deal of zeal, warmth and fervency in his preaching, for which work he was extraordinarily fitted; being richly perfumed with those gifts and graces of the spirit, which are comparable to myrrh, frankincense, and all powders of the merchant. Others <sup>d</sup> take them to be the words of the Jewish church, wondering at the large number of converts appearing in the beauties of holiness, in the Gentile world, which before was like to a dry heath or a barren wilderness; see Isa. xlix. 21. and lx. 8. Though others <sup>e</sup> think Christ himself is here introduced, admiring the beauty of his church, and the graces of his own spirit in her; but I am rather of opinion, that they are the words of the daughters of Jerusalem, who, upon this happy meeting of Christ and his church, saw a greater glory and a more excellent beauty in her, than ever they had done before. And especially, it must not be supposed, that the angels <sup>f</sup> are here speaking and admiring the church's beauty, seeing these bear no part in this song; much less the church <sup>g</sup> herself, for this no way suits with that modesty and humility, which always appear in her; but it very well agrees with the daughters of Jerusalem, to whom so solemn a charge is given in the former verse, which excited and stirred them up to take a fuller view of her; and the more they looked upon her, the more they wondered at her; and in expressing it, thus highly commend her, which they do,

I. By describing her as coming out of the wilderness.

II. By comparing her ascent from thence, to pillars of smoke.

III. By saying that she was perfumed with myrrh and frankincense, with all powders of the merchant.

I. They commend her, by describing her as coming out of the wilderness. By the wilderness, out of which she is said to come, may be meant, either,
 1st, A state of nature, which all the elect of God are in, before conversion, out of which, by mighty and efficacious grace, they are brought. Now this may be called a wilderness, 1. Because of the barrenness and unfruitfulness of persons in such an estate. A wilderness is a dry and barren place; see Psal. cvii. 35. Zeph. ii. 13. and so are the hearts even of God's own people, before conversion; and therefore are called dry, parched and thirsty ground, Isa. xxxv. 7. and xlv. 3. which is only moistened, watered, and made fruitful by the effusion of God's spirit, and the flows of his love and grace. Whilst in a state of nature, they are like the barren heath or fallow ground, until they become God's husbandry, being broken up, manured and made good ground, so as to bring forth fruit to his glory. 2. Because a wilderness is full of perplexed ways; a man that is in it, is often at a loss, and knows not which way to take; and as bewildered is a man in a state of nature; he is a stranger to the way of peace, life and salvation, by Jesus Christ; there are many by-ways present themselves to him, which he is ready to imagine are the right; as his civility, morality, legal righteousness and external profession of religion, which tracks he follows, if religiously inclined; if not, he pursues the paths of open sin and prophaneness; and so he goes on, not knowing whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes; he is in a wilderness, and so he continues, until the spirit of God guides his feet into the way way of peace. 3. Because of the want of provisions therein; see Psal. lxxviii. 19. A man that is in a state of nature, has no spiritual provisions; no heavenly food; no divine refreshments; there is no bread of life here, only busks, which swine do eat; therefore souls that are in such an estate, are in a starving and famishing condition. Hence it is called a pit, wherein is no water, Zech. ix. 11. 4. Because of the danger thereof. In a wilderness, there is not only danger of losing one's way, and falling into holes and pits, but also of being devoured by wild beasts; a state of nature is certainly a dangerous one; the wrath of God abides upon such that are in it; destruction and misery are written upon all the ways of sin; these have a tendency to bring souls thereunto, which they inevitably will, if grace prevents not. Now, in this state and condition, God finds his people, when he calls them by his grace, as he did Israel of old; of whom 'tis said, Deut. xxxii. 10. He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness; but he does not leave his people here; he brings them out of it, which is an instance of his distinguishing and surprizing grace, of which the church here was made a partaker; and therefore the daughters, in a way of admiration at it, say, Who is this that cometh out of the wilderness! which is expressed in the present tense, because of the incompleateness and imperfection of the work of grace in this life; which, though it is at present unfinished, yet is continued and carried on, and will be performed until the day of Jesus Christ. Or else, 2dly, By the wilderness, out of which the church is said to come, may be meant this world; so the nations of the world may be, and particularly the land of Babylon, into which the Jews were carried captive, is called the wilderness of the people, in Ezek. xx. 35. And now this world may very well be so called; and especially the passage of God's children through it, may be compared to the passage of the Israelites through the wilderness of Egypt, 1. Because of the roughness of the way; the children of God, in their passage through it, as the Israelites did, meet with many difficulties, trials, and afflictions: In this world they must have tribulation, and through a variety of it, must enter into the kingdom of God; for the way to heaven, is ὁδὸς τεθλιμμένη, an afflicted way, or a way strewed with afflictions. 2. Because of the many pits, traps, and snares that are in it: This world is full of them, every thing in it is of an ensnaring nature to God's children; therefore let him that thinks he stands, take heed lest he fall. 3. Because of the many venomous creatures and beasts of prey which are in it; and therefore the wilderness, through which the Israelites travelled, is called Deut. viii. 15. the great and terrible wilderness, wherein were fiery serpents and scorpions; to which the ungodly men of this world may be compared, for their poisonous and infectious practices, their serpentine cunning, spite, venom, and cruel malice, among whom the saints are obliged to be whilst in this wilderness. 4. Because of the frequent want of provision, and the method of supplies in it. The Israelites, whilst in the wilderness, were often in want of food, and sometimes reduced to such extremity, that they thought it almost impossible to have relief, and therefore said, Psal. lxxviii. 19. Can God furnish a table in the wilderness? But yet notwithstanding these seeming impossibilities, and their frequent murmurings and complaints against him, he was pleased to give them meat to the full. So in this wilderness of the world, which yields of itself no suitable provision to God's children, they are supplied with food, and that in such a way, as the world knows nothing of. God feeds them with the bread of life, and gives them to eat of the hidden manna, the food of the wilderness: He refreshes their souls with his grace and presence, affords them spiritual nourishment from gospel doctrines, promises, and ordinances, and withholds no good thing that is proper for them. 5. As the Israelites, through a great many windings and turnings, came safe to Canaan's land, and were led by a right way, though not a direct one, but often backwards and forwards, to the city of their habitation. So the people of God, through various turns of providence, and many trials and afflictions, are led through the wilderness of this world, but yet always in a right way; in a way that makes most for God's glory and their own good; and shall all be brought safe to the city of habitation, and place of rest which God has prepared for them. Now the church is said to be coming out of this wilderness. Saints, though they are in the world, yet they are not of it, being chosen and called out of it; and then may they be said to be coming out of it, when they not only profess not to belong to it, but do openly withdraw from, and quit the company and conversation of the men of it; when their affections are so weaned from it, as that they can readily forsake, and cheerfully suffer the loss of all things in it, for the sake of Christ. Moreover, when neither the frowns nor flatteries of the world can draw them aside from Christ and his gospel, but regardless of either, are breathing and longing after another and better world than this: And when this is the case of souls, as perhaps it was of the church here, they have made a good progress towards coming out of this wilderness. Or else, 3dly, By it may be meant, a state of sorrow and distress, which the people of God are often in, in this life, but are sooner or later brought out of it. God sometimes brings them into the wilderness, into a distressed and disconsolate condition, being without his presence, and the discoveries of his love and grace; where having no views of Christ and their interest in him, they are bewildered in their souls, and scarce know where they are, or whither they are going; but he will not leave them so long, but will bring them out of it, and speak comfortably to them. Now in such a bewildered state and condition the church had been, not knowing where her beloved was, which caused her to run up and down here, and there, like a person in a wood, seeking for him, and calling after him; but now she is represented as coming out of this state, having gotten some glimpses of him, and enjoying some communion with him. But,

II. She is not only described by her coming out of the wilderness, but also this ascent of hers from thence, is said to be like pillars of smoke; which seems to be expressive of the motions of her desires and affections towards Christ; and shows, 1. That her affections towards Christ were afresh kindled, either by the fire of the spirit, which was applied unto her; see Mat. iii. 11. or of the divine word, which is compared thereunto, Jer. xxiii. 29. which powerfully wrought upon her; or else, by the presence of Christ, which sometimes sometimes causes the hearts of his people to burn within them ; this she now enjoyed, which stirred up her affections the more unto him : Now these being said to be like pillars of smoke, intend the first appearances of them ; for as soon as ever the fire takes, there will be smoke, and often in great abundance ; for which reason, the first appearance of grace, in young converts, is compared to smoking flax, Isa. xlii. 3. 2. That her affections were heavenly, and rising upwards, like pillars of smoke ; they were not set upon things on earth, but upon things in heaven, and especially upon Christ, who is there ; and particularly upon his person, blood and righteousness ; all which, take much with the believer's affections, and are exceeding precious to him. 3. Her affections towards Christ, being compared to pillars of smoke, shew the uprightness of them ; that they went up to him like pillars, in a straight line, and did not bend either this way or that. And it may be observed, that the word translated pillars, signifies <sup>1</sup> palm-trees, or pillars arising up in the form of palm-trees ; which grow very upright, even though very great pressures and weights be laid upon them ; and therefore the righteous are compared unto, and said to grow up like them, in Psal. xcii. 12. 4. The steadiness and constancy of her affections to Christ, may be represented hereby, which can by no means, be diverted from him, neither by the winds of temptations, the tempests of afflictions, or by the blasts of persecutions ; though 'tis true, pillars of smoke are, by every wind, easily turned this way or that ; but, perhaps the allusion is here made unto the smoke, which ascended daily from the altar of burnt offering ; and, if we will believe the Jews, this smoke could never be dispersed, nor bent by any wind ; for among the ten wonders which were seen in the temple, these are mentioned * ; viz. That the rain never extinguished the fire of the wood, which was laid in order upon the altar ; nor did the wind ever conquer the pillar of smoke, so as to disperse it, or bend it this way or that. 5. This may also represent the offering up of herself as a whole burnt-offering to the Lord, as a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God, which was but her reasonable service ; see Rom. xii. 1. Or, 6. It may set forth the obscure state and condition of the church, in this world, by reason of outward crosses and afflictions, which are such as hide her inward glory and beauty from the men of the world ; for though she is separated from the world, and is coming out of it, yet she looks like pillars of smoke, dark and cloudy, but little brightness or glory appearing in her to them.

III. She is also said to be perfumed with myrrh and frankincense, with all powders of the merchant.

1st. She is said to be perfumed with myrrh ; which may be understood, either of Christ himself, who is as a bundle of myrrh unto his people, exceeding grateful to them ; and which render them acceptable to God, being held in the hand or carried in the bosom of faith : Or else, of his death, which though like myrrh, exceeding bitter to himself, yet is of a sweet smelling savour to his father ; and a delightful perfume to believers : Or else, of his righteousness, righteousness, which is that garment of Christ's, which, whether considered as in himself, or as put upon his people, smells of myrrh, aloes and cassia; and with which they being clothed, their finell is as the smell of a field which the Lord hath blessed.

2dly, She is said to be also perfumed with frankincense; by which may be meant the mediation and intercession of Christ, which is that much incense, with which Christ offers up the prayers of all saints to his father; and with which their persons and their prayers being perfumed, they meet with acceptance with God, which otherwise would be a stink in his nostrils; see Rev. viii. 3, 4. Psal. cxli. 2.

3dly, She is said to be perfumed, or to be possessed with all powders of the merchant. Christ is this merchant man; the graces of the spirit are those powders which Christ, as mediator is full of; all which are sweet and savoury, rich and costly; the merchandize of them is better than the merchandize of silver, and the gain thereof than fine gold. Some read this last part of the words thus, which is above or more excellent than all powders of the merchant, a druggist or apothecary; for no spice in the merchant's warehouse, no precious drug or aromack powder in the apothecary's shop, is to be compared with those graces of the spirit, which Christ bestows upon his own people.

Ver. 7. Behold his bed, which is Solomon's: Threescore valiant men are about it, of the valiant of Israel.

THESE are either the words of the daughters of Jerusalem continued, as some think, who having begun, go on to commend the church from that communion and fellowship she enjoys with Christ, and from that safety and security which she has in him; or rather, according to others<sup>b</sup>, they are the words of the church, who perceiving that the daughters of Jerusalem were much taken with her beauty; and fearing, lest they should ascribe too much to her, to the prejudice of her beloved, she breaks in upon them, and proposes a far more glorious object to them to gaze upon and wonder at, even Christ, from whom she received all her beauty and glory; him she describes by his bed, and the guard about it, in this and the following verse, by the chariot he rides in, in ver. 9, 10. and by the royal crown he wore on his coronation day, in ver. 11. In these words we have;

- I. To consider who is meant by Solomon.
- II. What by his bed.
- III. The guard that is about it, which is here described.
- IV. Why a behold is prefixed to all this.

I. It will be proper to consider, who is meant by Solomon; and I apprehend, we are not to understand this literally of Solomon, the son of David, and king king of Israel, but mystically, of Christ, who was typified by him ; it may be said of this place, what our Lord said in another case, that a greater than Solomon is here. Solomon was, undoubtedly, an eminent type of Christ ; the whole seventy-second psalm, which is entitled, A psalm for Solomon, is generally expounded, not only by Christian, but also by Jewish<sup>c</sup> interpreters, of the Messiah, whom Solomon prefigured ; and there is an agreement and likeness between them in the following things : 1. They were both the sons of David : Christ, as well as Solomon was so according to the flesh ; God promised that he would raise up the Messiah from his seed, which promise he accordingly made good. The Jews lived in the expectation of him, as being to spring from thence ; and therefore, when Christ put that question to them, What think ye of Christ ? Whose son is he ? they readily answer, The son of David : Hence he is called both the root, and offspring of David ; as he is God, he is the root of David ; and as he is man, he is his offspring. 2. They were both the sons of God ; see 2 Sam. vii. 14. compared with Heb. i. 5. only with this difference ; Solomon was the son of God by adopting grace ; Christ by nature and eternal generation. 3. They were both Jedidiab's, beloved of God ; that Solomon was so, is manifest from 2 Sam. xii. 24, 25. and therefore had that name given unto him ; that Christ is the dear son of God's love, was testified by a voice from heaven, more than once, particularly at his baptism, and at his transfiguration upon the mount ; see Mat. iii. 17. and xvii. 5. 4. They were both kings and preachers in Jerusalem ; for Solomon, see Ecclef. i. 12. and of Christ it is manifest, that here he exercised great part of his publick ministry ; and here also did he sit upon the throne of his father David, though in a spiritual way. 5. He was a type of Christ in his wisdom ; 'tis said of him, 1 Kings iv. 30, 31. that his wisdom excelled the wisdom of all the children of the east country, and all the wisdom of Egypt ; for he was wiser than all men : And of Christ it is said, Col. ii. 3. that in him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge ; he as much, nay, infinitely more exceeded Solomon in wisdom, than he did all other men ; for never man spake such words of wisdom, his enemies themselves being witnesses, as he did. 6. He was also a type of Christ in the largeness of his kingdom. As God gave him largeness of heart, even as the sand that is on the sea shore, so he likewise gave him a kingdom suitable to it, and made him to reign over all kingdoms, from the river unto the land of the Philistines. Christ's kingdom, however small it may appear now, shall, in the latter day, be very large, for he shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth ; for when he takes to himself his great power and reigns, the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ ; see Psal. lxxii. 8. Rev. xi. 15, 17. 7. He prefigured him in the peaceableness as well as in the largeness of his kingdom. Solomon's kingdom was a peaceable one, as well as a large one ; he had peace on all sides round about him ; and his subjects dwelt safely, every man under his vine and under under his fig-tree, all his days; which was all typical of Christ and his kingdom; one of whose titles is, the prince of peace; whose scepter is the gospel of peace; whose kingdom is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost; and whose subjects are the sons of peace, on whom he bestows peace of conscience now, and will introduce them into an everlasting peace hereafter. 8. He was also a type of him, in the riches of his kingdom. There was such plenty of gold in the days of Solomon, that silver was nothing accounted of, but was as common in Jerusalem, as stones. Christ's riches are unsearchable; he has riches of grace and riches of glory, which he bestows upon his subjects, so that they are all as kings and princes. It may be much more truly said of all Christ's subjects, what the king of Assyria in a boasting manner said of his princes, Are not my princes altogether kings? All the subjects of Christ's kingdom are princes, and all these princes kings; and therefore it must needs be a very rich and opulent one. 9. Solomon was a type of Christ likewise in his marriage of Pharaoh's daughter, an Egyptian woman; one that was an alien from the common-wealth of Israel, and a stranger from the covenant of promise; which is not more surprizing, nor indeed so much, as that the holy one of Israel, the God of the whole earth, should espouse to himself such poor, mean, vile and sinful creatures, as we by nature are; so that he, who is our maker, is also our husband: Astonishing! stupendous grace! 10. He was a type of him in his building the temple, which prefigured the church of Christ; which is built on Christ, the rock, the foundation and corner stone, in whom all the building, fitly framed together, groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord; nay, it is not only built upon him, but it is also built by him, therefore to him all the glory should be ascribed; for he shall build the temple of the Lord, and he shall bear the glory, Zech. vi. 13. And now seeing that Solomon was a type of Christ in so many instances, it need not be wondered at, that he should bear his name in this, and in some other parts of this song. But,

II. The next thing to be enquired into, is, what is meant by his bed; and there is a variety of opinions concerning it: The Targum understands by it, the temple; R. Sol. Jarchi, the tabernacle of the congregation; in both which the priests and Levites watched and kept guard; R. Alshech, the congregation of Israel. Some<sup>a</sup> think that the temple of Christ's body is here intended, in which the fulness of the Godhead dwells; and which was guarded and protected from the fury and malice of Herod and others, by angels, who were continually ascending and descending on him: Others<sup>b</sup>, the hearts of believers, in which Christ condescends to dwell; which are kept by his power, and guarded by that peace of his which passeth all understanding. Some have been of opinion, that Christ himself is this bed; others, that it is his cross; and others,<sup>c</sup> that the happiness of the saints in glory is here meant; who dying in the Lord, enter into peace, and rest in their beds; which are those mansions that are prepared and reserved for them in heaven: Though<sup>d</sup> others think think that the scriptures are this bed, in hearing and reading of which, souls are often begotten again; they are written for the comfort of God's children, and being opened, are made very useful to them, where they frequently meet with Christ, and have communion with him; these notwithstanding the cunning and malice of wicked men, have been safely kept and strangely preserved by the providence of God, as the doctrines of them have been strenuously maintained and defended against hereticks by the ministers of the gospel. But I'm rather inclined to think, that by this bed, we are to understand the church of Christ; it is here Christ dwells; this is his resting-place; here souls are begotten and born again; and here he grants to his people nearness of access unto him, sweet familiarity and delightful fellowship with him. Now this may be said to be his bed, because the father has given it to him, and he has purchased it with his own blood, as also, because it is of his own making. But,

III. We now proceed to consider the guard about this bed; which are either the angels of God, who are ministering spirits to the churches, and encamp round about them that fear the Lord; who, as they are always ready, so they are able and mighty to do the pleasure of Christ, and to defend his church; who are as valiant and courageous in doing their master's work and will, as they are faithful and trusty: Or rather, by this guard about the church, we are to understand the ministers of the gospel; who, by night stand in the house of the Lord, and act the part of watchmen there, defend the truths of the gospel, and vindicate the cause of Christ against all opposers. These are described,

1st. By their number, threescore; which, perhaps, was just the number of guards which Solomon had every night about his bed, and that not only for the safety and security of his royal person, but as an indication of his majesty and greatness; and it may be observed, that these are just double the number of David's worthies, Solomon excelling his father in glory and majesty; though, perhaps, here is a certain number mentioned for an uncertain, which may be particularly mentioned, because it is a competent and sufficient one.

2<sup>dly</sup>, By their qualifications, valiant or mighty men: They are such who are strong in Christ, in his grace, and in the power of his might; and so indeed they had need to be, to discharge the work they are called unto; they are capable of digesting the word of God themselves, and of dividing it to others; they have courage enough to defend the gospel against all its enemies, and are valiant for the truth upon earth; they quit themselves like men, being strong; and stand fast in one spirit, striving together for the faith of the gospel.

3<sup>dly</sup>, By their original or descent, they are the valiant of Israel. The Israelites were noted for valiant men, and were a terror to their enemies; and these were the choicest, the very flower of them; these were Israelites indeed, who had something of the spirit of old Israel in them, who, as a prince, had power both with God and men, and prevailed.

ably, By their posture they stood round about the bed, on all sides; which shews not only their diligence in their work, and how careful they were, that nothing might prejudice the church nor disturb its rest and repose, but also the safety and security of it; not that this is all the security the church has; for besides the angels, and these ministers of the gospel, which attend it, the Lord himself is round about it; for as the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so is the Lord round about his people; but yet it is a great mercy and blessing that the Lord is pleased to set such a guard as this about his bed, or set such watchmen as these upon the walls of his Jerusalem.

IV. To all this, a behold is prefixed; which may be considered, either as a note of attention, to stir up the minds of the daughters of Jerusalem, to consider this great person, whose bed this is, which is guarded after such a manner, as is here represented; from whence they might conclude that if his bed was so stately, his person must be much more so: or else, as a note of admiration, which she takes up, not only to shew how much she was affected with the glory and greatness of Christ's person, and with those privileges which she enjoyed thro' and by him; as that she should be in his bed, where he condescended to grant her communion with himself, about which, so strong a guard is set, as is here described; but likewise, she does it to stir up the affections of these daughters towards Christ, that they might be filled with desires after him, and not be at rest until they also had some enjoyment of him, in whose presence she had found so much sweetness.

Ver. 8. They all hold swords, being expert in war: Every man hath his sword upon his thigh, because of fear in the night.

IN these words is a further description of the guard about Christ's bed: And that,

I. By their armour; they all hold swords.

II. By their skilfulness in using them; being expert in war.

III. By their readiness to engage upon any occasion; every man hath his sword upon his thigh.

IV. The reason of this guard, and their being thus armed, and standing in this posture, is also assign'd; because of fear in the night.

I. Here is a further description of the guard about Christ's bed, by the armour which they appeared with; they all hold swords: They are not only mighty and valiant men, men of courage, but also armed men, and therefore are more capable to act both defensively and offensively. Now by the sword, which they hold in their hands, or have girt upon their thighs, is meant the word of God; which, in scripture, is called, 1. The sword of the spirit, Eph. vi. 17. and that because 'tis a spiritual one; for as none of the weapons of our warfare are carnal, but spiritual, so likewise is this, which is no small part of our Christian armour; and which none but the spiritual man does or can use to any good purpose against spiritual wickednesses in high places; as also because 'tis made by the spirit of God; he is the author of it; 'tis he that furnishes us with it, and makes it powerful, and efficacious to answer the ends for which it is both made and used. 2. It is called a sharp one, nay, said to be, Heb. iv. 12. sharper than any two edged sword; which sinners have found to be true by those sharp threatnings and severe reproofs it has given for sin, and those cutting convictions which, in the spirit's hand, it has laid them under for it; for then it pricks the very heart and conscience, and pierces, even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit; it cuts and hews persons down, that are either going on in a course of prophane-ness, or are vainly boasting of their own righteousness; nay, it not only cuts but kills, according to Hos. vi. 5. compared with ver. 4. therefore have I bowed them by the prophets: I have slain them by the words of my mouth. Satan has often felt the keenness of this sword, especially, as it was in the hand of Christ, and managed by him against him in the wilderness; who repelled every temptation of his, with a for it is written; neither is there any weapon more powerful and successful in the hand of faith, when strengthened by the spirit of God, to resist that enemy of our souls, than this is; nor is there any that is more formidable to him, or more dreaded by him. Moreover it has appeared, and has been sufficiently tried to be a sharp sword in the refutation of error and heresies; it has at once cut the nerves and sinews of sophistic arguments, and laid open naked truth to publick view; and will still appear more evidently so in the destruction of Antichrist, that man of sin, whom the Lord will consume with the spirit of his mouth, and destroy with the brightness of his coming. 3. It is also called a two edged one: Christ is represented, Rev. i. 16. as having such an one proceeding out of his mouth, and the saints in Psal. cxlix. 6. as having the like in their hands; in both which places I am inclined to think, that the word of God is intended, whose two edges are the law and gospel. The law is one of those sharp edges of the word of God, which in the hands of the spirit, makes piercing and cutting work in the heart of a poor sinner; it lays open, not only the gross enormities of life, but also the vile corruptions of nature, and discovers the wrath of God, which is the due desert thereof; it not only accuses and convicts, but also curses and condemns; nay, becomes a killing letter, so that the poor sinner, under the powerful workings of it, is, in his own apprehension, a dead man. This sharp and cutting work of the law, the apostle Paul went under; this keen and sharp edge of the word of God he sufficiently felt, as is manifest from Rom. vii. 9, 10, 11. Moreover, the gospel is the other edge of this sword, and a sharp one it is, in the spirit's hand, to cut down both the best and worst in man; it cuts down the best in man, his goodness and goodness, his strength and wisdom, his righteousness and best performances, and lays them all aside, in the business of his justification before God, and acceptance with him; it also cuts down the worst of man; it gives the greatest blow at his sins and corruptions of any thing else, and teaches him the most powerfully to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts; it puts him upon an abasing of himself, and a magnifying of the grace of God. Now this sword, the

the guard about Christ's bed, had in their hands, and upon their thighs, to defend it from all the dangers it was liable to: and though in our bibles, it is rendred swords, in the plural number; yet in the Hebrew text it is in the singular number, the sword<sup>a</sup>; for it is but one sword which is the word of God, that these persons were acquainted with and firmly held for the safety and protection of the church.

And now by their holding this sword, is meant, not only their acquaintance with the word of God, and their apprehension of it, but also their retention of it, and firm adherence to it: They not only held it forth to others, but also held it fast themselves; which is a necessary qualification in the ministers of the gospel, or in those who are about Christ's bed; for having this sword always in their hands, they are in a readiness to war a good warfare; which they are not strangers to, as appears from the following character of them. For,

II. They are further described by their skilfulness in military affairs, being expert in war. These had been in God's γυμνάσιον, or school of exercise, where they had been, in some good measure taught, and were versed in the art of war, and had their spiritual senses exercised to discern between good and evil. The ministers of the gospel are in common with other Christians, engaged in a war with sin, satan, and the world; but being endowed with greater light and knowledge, faith and experience, as they must be supposed to have a greater degree of courage to oppose, so they must be allowed to have a greater expertness in managing a war with those spiritual enemies, than usually private believers have; having a larger knowledge of and acquaintance with the many windings and turnings of a deceitful and treacherous heart; as well as the depths of satan, and the cunning and crafty wiles and methods he takes to deceive souls; as also the various charming and alluring baits of an insnaring world: And besides all this, being set in a higher post and place in the church, 'tis highly necessary that they should be more expert in fighting the good fight of faith, against all opposers of the doctrines of the gospel; for it is not only proper that they should be mighty men, men of courage, who are concerned in such a work, but also men of skilfulness; who know how to use those spiritual weapons, which they are accounted with; so as both the truth of the gospel shall be defended and established, and error and heresy be refuted and overthrown.

III. They are also described by the posture of readiness, in which they are to engage upon any occasion, every man hath his sword upon his thigh. To have the sword upon the thigh, is a preparation for war, and an indication of readiness to engage in it; see Psal. xlv. 3. for being there, it is near unto them; they can come at it, on all proper occasions, and are thereby in a posture of defence. All this may be expressive of that familiar acquaintance which ministers of the gospel have with the word of God, and how near it is unto them; 'tis in their mouths and in their hearts; it dwells richly in their hearts, with which they meditate upon it; and it is in their mouths in the the preaching of it ; they can quickly and easily come at it, and furnish themselves with sufficient proofs of gospel-truths, and with proper arguments for the refutation of erroneous doctrines ; so that as they are set for the defence of the gospel, they are always in a posture of readiness to act for it.

IV. The reason of this guard about Christ's bed, and of their being thus armed and standing in this posture, is here assigned, which is, because of fear in the night ; which some understand of that dread and terror which is injected into the minds of men by evil spirits ; and so the Targum explains this, as it does also the terror by night, in Psal. xci. 5. of apparitions and evil spirits, which walk in the night ; which those who have the seal of circumcision in the flesh, which the Paraphrast supposes is meant by the sword upon the thigh, have no reason to be afraid of ; but is much better, in the Talmud<sup>b</sup>, understood of the fear of hell, which is comparable to the night ; though that fear which believers are apt to be possess'd of in their times of darkness, seems rather to be intended : And from hence may be observed, 1. That believers have their nights of affliction, temptation, desertion, darkness, sleepiness and carnal security. 2. That they are often possessed with fears, in such seasons ; as without are fightings, so within are fears ; as that Christ is not their's, that they shall never get to heaven, nor hold out to the end ; and are frequently terrified with the formidable posse, their enemies bring against them, to which they find their own power and strength unequal ; and therefore are ready to faint and be discouraged, and their peace, rest, and quietness in Christ much disturbed. 3. That Christ has provided a guard for his church, to remove those fears, support them under those discouragements, and defend them from those who would make inroads upon their faith and comfort ; and these are the ministers of the gospel, whom he has set upon the walls of Zion, and placed about his bed, the church, that so the outworks and fortifications of gospel-doctrines, may be kept firm against all opposition without, and the precious promises of the gospel may be opened and dispensed within, that so her peace and comfort may not be broken in upon ; which, as it shews the safety and security of the church, so it does likewise the tender care and concern of Christ for her.

Ver. 9. King Solomon made himself a chariot of the wood of Lebanon.

THE church having described Christ's bed proceeds to give some account of his chariot, which he had made for himself and spouse. The word here translated chariot, is to be found in no other part of the scripture, and is differently rendered. Some translate it a throne, which Solomon had prepared for himself : So Junius and Tremellius. Others, a stately palace or bride-chamber, which he had built on purpose for the more honourable reception of his bride : So David de Pomis, R. Solomon Jarchi, and Arias Montanus.

tanus. Others, a bed, which is so called from the fruitfulness thereof, which, in Cb. i. 16. is said to be green; but then it must mean such a bed, in which the bride used to be carried, as R. David Kimchi<sup>a</sup> observes. So that it seems to signify the nuptial bed, or an open chariot, or some such like thing, in which the bride was carried in pomp to the bridegroom's house: And in this sense is the word used in the Misnah<sup>b</sup>; where mention is made of a decree, that the bride should not go out into the city, באפריון Beappirion, the word here used, in the nuptial bed or open chariot; in which as R. Sol. Jarchi says, in his gloss upon the words, they carried her from the house of her father to the house of her husband: And so the Septuagint here renders the word by φορτίον, which signifies something in which persons or things are carried, and is very much like in sound to the Hebrew word; and some<sup>c</sup> have thought that it is this very Greek word which is here made use of, which might not be unknown to the Hebrews. And by this chariot, R. Sol. Jarchi and Alshech would have the tabernacle of the congregation understood; though the Targum and R. Aben Ezra understand it of the temple, which was made of the cedars of Lebanon; but by it rather is meant, either,

1st. The human nature of Christ, in which, as in a chariot, Christ made himself visible and conspicuous to men, and gave a glorious display of his greatness and majesty; for in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily; 'twas in this he descended from and ascended up to heaven, and by which, saints have access to God, and a communication of grace from him; for our way of access to God, and of acceptance with him, as well as of conveyance of all covenant-grace and blessings from him, is consecrated for us through the veil, that is to say, Christ's flesh. Concerning which chariot of Christ's human nature we may observe, 1. The author, king Solomon, Christ himself; and this serves to set forth the magnificence of it; for if it is the work of so great a person, it must needs be curiously wrought; and at the same time shews his wonderful humility and condescension, in that, one, that was possessed of royal dignity, should be employed in such a work; and in nothing did he give a greater instance of it, than in the assumption of human nature, in his being found in fashion as a man; which work is purely ascribed to himself; 'twas sine virili opera, without the help of man, that Christ became man; his human nature is the stone cut out of the mountain without hands, and the tabernacle which God pitch'd, and not man; and because of this, 'tis wondrous and surprizing; when it was first prophesied of, 'tis ushered in with a behold a virgin shall conceive, &c. and when the news was brought to the virgin herself, it was startling, and astonishing to her, and made her say, How shall this be, seeing I know not a man? But this being a work of God, with whom nothing is impossible, was effected by him; but though Christ assumed our nature, and became man without the help of man; yet not exclusive of the help and assistance of his father, who prepared a body for him, nor of the Holy Ghost, who formed and sanctified it in the virgin's womb.

2. The matter of it, and that is of the wood of Lebanon. Christ was conceived and and born of the virgin Mary, who dwelt at Nazareth, a city of Galilee, at the foot of mount Lebanon; and the wood of that mountain, which was cedar, being of an incorruptible nature, may very well express the incorruption of Christ's human nature; for though he died and was buried, yet he never saw corruption. Moreover, this being very excellent and valuable wood; may denote the excellency and glory of Christ's human nature, whose countenance is as Lebanon, excellent as the cedars; for though by his sorrows and sufferings, his visage was more marred than any man, and his form than the sons of men; yet he was fairer than any of the sons of Adam. 3. The end for which this chariot was made, it was for himself; for tho' all the three persons had an hand in making it, yet none but the second person appeared in it, it was the son only, and not the father, nor the spirit who was made flesh and dwelt among us; which was done for the shewing forth of his own glory, as well as for the sake of his body, the church. Or else.

2dly, By this chariot may be meant, the church of Christ, where he shews himself openly to his people, in his ordinances, and they behold his power and his glory in the sanctuary; here he rides in triumph over his enemies, from hence he sends forth the rod of his strength, and makes mighty conquests by his grace, over the hearts of men; here his gospel is preached, his ordinances administered, his name born up, his cause and interest carried on, and his person alone exalted: concerning which chariot we may also observe, 1. The author of it, Christ himself; 'tis he that builds this temple, and bears the glory; he's the rock, the foundation and corner stone, on which, and the chief architect by whom, 'tis built; there are indeed many workmen and under-builders, whom he employs herein, but he himself is the principal; his own hands have laid the foundation, and reared up the superstructure; 'tis he that has knit all together, and bears, supports and maintains the whole fabrick, and will bring in the head-stone, with the joyful acclamations of grace, grate unto it. 2. The matter, of the wood of Lebanon. The temple which was built by Solomon, was an eminent figure of the church of Christ: Now this was built of cedars, fetch'd from Lebanon, which tho' it was upon the borders of the land of Israel, yet was not in it; for Solomon sent to Hiram king of Tyre, for them, whose servants cut them down, hewed them, and made them fit for the building. Christ's true church is made up only of believers, such who are comparable to the cedars in Lebanon; who, though whilst in their state of nature are aliens from the Commonwealth of Israel, and therefore are invited to come with Christ from Lebanon, in Ch. iv. 8. yet are cut down from off their old stock, and being hewn and fitly framed for the building by the grace and spirit of God, are laid in it, and so grow up unto an holy temple in the Lord. And this wood of Lebanon, being lasting and durable, may denote the final perseverance of the saints, and the continuance of the church of Christ, which being built upon him, the rock, the gates of hell cannot prevail against it; 'tis as immoveable as mount Zion, and as incorruptible as the cedars. 3. The end for which it is made, and that is for himself. Christ has made all things for himself, and more especially his church, he has made for his own use; 'tis his house to dwell in, his garden to walk in, his bed to rest in, and his chariot to ride in;

he has also made it for his own glory, and indeed much arises from it; his manifestative glory is much increased by it; this people he has formed for himself, and they shall shew forth his praise. Or else,

3dly, By this chariot may be meant the gospel, and the preaching of it; which may be also represented by the white horse, in Rev. vi. 2. on which Christ rides and goes forth conquering and to conquer. The ministers also of which, may be compared to chariots, as Elijah, in 2 Kings ii. 12. is called the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof: in this chariot now Christ shews himself in all the glory of his love and grace; here, as in a glass, saints behold the glory of the Lord, and are changed into it; in this he's carried up and down the world, and by it is conveyed to the souls of men; this is that vehicle in which he is brought home unto them, and in which he triumphs over all his enemies, and makes his ministers to do so likewise: So that this is a triumphal chariot which he has made, and in which he shews himself to the world. And, 1. He is the alone author, as well as the subject, sum and substance of it, and therefore 'tis called the gospel of Christ. It is not the contrivance of human wisdom, the device of man's brain, or the produce of carnal reason; it was neither projected, formed nor delivered by man, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ; 'tis he that has given it to men, and given men a commission to preach it, and furnished them with all necessary qualifications for it. 2. The matter of it is said to be the wood of Lebanon; which being incorruptible and durable, as has been before observed, as well as of a sweet smelling savour, may very well be applied to the gospel of Christ, which is preached by his faithful ministers; who are not as some who corrupt the word of God, but in doctrine, and also in life, shew incorruptness, gravity and sincerity, and deliver sound speech, which cannot be condemned; which will abide and continue notwithstanding all the efforts of men and devils, and is of an exceeding grateful smell to believers, to whom it is the savour of life unto life. 3. This he has made also for himself, that is, for his own glory; which end is answered, when the riches of his grace and love are display'd, his person and offices magnified and exalted, and he declared to be the only way of salvation to lost sinners; as also when sinners are converted, and saints are edified under the ministry of the word, and the success of all ministerial labours is ascribed unto him. Or else,

4thly, By this chariot may be meant, the covenant of grace; in which, as in a chariot, Christ shews his royal person, and the glorious sovereignty and freeness of his love: By this, as in a chariot, many poor souls are born up, and supported under, and are comfortably carried through a great many trials and exercises in this life, and in which they are brought triumphantly to glory. The same blood of the everlasting covenant which fetch'd Christ out of his grave, brings souls out of the pit wherein is no water, and introduces them into the kingdom of Jesus Christ. And, 1. Of this chariot, Christ, who is here meant by king Solomon, is the author. Man is not in a capacity to make a covenant with God; he has nothing of his own, but what God, before all articles, agreements, conditions, grants and promises, has a prior right unto; but Christ, as the representative of the elect, has made a covenant with with his father on their account; his wisdom drew the plan and model of it, he then acting as the counsellor, or as <sup>k</sup> the angel of the great council; his power effected it, being the mighty God, and his grace filled it as the mediator of it; he had so great a hand and concern in it, as that he is called the surety, mediator and messenger of it; nay, the covenant itself. 2. The matter of it, or of what it was made, is the wood of Lebanon; which may intend the durability and inviolability of the covenant of grace; for God will not break it, nor alter the thing that is gone out of his lips; 'tis as lasting as the wood, and as immovable as the mountain of Lebanon itself; its promises are yea and amen, and its blessings are irreversible; it is of an everlasting nature, in itself, and can never be disannulled by men or devils; and contains things in it, both for time and eternity. 3. His end in making this is his own glory, as well as the good of his people; he had both in view; the former is mentioned here, he made it for himself; the latter in the next verse, where it is also said to be for the daughters of Jerusalem. Christ's glory and his church's good, are inseparable; his glory is great in their salvation; which shews with what wisdom, and in what a beautiful and excellent order the covenant of grace is made. It is interpreted of the everlasting covenant by some Jewish writers<sup>l</sup>.

Ver. 10. He made the pillars thereof of silver, the bottom thereof of gold, the covering of it of purple; the midst thereof being paved with love, for the daughters of Jerusalem.

THE church goes on to give some further account of this chariot, which Christ, the true Solomon, had made for himself; and says,

- I. That the pillars of it were of silver.
- II. The bottom of gold.
- III. The covering of purple. And,
- IV. That the midst of it was paved with love; and that either by or for the daughters of Jerusalem. Now the explanation of these several parts must be according to the several senses which have been given of the chariot, in the former verse. And,

I. If by the chariot we understand the human nature of Christ, then,
1st, By the pillars of it are meant, the several graces of the spirit, which both adorn'd and supported it; for besides the habitual holiness of his nature, and the innocence of his life, there appeared in him a strong faith in God, and that not only throughout the whole of his life, but in the midst of his dolorous sufferings, nay, when deserted by his father; as also great courage and magnanimity of mind, as well as much patience and humility in doing and suffering all he did. And these may be called pillars, both for the mighty strength that was in them; for grace was not weak in Christ as it is in us; and also for the support they were of unto him, in the exercise of which, the

chariot of the human nature was kept, as it were upon its wheels : And these are said to be of silver, to denote the excellency, brightness and solidity of those graces ; and which appeared to be so, even when as silver they were tried in the furnace of afflictions. And,

2dly, By the bottom of gold, may be meant his Deity ; and so denotes, that the substance of the human nature is in the divine ; the human nature never did nor never will subsist without it ; as soon as ever it was conceived in the virgin's womb, it was united to the divine nature, and has been ever since supported by it, both in its state of humiliation and exaltation ; it is this which lies at the bottom of, and puts an efficacy into all Christ's mediatorial actions, and makes them powerful to answer the ends for which they are performed ; the effusion of his blood, the oblation of his sacrifice, and the bringing in of a righteousness, would not have been sufficient to have expiated sin, satisfied justice, answered the demands of a righteous law, and discharged the sinner, had they not been the blood, sacrifice and righteousness of God ; it is the impress of Deity upon them, which makes them efficacious to answer all these purposes. Now this being called a bottom, is no ways a lessening or a diminution of the glory of Christ's deity, any more than his being called a foundation is ; but rather serves to set forth the glory and greatness of it, as its being said to be of gold, manifestly shews. And then also,

3dly, By the purple covering of this chariot, which seems to be in allusion to the curtains of the tabernacle, Exod. xxvi. 1. may be meant, either the passion and sufferings of Christ in the human nature, by which his garments were as though they had been dyed ; and he appeared red in his apparel ; nay, clothed with a vesture dipp'd in blood. So that the covering of the human nature of Christ may well be said to be of purple : Or else, it means his royal dignity, and his exaltation after sufferings, this being a colour used by kings and great persons ; he was clothed with a purple robe before his sufferings, by way of derision ; but now he is really made Lord and Christ ; he was then, in a way of mockery, crowned with thorns, but now, in the same nature, is crowned with glory and honour. And then,

4thly, By the midst of it, which is paved with love, for the daughters of Jerusalem, may be meant, the heart of Christ, which is filled with, and, as it were, paved with love to poor sinners ; or, as the word may be rendered, inflamed or set on fire with love : It was this that moved him to espouse their cause, take upon him the care and charge of their persons, assume their nature, and die in their room and stead ; which love of his, as to its quality, is the best ; as to its degree the greatest ; as to its duration for ever, from whence there is no separation, to which there is no parallel ; and at present, to us finite creatures, incomprehensible ; and all this is for the daughters of Jerusalem, the elect of God or young converts, that is, it is all for their sakes, and out of love to them he made this chariot, or assumed human nature, according to what is said, Heb. ii. 14. Forasmuch much then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, be also himself likewise took part of the same: Or else the meaning is, that such is the love of Christ towards these daughters, that if any one could but look into his heart, they would find the very images and pictures of them drawn there; who are not only ingraven upon the palms of his hands; but are also set as a seal upon his heart; which was prefigured by the high-priests bearing the names of the children of Israel in the breast-plate of judgment upon his heart, before the Lord continually; all which is expressive of that strong affection which he has unto them. But then,

II. If by the chariot we understand the church of Christ, then,

1st. By the pillars thereof are meant the ministers of the gospel; so of Jamas, Cephas, and John, the apostle Paul says, that they seemed to be pillars; and such as these are intended by the seven pillars, which wisdom had bewn out, and built her house upon, in Prov. ix. 1. who, for their strength, stability and support to the church of Christ, may be compared to those two pillars in the porch of the temple, which are called, the one Jachin, and the other Boaz; for these are of great strength to the building; there is a very great weight rests upon them. These are the legs in Christ's body, which, like pillars of marble, stand firm and immovable, notwithstanding the several pressures of reproaches, afflictions, persecutions, &c. which fall very hard and heavy upon them; for none of these things move them; but with an unshaken courage and magnanimity of mind stand up under them, and in so doing, are very great supports to the cause, interest and church of Christ; for though Christ is the foundation and the chief corner stone, yet these are pillars, and have their usefulness. Now these are said to be of silver, because of their valueness, both in the esteem of Christ, who has placed them in his church, and from whom they have all their strength and usefulness; and likewise in the esteem of saints, to whom they are made useful; for the tongue of the just, and especially of a gospel-minister, is as choice silver. These are the silver trumpets which sound forth and proclaim peace and pardon, life and salvation to poor lost and rebellious sinners; their words, when fitly spoken, and adapted to the cases of souls, either of afflicted saints or distressed sinners, are like apples of gold in pictures of silver. Moreover, this may be expressive of their shine and lustre, both in doctrine and life; who preach the gospel in its power and purity, hold the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience; and who, the more they are vilified, reproached, afflicted and persecuted for the sake of the gospel, the brighter they are, like silver purified seven times. And then,

2<sup>dly</sup>, By the golden bottom may be meant, Christ; who is the foundation of his church and people, on which they are laid and firmly built; and is the only foundation of their everlasting salvation, of all their faith, hope, joy and comfort here, and of their eternal happiness hereafter: And a good bottom this is: happy is every one that is upon it; it may well be said to be of gold, because of the glory and splendor of it; it is the foundation of the apostles and prophets, which they ministerially laid, and on which their persons are secured equally with others: Hence the foundations of the new

Jerusalem are said to be twelve, and each of them compared to a precious stone, to set forth the excellency thereof; nay this foundation is a super-excellent one; for other foundation can no man lay, which is in any respect valuable, or upon any account to be compared to this which is laid, which is Christ Jesus. Moreover, for the durability of it, it may be said to be of gold; for the righteous is an everlasting foundation; i. e. the righteous man's foundation is such an one, or he is built upon one that will last for ever; and such an one is Christ, a foundation that will never decay, but will all ways abide firm and strong; and is sufficient to bear the whole weight of the building, to all eternity. And then,

3dly, The purple covering may intend either, 1. The suffering state of the church; being attended with a variety of afflictions, tribulations and persecutions, and sometimes, as it were, covered with blood, as the histories of several ages testify. Or else, 2. Her regal dignity, to which she, and all believers, are advanced by Christ, who has made them kings and priests to God and his father; purple being a colour in use among great persons, may very well represent this. Or, 3. Her being clothed with the robe of Christ's righteousness; which may be said to be of a purple colour, because it is the produce and effect of Christ's blood, and is as it were dipped into it; hence believers are said to be justified by blood, in Rom. v. 9. Or, 4. It may signify her being washed in Christ's blood, together with the outward garments of her conversation, and so appear to be of this dye. And then,

4thly, By the midst thereof, which is paved with love, may be meant, either the hearts of believers, or of the church, filled with a sense of Christ's love shed abroad in them, or inflamed with love to Christ<sup>a</sup>; which though it is sometimes in a decaying and declining condition, yet is never entirely removed; for who can separate from the love of Christ? That is, either from Christ's love to his people, or from their love to him: Or else, by this pavement of love in the midst of the church, may be meant, the ordinances of Christ; which he has instituted for the sake of the daughters of Jerusalem, or young converts, through which he discovers his love unto them, and by an attendance on which, they discover their love, both to Christ and to his church; and the church again discovers her love to them, by a cheerful admission of them to these ordinances. But then,

III. If by the chariot we understand the gospel and the preaching of it, then,

1st. By the silver pillars thereof, are meant the truths and doctrines of it; which, like pillars, are solid and substantial, and continue firm and immovable, and not like chaff, which is driven away with every wind; nor like such combustible and perishing things, as wood, hay and stubble, but like gold, silver, and precious stones; and are of very great use to support God's children under the several trials and exercises which they are attended with, and that either in adversity or prosperity, in life or in death; and therefore, for their value, utility and duration, may be compared to pillars of silver; and ought to be as diligently and carefully sought for and into, as silver is, and to be received and preferred before it; for to get wisdom in gospel truths, is better than gold, and to get understanding in gospel doctrines, is rather to be chosen than silver, Prov. xvi. 16. And then,

2dly, By the golden bottom, may be meant, Christ himself, who is the sum and substance of the gospel; to preach Christ, and him only, as God's way of salvation to sinners, was the old primitive and apostolical way of preaching, and which God blessed and owned, and continues so to do, for the conversion of sinners, and the comfort of saints; that gospel of which Christ is not the sum and substance, is like a chariot without a bottom, and such an one is good for nothing; for who would venture to ride in it? But where Christ is the main and principal subject insisted on, there's a good bottom, nay, a golden one, or a good seat, ἀνακλίσθω, a reclining place, as the Septuagint render it, to sit and rest in, or lean upon. And also,

3dly, By the purple covering, may be meant, particularly those doctrines of the gospel, which concern our redemption from the law, and the curses of it, the pardon of our sin, and our justification through Christ's precious blood; for which reason they may be said to be of this colour. And,

4thly, This pavement of love, may signify, that the whole gospel is full of love; wherein, in a very lively manner is set forth the love of God the father, in contriving and drawing the scheme and model of our salvation, before all time; and in sending his son in the fulness of time, to accomplish what was agreed on before, that he should do; as also, the love of Christ, in becoming man, sustaining all the sorrows of life, and sufferings of death, and all for the sake, and in the room and stead of vile, sinful and rebellious sinners; it gives us such instances of love as never was heard of before, which never were, nor never will be parallel'd; its whole language is love, it is nothing else but a free promise and declaration of God's love and grace to sinful man; so that it may well be said to be paved with it: And how delightful must such a pavement be to the daughters of Jerusalem, to all young converts, either to behold or sit upon, where nothing but the love that is between Christ and his church is beautifully described? But then,

IV. If by the chariot we understand the covenant of grace, then,

1st, By the silver pillars may be meant, the promises thereof, which, like pillars, are firm and immoveable, solid and substantial; they are all yea and amen in Christ; not one of them shall ever fail, being free, absolute and unconditional; and therefore are called better promises, as being preferable to those in the covenant of works, which required conditions to be fulfilled before the enjoyment of the things promised. These, like pillars, are the support of God's children, under the variety of troubles they are exercised with; these yield them relief; are reviving cordials, and fill them with joy and comfort when nothing else can. O of what profit and advantage has a promise been to a sinking believer, when it has been seasonably brought, and suitably applied by the spirit! There are some promises which the saints would not have out of their bibles for millions of worlds; and these may be said to be of silver, because of their preciousness, richness and durability; they are exceeding great and precious, are of more worth than thousands of gold and silver, and will last for ever, being the sure mercies of David; nay, the more they are tried, used and handled by faith, the brighter and more glorious will they look. And then, 2dly, By the golden bottom of this covenant, must be meant, Christ, who is the covenant itself, not only materially, but fundamentally; he is not only the matter and substance of it, all the blessings and promises of it being comprised in him, but also the foundation of it: He bears the whole weight of the covenant, and is, as has been observed, the surety, mediator and messenger of it. Now this bottom, for its richness, firmness and duration, may be said to be of gold. Souls who are in this chariot, the covenant of grace, need never fear falling through; it can never be unbottomed, once in covenant, and always so; and therefore it is said to be ordered in all things and sure; because it has such a bottom it can never be broken, nor will it ever be removed. And then,

3dly, Its purple covering may intend the blood of Christ, which is called the blood of the everlasting covenant; by which, not only the covenant is ratified and confirmed, but all that are in it and are under this cover, have their sins blotted out, hid and covered; so that when they are sought for, and the most diligent scrutiny made for them by justice, they shall not be found. Moreover, their persons are hereby eternally screened from the wrath of God; so that though showers of wrath shall fall upon the heads of Christless sinners; yet all under this purple covering shall be safe, and not have the least drop fall upon them; but shall, in this chariot of rich and glorious grace, be safely preserved, protected and conveyed to eternal glory.

4thly, The midst of it being paved with love, shews that this covenant is full of it: 'Twas love that set Christ on work to make it, and engaged him to be the surety, mediator and messenger of it; 'tis made up of nothing but love; love has filled it with precious promises and spiritual blessings, and all for the daughters of Jerusalem, to whom love in time communicates them: O what a delightful and easy chariot must this be to ride in, which is lined with love! love's the hangings of it all around, and the velvet cushions and pillows on which faith leans; with what splendor, stateliness and majesty, as well as ease and pleasure then, does the believer go to glory?

The Jewish writers, as I have already observed, by the chariot, understand the tabernacle or temple; and by its pillars, bottom, covering and middle, the ark of the testimony, with the two tables of stone, which are more precious than gold and silver, the golden mercy seat, the vail of blue and purple, and the seat of the Shechinah, between the two cherubim, which are upon the mercy seat: To this purpose are the Targum, and the gloss of R. Solomon Jarchi upon the place.

Moreover, besides the several senses which have been already given of these words, it may not be amiss to observe, that by this bride-chamber, as some render the word in ver. 9. may be meant the heavenly palace; and how well the description of it in this verse agrees with what is given of the new Jerusalem,

Jerusalem, in Rev. xxi. will best appear by comparing both together; which bridal palace Christ is now preparing for his spouse, and when that is ready for her, and she for that, being perfumed with myrrh and frankincense, she shall be kindly welcomed and cheerfully received; where the nuptial feast will be kept to all eternity, and Christ shall be seen by all the daughters of Zion, in all his glory, and with his royal diadem upon his head, as he is described in the following verse.

Ver. II. Go forth, O ye daughters of Zion, and behold king Solomon with the crown wherewith his mother crowned him, in the day of his espousals, and in the day of the gladness of his heart.

THESE are not the words of Christ, for he is the person spoken of and represented in this glorious manner; nor are they the speech of the daughters of Jerusalem, young converts, for they are the persons spoken to, who are here called the daughters of Zion; nor are they to be considered as the angels exhortation to all the elect to forsake the world, and contemplate Christ by faith in the glory of his kingdom, after his resurrection, as some<sup>a</sup> think; but they are the words of the church, who observing that the daughters of Jerusalem were first struck with admiration at the sight of her, as coming up out of the wilderness, in ver. 6. and that their eyes were now intently fixed upon the bed and chariot she had been describing in the former verses, calls them off from these things, and proposes a far more glorious object to them, to whom her own glory was not to be compared; nay, king Solomon, in all his glory, either on his coronation, or marriage-day, to which the allusion seems to be, cannot equal him; and if his bed and chariot were so acceptable to them, and gave them so much pleasure to behold, she might well conclude, that a sight of his person, especially in all his regal glory, could not but be grateful to them; and therefore bids them go forth and behold him, to which, no doubt, they would be forward enough; for the sight of a crowned king, as he passes along the streets, especially on his coronation-day, is very desirable to people, who come forth out of their houses, or look out of their windows to behold the sight.

There is a very great variety in the opinions of interpreters about the time to which these words should be referred. The ancient Jewish writers<sup>b</sup> refer them to the time of Solomon's finishing the temple, and his dedication of it, and to the joy and gladness which appeared on that solemn occasion; but that was neither his coronation nor his marriage-day. R. Solomon Jarchi applies them to the time of the giving of the law, when the Israelites acknowledged God as their king, by subjecting themselves to it; for though Moses was legislator, yet God was king in Jeshurun; as also to the erection and dedication of the tabernacle in the wilderness: Others refer them to the time of Solomon's being crowned king of Israel, which may be ascribed to his mother ther Barthabas, as the <sup>b</sup> moral cause of it; who, by her intreaties and supplications procured it for him; and which also was the day of his espousals to the people of Israel, and, no doubt, the day of the gladness of his heart. Others <sup>c</sup> refer them to the time of his marriage to Pharaoh's daughter, at which time it was the custom, not only of other nations <sup>d</sup> but of the Jews, to crown married persons, to which, perhaps, the allusion is made in Ezek. xvi. 12. and of those nuptial crowns mention is made in the Misnah: <sup>e</sup> Others <sup>f</sup> refer them to the incarnation of Christ, and think that by the crown is meant his humanity, which he received from his mother, the virgin Mary, at which time he espoused our nature, and was no less a day of gladness to him than to us; it being what he gladly performed, and had been long desirous of, as is manifest from the several preludiums of it in the old testament; though others <sup>g</sup> have been of opinion, that the words regard the passion and sufferings of Christ, at which time he was crowned with a crown of thorns, and by his blood purchased and espoused the church to himself, which bloody baptism of his, was so desirable to him, that he was even strained until it was accomplished; but though the allusion, as I have already hinted, is to the coronation and marriage-day of king Solomon, yet I should rather think that the words have reference to Christ as the glorious mediator, when first discovered to a poor sinner, in all the fulness of his grace, as sitting and riding in the chariot of the everlasting gospel; concerning which we may observe,

First, The persons who are spoken to and exhorted to go forth and behold Christ, and they are the daughters of Zion; Zion was a mount, situate on the north side of Jerusalem, and is sometimes used for the city itself, and was a figure of the church of Christ, which sometimes bears this name in scripture: By the daughters of it, we are to understand the same who are in this song, often called the daughters of Jerusalem; by which we have all along understood young converts; who may be called the daughters of Zion, because Christ, who is here thus gloriously described, is king thereof; see Psal. cxlix. 2. Zach. ix. 9.

Secondly, The object which is proposed to them to behold, is king Solomon, or the Lord Jesus Christ, who is greater than Solomon, and was typified by him, and in what respects has been shewn on ver. 7. And it may not be amiss to remark, what one <sup>b</sup> well observes, that there is a manifest gradation in these verses; in ver. 7. he is only called Solomon; in ver. 9. king Solomon; and here in this verse, king Solomon with a crown; for as the same author observes, "The longer she speaks of Christ, and insists in mentioning his excellency, her thoughts draw the deeper, she sets him up the higher, and becomes warmer in her apprehensions, affections and expressions concerning him." And therefore I shall now,

1st. By his mother, we are not to understand Bathsheba, the mother of Solomon, nor the virgin Mary, the natural mother of Christ; but either the church of Christ, the Jerusalem above, which is the mother of us all, who being the mother of Christ mystical, may be said to be the mother of Christ also: Or else, every particular believer may be intended, who stands related to Christ as his brother, and as one who has sucked the breasts of one and the same mother; see Ch. viii. 1. who not only is called Christ's brother and sister, but also his mother, Mat. xii. 50. in whose heart Christ is formed, by whom he is affectionately loved, even as an only child is by a tender mother, and for whose honour, glory, and interest, there is a very great concern. But,

2<sup>dly</sup>, What is meant by this crown, wherewith he is crowned by his mother. Christ has a crown and kingdom, as he is God, equal with the father; but this is not put upon him, or given to him by any; he has a natural right unto it, which none can give or take away from him; he being in the form of God, and in all respects equal to him, thought it no robbery to assume this crown and kingdom to himself. He has also one as he is mediator; and this is put upon him, not by his mother, but by his father, who has anointed him with the oil of gladness above his fellows, and placed him as king over his holy hill of Zion, and set a crown of pure gold upon his head. And thus now, by faith, believers see him crowned with glory and honour; all which will more manifestly appear at the last day, when there will be a more open and visible coronation of Christ, than has hitherto been; though he has very often now a crown given to him, as the triumphant conqueror over the hearts of men, by the mighty power of his grace display'd in the everlasting gospel, in which he goes forth conquering and to conquer: But it seems to me that the crown which is here meant, is that which every true believer puts on Christ, when their souls are brought to venture on him, and believe in him; every act of faith is a putting the crown on Christ's head; and every submission to his commands and ordinances, is an acknowledging of him as king of saints; and the giving up of their souls unto him, and owning him as their head and husband, is a crown of glory, and a royal diadem in his hand; even as converts are a crown of rejoicing to ministers, and a virtuous woman is a crown to her husband: and in nothing more do believers do this, than when they ascribe all they have, and are, to his grace, and say with the apostle, 'Tis by the grace of Christ I am what I am; for by so doing, they not only cast their crowns at Christ's feet, but set another upon his head; whereas on the contrary, they take the crown from off Christ's head, who do not believe on him, despise his commands, neglect his ordinances, and ascribe their salvation either in whole or in part unto themselves, their own works and duties. Moreover, this honour Christ justly deserves from us; and it is an incumbent duty to give it to him; for he, in creation, crowned man, and set him over all the works of his hands, and made him but little inferior to the angels themselves, and by his incarnation has crowned the human nature with such glory and honour as it never had in a state of innocence itself; it being united to a divine person, and is now exalted at the father's right hand, which is an honour none of the angelick race ever enjoyed; for to which of the angels said he at any time, sit at my right hand? who also, in the redemption of us from the curse of the law, the slavery and servitude of sin, satan and the world, in the remission of our sins by his blood, the justification of our persons by his righteousness, and sanctification of our hearts and natures by his grace and spirit, has crowned us with loving kindness and tender mercies: In short, he has laid up for us a crown of righteousness, life and glory, which he, the righteous judge, will give unto, and put upon the heads of all his people; so that there is a great deal of reason to crown Christ, and acknowledge him alone, as our lord and king, our head and husband, our saviour and redeemer, who was crowned with thorns for us, and has crowned us with his grace now, and will, e'er long, crown us with glory. But,

3dly, The time of this coronation is next to be enquired into, and that is said to be in the day of his espousals, that is, on his marriage-day; for Christ's coronation and marriage-day are one and the same day. Now by this day of his espousals, we are to understand the time of a poor sinner's being enabled, by mighty grace, to give up itself to the Lord, when it consents to be his for ever. This marriage was made and agreed upon in the everlasting council and covenant of grace and peace; Christ made it his request to his father, and he granted him it; he gave his full consent unto it; so that there remained only the actual consent of the persons themselves, for whom Christ had such a strong love and affection; which is obtained by the powerful workings of his grace and spirit, in time, upon their hearts, and that often under the ministry of the word, where they are espoused as a chaste virgin to Christ; at which time there is a large breaking forth, not only of Christ's love to and upon their hearts, but also of theirs to Christ; which is called the love of their espousals, and which Christ afterwards remembers when it has grown cold and chill towards him. Thus every time that a particular soul is brought to Christ, it is both a coronation, and an espousal-day; but the great coronation and espousal-day is yet to come, when all the elect shall be brought in, and it shall be said, The marriage of the lamb is come, and the bride is ready; then shall the king, with her, enter into the marriage-chamber, where the nuptials will be solemnized, and he openly and publicly crowned king of saints, where he will reign with them to all eternity. Some of the Jewish writers interpret this day of espousals of the days of the Messiah<sup>1</sup>.

Now this day of his espousals, with particular believers, as well as the more glorious one that is to come, is called the day of the gladness of his heart; which shews how welcome poor sinners are to Christ, and how gladly and cheerfully he receives them; it is not only the joy of angels, but the joy and gladness of his heart, when sinners are converted to him, and believe on him; the bridegroom cannot more rejoice over his bride on his marriage-day, than Christ does over poor coming sinners; and when all his saints are together with him in heaven, to behold his glory, what joy and gladness will then fill his heart? But,

Fourthly, We may observe the duty which is enjoined those daughters of Zion, and that is, 1. To go forth, i. e. out of themselves; for a man can never see any glory and excellency in Christ until he looks out of himself alone to him. The church would have these daughters turn away their eyes from every thing else, and view this glorious object only; for every thing else, though never so valuable, is to be forsaken and left for the sake of him who is preferable to all enjoyments whatever. 2. To behold him. The former is in order to this; for as persons sitting within doors, cannot behold an object that is passing by, unless they arise, get up, and go forth or look out; so neither can believers discern this glorious object without going forth. The church would have these daughters behold Christ with attention, affection, faith and admiration; she would have them fix their eyes upon him, look upon him, and love him; look upon him and believe in him; look upon him and wonder at him; for there are astonishing beauties, incomparable excellencies, transcendent glories in him, which deserve such looks as these.

C H A P. IV.

Ver. 1. Behold thou art fair, my love, behold thou art fair, thou hast doves eyes within thy locks: Thy hair is as a flock of goats, that appear from mount Gilead.

IN these words Christ reassumes his part in this song, and enters upon a commendation of his church's beauty; which he does,

First, More generally, by asserting it, when he says, Behold thou art fair, &c. in which general commendation of her beauty, we have, 1st, An affectionate character given to her, my love. 2<sup>dly</sup>, Something asserted of her, that she was fair. 3<sup>dly</sup>, This assertion repeated. 4<sup>thly</sup>, To this assertion the word behold prefixed. This commendation we have already met with, expressed in the same words, in Ch. i. 15. where this kind and loving character has been opened; in what sense the church may be said to be fair, shewn; as also the reasons of Christ's repeating this assertion, and prefixing to it the word behold, are given: The reasons why these words are again mentioned by him, perhaps, may be to shew how much his heart was taken with her beauty; that his love to her was the same as ever it was, notwithstanding her sleepy frames and unbecoming carriage to him; as also because she might stand in need of the fresh discoveries of his love.

Secondly, He gives some particular instances of her beauty in this and the four following verses.

1st, He describes the beauty of her eyes, and asserts that she has doves eyes within her locks; in which words we are to consider, 1. What we are to understand by her eyes. 2. Why they are called doves eyes. 3. Why they are said to be within her locks.

1. By the church's eyes we may understand, either the ministers of the gospel, who are to the church what eyes are to an human body; they are placed in the more eminent part of Christ's body the church, to watch overlook, guide and direct the other members of the body: Or else, by them may be intended, the eyes of our understanding, being illuminated by the divine spirit; and more especially the eye of faith, by which a soul, enlightened by divine grace, beholds the glory, fulness and suitableness of Christ, and looks to him alone for life and salvation.

2. These eyes are called doves eyes. Why ministers of the gospel are compared to doves, and the eye of faith said to be a dove's eye, have been already shewn in Cb. i. 15.

3. These eyes are said to be within her locks; which, if applied to the ministers of the gospel, may denote, 1. The imperfection of their light and knowledge, and that a great deal of darkness and obscurity attend them; they know but in part, and prophecy but in part; as eyes under the locks, being covered with them, cannot see so clearly, as when they are removed from them; so the ministers of the gospel cannot see so clearly into gospel-truths in this state of imperfection, as they shall when these locks of darkness are removed; for then they shall see eye to eye. Their knowledge of Christ is imperfect now; their light into gospel-truths is weak and dim, and proportionate to their light and knowledge do they preach. The apostle Paul, who had the greatest light into the gospel, and the largest share of the knowledge of Christ Jesus, as perhaps, ever any man had, yet desired to know more of Christ, and the power of his resurrection, Phil. iii. 10. (2.) It may be expressive of their modesty and humility. Locks being decently tied up, as this word signifies<sup>a</sup>, is an evidence of modesty, as the contrary is of wantonness. The ministers of the gospel, though they have the greatest gifts bestowed upon them, yet reckon themselves less than the least of all saints; for notwithstanding all their parts, gifts and grace, they do not think themselves sufficient, either to think or speak any thing as of themselves, but acknowledge that their sufficiency is of God, who only hath made them able ministers of the new testament; and whenever their labours are blest and owned, either for the comfort and edification of God's people, or for the conversion of sinners, they ascribe it not to themselves, but to the grace of God that is with them. (3.) This phrase may be added to set forth their beauty. Eyes, from under or within the locks decently and modestly bound up, look very beautiful. The ministers of the gospel appear beautiful, not only to Christ, who has counted them faithful, and put them into the ministry, but also to those to whom they are made useful, either for comfort and establishment, or for conviction and conversion; to these, even the very feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace, that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation, are beautiful, Isa. lii. 7.

But if by these doves eyes we understand the enlightned eyes of our understanding, and particularly the eye of faith; then this phrase, perhaps, is used to denote, [1.] The imperfection of faith; the greatest believer has need to pray with the apostles, Lord, increase our faith; there are some, τὰ ὑστερήματα, some things lacking, some deficiencies in our faith which need perfecting: 'Tis true, faith is the evidence of things not seen, yet oftentimes 'tis very dark and obscure; indeed, when compared with old Testament saints, believers under the new, may be said, with open face to behold, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord; but when compared with saints, possessed of the beatific vision, they see but through a glass darkly; their eyes are within their locks. [2.] To shew us what a modest grace faith is; it looks alone on Christ, it lives only on him, it receives all from him, and gives all the glory to him; it ascribes nothing in man's salvation to itself, or to any thing done by the creature, but all to Christ and his grace; and so excludes boasting, as the apostle says, Rom. iii. 27. Where is boasting then? it is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay; but by the law of faith. Had works any thing to do in man's salvation, boasting would have been encouraged and established; but God of his infinite wisdom has ordered it, that it should be of and through faith, that it might appear to be of grace, and not of works, lest any man should boast. [3.] To set forth how beautiful faith is in Christ's eye, and how much his heart is taken with it; as appears from the ninth verse of this chapter, where he says, Thou hast ravished my heart, my sister, my spouse; thou hast ravished my heart with one of thine eyes, i. e. with the eye of faith.

2dly, He describes her beauty by her hair, which he says is as a flock of goats that appear from mount Gilead, i. e. like the hair<sup>b</sup> of such a flock of goats; which may be understood, 1st, Of the outward conversation of the saints; which may be compared to hair, for the following reasons.

1. Because as the hair is for a covering, 1 Cor. xi. 15. so is a well-ordered and gospel-conversation a covering to the saints. A believer has many coverings, he has more garments than one; he is clothed with the garments of salvation, and covered with the robe of Christ's righteousness; this is his justification, and what gives him a title to glory. He has also the garment of sanctification, which is curiously wrought by the spirit of God; and this makes him meet for the king's presence: And he has, besides these, his conversation-garments, which he is to watch and keep from being spotted with the flesh, and to wash them and make them white in the blood of the lamb: But these cannot cover sins, nor screen him from divine justice; this only the righteousness of Christ can do, by which his sins are so covered, that when they are sought for, they shall not be found ; but his outward conversation is a covering narrower than that he can wrap himself in, so as to be hid and secured from divine justice ; if he was only to appear herein before justice, these very clothes would both abhor and condemn him ; nor can they make him meet for the king's presence ; this only the garment of sanctification can do ; but, then the outward conversation of the saints is a cover and a fence against the reproaches of the world ; for though they have not whereof to glory before God, yet at some times, and in some cases they may lawfully do it before men, and say as Samuel did, Whose ox have I taken? whom have I defrauded? whom have I oppressed, or of whose hand have I received any bribe? Thus their conversation is a cover and fence unto them; and is of service to make those ashamed, who falsly accuse their good conversation in Christ, and to put to silence the ignorance of foolish men. 2. As hair, it is very ornamental to the believer ; as garments, though they do not make, yet they adorn the man, so a good conversation, though it does not make, yet it adorns the Christian ; it is decent and becoming the gospel of Christ Jesus ; it adorns the doctrine of God our saviour, and recommends religion to others. 3. As hair that is ordered aright, and well taken care of, so is a well ordered conversation ; and that is such an one as is ordered, according to the rule of God's word, and by God himself ; for the steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord: David knew this full well, that God did so, and that he himself was insufficient for it ; and therefore he thus prays, order my steps in thy word, i. e. according to thy word, which is the rule of faith and practice ; and such a conversation as this being like a well set and well ordered head of hair is very grateful and well pleasing to Christ ; therefore he says, to him that ordereth his conversation aright, will I shew the salvation of God, Psal. l. 23. 4. As the hair upon the head is conspicuous and manifest to all, so is the conversation of the saints : That they are justified by Christ's righteousness, and sanctified by his spirit, are not seen and known of all men ; but their outward conversation is manifest, and so it should be ; Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your father which is in heaven, Mat. v. 16. 5. As hair has its dependance upon, and influence from the head, so has the outward conversation of the saints its dependance on, and influence from the grace of the spirit ; a graceless professor, though he may keep up a moral conversation for a time, yet it will drop off from him like leaves from trees in autumn, or like hair that is shed from the head after a violent distemper, the root of the matter not being in him ; the difference between a man of grace and a graceless professor, is elegantly given by Jeremy, Ch. xvii. 5, 6, 7, 8. the one is like the beath in the desert, dry and barren ; the other is like a tree planted by the waters, moist and flourishing ; his leaf is green, and he seasoneth not from yielding fruit. Thus the outward conversation of the saints may be compared to hair. And what may further confirm this sense of the words, is that the apostle Paul, in 1 Tim. ii. 9, 10. instead of broidered hair, recommends shame-facedness, sobriety and good works, as more becoming godliness ; and the apostle Peter, in 1 Pet. iii. 3, 4. instead of plaiting the hair, exhorts to an adorning with the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit.

Now

Now this hair of the church's, or the outward conversation of the saints, may also be compared to a flock of goats which appear from mount Gilead. Gilead was a very proper place for cattle, Numb. xxxii. 1. and, no doubt, the goats which were fed there, were fat and fruitful, and being in large numbers, and kept in good order, might appear from this mount, to distant spectators, beautiful and magnificent. So saints, being fruitful in every good word and work, and orderly in their lives and conversations, appear even to the world amiable and lovely; they are like to the he goat, comely in going, Prov. xxx. 29—31. Nay, to a flock of them, on mount Gilead. Or else, 2dly, By her hair we may understand the inward thoughts of her heart. For, 1. As hair arises from, and has its dependance upon the head, so do thoughts from the heart; 'tis out of the heart all evil thoughts proceed, Mat. xv. 19. out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, &c. and so all good thoughts, which are likewise formed and cherished there by the spirit of God, 2. As the hairs of the head are numerous, so are the thoughts of the heart; a believer has many thoughts of heart; there's a multitude of thoughts within him, Psal. xciv. 19. concerning the corruption of his nature, the sinfulness of his actions, and his frequent backslidings from God; a multitude of thoughts concerning Christ and his grace, and the glories of another world. 3. As the hair of the head is weak and easily moved and tossed about by the wind, so are the thoughts of a believer's heart, sometimes this way and sometimes another; and are like the eyes of fools in the ends of the earth, unless fixed and established by the spirit of God upon proper objects. 4. Being rightly ordered by the spirit of God, as a well managed and well ordered head of hair, they are exceedingly admired and valued by Christ Jesus; for he has a book of remembrance written, not only for them who speak of him and fear him, but also for those who think upon his name, Mal. iii. 16.

And as the thoughts of a believer's heart, thus fixed, managed and ordered by the spirit of God, may be compared to hair, so likewise to a flock of goats on on mount Gilead; and then may they be so, when they ascend on high, and dwell upon the everlasting, unchangeable and boundless love of God in Christ, which love has its heights and depths, its lengths and breadths; when they soar aloft, and dwell upon the everlasting covenant of grace, which covenant is ordered in all things and sure, filled with all spiritual blessings and precious promises; when their thoughts are composed and settled upon the consideration of Christ's person, fulness, blood and righteousness; when they are employed about and concerned in the contemplation of the sublime doctrines of the gospel, and the invisible realities of another world, all which are things that are above; then may they be said to be like a flock of goats, which appear from mount Gilead. But, 3dly, I rather chuse to understand, by the hair, believers themselves: Thus the people of Israel and inhabitants of Jerusalem are represented by hair, Ezek. v. 1—5. Now believers may be called so, 1. For their number: The hairs of a man's head are numerous; therefore, when the Psalmist declares the large number of his sins and transgressions, he makes use of this metaphor, saying, they are more than the hairs of my head: Indeed, believers, when compared with the world, are but few, a small number, a remnant, and a little flock, yet considered and viewed by themselves, and when all together, they are a great multitude, which no man can number, Rev. vii. 9. 2. For their growing upon, and receiving nourishment from Christ the head. The hair grows upon the head, and receives its nourishment from it: Christ is the head of his body, the church; believers are the hair which grow upon, and grow up into this head, and from thence do they receive all their grace and strength, their life and liveliness, their food and nourishment, and so increase with the increase of God, Eph. iv. 15, 16. Col. ii. 19. 3. For their weakness in themselves, and dependance on Christ the head. Hair is a weak thing of itself, and has its dependance on the head; believers are weak in themselves, and can do nothing of themselves without him; their dependance is on him for strength, as well as for righteousness; and 'tis only through him strengthening them, that they do the things they do. 4. For their being an ornament to Christ the head. Hair is an ornament to the head; the beauty of old men is the gray head. Saints are the ornament, beauty and glory of Christ; they are a crown of glory and a royal diadem in his hand, and upon his head. 5. For their valuableness to him, and the care he takes of them. A well set head of hair is highly esteemed, and took much care of among men; but this cannot be more valued and took more care of than believers are by Christ; he values them as his jewels, and peculiar treasure; and he'll not lose one of them; the hairs of our head are all number'd, and so are all the hairs of Christ's head, and not one of them shall be lost: 'Tis true, those who are only nominal professors, and only by an external profession hold to the head, not being rooted in him, shall be shed from thence, but so shall not one of those who are one spirit with him, and grow upon him.

Now saints may be compared to a flock of goats on mount Gilead. (1.) They may be compared to goats. 'Tis true, this word is used of carnal and Christless sinners, who are called so in opposition to, and contradistinction from Christ's sheep; but these creatures being offered up in sacrifice under the old law, prefigured Christ, Exod. xii. 5. and therefore we need not wonder that saints bear this character, who are enabled to present themselves to God, holy, living and acceptable sacrifices; as also, perhaps, they may be so called, on the account of the remainder of sin and corruption, for in them, that is, in their flesh, dwells no good thing; and are stinking and abominable in the esteem of the world, reckoned by them, the off-scouring and refuse of all things, as well as mean and vile in their own eyes. (2.) May be compared to a flock of them, because they belong unto and are under the care of one and the same shepherd, folded in one and the same fold, and fed together in one and the same pasture; as also, on the account of their social worship, their assembling and walking together in the faith and order of the gospel. (3.) To a flock of them on mount Gilead. They have a good pasture upon a goodly mount; they live and feed upon the Lord Jesus Christ, that great mountain, which shall e'er long fill the whole earth; here they find the best of pasture, and become fat and flourishing, like the goats on mount Gilead; here they live and dwell safely, secured from danger, and out of the reach of enemies; their place of defence is a munition of rocks, their bread is given them, and their waters sure, Isa. xxxiii. 16.

Ver. 2. Thy teeth are like a flock of sheep that are even shorn, which came up from the washing: Whereof every one bear twins, and none is barren among them.

THESE words contain the third particular instance of the church's beauty, viz. Her teeth; which are compared,

- I. To a flock of sheep.
  - II. To a flock of sheep even shorn.
  - III. To a flock of sheep that are just come up from the washing.
  - IV. To a flock of sheep that are fruitful, whereof every one bear twins, &c.
- By her teeth we may understand,

1st, The ministers of the gospel; so the Targum interprets it of the priests and Levites; and other Jewish <sup>a</sup> writers of the disciples of the wise men: Ministers may be called the church's teeth; 1. For strength: Teeth are strong, being of a bony nature; and indeed, the work that is allotted to them requires strength. The ministers of the gospel are Christ's strong men, who are, or at least need to be, strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus; they have need to be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might: for their work is great, and requires it, which is to labour in the word and doctrine; a work so great, arduous and difficult, that the great apostle Paul, notwithstanding all his gifts and grace, said, Who is sufficient for these things? They have need of strength to quit themselves like men, in the defence of the gospel, for which they are set against all opposers and gainlayers; they have need of strength to withstand satan's temptations, for he generally bends his bow, shoots his arrows, and casts his fiery darts most at them; they have need of strength to bear the world's reproaches and persecutions, of which they generally have the greatest share, and to sustain the infirmities of weaker saints, which are not few. 2. For their sharpness: Teeth are sharp, and they ought to be so upon many accounts. The ministers of the gospel, though they are not to be like that generation, whose teeth are as swords, and their jaw teeth as knives, to devour the flock, nor like ravenous wolves, who will not spare it, but prey upon it, for they are to use meekness and tenderness; yet, in some cases, they are to use sharpness also, according to a power that Christ has given them, and lodged in them, as when persons are unsound in the faith, and corrupt in their morals: Also as sharpness is necessary to teeth, that they may penetrate into, chew and prepare the food for the stomach; so is it necessary to ministers of the gospel, that they have abilities to penetrate into gospel-truths, in order to feed souls with the bread of life. 3. In nothing can they more fitly be compared to teeth, than in their preparing food for souls; as the teeth break the food, chew it, and prepare it for the stomach, so ministers of the gospel break the bread of life, make hard things plain, easy and intelligible; for not only in Paul's epistles, but in many other places of scripture, there are some δυσκόλητα, things hard to be understood. Now it is the work of the ministers of the gospel to open and explain those difficult passages, remove the hard shell that is over them, that souls may eat the kernel; nay, they not only break the bread of life, but chew it, i. e. meditate upon the word, and digest the doctrines of grace themselves, that so they may not propose unto or set before persons, crude, raw, and undigested food; but having chew'd, digested and well prepared it, they then present it to them; for these are the church's teeth, which <sup>b</sup> cut and rightly divide the word of truth, and give to every one their portion of meat in due season. Now these teeth of the church, the ministers of the gospel, may be compared,

I. To a flock of sheep for their harmlessness and innocence: They are sent forth by Christ as sheep among wolves, and so they live like sheep, useful to many, but hurtful to none, live harmless and inoffensive lives, though exposed to a variety of evils, for the sake of Christ and his gospel; they are counted as sheep for the slaughter; and yet like sheep, they patiently bear all without murmuring, in imitation of their dear Lord, who was led like a lamb to the slaughter, and like the sheep before her shearers, is dumb, so he opened not his mouth, Isa. liii. 7.

II. To a flock of sheep even shorn, that are equally alike in bigness and stature; having such an agreement with each other, as the cherubim in Solomon's temple, which were of one measure and one size, 1 Kings vi. 25. Now the ministers of the gospel may be compared to such, 1. Because they are equal in power and authority; though one may be superior to another in gifts and grace, in parts and learning, yet one has not a superior power and jurisdiction diction over another ; for as Christ says to his disciples, Mat. xx. 25, 26. The princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great, exercise authority upon them ; but it shall not be so among you ; but whosoever shall be great among you, let him be your minister. No such dominion and authority are allow'd by Christ to be exercised by one minister, pastor or bishop, over another ; they are like sheep that are even shorn ; one is not higher than another, or superior to another in power ; Peter was not above the rest of the apostles. 2. They have all the same commission, and are sent about the same work. The disciples of Christ were equally sent to preach the gospel to every creature ; and the commission now is of the same, and of as large extent as ever ; and the same commission that is given to one minister is given to another ; for they are all sent to preach one and the same gospel, in the full extent of it ; not one part of it is assigned to one, and another part to another, but the whole assigned to them all ; for a different gospel is not given in commission to one to preach, than what is given to another ; though their manner of preaching, and their success in their ministry may not be alike. 3. They may be said to be as sheep even shorn, on the account of the harmony and agreement there is between the doctrines which they preach : Tho' there may be a diversity of gifts, and one minister may have more gospel-light and knowledge than another, yet the doctrine of grace, preach'd by them, is one and the same ; 'tis one and the same Jesus whom they preach ; one and the same way of salvation which they shew ; and one and the same heavenly inheritance which they are pointing at ; which harmony and agreement of doctrine will more manifestly appear, when the watchmen shall see eye to eye, even at the time when the Lord shall bring again Zion, Isa. lii. 8. 4. These teeth of the church may be said to be like sheep even shorn to denote their mildness, meekness, harmlessness and innocence ; not having teeth or tusks, standing out more, or rising up higher than the rest, as ravenous beasts, such as lions, bears, &c. but all equal, like sheep even shorn ; such do not devour, but feed the flock ; do not assume a lordly and domineering power over them, but behaving themselves quietly and peaceably among them, seek their good and welfare, and not their hurt.

III. To a flock of sheep just come up from the washing ; and so are white and clean, which is another thing in which the beauty of teeth consists ; for it is not only requisite that they should be even, so as one does not grow out from or rise higher than the other ; but likewise that they should be white and clean, like sheep that are just come out of the washing pit ; which <sup>a</sup> some think intends baptism ; though it may better be understood of the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost, which the ministers of the gospel ought not to be strangers to ; for he that is not born again of water and of the spirit, as he shall neither see nor enter into the kingdom of heaven himself, so is he not fit to preach the gospel of the kingdom of heaven to others ; though I rather think it intends the pure and unspotted lives and conversations of Christ's ministers, who being persons that hate the garment spotted with the flesh, and who have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the lamb, become examples to the flock, not only in faith, but in purity of conversation.

IV. To

IV. To a flock, of which every one bears twins, and there is none barren among them. This is to be understood of the fruitfulness and successfulness of their ministry in begetting and bringing forth many souls to Christ; which was more especially verified in the apostles and first preachers of the gospel, whose ministry, after an extraordinary manner, was blest and own'd for the conversion of many sinners; three thousand were converted under one sermon; the favour of Christ's knowledge was made manifest by them, in every place; they bore twins to Christ, and were instrumental in the conversion of many, both of Jews and Gentiles; they went forth bearing and sowing the precious seed of the gospel, and return'd, bringing their sheaves with them, having reaped a glorious harvest: They travailed in birth, till Christ was farmed in souls; and they did not travail in vain, for he that brought to the birth, caused to bring forth.

2dly, Or else, by teeth, if applied to particular believers, we may understand meditation and faith, by which they feed on divine and spiritual things.

1. By meditation a soul feeds on Christ, on his person, blood and righteousness, and finds a pleasure, sweetness and delight therein; it is sometimes, as in Psal. lxxiii. 5, 6. satisfied as with marrow and fatness, when it remembers Christ upon its bed, and meditates on his love and grace in the night watches; by it a believing soul feeds upon the gospel, its truths and promises, and receives much refreshment from thence; like Jeremy, Ch. xv. 16. it finds the word by meditation, and eats it, and 'tis the joy and rejoicing of its heart. Now meditating souls may be very well compared to a flock of sheep, which are clean creatures, and chew the cud; for these chew the word of grace, and ruminate upon it; and to a flock of sheep even shorn, being, in some measure, rid of the old fleece of vain, carnal and worldly thoughts; and are come up from the washing, being cleansed, in some measure, from the former filthiness and uncleanness of their minds, they ascend heavenwards in their thoughts, desires and affections, which they employ by meditating upon pure spiritual and heavenly things; and such souls are usually fruitful; they are not barren and unfruitful in the knowledge of Christ and his gospel, but generally bring forth the twins of prayer and praise: Meditation fits a man for prayer, and fills him with praise; meditating souls are commonly praying and praising ones; for whilst they are musing, the fire burns, and then speak they with their tongues, either in prayer or praise; it puts them either upon praying to God for a mercy, or upon praising him for one.

2. By faith a soul feeds on Christ and his grace; faith serves a great many purposes; 'tis the soul's eye, by which it sees Christ; and its feet, by which it goes to him; and the hand, by which it receives him, and lays hold on him; and likewise the teeth, by which it feeds upon him: Faith is expressed by eating his flesh and drinking his blood, in John vi. 56. He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him. An oral, corporal manducation, is not here intended, but a spiritual one, which is by faith: Faith feeds on Christ, the bread of life, and eats that bidden manna, the food of the wilderness, lives wholly and entirely on him; which grace is peculiar to Christ's sheep, and therefore is called the faith of God's elect; and the reason why others do not believe and live upon him, is, because they are not of Christ's sheep; and though in some persons 'tis strong, and in others weak, yet it is in all alike precious faith, in its own nature, and to Christ Jesus; these teeth are even, and so fit for eating; faith's alike, as to its quality, in all believers, though not as to degree; and, like Judab's teeth, is white with the milk of the word, is pure, unfeigned and sincere; and is always fruitful, attended with good works, and more especially bears and brings forth those twins, love to Christ, and love to the saints; for faith works by love, Gal. v. 6.

Ver. 3. Thy lips are like a thread of scarlet, and thy speech is comely: Thy temples are like a piece of a pomegranate within thy locks.

IN these words Christ proceeds to give the fourth and fifth instances of the church's beauty; and says,

- I. That her lips are like a thread of scarlet, &c.
- II. That her temples are like a piece of a pomegranate.

I. Her lips are compared to a thread of scarlet. The Targum on this place, by eyes, understands the princes and wisemen of Israel, who sat in the Sanhedrim, and enlightened the world; by the hair, the rest of the people of the land, in ver. 1. by teeth, in ver. 2. the priests and Levites, who offered the sacrifices, and eat the holy flesh; and by lips here, the lips of the high priest, who (as the Targum expresses it) by his prayer on the day of atonement, changed the transgressions of the people of Israel, which were like to a thread of scarlet, and made them white as wool. It is a received tradition among the Jews, that when the scape goat was sent into the wilderness, a scarlet thread was tied to the temple door, and when the goat was come to the wilderness, the scarlet thread turned white; which was not only a sign of the goat's arrival thither, but also a token to them of the remission of their sins, according to Isa. i. 18. Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow: And they tell us<sup>a</sup>, that this scarlet thread ceased turning white forty years before the destruction of the temple; which was about the time that Christ, the great sacrifice for sin, was offered up.

R. Aben Ezra thinks, by the eyes are meant the prophets, who in scripture, are called seers; by the hair, the Nazarites; by the teeth, the strong and mighty men; and by the lips here, the singers, who sung the high praises of God.

R. Solomon Jarchi expounds it, of the beauty and comeliness of the lips, in making and keeping promises, as the spies did to Rahab the harlot, whose token to know her house by, was a line of scarlet.

Lips are the instruments of speech; and by the church's lips here, are meant, her words, which the following expression, and thy speech is comely, manifests and confirms, which are compared to a thread of scarlet; to a thread for for thinness, and to a thread of scarlet for colour; for these two things, thinness in substance, and redness of colour, are the beauty of the lips. Now by the church's lips; or words, are meant, either,

1st, Her prayers. Christ's prayers are, in Psal. xxi. 2. called the request of his lips; and so may the church's prayers, and every believer's, be called the request of their lips; which may be compared to a thread of scarlet, 1. For thinness. The prayers of believers are not filled with great swelling words of vanity, but with humble confessions of sin, bewailing the corruption and depravity of their natures; earnestly imploring views of pardoning grace, and the discoveries of God's love to their souls; acknowledging that they are unworthy to receive the least mercy and favour at the hand of God, but deserve the severest strokes of his justice, and the highest instances of his displeasure; they do not address the throne of grace with vanity and pride, but with an humble boldness, and oftentimes under a great deal of brokenness of soul; being conscious of their own guilt, and filled with a sense of God's majesty and greatness, was it not for the mediator Christ Jesus, and his precious blood, which is carried within the veil, and his spotless righteousness, which they are allowed to plead, they durst not presume to approach the divine presence; they do not exalt themselves and magnify their works of righteousness, nor extenuate their sins and transgressions, but are silent in the one, and frankly acknowledge the other, with all their aggravating circumstances; they do not act like the proud Pharisee, Luke xviii. 11, 12, 13. Who stood and prayed thus with himself; God I thank thee, that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican: I fast twice in the week, I give tithes of all that I possess; but like the poor publican, who stood afar off, and would not so much as lift up his eyes to heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner: The lips of the publican, in this prayer, were like to a thread of scarlet. 2. For their continuancy and continuance in them: The prayers of believers are like one continued thread of scarlet; no sooner are souls born again, but behold, they pray, and they continue, or at least, ought to continue praying souls all their days. Christ spoke a parable to this end, that men ought always to pray, and not to faint; and the apostle, Col. iv. 2. exhorts believers to continue in prayer, and watch in the same with thanksgiving; not that it is intended, in these places, that persons should always be actually engaged in this duty; but that believers should be often at the throne of grace, and when they are there, be importunate for the blessing they stand in need of, watch for a return of these prayers, and then be as diligent to attend the throne of grace with thankfulness; and when this is the common and constant course of a believer's life, his lips may be said to be like to a thread of scarlet. 3. For the fervency of them: The scarlet colour may denote the ardency, warmth and fervour of a believer's spirit in prayer; such a warm, fervent, praying soul was Jacob, who wrestled with God, and would not stir without the blessing, but as a prince had power with God, and prevailed; such an one was the Syrophenician woman, who would take no denial from Christ; and such an one was Elias, James v. 16, 17, 18. who prayed earnestly that it might not rain, and it rained not; and again he prayed, that it might rain, and the heavens gave rain; for the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much. Now when believers are thus fervent and importunate in prayer for the mercy or blessing they want, then may their lips be said to be like a thread of scarlet. 4. Because a believer's prayers are all tinged with the blood of Christ, and so become like a thread of scarlet. They are all presented through Christ's mediation, being perfumed with his much incense; a believer does not put them up in his own name, but in the name of Christ; he pleads not his own worthiness, but the precious blood of Christ, and expects that they will meet with acceptance only through his mediation. 5. For their acceptableness with God. The scarlet colour is the best of colours, and most highly esteemed of; the prayers of the saints being offered up in faith, and in the name of Christ, being presented through his mediation, are very acceptable to God; they are pleasant musick in his ears, and sweet fragrant odours in his nostrils; he is so far from despising the prayer of the destitute, that he delights and takes pleasure in it; it is like a thread of scarlet to him: Or else, by the church's lips, we may understand, 2dly, Her praises; as prayer is called the request of the lips, so praise is called the fruit of the lips, Heb. xiii. 15. As with our lips we pray to God, so with our lips we praise him; and the lips of believers in praising, as well as in praying, may be compared to a thread of scarlet. 1. They are thin, like a thread of scarlet. They are not filled with big-swollen praises of themselves, and of what they have done; a believer takes the advice the wise man gives, Prov. xxvii. 2. Let another praise thee, and not thine own mouth; a stranger, and not thine own lips: He does not speak in the commendation of himself, but of the goodness and grace of God; he praises him for all temporal mercies, for his being, the preservation of it, and for all the mercies of life, which make it comfortable, acknowledging that he is not worthy of the least of the mercies which God has shewn him; and then his praises and thanksgivings rise higher for spiritual ones, for those all spiritual blessings, with which he is blest in heavenly places in Christ Jesus; how does he adore, admire and praise distinguishing love and grace, that such a poor, blind, ignorant creature as he should be called out of darkness into marvellous light! that such a guilty wretch should be justified by Christ's righteousness from all his sins! that such a filthy creature should be washed and cleansed in Christ's blood, and have all his iniquities pardon'd through the same! that he should be adopted into God's family, and be made an heir of God, and a joint heir with Christ Jesus! how thankful is he for the gospel and the ministers of it, which have brought him the news of, and shew'd him the way unto life and salvation by Jesus Christ? and above all, how thankful is he for Christ, that unspeakable gift of God's love? Now when the lips of believers, in praising, move in such a strain as this, then may they be said to be like a thread of scarlet. 2. The praises of believers are compared to a thread of scarlet, for the heartiness, sincerity and affection that go along with them; as they draw nigh to him with their mouths, and honour him with their lips, so their hearts are not far from him; all the while they are praising, the fire of love burns within them, their souls are enflamed with it, and their lips look like scarlet, being touched with a live coal from off God's altar. 3. For the acceptableness of them, through Christ's mediation: Our praises, as well as our prayers, must be tinged with Christ's blood; they must be offered up by him, for no other way are these sacrifices well pleasing to God, or accepted with him. Or,

3dly, By her lips may be meant the doctrines of the gospel, delivered by her ministers; which are the church's lips, that drop as an honey comb, and publish the glad tidings of peace, life and salvation to poor souls. Now these doctrines of grace, delivered by them, may be compared to a thread of scarlet; 1. Because they are spun out of the scriptures; all scripture being divinely inspired, θεόπνευστος, breathed by God; is profitable for doctrine, as well as for other things; it is the fountain from whence all the doctrines of grace spring, and the Lydian stone, by which they are all try'd; for whatsoever is not according to this law and testimony, is not to be received: Hence Christ advises to search the scriptures, and the noble Bereans are commended for doing so. 2. This scarlet thread of the gospel, being spun out of the scriptures, is smooth and even; there is an harmony and agreement in the truths of the gospel; there is no jar and discord among them; this great trumpet does not give an uncertain sound; the doctrines of it are not yea and nay, contradictory to one another, and truth itself, but are all of a piece, like one single scarlet thread; there is a close connection between them; they are linked and chained together, and cannot be separated; they look like and are answerable to one another; there is a proportion or analogy of faith, according to which they are all measured. 3. The great subjects of the gospel are the blood, death and sufferings of a crucified Christ; we, says the apostle, 1 Cor. i. 23. preach Christ crucified: A crucified Christ was the sum and substance of their ministry; therefore the gospel, and the doctrines of it, may well be compared to a scarlet thread: The chief doctrines of the gospel are, that the pardon of sin is procured by Christ's blood; that he has made peace and reconciliation for sinners, by the blood of his cross; that sinners are justified by his blood, and so shall be saved from wrath to come; that Christ sanctifies his people with his blood, and has by it opened the gates of heaven for them; that it is by that he himself has entered into the holy of holies, and by which saints have a right so to do. Now these are the scarlet coloured doctrines of the gospel. Which, 4. Are valuable, precious, and highly to be esteemed of as scarlet; they are comparable to gold, silver, and precious stones; which angels desire to look into, and are by saints, preferred to their necessary food; yea, are dearer to them than their lives, or any thing in life; witness the fines, imprisonments, loss of goods, racks, tortures, and death itself, which they have voluntarily and cheerfully underwent for the sake of it: Thus her lips are like a thread of scarlet.

It is further added, and thy speech is comely; which words are exegetical of the former, and manifestly shew what is intended by her lips, viz. her speech, which is said to be comely, i. e. graceful, amiable, and to be desired. And so is, (1.) A believer's speech concerning Christ. When believers speak to others of what Christ is unto them, how he is of God made unto them, wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption; and of what he has done done for them, in atoning for their sins, bringing in an everlasting righteousness, and saving them from sin, law, death and hell; when they speak of the glories of his person, the preciousness and efficacy of his blood, the excellency of his righteousness, and completeness of his sacrifice; when believers speak often one to another of these, he hearkens and hears, listens as it were to hear what they talk of, and puts it down in the book of his remembrance, as being well pleased with it. 2. The speech of a believer is graceful and comely to Christ, when they speak for him, in vindication of his person, people, truths and ordinances; for he says, Mat. x. 32. Whosoever shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my father in heaven. 3. The speech of a believer to Christ, is exceeding grateful and well pleasing, whether it be in prayer or in praise, as has been already shewn: Hence Christ says, Ch. ii. 14. Let me see thy countenance, let me hear thy voice; for sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely. 4. It may intend the gratefulness of a believer's speech in his common conversation; it being attended with grace, and seasoned with salt, ministers grace unto the hearers; is not infectious, pernicious and destructive, as the corrupt and unfavoury communication of the wicked is, but tends to the pleasure, profit and edification of others.

II. Her temples are next commended in these words, which is the fifth particular instanced in the church's beauty; thy temples are like a piece of a pomegranate within thy locks. R. Aben Ezra interprets these words of the priests, who had pomegranates of blue, purple and scarlet round about the hem of the Ephod, which they wore; but the Targum, on the place, understands by the temples, the king who was the head of the people of Israel, and was full of good works, as the pomegranate is of kernels, and by the locks, the governors and princes, who were next to him; but it seems most agreeable, that ecclesiastical officers are here intended, whom Christ has placed in his church to take care of the discipline of his house, as well as to maintain and defend the gospel.

That there is and ought to be such officers in churches, who have the presiding, ruling, governing power therein, not only the nature of societies requires, but the scripture also does abundantly confirm, more especially the following ones; Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honour, &c. Obey them that have the rule over you, &c. He that ruleth with diligence; 1 Tim. v. 17. Heb. xiii. 17. Rom. xii. 8. Their work is not only to preach the gospel and feed the flock with wholesome food, but to admonish, warn and rebuke those who stand in need thereof, to lay on and take off censures, to open and shut the doors of the church, i. e. in admission and excommunication of members. Now this power is originally in the church, and only derivatively in them; they are but the administrators of it, in the church's name; they have no despotic, arbitrary and tyrannical power lodged in their hands, to rule at pleasure, but are limited by the laws of Christ, which he has provided for the orderly government of his house, which they are to see put in execution: Now these may be called,

1st, The temples are called, in the Hebrew tongue, by a word which signifies thinness and tenderness, because the temples have but little flesh upon them, and are covered only with a thin skin; which may teach us, 1. That those persons who are called to such a work and office in Christ's house, though it cannot otherwise be, but they must have flesh as well as spirit in them, being men of like passions and affections with others, yet these more especially ought not to live in and walk after the flesh; there should be a less appearance of carnality in them, and a greater discovery of spiritual mindedness, and of the life and power of godliness in their conversations; therefore the apostle is very particular in giving their characters, 1 Tim. iii. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. Tit. i. 6, 7, 8, 9. 2. It may also teach us, that there ought to be a great deal of tenderness in them, and used by them in the discharge of their work; for in so doing, they are like to be most successful: Admonitions and reproofs for sin, mildly and tenderly given, are often kindly taken; they are like an excellent oil, which does not break the head, but wins the heart. Tender-heartedness is requisite in all Christians, but more especially in officers of churches, who are to deal as tenderly with persons, as surgeons do in dressing wounds, or in setting broken or dislocated bones: Hence the apostle in Gal. vi. 1. uses a metaphor taken from them; you that are spiritual restore, καὶ ἀπαιτεῖτε, joint in, or set in joint again, such an one in the spirit of meekness; though 'tis true, in some cases, sharpness is to be used, as when there is a gangrene in a member, which endangers the body, there must be a cutting off, an amputation of the member: So persons, when all means have been tried for their recovery and restoration, and there is no reclaiming them from an error in doctrine or practice, they are not only to be rebuked sharply, but to be cut off from the body, the church.

2<sup>dly</sup>, The temples are called in Greek, κροτάφοι, * from the evident beating of the pulse there; now as a person's constitution may be judged of by the beating of his pulse, so may the constitution of a church, by her temples, the officers, in their administration of affairs: If church-discipline is neglected, and Christ's laws are not put in execution against delinquents, the church is in a bad state, and in an unhealthful and declining condition; and on the contrary, when officers are lively, zealous and diligent in their work, and all things are kept in a just order and decorum, the church is then in an healthful and flourishing condition.

3<sup>dly</sup>, The temples are placed between the eyes and the ears; and church-officers being called so, teaches us, that they have need of both in managing the affairs of Christ's house. Christ indeed, being God omniscient, shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears; but we have no other way of judging than by the sight of our eyes, and by the hearing of our ears; and therefore, both are to be employed: The ears of church-officers are to be open, without respect of persons, to rich and poor, high and low; they are to hear complaints and charges exhibited, if introduced in a regular manner, and then the evidence to support these complaints and charges; charges; they must also hear the answers of the person or persons accused and complained of, and must not shut their eyes against clear light and plain evidence.

* Vid. R. David Kimchium, in lib. Shorash. rad. קרק.

Secondly, These temples are said to be within the locks, which may teach us, 1. That admonitions, in case of private offences, ought to be given privately, according to that golden rule given by our Lord, Mat. xviii. 15, 16, 17. If thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone; let no one know it before thou hast told him, and let none be with thee when thou dost; if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother; therefore, for ever after, never speak of it to others, or upbraid him with it; but if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses, every word may be established; and if he shall neglect to hear them, matters being thus prepared, tell it unto the church; and then thou shalt have witnesses to support and make good thy allegations: This rule is so plain and easy, that one would think, none could mistake or go aside from it; and was it but closely adhered to, would prevent a great deal of scandal and reproach that is cast upon religion, as well as a great many disturbances occasioned in churches by the neglect of it; and in so doing, the church's temples, in this branch of the administration of discipline, may be said to be within her locks; though it is true, in case of publick offences, admonitions and rebukes are to be given publickly, that others may fear, 1 Tim. v. 20. 2. It may also teach us, that all the affairs and concerns of churches ought to be kept private, and not blazed about in the world; their debates and determinations ought not to be told to other churches, unless there is a necessity for it, much less told in Gath, and published in the streets of Askelon; for every particular church should be as a garden inclosed, a spring shut up, a fountain sealed, Cant. iv. 12. 3. The temples being within the locks, may denote the humility of church-officers in their work; they lie hid under the hair, the rest of believers; they do not rise up above them, though they are taller and higher than they are in gifts and grace, as well as by virtue of their office and station in the church; yet they are, in their own esteem, less than the least of all saints: They do not assume to themselves a domination and lordly power over God's heritage; they do not impose their sentiments upon the churches for final determinations in cases, but humbly submit themselves, preferring the judgment of the church to their own private ones; they become all things to all, that they may save some. 4. May be expressive of the beauty of church-discipline. That church appears very beautiful, like the temples within the locks, where the gospel is faithfully preached, the ordinances purely administered, and the laws of Christ's house strictly regarded. Believers who walk together in the order, as well as in the faith of the gospel, appear very beautiful, stately, and magnificent to spectators; they are like a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariot, or like a garden with a variety of flowers well weeded and taken care of, or an orchard of pomegranates, well dressed and managed; on the contrary, a church in which no regard is had to order and discipline, it is like the field of the slothful, and the vineyard of the man void of understanding, which is

Thirdly, These temples are said to be like a piece of a pomegranate, not a piece of the tree, but of the fruit, the shell or rind being broken; so the Septuagint render it<sup>1</sup>. The land of Canaan was a land of pomegranates; they grew there in great plenty, and therefore are frequently mentioned in this song.

1st, The fruit, when the shell or rind is broken, appears to be full of grains or kernels, and therefore is called a pomegranate; and the church's temples are said to be like to a broken piece of a pomegranate, that is full of kernels; because those who are called to such work and office in the church, as has been mentioned, should be men, full of the Holy Ghost, as Stephen was; they should be as full of the gifts and graces of the spirit, as the pomegranate is of kernels, that they may be capable of discharging the work aright: Christ knows full well that they stand in need of such, and therefore, as he has received gifts for men, so he gives them to men; to qualify them for the work of the ministry, and for the well ordering and governing of his churches; and yet, notwithstanding all that they receive, they are obliged to say with the apostle, Who is sufficient for these things? And as they should be men full of the spirit, so likewise<sup>2</sup> full of good works, and these visible to men, even as the kernels of the pomegranate are when broken; their light should shine before men; they should have a good report of them that are without, and be examples to those that are within; and when they are so, then may the church's temples be said to be like a piece of a pomegranate within her locks. Also the pomegranate, when broken, appearing to be full of kernels, all set in a beautiful order, and joined to each other, may be expressive of that union, harmony, and consent of church-members, with their officers, in acts of discipline; censures are laid and took off, members are received or rejected, not by some single person or persons, but by the joint consent and unanimous voice of the whole church.

2dly, As this fruit is full of kernels, so, when broken, there springs from it a reddish, purple, sweet and delightful juice: Hence you read of the juice of the pomegranate, Ch. viii. 2. which the church would cause Christ to drink of; and nothing is more delightful in Christ's eye, odorous to his smell, and sweet to his taste, than this juice of the pomegranate is, viz. a pure administration of his ordinances, and a strict regard and close adherence to the laws of his house; nay, even to believers themselves, result from hence pleasure, delight and satisfaction.

these heats, by wholesome advice and proper admonitions; they are instruments in making peace, and reconciling differing brethren, and either remove the causes of contention, or else with the consent of the church, remove those who are the causes of these divisions and contentions. 2. For <sup>o</sup> stopping the fluxes of the belly; the pomegranate is of an astringent nature, the kernels bind more than the juice, and the shell or rind more than either. The officers of churches are useful in putting a stop to loose and disorderly practices, by warning, admonishing, rebuking or withdrawing from those who walk disorderly. 3. For <sup>p</sup> comforting the stomach and bowels. So these officers comfort the children of God; for as they warn the unruly, so they comfort the feeble minded, and support the weak, by directing them to the person, blood, righteousness and fulness of Christ Jesus; by delivering the sweet doctrines, and opening the precious promises of the gospel.

Thus church-officers in managing the affairs of Christ's house, in conjunction with his church, may be called her temples, which are like a piece of a pomegranate within her locks: Likewise the temples, taken in a large signification, not only intend that part of the face, between the ears and eyes, and upwards, but includes the cheeks also; and so the <sup>q</sup> Septuagint translate the word here; and these being compared to a piece of pomegranate within her locks, may denote her modesty, shamefacedness and beauty. 1. Her modesty; the cheeks are the seat thereof, and being within her locks, give the greater evidence of it. The church of Christ, or believers, are very humble and modest; they think the worst of themselves and the best of others, and so take the apostle's advice, Phil. ii. 3. Let each esteem other better than themselves: They are apt to think every saint has more grace and less sin and corruption in him than they have, and esteem themselves the least of saints, and the chief of sinners; they frankly acknowledge, that all they have, and all they are, is owing to the grace of God; that whatsoever they have, either of nature or grace, whether temporal or spiritual, they have received from him; and whatever they are, they say it is by the grace of God, they are what they are; they do not envy the gifts and grace of God, which are bestowed on others, but could wish with Moses, Numb. xi. 29. that all the Lord's people were prophets; yet they could be glad of more themselves, and are not puffed up with what they have, and therefore are far from despising others, who are inferior to them; they are willing to be instructed by and receive admonition from the meanest saint; they are very sparing in speaking of themselves, like their dear Lord, their voice is not heard in the street; and when they do open their mouths, it is not in commendation of themselves and their own righteousnesses, but in lamenting the depravity and pollution of their natures; in acknowledging the imperfection of their obedience, and that when they have done all they can they are but unprofitable servants. 2. Her shamefacedness and blushing; which is elegantly set forth by the broken piece of the shell or rind of the pomegranate, tinged with the red and purple juice thereof. A believer oftentimes blushes before God under a sense of sin, and especially

especially when committed against love, grace and mercy. Thus we read of Ezra, Ch. ix. 6. That he was ashamed and blushed to lift up his face to God, because that grace had been shewed them from him, and he had left them a remnant to escape, and had given them a nail in his holy place, and had extended mercy to them in the sight of the kings of Persia; and yet, after all this, they had forsoaken his commandment; it is this which cuts and grieves a believer's heart, and fills his face with shame and confusion; and never more is he put to the blush than when he views sin in the glass of pardoning grace and pacifying love, according to Ezek. xvi. 63. That thou mayest remember and be confounded, and never open thy mouth any more, because of thy shame, when I am pacified towards thee: Then are their cheeks like a piece of a pomegranate within their locks; they blush when no eye sees them, and for that which none ever saw or could charge them with; and whenever they are charged with or reproved for sin, they have not a brow of brass to outface the charge, but soon discover their consciousness of guilt, by the blushing of their countenance. Moreover, whenever they cast their eyes upon their own righteousness, they are ashamed of it, it being nothing but filthy rags, and as an unclean thing; and oftentimes, when they come into Christ's presence, not having that holy boldness and confidence of faith in him, they hang their heads, and dare not so much as lift up their eyes to him; wherefore he says to them, as in Ch. ii. 14. Let me see thy countenance; let me hear thy voice, for sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely; and that in order to remove their fears, cheer their souls, and encourage their faith.

3. Her beauty. When a pomegranate is broken, there appears a reddish juice, interspread between the white kernels, which gives a lively idea of her beauty, she being, as she says of her beloved, white and ruddy, and so a perfection of beauty; her modest dress and blushing looks, her temples or cheeks being within her locks, and these like a piece of a pomegranate, made her extremely beautiful in Christ's eye. Modest and humble souls he fixes his eye on, and delights to dwell with; to these he will give more grace, and will beautify them, yet more with his salvation.

Ver. 4. Thy neck is like the tower of David builded for an armoury, whereon there hang a thousand bucklers, all shields of mighty men.

IN this verse Christ proceeds to give a third instance of the church's beauty, and compares her neck to the tower of David, &c. The Targum, by her neck understands the chief of the session or great council, who for his works and worthiness, was like David, king of Israel. R. Aben Ezra expounds it of the king, and the bucklers and shields of the princes. R. Solomon Jarchi interprets the neck of the chamber of brown stone, where the great council sat, which, he says, was the strength and fortress of Israel; the bucklers or shields, the law, which is a shield or buckler to Israel, which God hath commanded

First, The ministers of the gospel; who, 1. As the neck, are placed next the head, in the more eminent part of the body; they are set above the rest of the members, but yet in subjection to Christ the head; they are fixed between the head and the body, and are ruled by the one, and govern the other; but with no other laws but what are given forth by the head. 2. As the neck, they are adorned with chains of gold, which are the gifts and graces of the spirit; which, in a variety, are given to them, to make them both beautiful and useful in the place wherein they are set. 3. As the neck joins to the head, so they hold to the head, Christ Jesus, and nothing can separate them from him; the flatteries and allurements of the world cannot draw them, nor its terrors, reproaches and persecutions, drive them from Christ; but they still espouse his cause, vindicate his person, preach his gospel, and hold fast their profession, though it be with the peril of their lives. 4. As the neck, they bear up and support the head, i. e. the name, cause and interest of Christ Jesus: So the apostle Paul is said to be a chosen vessel, to bear Christ's name among the Gentiles, Acts ix. 15. 5. As the neck joins the body to the head, so they bring souls near to Christ, who are afar off; and that by preaching peace to them that were afar off, and to them that are nigh; they shew souls the way of salvation, and direct them to a crucified Christ; they woo and beseech them, and are the instruments of espousing them to him. 6. As the neck is the means of conveying food to the body, so they are the means of conveying spiritual food to souls from Christ. All spiritual food and nourishment is derived to the members from Christ the head; and very frequently through the ministry of the word, Christ gives his ministring servants, light, knowledge, and understanding in gospel-truths, that they may feed others therewith; he breaks the bread of life, and gives it to them, that they may give to every one their portion, as he took the loaves and distributed to his disciples, and they to the multitude. Now this neck of the church may be compared to the tower of David.

The tower of David was either the strong hold of Zion, which he took from the Philistines, and rebuilt, or some other tower erected by him for an armoury, wherein his worthies or mighty men hung up their shields; such an one as the house of the forest of Lebanon, afterwards built by Solomon, was, where he put two hundred targets, and three hundred shields, all made of beaten gold; and therefore mention is made in Isa. xxii. 8. of the armour of the house of the forest. Now the ministers of the gospel may be compared to David's tower. The Lord says of Jeremy, Ch. vi. 27. I have set thee for a tower and for a fortress among my people. (1.) They may be compared to the tower * Vid. Zohar in Gen. fol. 114. 3. and Yalkut in 186.

tower of David, for its height: Towers are usually built very high, and no doubt, this tower of David's was built so; ministers are set in the highest post and place in Christ's house, are called with the high calling of God, to the greatest work therein; and are endowed with the largest measures of gifts and grace for it, and ought to be highly esteemed of for their works sake. (2.) For its erectness: Towers are built erect, and for this reason the neck is compared to one; the beauty of the neck consisting in its straightness and uprightness; which may set forth the integrity and uprightness of ministers, both in doctrine and conversation; as Christ has counted them faithful, and put them into the ministry, and has put the word of reconciliation into their hands, so they will not let it go, but will hold fast the faithful word, whatever it cost them, or whatever be the consequence of it. Moreover they are as careful to hold it forth in their lives, and to exercise a good conscience void of offence, both towards God and man. (3.) For its strength: Towers, as they are built high and upright, so they are usually built strong, and, no doubt, but this Tower of David's was. The ministers of the gospel, like towers, are strong and immovable, cannot be easily moved away from the hope of the gospel; bonds and imprisonment will not move them, nor death itself scare them from it; but like strong towers and walls of brass, they stand the batteries of satan and the world. 4. Towers were built for defence, and so, perhaps, was this of David's; ministers of the gospel are set for the defence of it, and they have been enabled so well to do it, that it has not been in the power of the enemy, hitherto, to take and destroy it. 5. Sometimes they are built to watch in; thus we read of a watch tower, in Hab. ii. 1. Ministers of the gospel are represented as watchmen, whose work is to give warning of, and to prevent approaching danger, and to watch over and for the souls of men. 6. This tower of David was built for an armoury<sup>c</sup>, on which were hung a thousand bucklers, &c. This may intend that furniture which ministers have for their work, and that πανοπλία, or whole armour of God, which they are supplied with out of the scriptures, to defend the gospel against all opposers. And so,

Secondly, By the church's neck, which is compared to the tower of David, may be understood also, the scriptures of truth; which, 1. As the neck is joined to the head, and being erect, discovers and makes it conspicuous; so to the scriptures being near to Christ, point him out, lead and direct souls unto him ; they hold him forth, and discover him to them ; and therefore Christ exhorts us, John v. 39. to search the scriptures, and for our encouragement, declares, that they testify of him. 2. They are the means of conveying spiritual breath to souls : The words which Christ speaks, and when he speaks them to the soul, they are spirit, and they are life ; and when attended with an almighty power, they make dry bones live, and become the savour of life unto life to dead sinners. 3. They are the means of conveying spiritual food, as well as spiritual breath ; as through the neck our breath is drawn, and food communicated to us, so through the scriptures we have spiritual breath and spiritual food ; they supply us with that which is nourishing and satisfying, delightful and pleasant, sweeter than the honey or the honey comb. 4. As the neck is beautified with chains of gold ; so are the scriptures bespangled with glorious truths and precious promises, where every truth is a golden link, and every promise a pearl, to a believing soul.

Now this neck of the church, the sacred scriptures, may very justly be represented by the tower of David, (1.) For height : The scriptures are an high tower ; the truths and doctrines contained therein, are sublime, they are out of sight, beyond the reach, and above the capacity of a natural man ; they are things which the carnal eye hath not seen, the carnal heart cannot conceive of, and which are only known, judged, valued and esteemed by the spiritual man, to whom the spirit of God has revealed these deep things ; for there are heights and depths in the sacred volumes, which require an eagle's eye and an angel's heart. (2.) For strength, firmness and immoveableness. Satan and his emissaries have used all their art and cunning, and employed all their power and might to remove the scripture out of the world, but they have found it a burdensome stone unto them ; the gates of hell and earth have not been able to prevail against it ; it has stood, and ever will, immoveable as a rock, and impregnable as a tower. (3.) 'Tis like David's tower, built for an armoury, whereon hang a thousand bucklers, all shields of mighty men : From hence are saints furnished with spiritual armour. [1.] To repel satan's temptations. When that enemy of souls set upon Christ in the wilderness, and threw his fiery darts, and poisoned arrows at him, he defended himself and vanquished the enemy with bucklers and shields, and the like pieces of armour, taken out of this armoury ; he repelled and weakened the force of his temptations, by saying, at every assault of the tempter, It is written, so or so ; and thus likewise believers are enabled to do more or less ; there is no better weapon to engage with that enemy, than the sword of the spirit, which is the word of God ; neither is there a better storehouse and magazine of spiritual armour than the scriptures be : The reason why those young men, in 1 John ii. 14. are said to overcome the wicked one, is, because the word of God abode in them. [2.] To defend the gospel and refute erroneous doctrines : Thus Christ refuted the errors of the Pharisees, concerning the law, and of the Sadducees concerning the resurrection from the dead, and proved the spirituality of the one, and confirmed the truth of the other, by scripture-testimonies : So Paul and Apollos mightily convinced the Jews, and proved from the scriptures, that Jesus was the Christ, the true Messiah; for as in 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17. All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God, every believer, and more especially a minister of Christ, may be perfect, thoroughly furnished to every good work; and particularly to defend truth, and refute error, for which he may be abundantly supplied out of this armoury; for here hang a thousand bucklers, and these are all shields of mighty men; which mighty men may use, and by which they may perform mighty actions, and do great exploits.

Thirdly, By the church's neck, which is compared to the tower of David, we may also understand the grace of faith; and, 1. As the neck is united to the head and members, so believers being united to Christ, lay hold upon him by faith, and closely adhere to him: By faith Christ dwells in our hearts, and by faith we dwell in him, being one with him. 2. It bears up and exalts the head; there is no grace which brings that glory to Christ, and honours him as this does; it is a soul-emptying, self-abasing, and Christ-exalting grace. 3. Through it are conveyed, and by it are derived from Christ the head, all life, food and nourishment to our souls; it is by faith we live on Christ, and receive life, and the comfortable supplies of it; all food and nourishment comes from Christ the head; which faith receives, and conveys unto us. 4. It is adorned with other graces and good works; the other graces of the spirit, such as hope, fear, love, humility, patience, self-denial, &c. are like chains of gold about this neck; besides, there are also the fruits of righteousness which attend it, and make it look very beautiful and amiable. 5. It is like to the neck for erectness; it looks not downwards, but upwards to Christ, who is the author and finisher of it; it is attended with an humble boldness, an holy confidence, and a becoming cheerfulness.

This may now be compared to the tower of David, (1.) For its height: The author of this grace of faith, is the most high God; it has its original from above; its object is Christ, who is made higher than the heavens, and to him it looks, on him it lives, in him it dwells, and is still pressing on toward the mark, for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. (2.) It is like a tower builded for an armoury: Faith is the believer's defence, his buckler and shield, whereby he is enabled to quench the fiery darts of satan; faith makes use of God as its shield, being encouraged so to do, by the declaration of grace, made to Abraham, Gen. xv. 1. Fear not, I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward: Faith improves and makes use of every perfection in God, as a shield, his love, grace, power, faithfulness, &c. Faith makes use of all God's promises as such; there is never a promise in the gospel, but will serve for a buckler and shield for faith, which believers, at one time or another, have also used as such; but more especially, faith uses Christ as such, who is the believer's sun and shield, and will give grace and glory to them, and will withhold no good thing from them: Christ, indeed, rather than faith, is a storehouse and magazine of armour, whereon hang a thousand bucklers; in whom an inexhaustible, overflowing, and all-sufficient fulness of grace dwells, from whence faith is furnished with all sorts of grace, and every needful piece of spiritual armour.

Ver. 5. Thy two breasts are like two young roes that are twins, which feed among the lilies.

THESE words contain the seventh and last particular instance of the church's beauty, in which her breasts are compared to two young roes, very elegantly expressing the beauty of them; they are compared to two young roes for smallness, large breasts not being accounted handsome; to young roes that are twins, because they are of equal size and bigness, not one larger and higher than the other, for that would be a deformity; and to two young roes that feed among the lilies, which are fat and plump, and so well expresses the fulness of them, they being not dry and empty breasts. Now by her breasts we may understand, either,

First, The ministers of the gospel. The Targum here makes mention of the Jews two Messiahs, which is a Talmudic fiction, and shews the work to be a later one than what is pretended: The words are thus paraphrased in it; Thy two redeemers which shall redeem thee, Messiah the son of David, and Messiah the son of Ephraim, are like to Moses and Aaron, the sons of Jochebed, who are compared to two young roes that are twins; who, in their integrity, fed the people, the house of Israel, forty years in the wilderness, with manna and fatted fowls, and water of the well of Miriam. And agreeable to this paraphrase, other Jewish writers would have Moses and Aaron here intended, who suckled and fed the people of Israel, and as twins, were very like one another: But I think they may be much better applied to the ministers of the gospel, who impart the sincere milk of the word to persons, deliver the sweet, comfortable and nourishing doctrines of grace, which may be compared to milk out of the breasts, with which they feed them, as the apostle says, 1 Cor. iii. 2. I have fed you with milk; which is nourishing to new-born souls, suitable to their natures, and easily digested by them. Now these breasts of the church, the ministers of the gospel, may be compared.

1st, To two young roes, which are, 1. Loving and pleasant creatures; Let her be as the loving hind and pleasant roe, &c. Prov. v. 19. Ministers of the gospel are loving and affectionate to those souls, more especially, who are born again under their ministry, whom they feed with the milk of the word; they are as fond of them, and bear as great an affection to them, as the tender mother or nurse do to their sucking babes, according to what the apostle says, 1 Thess. ii. 7, 8. But we were gentle among you, even as a nurse cherishes her children; so, being affectionately desirous of you, we were willing to have imparted unto you, not the gospel of God only, but also our own souls, because ye were dear to us; than which, nothing can be more passionately spoken, or in a more lively manner represent that strong affection and tender love and regard that ministers shew to souls. Moreover, as they are as the loving hind unto those souls, so they are as the pleasant roe in their esteem; they love them, and are loved by them; they appear exceeding beautiful and lovely in the eyes of those, to whom God has made them useful; for the very feet of them that bring glad tidings are beautiful to them. 2. Those creatures are sharp-sighted ones. Ministers of the gospel, having their understandings opened, their judgments informed, and their souls led by the spirit of God, into the truth, as it is in Jesus, have light, knowledge, and penetration into the scriptures of truth, and are capable of directing and guiding the feet of, and shewing the way of salvation unto others. 3. They are swift creatures. Thus the apostles and first ministers of the gospel, like young roes, ran, spread and carried the gospel all over the Gentile world; their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the end of the world: And it may also denote in general, how expedite and quick of dispatch ministers are in doing of their Lord's work, notwithstanding a great many difficulties are in the way; yet, like young roes, they leap over these mountains, and skip over these bills, and are not slothful in business, but fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. 4. Here is only mention made of two young roes, and that to suit with the number of her breasts; and two breasts being sufficient for one person, denotes the sufficient number of ministers, which Christ provides for his church; when he had sent out the twelve apostles, he afterwards sends out other seventy disciples, and these he sent out two and two; and so in all ages of the world, as he has removed some, he has sent others; and when there has been want of such workmen in his vineyard, he has pray'd the Lord of the harvest to send forth more labourers; and as the fruit of his ascension and intercession, sufficient gifts have been given to a competent number of men to fit them for the ministry, for the good of his body, the church.

2dly, They are compared, not only to two young roes, but to two young roes that are twins; which is expressive of their equal authority, joint commission and harmony of doctrine, as has been already observed; on ver. 2.

3dly, They are compared to two young roes, that feed among the lilies. Now the lilies, among which the ministers of the gospel feed, are either, 1. The scriptures, which they make their principal study, and the main subject of their contemplation; here their own souls are delighted, comforted and instructed, and so become useful in comforting and instructing others: From hence they gather food for themselves, and being nourished with the wholesome words of faith and sound doctrine, they are capable of feeding others also. Or, 2. The saints. In what respects the people of God may be compared to lilies, has been shewn on Ch. ii. 2. among these the ministers of the gospel feed, and to these they break and impart the bread of life. 3. It may be observed, that it is where Christ himself feeds, as in Ch. ii. 16. The ministers of the gospel feed where Christ feeds, and Christ feeds where they do: The great end of the gospel-ministry is not only that saints may have communion one with another, but also with their head, Christ Jesus: Would any therefore enjoy communion with Christ? Are any desirous of knowing where Christ feeds? he feeds where his ministers do, and that is among the lilies, in the congregation of the saints; it may serve then as a direction to such, to sit under a gospel ministry. Or,

Secondly, We may understand by the church's two breasts, the two Testaments; the old and the new: A <sup>b</sup> Jewish writer would have their two laws here intended, viz. the written law and the oral law; the written law is that which was written on the two tables of stone; the oral law is what they imagine God gave to Moses, by word of mouth, which he gave to Joshua, and so was handed down from one to another, and makes up the volume of their vain, unprofitable and numerous traditions, called the Misnab: But it is much better applied by <sup>c</sup> another of them, to the two tables themselves, on which were written the ten commandments, five on one table and five on the other; and so, like two young roes that are twins, answered one another; though the two Testaments, the old and the new, seem to bid much fairer to be the sense of these words; which two breasts contain and impart the whole sincere milk of the word, and afford every thing that is nourishing and refreshing to believers; here is milk for babes, and meat for strong men; and like two young roes, are exceeding pleasant and delightful to believers; they rejoice the heart, cheer the spirits, and fill the soul with an universal pleasure; and as two young roes that are twins, are alike, there is an harmony and agreement between them; they look to one another as the two cherubim over the mercy seat did: They agree, 1. In the person, office and grace of Christ; the old Testament has said nothing concerning the Messiah, what he should be, do, or suffer, but what the new Testament has fully confirmed and more clearly discovered; and the new Testament says nothing of Christ, his person, office and grace, but what the old bears a testimony to; and therefore, says Christ to the Jews, John v. 39. Search the scriptures, i. e. of the old Testament; for they are they which testify of me. 2. They are alike in their doctrines: The doctrines concerning Christ's person, the remission of sins by his blood, justification by his righteousness, &c. are the same in both Testaments, notwithstanding they were spoken at undry times and delivered in divers manners; though, perhaps, they are more clearly revealed in the one than in the other. The apostle Paul, that great assertor of the doctrines of grace under the new Testament, said no other things than what Moses and the prophets said under the old. 3. The promises and prophecies of the old Testament have their completion in the new; there was nothing promised to be done, or prophesied that should be, but what has been exactly fulfilled and brought to pass; neither is there scarcely any thing in the new Testament, but what was promised and prophesied of under the old. 4. The types and figures of the old law are exactly answered in the new Testament: The law was nothing else but a shadow of good things to come: The passover-lamb, the brazen serpent, the rock and manna, the Jewish sabbaths, sacrifices, new moons, washings and purifications, all prefigured, and had their fulfilment in, Christ Jesus; there is scarce any thing in the new Testament, but what was typified under the old; and nothing prefigured under the old, but what has its completion in the new; and thus are they like two young roes that are twins:

And,

And they may also be said to be like roes that feed among the lilies, because they abound with the lilies of gospel promises, and gospel doctrines; these two fields are full of them; there are exceeding great and precious promises, and heavenly and delightful truths, which make for the consolation, edification and instruction of God's people. Or,

Thirdly, By the church's two breasts may be intended, the two ordinances of the gospel, baptism, and the Lord's supper; which are not dry breasts, but breasts of consolation, out of which believers suck and are satisfied; in the Lord's supper, by faith, they eat the flesh, and drink the blood of the son of God, and feed upon the bruised and broken body of a crucified Jesus; and in so doing, receive much strength and nourishment; in the ordinance of baptism, they look to a buried and risen Jesus, behold the place where their Lord lay, who was delivered for their offences, and rose again for their justification, and oftentimes go away as the ennuch did, rejoicing: Now these, like two young roes, are exceeding pleasant and delightful to believers, when they have the presence and spirit of God with them, and the discoveries of his love unto them; for then are wisdom's ways, ways of pleasantness, and all her paths, paths of peace. Again, like two roes that are twins, they are both instituted by Christ, both lead the faith of God's children to him, they both require the same subjects, viz. Believers, and ought to go inseparably together; he that has a right to the one, has an indubitate right to the other; and he that subjects to the one, should also to the other; for so did the first primitive Christians, who, as soon as converted, were baptized, and the same day joined themselves to the church, and stedfastly continued in holy fellowship and communion with it; a practice to be imitated and followed by us now. Moreover, these may be said to feed among the lilies, because they are all acknowledged, received and submitted to by the saints, who are compared to lilies; who not only entertain them, but maintain and vindicate them against all opposers.

There are <sup>4</sup> some who think by the church's breasts, are meant, love to God, and love to our neighbour, which are the two great commandments of the law; and therefore love is said to be the fulfilling of the law. Now we love God, because he first loved us; and we love the saints, because they are loved with the same love, redeemed by the same blood as we are, have the same grace wrought in their hearts as we ourselves have, and all as the fruit and effect of divine grace; and being thus filled with a sense of God's love, they become very fruitful in good works, and like two young roes, are exceeding pleasant and delightful to Christ; and therefore he says, in ver. 10. How fair is thy love, my sister, my spouse, &c. both to me and to my saints: And like two young roes that are twins, are wrought at one and the same time in the soul, bear a very great resemblance to each other, in their natures, properties and usefulness, and do inseparably go together; for where there is love to God there will be love to the saints; for to say we love God and do not love our brother, is a manifest contradiction, as the apostle John says, 1 John iv. 20. He that loveth not his brother, whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? And these being fed by scripture-precepts and examples, examples, grow and increase abundantly like two young roes which are fat and plump, feeding among the lilies; but the other senses of the words before-mentioned, seem better to agree with them.

Ver. 6. Until the day break, and the shadows flee away, I will get me to the mountain of myrrh, and to the hill of frankincense.

SOME<sup>a</sup> think these are the words of the church, who not being able to bear, any longer, to hear herself so highly commended, as in the preceding verses, resolves to betake herself to some private place, where she might be out of the hearing of such praises and commendations; or else, being under great temptations and darkness of soul, resolves to go to the mountain of the Lord's house, the church of Christ, and there in reading, meditation, prayer, and other exercises, wait for his presence, and the manifestations of himself unto her; or rather, being in distressed circumstances, she is resolved to go to Christ himself, the rock that is higher than she; who, for the odour of his sacrifice, the fragrant of his intercession, and sweet smelling garment of his righteousness, may be called the mountain of myrrh, and hill of frankincense, as he is a bundle of myrrh, in Ch. i. 13. But I am rather inclined to think, that they are the words of Christ, in which we are told,

1st, the place where he resolves to go to, and abide; the mountain of myrrh, and hill of frankincense; which I apprehend, intend one and the same place. 2<sup>dly</sup>, How long he proposes to continue here; until the day break, and the shadows flee away.

Now by the mountain of myrrh, and hill of frankincense, most of the Jewish<sup>b</sup> writers understand the temple, which was built on mount Moriab, 2 Chron. iii. 1. the place where Abraham offered up his son Isaac; in which mountain as the Lord then, so frequently in after ages, especially when the temple was built, appeared unto his people. Now the temple may be called the mountain of myrrh, and hill of frankincense, either in allusion to Moriab, the name of the mountain on which it was built; which, perhaps, might have its name originally from the abundance of myrrh which grew upon it; or else, because in it was the holy anointing oil, one ingredient in which was pure myrrh; and also the incense, which was made of pure frankincense, together with other spices, which was likewise put upon their meat offerings, which were there offered up unto the Lord: And this sense of the words is not altogether to be despised; for in the temple, the Shechinah or divine majesty dwelt, until Christ came in the flesh, when the gospel-day broke, and the shadows of the ceremonial law vanished, fled and disappeared; as has been shewn in Ch. ii. 17. Though, I think, rather by the mountain of myrrh and hill of frankincense, is intended the church of Christ, where he has took up his residence, and resolves to dwell until his second coming; which may be

loc. and Zohar. in Gen. fol. 75. 1. Alshech interprets it of mount Sinai, and the day-break of the captivity of Egypt.

compared to a hill or mountain, 1. For their height. Hills and mountains are higher than any other parts of the earth; and so is the church of Christ than the rest of the world. Saints are higher in Christ's esteem than all the world besides, and are exalted by his grace, and dignified with favours by him, above all others; and however low and mean they may now appear in the eyes of the world, the time is coming, when this mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, Isa. ii. 2. 2. For their immoveableness. Hills and mountains cannot be removed; no more can the church or believers in Christ, Psal. cxxv. 1. for they that trust in the Lord, shall be as mount Zion; which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever: They shall never be removed either from Christ's hands or Christ's heart; they shall never be removed from a state of justification, to a state of condemnation; they are secured by electing love, and preserved in Christ Jesus; they are held fast by covenant-bands, and are built upon a sure foundation, upon a rock, against which the gates of hell can never prevail. 3. For being places where trees grow, as oaks, cedars, olives, &c. and famous for these were Bashan, Hermon, Lebanon, the mount of olives, &c. In the church of Christ are trees of righteousness, which being planted by Christ's father, flourish like palm-trees, and grow like cedars in Lebanon. 4. For being places of pasture for cattle; such were Bashan, Carmel and Gilead. In the church of Christ there is pasture for all his sheep; there plenteous provisions of grace are made; a feast of fat things, wine mingled, bread prepared, and a table sufficiently furnished for all Christ's friends and guests, in this his holy mountain, the church. 5. In hills and mountains worship used to be given, and sacrifices offered up to God, as may be collected from the discourse of Christ with the woman of Samaria, John iv. 20, 21. as well as from other places of scripture. In the church of Christ the worship of God is maintained, the word of God is preached, his ordinances are administered, and the sacrifices of prayer and praise are offered up to him in the name and through the mediation of Christ Jesus. And as it may be compared to a mountain and hill, so likewise to a mountain of myrrh, and bill of frankincense; (1.) Because of the fragrancy of those graces, with which the church is perfumed: Hence she is said, in Cb. iii. 6. to be perfumed with myrrh and frankincense, with all powders of the merchant; and in this chapter, ver. 10. the smell of them is said to exceed all spices; and that more especially, when they are in exercise; so grateful, well-pleasing, and sweet smelling are they then to Christ Jesus. (2.) Because of sacrifices which are of a sweet smelling savour, that are offered up here, as the sacrifices of prayer, which, in Rev. v. 8. are called odours; and are more especially so to God the father, when they are offered up through Christ's mediation, being perfumed with his much incense. Here are also the sacrifices of praise, which are of an exceeding grateful and delightful odour to God; for being offered up to him through Christ, these spiritual sacrifices become acceptable to him. (3.) Because of that pleasure and delight which Christ takes in his people, and that sweet communion which they here enjoy with him; so that to them both, it is a mountain of myrrh and bill of frankincense; where the one concludes, it is good good to be, and the other resolves to stay till the day break, &c. The saints are the excellent in the earth, with whom Christ delights to converse, and to whom his goodness extends; he says, the lines are fallen to him in pleasant places, and that he has a goodly heritage assigned him by his Father, in as much as they are his to live and dwell with him for evermore: and to the saints, Christ's tabernacles are amiable and lovely; they account a day spent in his courts, better than a thousand elsewhere, because there they see him, and have fellowship with him, whom their souls love. Now in this mountain of myrrh, and hill of frankincense, Christ, as he delights, so he resolves to dwell, until the day break, &c. Which is,

1st, Until the day of grace breaks in upon every elect soul. All that the father hath loved with an everlasting love, and hath chosen in Christ before the world began, he put into his hands, who, upon the reception of them, laid himself under obligation to redeem them by his blood, and bring them safe to glory; and as he has already done the former, he's now doing the latter, through the ministry of the word; and therefore the preaching of the gospel, a standing ministry, and a church-state, are continued on earth, in which he'll stay, until every one of those other sheep are called by divine grace, whom he has laid himself under obligation to bring in. And now when grace breaks in upon a poor sinner's heart, 'tis like the break of day unto him; light springs into his understanding, which before was darkened; he who was darkness itself, is now made light in the Lord, and is no more reckoned among the children of the night, but among the children of the day; for now the shadows of ignorance and infidelity are fled away; the scales of darkness are fallen from his eyes, and in God's light sees light; he now sees his lost and undone state without Christ, the corruption and depravity of his nature, and the plague of his own heart; he sees the impurity and imperfection of his own righteousness, and the glory and fulness of Christ's; he sees Christ as a proper, suitable, able and willing saviour; he sees things he never saw before, and which will ever remain invisible to a carnal eye. Now, until the day of grace has thus broke in upon every elect soul, and the shadows of blindness, ignorance and infidelity are thus fled and gone; Christ has took up his residence, and will dwell in his church, which, to him, is a mountain of myrrh, and hill of frankincense. Or else,

2<sup>dly</sup>, Until the day of glory breaks; that everlasting day, in which there'll be no more night; when all shadows of darkness, infidelity, doubts and fears, will flee away; when saints shall be attended no more with the long, tedious and dark nights of afflictions and sorrows, and shall stand in no need of shadowy ordinances; but shall enjoy Christ, the sum and substance of all; and dwell and be delighted with him perpetually, upon the everlasting mountains of spices, as has been shewn on Cb. ii. 17.

Ver. 7. Thou art all fair, my love, there is no spot in thee.

CHRIST having mentioned some particular parts of the church, wherein she appeared very beautiful, in describing of which, his soul was so taken with her beauty, that he resolves to dwell with her till his second coming; and now, lest it should be thought that there was a defect of beauty in the parts not mentioned, he sums up all in this general commendation; Thou art all fair, my love, there is no spot in thee: which commendation may regard the church, in some particular period of time; or in general, be expressive of the fairness and beauty of the church, and every believer in any age of the world. A <sup>a</sup> learned Jewish writer would have the words referred to the days of Solomon, in which he affirms, all Israel were righteous; and another <sup>b</sup> to the time when Israel received the law from mount Sinai, when 'tis said there were none lame, blind, and dumb among them; but they much better agree with the primitive and apostolic church, that was gathered by the ministry of the apostles, after Christ's ascension, which is the mind of some <sup>c</sup> Christian expositors; and indeed, the church then bid as fair for this character, as in any other period of time whatever: Therefore, it may not be amiss if we consider how well it agrees with it; which will appear if we observe,

First, The pure doctrines of grace, which were then preach'd: The doctrines of the gospel, by the first ministers thereof, were fully preach'd; they kept back nothing that might be profitable to the churches, upon any pretence whatever; they shunned not to declare all the counsel of God, whatever was the consequence of it; and this they did in all sincerity and godly simplicity; they used no artful methods to conceal their principles, but renounced those hidden things of dishonesty; they did not handle the word of God deceitfully, but by manifestation of the truth, commended themselves to every man's conscience; they did not <sup>d</sup> corrupt the word of God, and blend it with their own inventions, but as of sincerity, but as of God, being sent by him, in the sight of God, so spake they in Christ; and were always jealous, lest the souls they ministered to should be seduced and drawn away by cunning and artful men, from the simplicity of the gospel; they were careful to deliver those doctrines consistently; their trumpet did not give an uncertain sound; their word was not yea and nay, sometimes one thing, and sometimes another, to the dishonour of the gospel, and the confusion of souls, but was all of a piece they preach'd agreeable to the analogy of faith, and were very solicitous keep to that rule, and not swerve from it. And with a great deal of warmth and zeal they adhered to these truths, bravely withstood all opposers, feared the faces of none, and studied to please no man, but were bold in the name of God to speak the gospel of God, though with much contention; and however weak, mean and contemptible their ministry might appear to the world, it

Fourthly, If we take a view of their christian communion and fellowship with each other; they lived in entire unity and harmony with each other; they were all of one heart and of one soul; one soul did, as it were, dwell in and actuate all their bodies; they had a great deal of sympathy for each other, in all distresses, whether inward or outward, and freely communicated to each other; they wept with those that wept, and rejoiced with those that rejoiced; they kept Christ's new commandment, and entirely loved one another; and in so doing, gave an evidence of their being the true disciples of Christ; so that the very Heathens took notice of it, and could say, See how they love one another; which, though they could not condemn, yet it was not very grateful to them.

Fifthly, Their conversation was as becometh the gospel of Christ Jesus; they held the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience; that grace, which was revealed unto them, and wrought in them, taught them to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world; and in so doing, they adorned the gospel, honoured their profession, stopped the mouths of gain-sayers, and recommended religion to others; and thus that primitive church continued for the first three hundred years after Christ: But we are not to imagine, that there were no blemishes and imperfections in her during all this time, for there were many, and more especially towards the latter end; but being compared with the state of the church in after ages, she might then be said to be all fair, and no spot in her. But I rather think, the words are not to be limited to the church, in any one period of time, but are applicable to her and to all believers, in any age of the world, who are all fair, not upon the foot of their own works, as the Targum on the place intimates; for all their righteousnesses are as filthy rags; and so are far from making them to appear fair and beautiful in Christ's sight; but they are so, being justified by his righteousness, washed in his blood, and sanctified by his spirit, and so shall be, at last, presented to him, a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing, Eph. v. 27.

The title and character which Christ here gives to his church, my love, I have already met with, and explained in Ch. i. 9. 'Tis here predicated of her,

1st, That she is all fair: She is said to be fair, and is called, by Christ, his fair one, and the fairest among women before, but here, all fair: To show, 1. That she was a perfection of beauty, being made perfect through that comeliness which Christ put upon her. Believers are perfectly justify'd by Christ's righteousness, from all sin, stand complete in him, and so are esteemed all fair by him; and in respect of sanctification, there's a perfection of parts; though not of degrees; there's a perfect new creature in all its parts, though it is not, as yet, grown up to be a perfect man in Christ; even as a new born babe, which has every part and limb in just proportion, may be said to be perfect, though it has not, as yet, grown up to the stature and bigness it will do, if life is continued. 2. That the whole church, and all the true members thereof, are so; all of the church, every member, every individual believer is fair in Christ's eye; the meanest and weakest believer, as well as the greatest and strongest, is made perfectly comely, with Christ's comeliness, and equally accepted in the beloved. 3. He says so of the church, to manifest the exceeding greatness of her beauty, and how much his heart was taken with it, that he, the king, greatly desired it, and delighted to be in her company. 4. To comfort her, banish her doubts and fears, and strengthen her faith; who seeing her own vileness and sinfulness, spots and blemishes, might be ready to despond in her mind, and call in question her interest in Christ, and his righteousness; therefore, he says, Thou art all fair, my love; I do love thee; thou art exceeding fair and beautiful in my eye, all of thee is fair and beautiful; thou art fairer than all others, being adorned with my grace, and clothed with my righteousness.

2<sup>dly</sup>, He asserts, that there was no spot in her, which is not to be understood, 1. As if there was no sin in believers; for this is contrary to all the experience of God's children, as well as to express texts of scripture; the humble confessions and ingenuous acknowledgments of saints in all ages, their frequent groans and complaints of the weight and burden of it, are plain proofs to the contrary; their ardent prayers at the throne of grace, for the manifestations of pardoning love, that God would cleanse them from secret, and keep them back from presumptuous sins, not only testify their commission of sinful actions, but also their sense of indwelling corruptions; and and their daily slips and falls loudly proclaim the depravity of their natures; to imagine, that we have no sin in us, is but to deceive ourselves, and to give an evidence to others, that the truth is not in us: Therefore, when Christ says of his church, that there is no spot in her, we are not to understand it in this sense; nor, 2. As if the sins of God's people were not sins; for tho' they are justified by Christ's righteousness from all sin, and have all their sins pardoned through Christ's blood; yet their sins do not hereby cease to be so: Pardon of sin, and justification by Christ's righteousness, free souls from an obligation to punishment due to sin, but do not destroy the nature of sin: Violations and breaches of God's righteous law, made by his own people, are equally esteemed sins by him, as those made by others; and though he never will inflict his vindictive wrath upon them, for their sins, yet he does oftentimes, in a fatherly manner, chastize them for them, and bring them under a sense and acknowledgment of them before him. But, 3. The church and all believers are so in Christ's account; though they have sin in them, and have committed sin, and through infirmity, continue to do so, yet sin is not reckoned and imputed to them; for being clothed with his spotless righteousness, he looks upon them as if they had no spot in them; and they are so covered with it, that when their sins are sought for, by divine justice, they shall not be found; nay, God himself having accepted of Christ's righteousness, and imputed it to them, sees no iniquity in Jacob, nor perverseness in Israel; though all sin is seen by him, in articulo providentiæ, in the article of providence; and nothing escapes his all-seeing eye; yet, in articulo justificationis, in the article of justification, he sees no sin in his people, so as to reckon it to them, or condemn them for it; for they all stand unblameable and unproveable in his sight; and Christ will, e'er long, present them in open view to men and angels, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing.

Ver. 8. Come with me from Lebanon, (my spouse) with me from Lebanon: look from the top of Amana, from the top of Shenir and Hermon, from the lions dens, from the mountains of the leopards.

CHRIST having, in the verses going before, given a large and full commendation of his church's beauty, and having his heart exceedingly taken with it, so that he could not bear a distance from her, invites her as his spouse and bride, to go along with him, and look off from the several places here mentioned. In the words are,

I. A special title given her, expressive of the nearest relation to him; my spouse.

II. A

II. A kind invitation to go along with him, entorced with the most powerful arguments.

I. A special title is given to her, my spouse : This is a new one, which we never met with before : He had called her his love, his dove, and his fair one, but never, till now, his spouse ; which is expressive of that near relation and strict union that is between Christ and his church ; which union is represented by several things in scripture, as by the union of the head and members, vine and branches, but by none more strongly than by the conjugal union of husband and wife, by which they become one flesh ; which the apostle, Eph. v. 32. taking notice of, applies to Christ and his church : This, says he, is a great mystery : but I speak concerning Christ and his church ; Christ and his church being espoused together, become one spirit : Hence it is that they are called by the same names. Christ is called by the name of Israel, which is the church's name, and the church is called by the name of Christ : Hence all that Christ has is the church's, and all that the church has, is Christ's ; her debts become his, and his grace becomes her's. There's a mutual interest of persons and things ; and that which crowns all, is, that this union is indissoluble ; this band can never be broken, nor this marriage knot be ever untied.

I shall now very briefly shew you, 1st, How the church came to be the spouse of Christ. 2dly, Why she is first called so here.

1st, How the church came to be Christ's spouse ; a person so much beneath him, at such a distance from him, and so unlovely and unlikely in herself, it may justly seem strange, and be wonder'd at, how she came to be so nearly related to him : And here now observe, that the Lord Jesus Christ, from all eternity, pitch'd his love upon her : That he loved her from thence, is manifest from his suretyship-engagements for her ; he asked her of his father, who had a right to dispose of her, and he gave him his heart's desire, and did not withhold the request of his lips from him ; which request being made by the Son, and consent given by the Father, he then betrothed her to himself for ever, and that in righteousness and in judgment, and in loving kindness, and in mercies ; and resolved to bestow that grace upon her, which should cause her to know, own and acknowledge him to be her Lord and husband ; but notwithstanding this, at present, here was an actual consent of her own wanting, wherefore he sends his ministring servants in the several ages of the world to obtain it : These are sent to display his greatness, discover the riches of his grace, and peak of all his glories ; which being impressed upon souls, by the mighty power of his spirit and grace, they are willing to give up themselves to him, to be his for ever, to love, own and acknowledge him as their Lord and husband ; which may be called the day of their espousals to him ; but all this will more visibly and gloriously appear, when all the elect are gathered in, and every soul of them made willing to be a holy spouse unto him ; then shall the nuptials be solemnized, and that voice shall be heard in heaven, the marriage of the lamb is come ; whose wife being as a bride adorn'd for her husband, shall be received by him, and enter with with him into the marriage-chamber, where they shall spend an endless eternity in the enjoyment of each other.

2dly, Why she is first called so here ; she is in the following verses, and in other parts of this song, frequently called so, but never before this time. 1. Being all fair, without any spot or blemish, being prepared, by his grace, for himself, and having a grant from him to be array'd in fine linen, clean and white, he calls her his spouse ; for now she look'd something like one, having on the wedding garment, Christ's spotless righteousness. 2. The marriage was now consummated, the day of his espousals was over, which is mentioned in Ch. iii. 11. for all that comes between that and these words, is a commendation of his church's beauty, which his heart was wonderfully taken with on his marriage-day, and when he had finished the commendation, salutes her with this title, my spouse. 3. The mentioning of it here, may be also to prevail with her to go along with him : Where should a wife be ? or with whom should she be but with her husband ? I am thy husband, and thou art my spouse and bride ; and therefore both duty and affection to me, should oblige thee to go along with me ; so that the import of the words is much the same with those, forget thine own people, and thy father's house ; so shall the king greatly desire thy beauty : For he is thy Lord, and worship thou him, Psal. xlv. 10, 11. Which leads me to consider,

II. The invitation he gives her to go along with him, Come with me, my spouse, &c. or, as the words may be read, 'Thou shalt come with me, &c. for whatever Christ invites and exhorts us to, he must give us grace and strength to perform, and blessed be his name, he does so.

Lebanon, from whence she is exhorted and invited to remove, was a goodly mountain, on the borders of the land of Canaan, northward ; it was famous for odoriferous trees, and especially cedars ; wherefore, frequent mention is made of it in this song : This was that goodly mountain and Lebanon, which Moses had such a desire to see before his death, Deut. iii. 25. Some of the <sup>2</sup> Jewish writers think, that a mighty conflux of people to the temple, from all parts of Judea, and even from among the uncircumcised, who are comparable to lions and leopards, is here intended : But rather, we are to understand the words as an exhortation, to remove from the temple, and from Jerusalem ; for, perhaps, by Lebanon, here may be meant the temple, as in Zech. xi. 1. Open thy doors, O Lebanon, that the fire may devour thy cedars ; which, by some <sup>3</sup> Jewish writers, is expounded of the temple, and the destruction of it ; for they tell us <sup>1</sup>, that forty years before the destruction of it, the gates of the temple opened of themselves ; at which, R. Jochanan Ben Zaccai, as if affrighted, rebuked them and said, Now know I that thy destruction is at hand, according to the prophecy of Zachariah, the son of Iddo, Open thy gates, O Lebanon, &c. The temple might be called so, because it was made of the wood of Lebanon, of cedars which were brought from thence, and because the the frankincense which grew there, was daily burnt in it, and the glory of it was brought into it. Now, in Christ's time the temple was become a den of thieves, as he calls it, in Mat. xxi. 13. and in the apostles time was a den of lions, and a mountain of leopards; was full of painted and spotted hypocrites, and cruel persecutors, wolves in sheep's clothing, who made havock of the church, and persecuted the saints from place to place; wherefore, Christ removed from them, broke up house-keeping with them, and left their house desolate unto them; he took his gospel from them, ordered his ministers to depart far hence to the Gentiles, and calls forth his people from among them, to go along with him thither, Come with me from Lebanon, my spouse, &c. Also he bids her look from the top of Amana, from the top of Shenir and Hermon: Amana was a mountain <sup>k</sup> which divided Cilicia from Syria, from whence, perhaps, the river at the foot of it took its name, which, in 2 Kings v. 12. is called Abana, but in the Keri or margin, 'tis read, Amana; and so the Targum here expounds it of the people, which dwelt by the river Amana: R. Solomon Jarchi would have it to be a mountain in the northern border of Israel, and that it is the same with mount Hor<sup>l</sup>; and indeed, in every place where mention is made of mount Hor, the Targum of Jonathan<sup>m</sup> always renders it Taurus Umanus; for Amanus according to Ptolemy, was a part of mount Taurus; it seems to be a mountain in the land of Judea; it is join'd with Libanus by <sup>n</sup> Josephus, and was a part of it, where the snow lay all the summer; as it is both with that and Carmel by Ælianus<sup>o</sup>; Shenir and Hermon were one and the same mountain called by different names. Hermon, perhaps, was the common name to the whole mountain, and that part of it which belong'd to the Sidonians, they called Sirion; and the other part which belonged to the Amorites, they called Shenir, Deut. lli. 9. Now all these mountains may be called dens of lions, and mountains of leopards, not only because they were inhabited by those <sup>p</sup> wild beasts, but because they were inhabited by cruel, savage, and tyrannical persons; and especially Amana, as Strabo, l. 14. relates, as he is cited both by Ainsworth and Brightman, on this place; and which appears also from what Lucan says in his Pharsalia, l. 3.

Shenir and Hermon were, formerly, as Jarchi observes, the dens of those lions, Sibon and Og, kings of Bashan, and of the Amorites; unless they should rather be thought to be the proper names of some places about Lebanon; for Adrichomius<sup>q</sup> says, the mountain of the leopards, which was round and high, was two miles distant northward from Tripolis, three from the city Arcas, southward, and one from mount Lebanon. Now from the tops of these mountains, Christ would have his church look and take a prospect how the gospel was received received, what numbers of souls were converted; and how churches were planted in Phœnicia, Cyprus, Cyrenia, Antioch, &c. though it was contemned, rejected and persecuted by the Jewish nation; so that the words may be understood of Christ's carrying his gospel into the Gentile world, and succeeding it, and calling his people to take notice of it. Or else,

This may intend, in general, Christ's call to his church and people, to leave the society of, and come out from among, the wicked men of the world, comparable to lions and leopards, and to go along with him, as in 2 Cor. vi. 17. and Rev. xviii. 4. And here are two sorts of arguments which he makes use of to enforce this upon them.

First, That the persons from whom he exhorts them to remove, were no other than lions and leopards, and to converse with them, was no better than to dwell in the dens and mountains of such. 1. Wicked and ungodly persons may be compared to lions, especially those who are of a cruel and persecuting nature: Hence David being among such, says, my soul is among lions: He frequently represents the wicked as such, and desires deliverance from them: Likewise the apostle Paul calls a persecuting Nero, the lion, out of whose mouth it pleased the Lord to deliver him. 2. They may be compared to leopards, (1.) For their being full of spots: The leopard is not fuller of spots than the sinner is of sin; as the one is natural, so is the other; and as the leopard cannot change one spot, nor make any alteration in his nature, no more can the sinner change his own heart, or by any power of his own, remove the spots and stains of sin; as Jeremy says, Ch. xiii. 23. Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots? then may ye also do good, that are accustomed to do evil. (2.) For their craftiness and cruelty, as is manifest from Jer. v. 6. Hos. xiii. 7. Ælianus * reports, that when the leopard is in want of food, it hides itself among the thickets, so as it cannot be seen; and by the sweetness of its odour, draws the fawns, does, wild goats, and such like animals, to it; and when they are near, breaks out of its lurking place, and makes them its prey; other artful methods it makes use of for the same purpose, as is recorded by others †; which is a just emblem of the craftiness and cruelty of wicked and ungodly men, who use all the stratagems to ensnare, and exercise all the cruelty they can devise, upon those who are quiet in the land. (3.) For their swiftness: So in Hab. i. 8. The horses of the Chaldeans are said to be swifter than leopards. Wicked men, though slow and backward to that which is good, yet are swift to do mischief; no sooner do their hearts devise wickedness, but their feet run to accomplish it.

Secondly, The second argument he uses with her to quit the society of wicked men, is, the enjoyment of his own company, which is far preferable to theirs; Come with me, my spouse. 1. Christ's company is much more pleasant than theirs; though the ways of sin may seem pleasant for a while, yet, at length, they will appear no other than the haunts of lions and leopards; though the company of sinners may seem now sweet and delightful, they will be found, at last, to be more bitter than death; but Christ's ways are always ways of

pleasantness: 'Tis good for the believer to be always in his company, where he finds solid pleasure, and inexpressible delight, more than ever he did in the tents of wickedness. 2. It is more profitable: The company and conversation of wicked men is hurtful and pernicious; Evil communications corrupt good manners; but the company of Christ is always profitable: A believer always gets something by it; it has a mighty influence upon the inward frame of his soul, and upon his outward walk in the world; it makes him both comfortable in himself, and useful to others; so that he sustains no loss, but, undoubtedly, is a gainer, who parts with the company of the men of the world for Christ's. 3. Christ's company is much more safe than their's: The company of wicked men is always dangerous; there's danger, not only of being infected with their sins, but also of partaking of their plagues; it tends to ruin here, and leads to everlasting destruction; but the believer is always safe in Christ's company, in what place or condition soever he be; though he walks through the waters of afflictions, and fire of tribulations, nay, though through the valley of the shadow of death, yet he is always safe, being guided by his counsel, supported by his hand, and comforted by his presence.

Now Christ, in all this, discovers a great deal of care over, and affection to, his church and people: One would think, she cannot withstand a request, delivered in such an affectionate manner, where her own comfort, profit, and safety, are so much concerned; Who would dwell in lions dens, and in the mountains of the leopards, when they might have such agreeable and delightful company, as Christ's is? which is to be valued and prefer'd before this world, and all the things of it; though God's own children are too apt to be taken with them, and therefore have need, as here, to be called to look off from them, to things that are spiritual and heavenly, and not take up their rest and satisfaction in those things and places, where lions dwell, and leopards walk.

Ver. 9. Thou hast ravished my heart, my sister, my spouse: Thou hast ravished my heart, with one of thine eyes, with one chain of thy neck.

CHRIST having invited his church to go along with him, here discovers the reason of it, because his heart was ravished with her; he had such an affection for her, that he could not bear to be at a distance from her. In these words, consider,

- I. The titles given to her; my sister, my spouse.
- II. What he declares to her; Thou hast ravished my heart; which expression is doubled.
- III. What it was his heart was so taken with, which had such a mighty influence upon him; with one of thine eyes, with one chain of thy neck.

L. I shall

I. I shall consider the titles he gives unto her, and they are two, my sister, my spouse; one of which, viz. my spouse, has been explained in the former verse, and is here repeated to shew his affection to her, how much he delighted in her under this character; as also to assure her of the truth of it, as well as to manifest his satisfaction in this relation; and that he was not ashamed to own and acknowledge her as such: The other title, my sister, we have not met with before; now Christ may call the church his sister,

1. More amatorio, it being a love-strain; and this being a love-song, where Christ and his church are expressing their love to each other, such a title as this cannot be look'd upon an improper one. 2. More Hebraeorum: it being usual with the Jews, to call those of their own kindred and country, brethren and sisters; and with none but such were they allow'd to marry; and, perhaps, to this the apostle has a respect, 1 Cor. ix. 5. Have we not power to lead about a sister, a wife, &c. Agreeable to this, Christ calls his church, his sister, whom he had espoused to himself. 3. He may call her so on the account of his incarnation; he having assumed the same nature, and partook of the same flesh and blood, the children did; and so being of one and the same mass and lump with them, is not ashamed to call them brethren; which, it may be, is intended in that wish of the church's, Cb. viii. 1. O that thou wert as my brother, &c. i. e. O that thou wert incarnate, that we were of the same flesh and blood, and thereby thou appear to be my brother, and I thy sister. 4. On the account of her adoption. God has, by his sovereign, free and distinguishing grace, adopted all his elect into his family, and has in his covenant of grace, declared himself to be their father, and them to be his sons and daughters; and now being the sons and daughters of the same Father as Christ is the son of, they become his brethren and sisters, which he acknowledges, John xx. 17. 5. Being born again, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God, they bear this character; and are so in Christ's esteem, according to what he says, Mat. xii. 50. Whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven; the same is my brother, and sister, and mother: Christ bears all relations to his people, and is willing to own them in all relations to him. 6. Perhaps the church is here first called Christ's sister; because Christ having called his people out of Judea's land, and gathered a church among the Gentiles, that little sister spoken of, in Cb. viii. 8. it might hereby appear, that he had a real affection for her, that she was valued by him, and nearly related to him.

II. What he declares unto her, is, that she had ravished his heart. It is but one word in the Hebrew text, and is used in this form and sense no were else, but twice in this verse; for Christ's love being so unspeakable and inexpressible, he coins, as <sup>a</sup> one well observes, new words, to discover it by; it is variously render'd, and, perhaps, by laying the several versions together, it will appear more fully what is intended in it. 1. The words may be render'd, thou hast heartened me, or put heart into me, and caused me to be of good cheer; so Cocceius. The word is used in this sense, in the Syriac Testament, in Mat. ix. 2. and 1 Thes. v. 14. and then the sense may be this;

the love which I bear unto thee, the charming ideas of thee, which I always carry in my mind, and the joy which was set before me, of having thy company and preference for ever in glory, have made my heavy sufferings easy, animated me as man and mediator, and chearfully carried me through them all, for thy sake, Heb. xii. 2. 2. Others read them, thou hast un-bearted me; thou hast taken away my heart, and stolen it from me, so that I have no heart left in me, so the Septuagint; which reading, R. Aben Ezra, confirms. Sometimes fear throws persons into such a condition, that they are as if they had no heart, spirit, life or soul in them; as the Canaanites in Judg. v. 1. Sometimes wonder and surprize; thus the queen of Sheba, when she had seen Solomon's wisdom and glory, 'tis said, there was no more spirit in her: And sometimes love has such an influence on the heart, and so it had here on Christ; it was so powerful, that it had taken away his heart, thou hast ravished my heart, i. e. thou hast taken it away from me, as it were, by force and violence, that it is no longer mine, but thine; thou art master over it, and hast the command of it, <sup>b</sup> having claimed it to thy self as thine own. 3. It is render'd by others, thou hast drawn my heart unto thee; so R. Sol. Jarchi: Or brought me near, or caused me to draw nigh; that our hearts should be drawn to him, by views of his loveliness, and discoveries of his love to us, is no wonder; but that Christ's heart should be drawn to us, in whom were neither love nor loveliness, is surprizing; which shews the exceeding greatness, freeness and richness of Christ's love. 4. It may be read, thou hast coupled my heart with thine; and in this sense the Talmudists use the word<sup>d</sup>. Christ's heart and a believer's are so knit, join'd and coupled together, that they are but one heart, one soul, and one spirit; he that is join'd to the Lord is one spirit; all the powers of hell and earth, united together, are not able to disjoin and separate, either a believer's heart from Christ, or Christ's heart from a believer. 5. The Targum paraphrases it thus; thy love is fixed upon the table of my heart; it is wrote there in legible characters, which can never be erased: The church is not only engraven on the palms of Christ's hands, but also upon the table of his heart; and so the church has what she wished for, Ch. viii. 6. Set me as seal upon thine heart. Christ's love to the church is so riveted and fixed in his heart, that there's no removing it, who shall separate us from the love of Christ? 6. It is translated by others, thou hast wounded my heart; so the Vulgate Latin, which reading is not to be despised; R. David Kimchi<sup>e</sup> owns it. Christ's heart was wounded with one of love's darts, with an arrow shot from one of the church's eyes; which is expressive of the force and power of love, with what vehemence it dwelt in, and what influence it had upon the heart of Christ.

Now this expression is repeated to shew the vehemency and passionateness of his love, and the exceeding greatness of it; as also to assure her of the reality of it, that he was hearty and sincere in it; and did not say this by way of compliment to her, as lovers too often do ; nor was it a word which was rashly spoken by him, or that dropped from him at unawares ; but as it proceeded from his heart, so it was spoken by him in a deliberate manner ; therefore he repeats it, not to correct, but to confirm it.

Hence we may conclude, what interest a believer has in Christ's heart ; What may he not expect ? What can he want ? What need he fear ; that has so great a share in Christ's heart ? and what reason has he to give Christ his heart, who has so much of Christ's ?

III. I shall now take notice of the things with which Christ's heart was ravished. 1. With one of the church's eyes. The eye is an attractive<sup>b</sup> of love, and therefore it is said in Prov. vi. 25. Neither let her take thee with her eye lids. By the eye, with which Christ was so taken, may be meant, the eye of faith, by which a soul looks on him, and loves him, beholds his fulness, and wishes for an interest in him, and looks to him, and expects from him alone, life and salvation : He says, it was with one of her eyes ; which shews that a believer has more eyes than one ; and therefore we read of the eyes of their understanding, Eph. i. 18. but it was with this eye of faith, by which she looked to him and believed on him ; that his heart was so ravished, and that but with one look from it, or glance of it, as both Junius and Ainsworth read it ; nay, though but a very glimmering one ; for faith, even in its lowest degree, is exceeding precious to Christ Jesus ; which shews how easily and quickly a conquest is gained over Christ's heart, by faith ; his heart must needs be full of love to believers, since it is ravished and overcome, even with a single glimmering look from faith's eye ; and if so, how much will his heart be ravished, when we shall see him face to face, just as he is, take a full view of him, look at him, and feed our eyes for ever upon the unutterable glories of his person ? 2. With one chain of her neck. The neck is a beautiful part of the body, and being agreeably adorned, is exceeding enamouring. By the neck we may also understand faith, as we have observed on ver. 4. it being neither unusual nor improper to represent one and the same thing under different metaphors : And by the chain, may be meant, the graces of the spirit, which being link'd and chained, do inseparably go together ; and being put about this neck of faith, makes it look very beautiful ; every grace is as a golden link or precious pearl, in Christ's esteem, who having beautified his people with them, takes the utmost delight in viewing them ; and whilst he is observing how beautifully they are adorned therewith, his heart is ravished with them.

Ver. 10. How fair is thy love, my sister, my spouse ! how much better is thy love than wine ! and the smell of thine ointments than all spices !

CHRIST having declared in the preceding verse, how much his heart was delighted in, and ravished with the faith of his church ; now proceeds to shew how well pleased he was with her love, and other graces of the spirit, in these words ; where,

I, The

- I. The excellency of her love is set forth.
- II. The sweet smell of her ointments is commended.

I. He gives some excellent characters of her love to him. Christ is the object of a believer's love, and he is well pleased with that love which they shew to him: The nature of this love, its springs and actings have been shewn already, on Cb. i. 3. where it has been observed, that it is superlative and universal, a believer loves Christ above all, and all of Christ; it is, or at least ought to be constant and ardent, and is always hearty and unfeigned; it springs and arises from views of Christ's loveliness, and sights of his suitableness and fulness, from a sense of his love, and a discovery of union and relation to him; and is heightened and encreased by enjoying communion and fellowship with him; it manifests itself by a regard to his commands and ordinances, his truths, his people and his presence, and by parting with and bearing all for him, as has there been more largely shewn. Now of such a love as this, he says, 1. That it is fair; How fair is thy love, my sister, my spouse; The characters and titles he gives her, have been already explained; it was proper to repeat them here, that whilst he was commending her love, he might shew his own, and assure her of the relation she stood in to him, and that he had an undoubted right to the affections of her heart: He here says, that her love to him was fair, i. e. lovely, delightful, grateful and acceptable; and it appears to be exceeding well pleasing to him; for these persons, he declares, are the objects of his love, to whom he manifests himself, in a way of special grace and favour; he over-rules all things here for their good; he gives them more grace, has prepared glory for them, and will preserve them safe unto it: Not that their love is the meritorious and procuring cause of all this, or the condition of their enjoying it; for his love to them has resolved all these things for them beforehand, and is the cause of theirs; but when it is wrought in their souls, and discovers itself to him, he is pleased to shew by those instances of his grace, how fair and lovely it is in his sight. 2. He says that it is better than wine. He here asserts the same of her love, which she had of his, in Cb. i. 2. Christ and the church, in this song, do frequently gather up each others words, striving, as it were, to out-do each other in their expressions of love; but Christ will in no wise come behind, and be out-done by his church and people; though it may well be wondered at, that Christ should have the same to say of our love as we have of his; yet so it is: He here declares, it is better than wine, i. e. more grateful and pleasant, more refreshing and reviving; wine makes glad the heart of man, Psal. civ. 15. but it cannot cheer and make glad the heart of man more than a sinner's love does the heart of Christ: Wine was used in feasts, and counted a principal part thereof; therefore the house of feasting was called the house of drinking; i. e. wine, Eccles. vii. 2. The feast which the rich Pharisee made for Christ, was not, as one * well observes thought so much of by him, nor half so entertaining to him, as the love which

which the poor woman shewed him. Wine was used in the legal sacrifices; but the wine of legal sacrifices, or any external performance, is not so valued by Christ as a sinner's love is; and indeed, no duties or performances whatever, are acceptable to him, unless love be the inward principle from whence they flow, and by which they are acted. 3. He sets off the greatness and excellency of it, by using a word of the plural number; How fair are thy loves, &c. How much better are thy loves, &c. which may be expressive of the several actings of it towards him, for it discovers itself various ways; and also of the several fruits which accompany or spring from it; all which serve for the greater commendation of it. 4. The manner of the expressions, which is by way of interrogation and admiration; How fair, &c. how much better, &c. as if it could not be well expressed, how fair, lovely, and valuable it was; which is an evidence of the valuableness of it, or at least, an indication, how much Christ esteemed it: Christ's love has its heights and depths, and lengths and breadths, and to hear souls speak after such a manner, concerning that, need not to be wondered at, but to hear Christ express himself after this manner, concerning ours, is strange and surprizing.

II. Her ointments are next commended, and the smell of them; in Cb. i. 3. we read of Christ's ointments, here of the church's, in both places one and the same thing is intended, viz. the graces of the spirit: Why these are called ointments, have been there shewn. These ointments or graces of the spirit, are first Christ's and then the church's: The head is first anointed with them, and then the members; he without measure, but they in measure; which being poured forth upon them, and they anointed with them, the smell of them is exceeding grateful to him: The smell of these ointments intends the actings and exercises of grace upon him, which are very delightful to him, and preferred by him, to all spices, even to all that were used in the holy anointing oil, Exod. xxx. 23, 24. that was not so valuable as this anointing, which teacheth all things, nor the smell of that so much esteemed by Christ, as this is.

Ver. II. Thy lips, O my spouse! drop as the honey comb: Honey and milk are under thy tongue, and the smell of thy garments is like the smell of Lebanon.

CHRIST having declared, in the two former verses, how much his heart was taken with the faith and love of his church, and delighted with the smell of her ointments; here, with pleasure, takes notice of her mellifluous language, and sweet-smelling drefs. Two things are here commended in her;

- I. The sweetness of her speech.
- II. The smell of her garments.

I. The sweetness of her speech: Christ's heart was not only ravished with her sparkling eye, and dazling chain, but also with her charming lips and graceful language; thy lips, O my spouse! drop as the honey comb, &c. her lips dropped things for matter like the honey comb, and these things in such a manner, as the honey comb does.

First, Things for matter like the honey comb: Pleasant words, says Solomon, Prov. xviii. 24. are as an honey comb, sweet to the soul, and health to the bones. Such pleasant words, which are as the honey comb, drop from the church's and from every believer's lips, 1. In prayer; So the Targum expounds these words of the priests lips, dropping as the honey comb, when they prayed in the holy court. The believer oftentimes drops things in prayer, which, as they are profitable to himself and others, for the effectual fervent supplication, the inwrought prayer of a righteous man availeth much, Jam. v. 16. So they are sweet, pleasant, delightful and acceptable to Christ; the prayer of the upright is his delight: The prayers of the meanest believer are as delightful music in his ears, as sweet-smelling odours in his nostrils, and like the honey or honey comb to his taste. 2. In praises: Christ has done great things for his church and people, in the redemption and salvation of them, and therefore praise becomes them; it is their duty; and as this work is oftentimes pleasant to their own souls, so in discharging it they often drop things in the praise of Christ's person and grace, which are exceeding grateful and well pleasing to him. 3. In confessing Christ's name, and owning his truths before men: This is a work exceeding necessary, and a duty highly incumbent on God's children; at every opportunity, and whenever they are called to it, they ought to do it; and as the omission of it is much resented by Christ, so the performance of it will be graciously rewarded, as appears from Mat. x. 32. Thus Paul, both at Jerusalem and at Rome, and many other martyrs and confessors, have, in the behalf of Christ and his gospel, dropped words like the honey comb. 4. In the ministry of the word: The church's lips are the ministers of the gospel, whose business is to deliver not so much the senses of the law, which is Jarchi's note on the words <sup>b</sup>, as the doctrines of the gospel; these lips drop the wholesome words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and not words which eat like a canker, but words which, like the honey comb, are health to the bones. 5. In common conversation; the lips of the saints do frequently therein drop words pleasant and delightful, which tend to the edification of those with whom they converse, and minister grace to the hearers; and so are like the honey comb, both pleasant and profitable.

Secondly, Her lips dropped these things, in such a manner, as the honey comb does; 1. Freely, and without pressing or squeezing. A soul that has received the grace of God in truth, cannot but speak of the things which he has heard and seen; being full of matter, his belly is as wine which hath no vent, and is ready to burst, like new bottles; therefore he must speak that he may be refreshed; there needs no other constraint to be laid on him, than what he feels in his own breast. 2. Gradually: The honey comb does not pour out all at once, but by degrees; a man of grace, like the virtuous woman, in Prov. xxxi. 26. opens his mouth with wisdom, and not like the fool who pours out his foolishness, and utters all his mind at once; but delivers his words with moderation and discretion, and observes proper seasons and opportunities to speak his mind; now a word fitly, prudently and seasonably spoken, is like apples of gold in pictures of silver; for as we are to walk, so we are to talk in wisdom, both to those that are without, and those that are within.

3. Constantly: The honey comb, though it drops gradually, yet it keeps constantly dropping; so a believer's speech should be always with grace; he should be always praying or praising, or dropping something which may tend to the magnifying of God's grace, and the good and edification of souls.

These words in general, shew the choiceness of a believer's discourse, that it is not any thing that is the subject of it; no common and ordinary things which he is speaking of, but what is choice and excellent, as the honey which drops from the honey comb is esteemed the best, being what we call life-honey; as also, how much Christ's heart was taken with it, and his affections drawn by it; it had a mighty influence upon him, and strongly engaged his heart towards her; see Prov. v. 3. Now the reason why her lips dropped after this manner, was, because honey and milk were under her tongue; and therefore they could not well drop otherwise: By milk and honey, may be intended the aboundings and overflowings of grace in a believer's heart, which thereby is made like Canaan's land, flowing with milk and honey. Now, out of the abundance of this grace, received into the heart, the mouth speaks: Or else, by them may be meant, the doctrines of the gospel, which may very well be compared thereunto; words sweeter than honey and milk.

1st. To honey. 1. The gospel is gathered out of the choice flowers of the scriptures: The ministers of it, who labour in the word and doctrine, are the bees, who come laden with the honey of the gospel, into the hive of the church; by which souls are delighted and refreshed. 2. It is like to honey for its sweetness: Thus David could say, Psal. cxix. 103. by experience, How sweet are thy words unto my taste! yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth: A gracious soul, who feeds on the gospel, and tastes the sweetness of it, finds it, as Ezekiel did his roll, like honey for sweetness in his mouth; and so it is always thus grateful to a spiritual man, who has a proper gust and relish of it. 3. Like honey, it is of a nourishing nature. Honey was not only the food of babes, but of grown persons, as appears from Isa. vii. 15, 22. The gospel has in it food both for children and for strong men, and that which is exceeding nourishing to both. 4. Like the honey which Jonathan eat of, it enlightens the eyes; when the spirit of God introduces it into a sinner's heart, it gives light there, as the psalmist says, Psal. cxix. 130. The entrance of thy words giveth light; it gives light into a man's self, into his lost and miserable state by nature; it gives light into the impurity of his heart, and the imperfection of his obedience; it gives light into the person, grace and righteousness of Christ, and is an instrument in the spirit's hands, to guide his feet in the way of peace. 5. It is like the honey the Israelites suck'd out of the rock, in the wilderness: The rock is Christ, from whence the honey of the gospel flows; he is the author, and he is the subject of it. Or, 6. It is like the honey Sampson found in the carcass of the lion. Christ is the lion of the tribe of Judah, in whose hain body and precious blood, the honey of gospel-grace is to be found by poor sinners, who feed upon it.

2dly, As the gospel may be compared to honey, so likewise to milk; it is called the sincere milk of the word, which is not mixed and blended with human doctrines, but is free from such adulterations, and so is exceeding profitable, and no ways hurtful to the souls of men. 1. It may be compared to milk, because it is easy of digestion, and therefore proper food for new born babes; hence the apostle fed the Corinthians with the milk of the word, and not with the strong meat thereof, because they were not as yet able to bear it, could not digest it; but the plainer and more easy truths of the gospel are like milk, easy of digestion to souls that are born again, though even these to a natural man are hard sayings, which he cannot bear. 2. Like milk it is very nourishing; Christ's new born babes grow hereby, being nourished up in the words of faith, and of good doctrine. 3. Milk is of a cooling nature, and useful in abating the violence of inflammations<sup>a</sup>; so the gospel being applied by the Spirit to a poor sinner, who has been under a work of the law, represses the violence of those inflammations raised in his conscience, by a fiery law's working wrath there; which is wonderfully allayed by the milk of the gospel, and the application of the exceeding great and precious promises of it, which lead the soul to the person, blood, and righteousness of Christ Jesus. 4. Milk is esteemed useful to persons in consumptions, and therefore a milky diet is usually recommended to them; sin is a wasting and consuming distemper, which is only cured by drinking the milk of the gospel; which, when powerfully applied by the Spirit of God, is the savour of life unto life; and will not only recover a person that is far gone, and in the most declining condition, but also restore him from death itself.

Now when these are said to be under her tongue, it intends either, (1.) That they were in her heart, so Psal. lxi. 17. he was exalted with my tongue, or he was exalted under my tongue, i. e. in my heart; it was in my heart to exalt him, I purposed and designed it; so here, honey and milk are under thy tongue, i. e. they are in thy heart; it is one thing to have a notion of the gospel in our heads, and another thing to have it in our hearts, by a comfortable experience. (2.) It supposes that she tasted the sweetness of those truths; she rolled them as a sweet morsel under her tongue, as Job xx. 12. resolving to have all the pleasure and satisfaction which might arise from thence. (3.) That these were the constant subject of her meditation, Psal. x. 7. having tasted a sweetness in them, which drew her affections to them, her thoughts were always employed about them. (4.) That she was always ready to speak of them at suitable times, and on proper occasions, having them under her tongue. (5.) This shews the difference there is between a carnal, Christless sinner, and a true believer; the one has the poison of asps under his lips, Rom. iii. 13. and the other honey and milk under his tongue; the speech of the one is poisonous and infectious, and the language of the other sweet and edifying; so that as by their words they shall be justified, fied, by their words also they may be known ; their speech betrays them, and declares to what company they belong.

II. The second thing commended in her is, the smell of her garments ; and the smell of thy garments is like the smell of Lebanon ; in Lebanon grew many odoriferous trees, which did emit a fragrant smell to passers by ; hence the graces of God's people are said to smell as Lebanon, Hof. xiv. 6. by her garments here may be meant, 1. The garments of salvation, and the robe of Christ's righteousness. Christ's garments are said to smell of myrrh, aloes, and cassia ; now these very garments are put upon the believer, so that it is no wonder his garments smell like Lebanon ; in these believers appear before God, as Jacob did before his father, in the garments of his elder brother Esau, and are in his nostrils a sweet smelling savour ; for the smell of his raiment to him is like the smell of a field which the Lord hath blessed ; he is exceedingly well pleased with it, and with them in it ; Christ smells a sweet odour even in those garments which he himself has wrought out, and clothed his people with. Or else, 2. By them we may understand the outward conversation-garments of the saints, which are wholesome and savoury, and not like the conversation of the wicked, filthy, stinking, and infectious ; when works go along with words, and practice with profession, when with lips dropping like the honey comb, the sweet smelling garment of a gospel conversation is joined, how does it adorn a Christian, and render him lovely and acceptable, and causes his smell to be as that of Lebanon ? Some Jewish writers <sup>c</sup> refer these garments to the sacerdotal garments of the priests, which were certainly typical of those, which Christ, as our high priest, wears, and with which he clothes his people.

Ver. 12. A garden inclosed is my sister, my spouse ; a spring shut up, a fountain sealed.

CHRIST having admired his church's faith and love, her language and her dress, proceeds to give further commendations of her, and makes use of new metaphors to describe her by, in which he represents her as a well-watered and fruitful garden.

First, He says, she is a garden inclosed ; the titles he gives her, my sister, my spouse, have been explained in ver. 8, 9. I shall only here enquire why she is called a garden, and that an inclosed one. And she is said to be a garden, 1. Because a garden is a piece of ground distinguished and separated from others for the owner's use. The church of Christ is distinguished and separated from others, by electing and redeeming grace ; by efficacious calling grace they are also made to differ from others, and do in their lives and conversations live separate from them ; and being set apart for God's own use, service, and glory, are a peculiar people to himself. 2. In a garden is a variety of flowers, herbs, and plants ; in Christ's church are many members, and those of different sorts, they have gifts differing from one another, and grace also ; some have greater gifts, and larger measures of grace than others others have, but in them all there are many of those sweet flowers, and precious plants. 3. In a garden, flowers, herbs, and plants don't grow up naturally of themselves, but are either set or sown, nothing but weeds grow up of themselves; so in Christ's garden, the church, and in the members of it, the graces of the spirit don't grow up of themselves, they are sown, planted, and raised up by the spirit of God; for in their hearts naturally grow nothing but the weeds of sin and corruption. 4. The ground must be dug and prepared for the setting of plants and herbs therein; the hearts of God's people before conversion are like fallow ground; God is the husbandman, and they are his busbandry; this ground must be dung'd as well as dug before it becomes good ground, or ever these flowers, herbs, and plants will grow there; which method Christ does take with his garden, and the several parts thereof. 5. To keep a garden in order requires a great deal of labour and care, the stones must be gather'd out, the plants must be watered, the trees pruned, the ground dung'd, and the fences kept up; all this, and much more, does Christ to his garden the church; he gathers out those things which offend and hinder the growth of his plants; he watches over them night and day, and waters them every moment; he lops off the fruitless branches, and prunes those that are fruitful, that they may bring forth more fruit; and keeps up the fences thereof, that the wild boar of the forest mayn't enter in, and destroy his garden. 6. Gardens are places where persons delight to walk; Christ walks in his garden, the church, in the midst of his golden candlesticks; you frequently hear of him in this song, that he's gone down into his garden, to feed there, and to gather lilies; nay, he not only takes his walks, but takes up his residence in his church. 7. A garden is usually but a small piece of ground; and so is Christ's church, in comparison of the wilderness and waste places of the world; 'tis a little flock, a small remnant, a few that shall be saved. 8. A fruitful and pleasant place; and so is the church when compar'd with the world, which lieth in wickedness, and is over-run with the briers and thorns of sin.

Also the church is said to be a garden inclosed, (1.) For distinction sake; the church is by God distinguish'd from others; the fence with which it is inclosed, and by which it is made to differ from others, is the free, special, and distinguishing grace of God. (2.) For protection; Christ's church, as it is distinguished by God's grace, so it is protected by his power; he's a wall of fire round about it, and the glory in the midst of it, a noble fence indeed! a glorious inclosure! Jerusalem with all its mountains, and Zion with all its bulwarks, were not so well fenced as this. (3.) For secrecy; it is hidden from and is not seen and known by the world; 'tis like a garden that is walled around, and closely lock'd and barr'd<sup>a</sup>, whose flowers emit a sweet and fragrant odour, but are not seen; the saints, though they are exceeding useful in the world, yet are not known by the world, but are hid and shut up till the resurrection-morn, when it shall appear what they really are, for at present it does not. (4.) It is compared to a garden enclosed, or lock'd and barr'd, for so the <sup>b</sup> word properly signifies, because it is not pervious to every every one, neither ought it to be, every one has not a right to enter there; it should remain inclosed, bolted and barred to all but those who believe in Christ; none ought to walk here but those who come in at the right door, Christ Jesus; and every one that climbs up, and gets into this garden any other way, is reckoned by Christ as a thief and a robber. (5.) It is said to be a garden inclosed or locked up, because 'tis only for Christ's use; therefore in ver. 16. she desires him to come into his garden, and eat his pleasant fruits; for this garden is only his, and the fruits of it for his use alone; in chap. v. 1. agreeable to her request he tells her, that he was come into his garden, had gathered the fruits of it, and had eat; it being his sole property, which others had no right unto, he keeps it inclosed, locked and bolted. The allusion perhaps is to a garden near Jerusalem, which Adrichomius <sup>c</sup> calls hortus regius, the king's garden, which was shut up, and was only for his use and pleasure.

Secondly, He says, that she is a spring shut up, and a fountain sealed; I put these two together, because they seem to intend much one and the same thing; though perhaps the one may be more strongly expressive of the church's fulness and excellency than the other; a fountain may intimate a larger quantity of water than a spring, and sealing signify a stronger security than bare shutting; but are both designed to inform us, that Christ's garden was well watered, and that there's no danger of the herbs, flowers and plants withering and perishing.

The Septuagint render the first of these expressions as before, κηπος κεκλεισμένος, a garden inclosed, or shut up, and so do the Vulgate Latin and Tigurine versions, reading גן for ההוא; Cocceus translates it, a heap locked up, and thinks the church is compared to a heap of spices or fruits, which are locked up in a private place, that they mayn't be spoil'd or stole away from the owner: Christ's church congregated together is an heap, but not a confused one; 'tis like a heap of spice or fruit laid in order; nor is it a heap of any thing, but sweet smelling spices and pleasant fruits, such as are mentioned in ver. 13, 14. to which add also, it is an heap that's valued and cared for, and therefore kept up safe under lock and key. The other version of a spring shut up, is more usually received and acknowledged both by Jewish <sup>d</sup> and Christian expositors, which also our translators follow.

Now the church is said to be a spring and fountain from whence waters flow, to water all the plants in Christ's garden; which are either, 1. The graces of the spirit, which are in her as a well, and rivers of living water, springing up unto eternal life, John iv. 14. and vii. 38, 39. and are called waters, because they are of a fructifying and reviving nature; the plants in Christ's garden being watered with these, revive and lift up their heads, become green, flourishing and fruitful; the souls of God's children drinking them in, and being filled with them, become like a watered garden, whose springs springs fail not. Or else, 2. The doctrines of the gospel; the gospel is thought to be the fountain spoken of in Joel iii. 18. which should come forth of the house of the Lord, and water the valley of Shittim. 'Tis with its gracious truths that the faithful ministers of the gospel water Christ's garden; the spirit of grace does it efficaciously, they do it ministerially; Paul plants, and Apollos waters, but God gives the increase; the doctrines of grace oftentimes flow in the ministry of the word, like floods of water upon the dry and parched ground, which soften, moisten, and make it fruitful; souls are refresh'd, grow and flourish thereby, their graces are revived, quickned and drawn forth into exercise, and every thing looks gay and beautiful, as in a fruitful and pleasant garden: Now we are not to suppose that the church is so properly this spring or fountain, as Christ and his spirit are; she has not an indeficient supply in her self, she receives all from another; but because of the abundance of grace, and the means of it, which Christ is pleased to grant unto his church, therefore he calls her a spring and fountain; though she has grace enough to ascribe all the glory to him, and own him to be the alone spring and fountain from whence she is supplied, as in ver. 15. will be made more manifestly to appear.

Moreover the church is said to be a spring shut up, a fountain sealed; springs and wells of water being highly esteemed, and much valued in those hot countries, were carefully preserved; they used to roll a large stone at the mouth of them, and for further security seal it, as that stone was which was laid at the mouth of the lions den, in which Daniel was cast, and that at the sepulchre, in which Christ was buried; now these fountains were shut up and sealed, not only that the waters might not be bemudded by beasts, but also that they might not be converted to the use of others; thus 'tis reported*, that among the Persians were such fountains that only the king and his eldest son might drink of, it being a capital punishment for any others to do so: And perhaps† Solomon might have such a spring and fountain in his garden, which was shut up, and sealed, and kept for his own private use, to which the allusion is here made. And if we apply this to the doctrines of the gospel, it intends, 1. The secrecy and hiddenness of them to the men of the world; for if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost, whom the god of this world hath blinded, says the apostle, in 2 Cor. iv. 3, 4. It is as an hidden gospel to some, a book sealed both to the learned and unlearned, who are in a carnal and unconverted state; from many it is hidden as to the external ministry of it, and to others it remains a secret, in the midst of the clearest light, and most powerful ministrations of it; it is shut up in parables, and appears to be nothing else but dark sayings, to a meer natural man. 2. That they are peculiarly intended and designed for the elect of God; 'tis for their sakes he has sent it into the world, and for their sakes he'll continue to keep it there, maugre all opposition, until every one of them are called by powerful and efficacious grace; I endure all things, things, says the apostle, 2 Tim. ii. 10. for the elect's sake, that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus, with eternal glory; i. e. I preach the gospel, and in doing it undergo all the sufferings I do, purely upon their account, that salvation may be brought unto them, and they brought at last into the eternal possession of it: And as it is sent into and continued in the world for their sakes, so it is only blessed to them for conversion and consolation; though the gospel is preached to others, as well as to them, yet it don't become profitable to them, because it is not mixed with faith by them; for whilst it is the savour of life unto life to some, it is the savour of death unto death to others; and though these waters of gospel-doctrines flow to, and fall upon others, yet it is but like water that falls upon a rock, that quickly glides away, and makes no impression, and not like streams of water which run about the plants, and soak to the very root. The elect of God are only savingly converted, refreshed and comforted by gospel-doctrines; they are peculiarly designed for them, and eminently blessed to them; they are only for their use, and are to them a spring shut up, and a fountain sealed.

And if we apply it to the grace of the spirit, it denotes, 1. That it is hidden, unknown, and is not communicated to any but to the elect of God: The natural man knows not the things of the spirit, viz. the grace of the spirit in regeneration and effectual vocation; these things are mysteries to him; he's a stranger to them, and unacquainted with them; they are only communicated to, and wrought in those to whom God would make known the exceeding riches of his grace: Thus things are said to be shut and sealed up, which are kept secret and hidden, and are not conveyed to the knowledge of persons, as in Ezra. viii. 16. Dan. xii. 4—9. 2. That it is safe and secure: The grace of God's people is shut up and seal'd, it can never be taken away from them; their life, and all their grace, the fulness of it are hid with Christ in God; and what's given forth unto them, and wrought in them, is an immortal seed, and that good part which cannot be taken away. 3. It may intend the confirmation of it to the saints: So things are said to be sealed, when they are ratified, confirmed, and made sure: Grace and glory are both so to the saints; the spirit is the author of their grace, and the earnest and pledge of their glory, by whom they are sealed unto the day of redemption. 4. It may signify Christ's special property in his church, and her inviolable chastity to him; and this I take to be the most proper sense of all these expressions; she's a garden inclosed, a spring shut up, a fountain sealed; she's Christ's garden, and none but his; Christ's spring and fountain, to which none has a right but himself; she's his spouse and bride, and no other's; and being espoused unto him, as a chaste virgin, by mighty grace is kept so. * The Jewish writers generally understand it of the modesty and chastity of the daughters of Israel; and this sense seems to be abundantly confirm'd, from Prov. v. 15, 16, 17, 18. Drink waters out of thine own cistern, and running

ning waters out of thine own well, &c. — Let thy fountain be blessed, and rejoice with the wife of thy youth.

Ver. 13, 14. Thy plants are an orchard of pomegranates, with pleasant fruits, campfire with spikenard. Spikenard and saffron, calamus and cinnamon, with all trees of frankincense, myrrh and aloes, with all the chief spices.

CHRIST having compared his church to a garden, and observed that it was well watered, having in it a spring and fountain, he proceeds to shew the fruitfulness of it, that it abounded with the choicest trees, the most pleasant fruits, and the chief of spices. In explaining these words it will be proper,

- I. To enquire what is intended by the church's plants.
- II. Why these plants are said to be an orchard of pomegranates.
- III. Take notice of the several trees, fruits and spices here mentioned, and what may be intended by them.

I. Who are meant by the church's plants. The Targum and Jarchi expound it of the young men in Israel; and it is not unusual, in scripture, to call children plants; see Psal. cxxviii. 3. and cxliv. 12. Therefore by her plants may be intended, the members of the church, her children, young converts, believers in Christ, who are planted in the house of the Lord, and flourish in the courts of our God. These are not meer education-plants, who spring up in churches, and join themselves to them, because their parents did; and espouse religion, because they were brought up in it: These are not meer outward profession-plants, who have a name to live and are dead; have lamps, but no oil in their lamps, and have a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof; such plants as these are fruitless ones; they are like the barren fig-tree, from which, three years successively, fruit was sought, but none found; if ever there was any appearance of fruit on them, it never came to any thing, but withered away; and whatsoever fruit they do bring forth, 'tis to themselves, and not to God; like Israel, of whom it is said, Hof. x. 1. that he is an empty vine, and brings forth fruit to himself; and the reason of this is, because they have not the root of the matter in them; nor are they engrafted into, and rooted in Christ Jesus; and therefore are like the stony ground-hearers, who heard and received the word with joy, but it did not last long, because they had no root in themselves; and such being none of the Father's planting, shall be pluck'd up, according to what Christ says, Mat. xv. 13. Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up; and shall be bundled together, as fit fuel for the fire, like the unfruitful and withered branches, or like the tares in the end of the world: But these plants in the text, are such who, 1. Are, by divine grace, transplanted from the wilderness of the world; they are Christ's vines, which he brings out of Egypt, his fir and myrtle trees, which he causes to spring up instead of briers and thorns; these he either takes out of the wilderness, or else makes it a fruitful garden by planting them there: He calls them out of the world, and translates them into his own kingdom, whereby he enlarges his church, and of a garden makes it an orchard. 2. Who have the grace of the spirit planted in their hearts; who works in them every sort of grace, which he raises, cherishes, and at last brings to perfection. 3. Who are ingrafted into Christ Jesus; by nature they belong to, and grow upon the wild olive, but are, by grace, broken off from that, and are engrafted into the true olive, Christ Jesus; they are planted into the likeness of his death, and into the likeness of his resurrection, and so receive the benefits of both; they abide in him, as the branch in the vine, and receiving sap and nourishment from him, become fruitful souls. 4. They are such who have received the engrafted word; it has been planted in them, and powerfully impressed upon them; they have received it in the love of it; it has effectually wrought in them, and brought forth fruit in them from the very day they heard and received it. 5. Such as these who are transplanted from the wilderness of the world, and are planted in Christ, and have had his word and grace planted in their souls, have a right to be planted ministerially in his church, and being planted there, will grow and flourish. Now such plants as these, are choice and select ones; they are plants of renown, and pleasant ones to God and Christ; they are planted in a fruitful soil, and by rivers of water; therefore their leaf is always green; neither do they cease from yielding fruit; hence they shall never be plucked up, neither sin nor Satan, nor the world can do it; and Christ Jesus never will; for they are his Father's planting, in whom he is, and will be glorified, and then is he so, when they bring forth much fruit.

II. These plants are said to be an orchard, or like unto an orchard of pomegranates. The Hebrew word פֶּרְדִּים may be translated a paradise, as it is by the Septuagint: And the church<sup>a</sup>, with her plants, may be called so, in allusion to the garden of Eden, the earthly paradise of our first parents, where the Lord God made to grow every tree that was pleasant to the sight, and good for food; in the midst of it stood the tree of life, and out of it went a river to water all the garden, and was, on all accounts, exceeding pleasant and delightful: In Christ's garden, the church, are planted all manner of trees of righteousness, which are both pleasant and profitable: In the midst of this paradise of God, stands the tree of life, Christ Jesus; but with this difference from the tree of life, in Eden's garden; for Adam might not put forth his hand and take of that; but of this, whosoever will may pluck and eat, and happy is every one that does so: Here runs a river of boundless love and grace, the streams whereof water and refresh all the plants herein; and upon all accounts, is an Eden of pleasure, a paradise which Christ has made for his own

pleasure and delight<sup>b</sup>, and for that reason bears this name. But they are not only said to be an orchard, but an orchard or paradise of pomegranates, i. e. in which pomegranates grew in great plenty. The church, like the land of Canaan, is a land or orchard of pomegranates; and the church's plants, believers in Christ, who are planted and grow there, may be compared to pomegranates; i. e. not to the fruit and shell, as in ver. 3. but to the trees. 1. Because there are various sorts of them, which bear fruit differing from each other; which may denote the difference there is in saints, by reason of their gifts and grace; they have grace and gifts differing from each other; one has more grace and larger gifts than others have; they are not all of an equal size and bigness; they have not all a like measure of the spirit, and yet they are all pomegranates, trees of righteousness, of the right planting. 2. Pomegranate-trees, in some countries, are very large; and so they were in the land of Canaan, as appears from 1 Sam. xiv. 2. and, perhaps, may here denote such who excel others in gifts and grace; who are officers in churches, and are set over others, in and by the Lord; as by the other trees, fruits and spices, after mentioned, may be intended lesser saints, who are of a lower form in the church of Christ. 3. They are very fruitful trees: The fruit they bear, as it is full of a delightful juice, so of grains or kernels; which may denote the saints being full of grace, and all the fruits of righteousness and good works, as the Targum and Jarchi observe here. 4. They grow up strait and upright, and so denote the saints uprightness, both in heart and life; they are men of upright hearts, and of upright conversations, are looking upwards to, and growing up in their head, Christ Jesus. 5. They do not grow any where, in any soil; the wilderness, through which the Israelites travelled, could not furnish them with any; though the land of Canaan could, when they came thither: These plants or trees of righteousness do not grow any where; they are not to be found every where; they grow in Christ's garden; in his house they are planted, and in his courts they flourish.

III. Here are several other trees, fruits and spices, which are said to be in this garden or orchard; for 'tis added, with all pleasant fruits, i. e. whatsoever is valuable, precious and desirable, such as those after mentioned; as camphire with spikenard; both these have been observed in Ch. i. 12—14. but are here mentioned in the plural number; the camphire or cypress on the account of its fruits or berries, and the spikenard, because there are various sorts of it, as Nardus Italica, nardus Celtica, and nardus Indica, which last is the right spikenard. Saffron; it is no where else mentioned in scripture; we call it by this name from the Arabic, zaffran; 'tis called so on the account of its yellow and golden colour; its nature and usefulness are well known among us. Calamus and cinnamon; both these were ingredients in the holy anointing oil, Exod. xxx. 23. Calamus is the sweet cane mention'd in H. xliii. 24. and cinnamon the rind or bark of a tree that grows in Arabia, mention'd, Prov. vii. 17. as the harlots perfume, and in Rev. xviii. 13. as part of the wares or merchandize of the whore of Babylon:—With all trees of

of frankincense, myrrh; frankincense was used in the holy perfume, as was myrrh in the anointing oil, Exod. xxx. 23—34. and with both these the church is said to be perfumed, Ch. iii. 6.—And aloes; either the lign aloes, so the Targum here, of which mention is made in Numb. xxiv. 6. or the herb aloes, which is of a bitter taste, but of a sweet smell, and with which garments were perfumed, Psal. xlv. 8. Prov. vii. 17. together with all chief spices; be they what they will, they are all to be found in Christ's garden, or what's answerable to them. Now by these may be meant, the several graces of the spirit, which are to be found in all those who are plants or members in Christ's church; which are called by these names, and compared to these fruits, herbs, and spices. 1. Because the graces of the spirit are many, and therefore many herbs and spices are mentioned; see Gal. v. 22. 2. They are various, of different sorts; for as it makes for the pleasantness of a garden or orchard, to have many trees, plants, herbs and flowers, so to have them of different sorts; for if there were never so many, and all of one sort, it would not be so delightful. The church of Christ, and believers in Christ, as they have many, so they have various graces; there are faith, hope, love, &c. Faith is a grace differing from hope, and hope differs from faith, and love from them both. 3. They are rare and excellent: The herbs and spices here mentioned, such as spikenard, saffron, camphire, cinnamon, &c. are not to be found every where; they do not grow in any garden, they are very rarely to be met with; the graces of the spirit do not grow any where, in any heart, there are but few that have them; they are exceeding rare, valuable and precious. 4. These herbs and spices are all of them of a sweet smell; and so are the graces of the spirit to Christ; they are a sweet perfume to him; the smell of these ointments is preferred by him to all spices, in ver. 10. 5. Some of these herbs and plants<sup>a</sup> cheer the heart, and revive the spirits, as saffron, cinnamon and camphire: The spirit of God, in his operations of grace, and in exciting and drawing forth grace into exercise, wonderfully cheers our hearts, revives our spirits, and keeps us from fainting and swooning fits; in the multitude of our thoughts within us, his comforts delight our souls. 6. Some of them preserve from putrefaction, as myrrh and aloes, and therefore were used in embalming dead bodies, John xix. 39: the grace of the spirit is of such a nature; 'tis by this our dead souls are quicken'd, by this they are kept in life, and are preserved from putrifying and rotting in sin. 7. Some of them are green in winter time, as<sup>b</sup> saffron and the aloe; grace is always alive and ever green, even in winter-storms and tempests, though it does not always appear so to us; it is an immortal seed which never dies. 8. Some of these grow up higher and taller than others: The calamus<sup>c</sup>, cinnamon, myrrh, and others grow up taller than the spikenard and saffron. Now these may intend the graces of faith, hope and love, which rise upwards in their actings on the Lord Jesus Christ; and the latter, the graces of humility, meekness, lowliness of mind, &c. 9. All these emit the most fragrant odour, when they are either cut, bruised or burnt: So do the graces of the spirit, when they are exercised and tried in the furnace of affliction. 10. They are all, one way or another, more or less medicinal, and are healthful to the bodies of men; and so are the graces of the spirit to the souls of men. Solomon understood the nature of all sorts of herbs and plants, and no doubt, these are aptly chosen to set forth the graces of the spirit by, and had we but his wisdom, we should know better how to apply them.

CHRIST having commended his church as a well water'd garden, and declared her fruitfulness, she breaks forth in these words, and ascribes it all to him, saying, O fountain of gardens, and well of living waters, &c. as the words are render'd both by Junius and Ainsworth: 'Tis true, as if she should say, I am a garden, and a garden inclosed by thy sovereign grace, where the streams and flows of thy grace run and water all my plants, and make them so fruitful as they are; but I am not the spring, the fountain from whence they flow; 'tis thou who art the fountain of gardens, from whence I am supplied, am put into and kept in the flourishing condition I am; 'tis not owing to my self, but 'tis by thy grace I am what I am; and therefore, I'll ascribe all the glory to thee. So that the church here acknowledges Christ,

I. To be a fountain of gardens.

II. A well of living waters. And,

III. His grace to be like streams from Lebanon.

I. She acknowledges him to be a fountain of gardens. By gardens may be intended, either particular believers, whose souls are made like watered gardens, whose springs fail not; or rather, particular churches. Christ has more gardens than one; every particular church is a garden; such were the churches at Rome, Corinth, Colosse, Philippi, Thessalonica, and the seven churches of Asia; but though there have been, and still are many gardens, yet there is but one fountain, from whence they are all supplied, and by which they are all watered, and that's the Lord Jesus Christ, as the church here owns; in him all fulness of grace dwells, and from thence believers receive grace for grace; he's the fountain from whence it all flows: all justifying grace flows from this fountain; in him alone is our justifying righteousness before God; by him are all the elect justified, and that from all things from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses; in doing which, abundance of grace is display'd, both in bringing it in, and applying it to the ungodly sinner; all which grace flows from this fountain. All sanctifying grace flows from hence; a holy nature as well as a justifying righteousness we have from Christ, he is both our sanctification and our righteousness; to him we must look for, and from him we must receive the one as well as the other.

All the streams of pardoning grace take their rise from hence ; Christ shed his blood to obtain the pardon of sin, and he has obtained it thereby, for all his people ; so that now as forgiveness of sin is according to the riches of God's grace, it is also upon the foot of justice, being founded upon redemption through the blood of Jesus ; hence God's justice and faithfulness are concern'd in the pardon of sin, as well as his grace and mercy display'd ; Christ is the fountain opened, to wash in for sin, and for uncleanness ; 'tis his blood alone which cleanseth from all sin whatever. He is the fountain of all the blessings and promises of the everlasting covenant ; of all that light and life that we are made partakers of ; of all that strength and wisdom that are given forth to us, to act for him in our several stations of life ; and of all that joy, comfort and peace in believing, which our souls are at any times possessed of. He is the fountain of all fructifying and persevering grace, by which the plants in his garden become fruitful, and continue to do so. In short, he's the fountain from whence all his churches are supplied not only with grace, but with the gifts of the spirit ; he is ascended on high, that he might fill all things ; he is fill'd himself as man and mediator, with the spirit without measure ; he has received the promise of the Father, and plentifully sheds it abroad among his people ; he fills his churches with members and officers, and all these with suitable gifts and graces, for their respective places ; all comes from this fountain of gardens.

II. She declares him to be a well of living waters ; we read in Isa. xii. 3. of wells of salvation, in the plural number, which intend the same as here ; and are so called to denote the fulness, compleatness and excellency of salvation in Christ ; Christ is a well that is, 1. Large and deep ; like that which Isaac call'd Rehoboth, either from the largeness of it, or the liberty he had then obtained in enjoying it ; or like Jacob's well, which was very deep, at which Christ met the woman of Samaria. The fulness of grace in Christ has its heights and depths, its lengths and breadths, 'tis bottomless and unfathomable, 'tis immeasurable and incomprehensible. 2. Christ is a full well ; we read, 2 Pet. ii. 17. of some that are wells without water ; but such an one is not Christ, he's a full well, and not full of any thing, of any sort of water, but of living water, he's full of grace and truth. 3. This well was dug by, and filled alone with sovereign grace ; it pleased the Father, it was an act of his sovereign grace, that Christ should be the mediator, and that all fulness of grace should dwell in him as such ; which he treasur'd up in him before the world began : The Lord, says Wisdom, Prov. viii. 22. possessed me ; with what ? with all fulness of grace ; and when did he do this ? in the beginning of his way, before his works of old. O boundless, sovereign grace ! 4. Faith is the grace with which we draw from hence ; it may indeed be said to us, what the woman of Samaria said to Christ, John iv. 11, Sir, thou hast nothing to draw with, and the well is deep : we have nothing of our own to draw with, but Christ who has opened our eyes, as the Lord did Hagar's, to behold himself the well of living waters, gives us faith, whereby we draw out of the wells of salvation, and receive from this overflowing fountain grace for grace. 5. The waters we draw from hence are living ones ; such Christ told the woman of Samaria

Samaria he could, as undoubtedly he afterwards did, give unto her, even living water. Christ is a well, and a well full of living waters; which are so called, (1.) Because grace given forth from Christ's fulness to dead sinners makes them alive; these waters are like the waters of the sanctuary, in Ezekiel's vision, which, wherever they come, not only keep alive those that are so, but quicken such who are dead in trespasses and sins, and in this respect excel them; we are told, Prov. x. 11. that the mouth of a righteous man is a well of life; certainly Christ's mouth is so, when he says to sinners, whilst in their blood, live; his grace may then be said to be living water. 2. Grace given forth from Christ's fulness revives and quickens saints when dull, lifeless and fainting; it comforts their hearts, and makes them cheerful, lively and active. 3. Grace maintains and supports life in believers; we have our life alone from Christ; he is the author of it, and with him it is hid, secured and preserved; it is by his mighty grace that our souls are upheld in it, from his fulness we have all the communications of it, and because he lives, therefore we do and shall live also. 4. It is this grace of Christ's, that gives saints a right to, prepares them for, and will end in eternal life; justifying grace gives them a right to eternal life; sanctifying grace makes them meet for it, which is in them a well of water springing up into everlasting life, John iv. 14. 5. These are called living waters, because they are ever-running, and so opposed to standing waters, which are dried up in the summer season; Christ's grace is perpetual, everlasting, and inexhaustible; like himself, it is the same yesterday, to day, and for ever; the fulness of grace in Christ, and the communications of it, are those living or ever-running waters, mentioned in Zech. xiv. 8. and it shall be in that day, that living waters shall go out from Jerusalem, half of them toward the former sea, and half of them toward the hinder sea; in summer and in winter shall it be; i. e. at all times and seasons of the year shall these waters flow; the saints before and after the flood, the saints before and under the law, the saints under the old Testament, and the saints under the new, have all received from this fountain and fulness of grace in Christ; all the grace that angels have, and all that men have or shall have, all comes from hence, and yet it is an ever-running, overflowing, and inexhaustible fulness; and this I take to be the principal reason why it is called living water.

III. The church here acknowledges the grace of Christ to be like streams from Lebanon. Mount Lebanon gave rise to some rivers, as Forbach, Eleutherus, &c. and as these took their rise and streamed from thence, so does grace from Christ, whose counenance is as Lebanon, Ch. v. 15. who is intended here; from this high, goodly, pleasant, fruitful and fragrant mountain, flow all the streams of divine grace to our souls. Now by this expression are intended, 1. The discoveries and breakings forth of grace to those who are objects of it; the river of God's love ran under ground from eternity; so that those who are interested in it, and are the objects of it, know nothing of it, till it breaks forth in effectual vocation, when it comes pouring in unto them, like streams from Lebanon. 2. This expression may denote the rapidity, force and power of divine grace ; it comes like a mighty torrent, and carries all before it ; throws down the strong holds of satan, and is a match for the corruptions of nature ; for when this works, nothing can let ; all mountains become a plain, all obstacles and impediments are removed out of the way, and nothing can stand before it, when the exceeding greatness of its power is exerted ; it is irresistible, invincible, and always victorious. 3. This phrase may be expressive of the abundance of grace, which flows from Christ ; there are abounding of sin in our nature ; but grace streaming from Christ abounds over all ; where sin abounded, says the apostle, Rom. v. 20. Grace did much more abound ; it flows into, and it overflows in a believer's heart ; the grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant, ὑπερπελεύσασε, it abounded, yea, it superabounded with faith and love which is in Christ Jesus : There is an abundance of grace given forth to a single believer, how much then must it be that is given forth to them all ! and how large that fulness which is in Christ ! 4. Though this grace flows in abundance to poor sinners, yet it is in measure ; grace is in Christ without measure, but in us in measure ; it is in him as in a fountain, but is given forth to us in streams ; and these streams should lead us to the fountain from whence they flow ; for though we should rejoice in, and adore grace for the streams, yet we should not rest contented, without often going to the fountain itself. 5. The communications of grace are called streams, and said to be as streams from Lebanon, because they are exceeding grateful and delightful to souls, even as streams of water were in those hot countries ; the streams which flow in this river of divine grace make glad the city of God ; a spring of water to a thirsty traveller, in the Arabian deserts, cannot be more welcome and delightful than the discoveries of grace, those streams from Lebanon, are to a believing soul ; and therefore Christ is said to be as rivers of water in a dry place, and as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land, Isa. xxxii. 2. 6. It intends the continued supplies of grace to believers ; grace is always running, streaming, flowing to them ; could the communications of grace be stopped, were those streams from Lebanon to cease, they would soon be in an empty, miserable and wretched state and condition ; but this river of the water of life is proceeding out of the throne of God, and of the lamb ; it ever did, and so it does still and ever shall ; my God will supply all your need, &c. Phil. iv. 19. 7. It intimates unto us the freeness of it ; it is like streams from Lebanon, it runs freely ; whosoever will, may come and take of this water of life freely : The first of these expressions in the text, denotes the fulness of grace in Christ ; the second the perpetuity and inexhaustibleness of it ; and this third the exceeding freeness of it.

Ver. 16. Former part. Awake, O north-wind, and come thou south, blow upon my garden, that the spices thereof may flow out.—

CHRIST having notice of the fruitfulness of his garden, the church, in ver. 12, 13, 14. and she in ver. 15. having acknowledged that it was all owing to himself, who is the fountain of gardens. He, in this verse, that that nothing may be wanting to continue and increase the fruitfulness thereof, calls to the north and south winds, the one to awake, and the other to come and blow upon his garden, that the spices thereof may flow out. The reason why I take these words to be the words of Christ, and not of the church, are, 1. Because the language seems best to suit with him, who has created the winds, and gathered them in his fist, and holds them there; who opens his hand and lets them loose, and can and does recall them at his pleasure; who has his storehouse and magazines of them; and when he pleases, brings them forth out of his treasures; who, in the days of his flesh, gave a surprising instance of his power over them, in rebuking the wind and sea, and commanding a calm, when the disciples, with others, were in imminent danger; which occasioned the men to say, What manner of man is this, that even the wind and the sea obey him? He can shut up and let loose the winds, when he thinks fit, he has them at his command, and uses them as he pleases; so that it may be truly said of him, what the Heathen poet said of his Jove;

2. It does not appear so agreeable, that the church should petition Christ to let loose the north wind upon her; especially, if by it we understand, as I think we must, some rough dispensation of providence, as afflictions, temptations, &c. which though Christ knows, that they are wholesome and useful to his people, and he makes them so, and therefore, in his wisdom and grace, sends them; yet they are not desirable to the saints, they do not pray for them. 3. The person here speaking claims a right and property in this garden, on which the south-wind is to blow. Now the church is not her own garden, but Christ's, as she in the following part of the verse acknowledges; therefore it appears to be Christ who here speaks, and says, blow upon my garden. Taking them then to be his words, I shall now consider what he says. And,

I. He calls to the north-wind to awake, Awake, O north-wind. Which some understand as a command, to remove and be gone, and blow no longer upon his garden; in Psal. cvii. 25. we read that God commandeth and raiseth the stormy wind: It is in the Hebrew text וַיַּעֲבֹר and causeth the stormy wind to stand; so that the raising of the wind, and continuing it, in that language was called a causing it to stand; and, perhaps, a recalling it was, as here, called an awaking or raising it up in order to be gone: And there are some reasons which may be alledged why it may be supposed that it was not the design of Christ, that the north-wind should blow, but rather that it should not, 1. Because it was now spring time; the winter was past, the rain was over and gone; the flowers appeared in the earth, the fig-tree put forth her green figs, and the vines with the tender grapes gave a good smell, Ch. ii. 11, 12, 13. and therefore it was time for the north-wind to cease blowing. 2. It being a cold cold and nipping wind; would be hurtful and injurious to the plants in his garden, mentioned in ver. 13, 14. and therefore it may be supposed that he would not have it blow. 3. The verb הפוחי blow, is in the singular number, and seems to be only in construction with the south-wind; and therefore is alone ordered to blow, and not the north-wind. 4. Winds diametrically opposite to each other, as the North and South be, cannot blow together under one and the same Horizon, with a continued blast; for if they blow with equal force, they will hinder each other from blowing freely; and if one is more powerful than the other, the weaker will be obliged to join the other, or else subside; though winds contrary may blow together, obliquely and side-way; but the more oblique they are, the greater tempest they raise, which cannot be supposed to be Christ's design here: And now, when he orders the north-wind to awake, arise, and be gone, he intends every thing that may be noxious, hurtful and injurious to his garden. Though others think the meaning of this phrase, Awake, O north-wind, is, arise, exert thyself and blow together, with the south-wind, upon my garden: And so the <sup>d</sup> Jewish writers think, that both winds are designed to blow. The north-wind, though a cold and nipping wind, yet <sup>e</sup> Pliny says, that it is the most wholesome wind that blows; and the scripture informs us, that though out of the north comes forth the cold; yet also from it proceeds fair weather, Job xxxvii. 9——22. and Solomon tells us, that the north-wind drives away rain, Prov. xxv. 23. and then by the north-wind, as I hinted before, we may understand rough dispensations of providence, as temptations, afflictions, &c. which Christ is pleased to suffer to come upon his people, and which he brings them under, for their good and his glory: And this shews, (1.) That none of these things come upon the saints without Christ's knowledge, permission or appointment; there is not a wind blows upon them without his will and order; afflictions do not come out of the dust, nor trouble spring out of the ground, but are sent from heaven to the saints, as covenant mercies; no temptation comes upon them, but what is common to man, and Christ takes care that they are not tempted above that they are able to bear, and in his own way and time, gives them deliverance from it. 2. These are all for their good; it is, if need be, they are in heaviness through manifold temptations; all adverse and rough dispensations of providence, all afflictions work together for their good; they are all in mercy to them, otherwise, he that holds the wind in his fist, would not suffer the blustering north-wind to blow upon them. 3. These serve to make the spices flow out, i. e. they are useful for the trial, exercise and increase of grace; tribulation works patience, and patience experience, and experience hope; i. e. tribulation exercises and tries these graces, and makes them to appear more bright and glorious; the manifold temptations the saints are attended with, are suffered to come upon them, that the trial of their faith being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise, and honour, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ, 1 Pet. i. 6, 7.

II. He calls to the south-wind to come and blow upon his garden. The church is compared to a garden, in ver. 12, and why it is so, has been there shewn: Here Christ claims a property in it: and it is his, 1. By choice; he chose this spot of ground, and preferred it to all others, for this purpose and use. 2. By gift; he asked it of his father, and he gave it to him; thine they were, and thou gavest them me, John xvii. 6. 3. By purchase; he has bought it, and at a dear rate, not with corruptible things, as silver and gold, but with the invaluable price of his own most precious blood. 4. By his powerful and efficacious grace, has distinguished and separated it from the wilderness of this world. 5. He uses it as his own; he purchased and set it apart for his own use and recreation, and here delights to walk; he is frequently to be found, seen and heard of here: And this being his own garden, which he himself chose, his Father gave him, which he has purchased with his own blood, distinguished by his grace, and where he delights to take his walks, he therefore calls upon the south-wind to blow upon it: And by the south-wind, and blowing of it, I apprehend, is intended, the spirit of God in his powerful operations, and special influences of grace, in and upon the hearts of God's people; and shall now consider how he may be compared,

First, To the wind in general. The spirit of God bears the same name, and several of the properties thereof are applicable to him, 1. The wind, as our Lord says, John iii. 8. bloweth where it listeth; the spirit of God is a free agent; he works how and where he pleaseth; he acts freely in the first application of grace to a poor sinner, and so he does in all the after actings, operations and influences of it, as well as in the donation of those gifts which he bestows upon men for different purposes; for though there are diversities of gifts, differences of administrations, and diversities of operations; yet all these worketh that one and the self same spirit; dividing to every one severally as he will, 1 Cor. xii. 4, 5, 6—11. 2. The wind blows imperceptibly; thou hearest, as Christ says, in the above-mentioned place, the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth; and so is every one that is born of the spirit. The workings of the spirit of God in regeneration are invisible and imperceptible to the natural man; he can no more discern the spirit's grace than he can see the wind when it blows; he can no more tell from whence this grace comes, and how it is acted, than he can point at the treasures of wind, and tell from whence they take their rise, and why they blow sometimes one way and sometimes another; why sometimes only in a gentle breeze, and at other times rise to violent storms; why sometimes they drive on in a direct line, and at other times have a circular motion; and as he cannot account for these things, no more can he for the operations of the spirit; for he neither knows his person nor his grace. 3. It blows powerfully and irresistibly; there is no stopping of it; it blows when, where and how it listeth, for any thing that man can do; none but he who has created the winds and gathered them in his fist, can rule them at pleasure; and when he lets them loose, and gives them a command, they carry all before them; throw down houses, pluck up trees by the roots, rend the mountains, and break the rocks in pieces; for which reason the spirit of God is compared to a mighty rushing wind, Acts ii. 2. which filled the house in which the disciples were, on the day of

of pentecost, and filled them with extraordinary gifts. The spirit of God, in his mighty operations of grace upon a sinner's heart, carries all before him; there is no withstanding his grace and power; he throws down satan's strong holds, and demolishes the fortifications of sin; all mountains become a plain before him; and the whole posse of hell, and the corruptions of a man's heart are not a match for him; for when he works none can let: He has conquered the hearts of the vilest and most notorious sinners; such as a Manasseh, a Mary Magdalene, and a persecuting Saul: There is no resisting his grace and the power of it, nor holding of his almighty arm. 4. The wind is of a purifying nature; therefore some call it nature's fan; it clears the air of infectious and noxious vapours; we are scarce sensible how much our health is owing to it, for without this the air would soon be stagnated, and quickly destroy the life both of man and beast. The spirit of God purifies our hearts by faith, which he does by leading it to the blood of Jesus, which cleanseth from all sin; and by sprinkling it upon our consciences, whereby they are purged from dead works; those dead weights and heavy clogs which hinder us in serving the living God. 5. It is of a piercing and searching nature, it penetrates into every hole and cranny. The spirit of God searches, not only the deep things of God, but the deep things of man also: What is said, Prov. xx. 27. of the spirit of man, may, in a higher sense, be said of the spirit of God, that it is the candle of the Lord, searching all the inward parts of the belly; it penetrates into the utmost recesses of a man's heart, and discovers those hidden swarms of corruptions, which before lay indiscernible; it pierces even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is both a discerner and revealer of the thoughts and intents of the heart. 6. It is of a cooling nature; so is the spirit of God in his operations of grace upon a sinner's heart, which is often enflamed with wrath, through the workings of a fiery law, and the injections of satan's fiery darts; the heat of which he allays, by acting as a comforter, and as the spirit of promise, bringing home and applying to the conscience of the distressed sinner, the exceeding great and precious promises of the gospel, which cool and refresh, by removing wrath and terror from thence.

Secondly, He may be compared to the south-wind in particular, 1. Because it blows warmly, brings heat with it, breaks up frosts, and thaws the ice; when ye see the south-wind blow, says Christ, Luke xii. 55. Ye say there will be heat; and it cometh to pass. So the spirit of God brings heat along with him, to the cold heart of a sinner, dead in trespasses and sins; and by the mighty influence of his grace, thaws and melts his hard and frozen soul; and with his soul-warming gales and comfortable discoveries of love, warms, enlivens, comforts and refreshes the saint, when in a cold, lifeless and uncomfortable frame. 2. It brings serenity along with it; it is not a blustering and tempestuous wind, as the north-wind is; but is still, gentle and quiet, blows softly, as Elihu said to Job, Ch. xxxvii. 17. Dost thou know—how thy garments are warm, when he quieteth the earth by the south-wind? The spirit of God brings peace unto, and commands quietness in the heart of a distressed sinner, where were nothing before but storms and tempests: The fruit of the spirit is peace, a conscience-peace, a peace that passeth all understanding; which he works in the the sinner's heart, by leading him to the person, blood and righteousness of Christ. 3. It is very fructifying; by its warmth, together with the sun, it loosens the trees, and causes the sap to flow, which was congealed by the cold, and clothes them with leaves, flowers and fruit. The spirit of God, by his mighty grace and special influences, makes souls fruitful in every good word and work. 4. The south-wind usually brings rain, and therefore the poet represents it as flying, cum madidis alis, with wet and moistened wings. Pliny says, it produces greater floods than others do; which suits well with Junius's version, who renders the next clause thus; 'Let the waters flow through the spices thereof.' The spirit of God blows, and causes the floods of grace to rise, which running about the several plants in the garden, make them fruitful.

Thirdly, According to the mind of some expositors, the spirit of God is intended by both winds, the north and south; and that, 1. On the account of his different operations; for which reason we read of the seven spirits of God, Rev. i. 4. not that there are so many distinct spirits personally existing; but by them are intended the variety and perfection of the gifts and graces of the holy spirit of God, who works them in, and bestows them on whom he will. 2. If the spirit is intended by both winds, it may be expressive of the usual order of the spirit in his operations; he is first as the north-wind, sharp and nipping; and then as the south-wind, warm and refreshing; he first acts the part of a convincer, and then that of a comforter; he first kills, and then makes alive; wounds, and then he heals; he humbles souls, and makes them low in their own eyes, and then exalts them; he brings them into the wilderness, and then speaks comfortably to them. 3. May shew that Christ's garden stands in need of both winds; that the saints sometimes need the spirit as a reprover, to bring them to a sense of themselves; as well as a comforter, to relieve them under their distresses; the cold and nipping north-wind, as well as the warm and comfortable south-wind. 4. Both winds are called upon, and that to cause the spices to flow out, that the odour of them may be spread far and near, that it might be carried from pole to pole, even all the world over. Now when Christ is here represented, saying to the spirit, Come and blow upon my garden; it must be understood of him as mediator, calling unto, and, as it were, demanding of the spirit to do his work assigned him in the church; which does not suppose any inferiority in the spirit to Christ; for all the three persons having jointly agreed in the everlasting council and covenant of peace, to take their several distinct parts in man's salvation; and the Father having distinguished this spot of ground, this garden, by his grace; and Christ having purchased it by his blood, and the spirit having planted it with precious plants, herbs and spices, Christ calls upon him by virtue of this former agreement, to do the remaining part of his work, see John xiv. 16. and xvi. 7. to blow upon his garden, that it may grow and flourish, and the sweet smell of these spices be carried far and near. Which brings me to consider,

III. The

III. The reason why he would have the wind of the spirit blow upon his garden ; and that is, that the spices may flow out. Now by spices, we must understand the graces of believers, which, like spices, are rare, excellent, precious, sweet and odorous, especially to Christ Jesus, by whom they are preferred to all spices ; and the flowing out of them intend, either, 1. The exercise of them : Grace is not always in exercise, but is like flowers, shut up ; or like plants, herbs and fruits, which seem to be withering ; or like coals covered with ashes, that want to be <sup>a</sup> stirred up or blown upon, as in 2 Tim. i. 6. but this believers are not capable of doing themselves ; for they can no more exercise grace than they can work it of themselves ; Christ knew full well, that this is the spirit's work, therefore he calls upon him to blow, and thereby open these flowers, revive these plants, and blow off the ashes from these coals, and draw forth grace into exercise upon himself the proper object of it. Or, 2. The evidence and shewing forth of it to others : Christ would not only have grace in the hearts of his people, but would have it exert and shew itself in the life and conversation ; he would have these lights shine before men, and this grace appear, not only to himself, but to others. Or, 3. The increase of grace : That these herbs and plants might be fruitful, the spices smell, and the whole garden be in a flourishing condition ; in short, that the spirit would be ripening and bringing to maturity grace in the souls of believers, and finish what he had begun there. Or else, 4. The diffusive odour of them : That their graces might emit such a sweet odour, both to himself and others, as a garden does, when after a delightful shower of rain the wind gently blows upon it ; which request, or rather demand of his, no doubt, was answered, as appears from the following words.

Ver. 16. Latter part. ——— Let my beloved come into his garden, and eat his pleasant fruits.

THE north wind being awakened, and the south wind having blown upon Christ's garden, the church, according to his order, the spices did flow out, her graces were stirred up, and begin now to exercise themselves ; which causes her, before he had well done speaking, and made a stop, to break forth in these words, and earnestly desire his presence and company in his garden ; so that in this one verse we have both Christ and his church speaking. In these words are to be considered,

- I. A title or character she gives him ; my beloved.
- II. A request or invitation she makes him ; to come into his garden.
- III. Her end in it ; to eat his pleasant fruits.

I. Here is a title or character, which she gives him, my beloved ; which, as it comes from her mouth, is expressive, 1. Of her love to him : He was the the object of her love, him whom her soul loved; and indeed, how could she do otherwise than love so lovely a person, one who loved her so dearly, and had given such undeniable demonstrations of it? Love, we usually say, begets love; and no wonder that Christ's love should beget love in her, when we consider his person, the nature of his love, and how undeserving she was of it. 2. Of her faith, as to her interest in him: She could point him out, and distinguish him from all others, and had strength of faith enough to claim him as hers; faith and love go together, they are twins, they are born together in a regenerate soul, and grow up together, when one is in exercise, usually the other is also; for faith works by love. 3. She makes use of this title as an argument to obtain her request, or make her invitation the more forcible; she, who in this manner earnestly desires, that he would come into his garden, was one who dearly loved him, stood nearly related to him, and had an interest both in his person and affections. Arguments taken by the saints from their Union and relation to Christ, and their interest in him, have very great influence upon him, and are not disregarded by him; David knew this, and therefore uses this way of speaking at the throne of grace, I am thine, says he, Psal. cxix. 94. Save me.

II. Here's a request made, or an invitation given, by the church, to Christ, to come into his garden. By the garden is meant the church, and why it is so called has been shown, on ver. 12. and in what sense it is Christ's, and how he came to have a right to it, and property in it, has been observed in the former part of this verse, where Christ claims it, and the church here owns it; he calls to the south-wind, and says, Blow upon my garden; she here says, Let my beloved come into his garden. Believers are willing to acknowledge, that all they have or are, belong to Christ; that they are not their own, but are bought with a price, and therefore, all they have and are, are for his use, and at his service, which they openly declare, and would have others take notice of; and therefore say, Psal. c. 3. Know ye, that the Lord be is God; it is he that hath made us, and not we ourselves; i. e. who hath re-made us, we are new creatures in Christ, and are his workmanship, and not our own; we are his people, in a way of special, and covenant-grace; and the sheep of his pasture, whom he has taken the care and charge of, as the great Shepherd, has laid down his life for, and feeds, and leads into good pasture.

The next thing to be taken notice of is, what is meant by Christ's coming into his garden. There is a threefold coming of Christ, mentioned in the Scripture.

1st, His coming in the flesh; this was what the Old Testament-saints earnestly desired, pray'd and long'd for; it was not only the wish of David, but of the whole church; he spoke the language of all their hearts, when he said, Psal. xiv. 7. O that the salvation of Israel were come out of Zion! This being long promised, and long expected, the faith of the saints sometimes grew weak and languid concerning it; therefore the promises which respected it, were frequently renewed and repeated, and the prophets bid to say, Isa. xxxv. 4. to them that were of a fearful heart; fear not, be strong, your God will come and save you; and when they by faith saw the time near at hand, hand, and him approaching, they were filled with joy and exultation ; hence 'tis said, Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion ! — behold thy king cometh unto thee, &c. Zech. ix. 9. but this, I apprehend, is not intended in these words of the church.

2dly, There's his coming at the last day to judge the world, which is usually called his second coming ; which is what the apostle intends, when he says, Heb. ix. 28. Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation. The first time of his appearing in the flesh, though it was without sin of his own, yet not without the sins of his people, which were imputed to him, charged upon him, and he answered for them ; but when he appears the second time, it shall be without them, they being already expiated and atoned for : He came the first time to obtain salvation for sinners, and will come the second time to put them into the full possession of it ; and as the first coming of Christ was desired by the Old Testament-saints, so this is desired by the New Testament-saints, who, upon Christ's saying, Surely I come quickly, answer, Amen, even so come Lord Jesus ; it will fill the saints with wonder and joy ; for he, when he comes, will be both glorified in them, and admired by them ; though it will strike the wicked with dread and terror, and fill them with the utmost consternation ; for his coming will be in flaming fire, to take vengeance on them ; but neither is this, I think, the coming intended here. But,

3dly, There is a spiritual coming of Christ ; which is, when he comes and pays a visit, grants his presence, manifests his love, and discloses the secrets of his heart unto his people ; which was what he promised his sorrowing disciples, when he was about to remove from them, and they were no longer to enjoy his bodily presence ; says he, John xiv. 18. I will not leave you comfortless, ὁρφανῆς, orphans or fatherless, I will come to you ; which promise Christ made good unto them, as he does to all his people at one time or another, for, says he, John xiv. 23. If any man love me he will keep my words : And my Father will love him, and we will come unto him ; i. e. Father, Son, and Spirit, and make our abode with him ; which is what the church desires here, that Christ would grant her his spiritual, gracious and comfortable presence, and that she might have more intimate communion with him ; from whence we may observe, 1. That Christ is sometimes absent from his church and people : He does not always manifest himself unto them ; he sometimes hides his face, withdraws his presence, and seems to stand at a distance from them ; he is sometimes, Deus absconditus, the hidden God ; he was so to the Jews, in the days of his flesh, and he is so sometimes to his own flesh ; for he hideth his face from the house of Jacob, his own church and people, for whom he has the greatest love and regard ; not that Christ is ever really and wholly absent from his church ; he's always in his garden ; he has promised to be always with his people and ministers unto the end of the world, and his faithfulness stands engaged to make it good ; but he does not always alike manifest himself unto them ; they have not always alike views of his person, discoveries of his love, and enjoyments of his presence ; which sometimes makes them say with Job, O that I were as in months past, &c. nay, sometimes in their apprehensions he is entirely gone, which is the church's case, in Ch. v. 6: And such is their infirmity, and the strength of unbelief in them, that they are ready to say, He's gone, and will never return more; and therefore, as David did, read all that in the affirmative, which you will find in Psal. lxxvii. 7, 8, 9. Though I do not think this to be the case of the church here; she seems not to be without the manifestation of Christ's love, and enjoyments of his presence, being in such a fruitful state, the south-wind having blown upon her, her grace appearing to be in exercise, and she in a comfortable frame; though she wanted more nearness to him, more intimate communion and fellowship with him. Believers never think themselves near enough to Christ, nor never will, till they are with him in glory: The highest enjoyment of Christ, here below, though exceeding ravishing and delightful, falls short of giving full satisfaction; for still the soul desires more and greater. The apostle Paul, who had as much communion and fellowship with Christ, as, perhaps, ever any man had on earth; and yet, when he had in view that eternal being with Christ hereafter, speaks as if he had never been with him here; all his communion with him here, was nothing, when compared with that which he expected in another world, and therefore he had a desire to depart, that he might be with Christ. 2. From hence may be observed, that Christ's presence is exceeding desirable to believers: This is the one thing they seek after, and cannot be easy without, which, when enjoyed, gives them the utmost pleasure, and fills them with inexpressible joy: And the reason why Christ's company and presence is so desirable to them, is, because he is nearly related to them; he is their beloved, their head and husband; they are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones; he is their all in all; and when he's in the garden<sup>a</sup>, all they want, and all they desire is there; for there is none in heaven nor in earth with them comparable to him; his coming revives the plants and herbs, and makes them fruitful; it causes the spices to flow, grace to appear in exercise; 'tis like the rain, and is as the latter and former rain unto the earth: also, it is doing the saints the greatest honour; they have reason to say, Whence is this to us, that not the mother of our Lord, as Elizabeth said to Mary, but our Lord himself should come to us? And yet this honour have all the saints. Moreover, Christ's coming is always beneficial to believers; he never comes empty handed; he never pays a visit but he brings something with him; he never sups with his people, but he is at the charge of the whole entertainment. Again, 'tis Christ's presence that makes his garden, the church, an Eden of pleasure, a heaven on earth, which makes it a Bethel, and the gate of heaven; 'tis this which makes Christ's tabernacles amiable and lovely, his ways, ways of pleasantness, and his paths, paths of peace; 'tis this which makes his yoke easy, and his burden light, and all his commandments not to be grievous, but delightful; and when all this is considered, 'tis no wonder that believers are so desirous of Christ's presence and company in his garden. 3. Hence it appears, that Christ's granting his presence with his church, is an act of wonderful grace and condescension; and therefore she asks it as a favour of him; and a surprizing instance of his grace it is, that he who is the high and lofty one, one, should vouchsafe his presence to such vile and unworthy creatures as we be: The Septuagint render it, <sup>b</sup> Let him descend into his garden; and agreeable hereunto, in Ch. vi. 2. he is said to be gone down into his garden, intending his wonderful condescension. Solomon, at the dedication of the temple, said, But will God indeed dwell on the earth? We have reason to say with Judas, not Iscaiot, Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifest thy self to us, and not unto the world? especially, when with the Centurion we consider, that we are not worthy that he should come under our roof.

III. The end of her making this request or invitation, is, that he might eat his pleasant fruits; in which may be consider'd, 1st, What these fruits are. 2<sup>dly</sup>, Whose they are. 3<sup>dly</sup>, That they are pleasant ones. And, 4<sup>thly</sup>, What is meant by eating them.

1st, What these fruits are. By fruits may be meant, either the graces of the spirit, which are called the fruit of the spirit, Gal. v. 22. or else, the duties and services of God's people, their good works, which are performed in the exercise of grace. Believers are trees of righteousness, and the fruits which they bear are called fruits of righteousness; being, by grace, made good trees, they bring forth good fruit, and are said to be fruitful in every good work; now these Christ is here invited to eat. The Targum expounds it of the offerings of the people, which God graciously accepted.

2<sup>dly</sup>, Whose fruit is this, is the next enquiry; and they are said to be his, i. e. Christ's; the garden is his, and all the fruit of it; only, as one well observes, the weeds are her's; every thing else in the garden, that is either for service or pleasure, belongs to him: The graces of the spirit are his, 1. He is the procurer and possessor of them; he obtained all grace for his church and people, in the everlasting covenant; he then asked for it, and it was granted him, and given to us in him, on condition of his performing certain articles then agreed upon; so that as the glorious mediator of the covenant, he's full of grace and truth, and from his fulness do saints receive grace for grace: It is all lodged in his hands, and from thence given forth to us. 2. He's the author of all grace; he is said to be the author and finisher of faith; and as he is the author of that, so he is of all other grace; he gives it to us, and by his spirit works it in us; he is the green fir tree, from whom all our fruit is found; for otherwise we have none of ourselves. 3. He's the object of all grace, particularly faith, hope and love; he is the person in whom we believe, trust, and depend on for life and salvation, on whom our hope of glory is fixed, and to whom our love and affections are drawn; so that these fruits may be truly said to be his.—Also our duties, services and good works, performed in the exercise of grace, are his; for, (1.) They are performed by virtue of union, and therefore the fruits of righteousness are said to be by Jesus Christ; and as the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine, no more can any bear fruit, or perform good works aright, except they are engrafted and abide in Christ; he is the root which bears the branches, and from whence they receive sap and nourishment, ment, which causes them to abound with fruit; the root of the righteous yieldeth fruit, says Solomon, Prov. xii. 12. now the righteous man's root is Christ. (2.) They are done, not in their own strength, but in his; for without him they can do nothing; it is he who works in them, both to will and to do of his good pleasure. Therefore they ascribe all their works, duties and services to him, and say, as the apostle did, when he had asserted, that he had laboured more abundantly than the rest of the apostles, corrects himself thus; yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me. (3.) They are designed for his honour and glory, when performed aright; they do not seek themselves, their own carnal interest or worldly applause, or expect to merit any thing by them; but what they do, is in a way of obedience and gratitude to Christ, and that he, in all things, may be glorified; they are performed in his strength, and designed for his use, and so are properly his; which being considered, destroys that notion which advances the merit of good works.

3dly, These fruits are said to be pleasant, i. e. grateful, well pleasing and acceptable to Christ; so are the graces of the spirit, especially when in exercise, as appears from ver. 9, 10. and so are the good works of his people, when performed in faith, from a principle of love to him, and are directed to his glory; the smallest services of his saints to him, and the least acts of charity to his, are acceptable to him, when performed in the exercise of grace; and he will take notice of them, and openly declare it one day before angels and men, how well pleased he is with them.

4thly, What is meant by eating them; and this intends Christ's acceptance of them, and delight in them, as also his enjoyment of them, the phrase of eating and drinking, being with the Jews expressive of enjoyment; and it also further declares, the church's acknowledgment of Christ, being the owner of the garden; for who should eat of the fruits of it, but he who has planted it, and takes care of it, and to whom all the fruit belongs? knowing it therefore to be so, she here invites him to his own; which invitation is not disregarded, but observed by him, as appears from the following words.

CHAP. V.

Ver. 1. I am come into my garden, my sister, my spouse: I have gathered my myrrh with my spice, I have eaten my honey comb with my honey, I have drunk my wine with my milk: Eat, O friends, drink, yea, drink abundantly, O beloved.

THIS verse properly belongs unto, and is a part of the preceding chapter. The bible, when first wrote, was not divided into chapters and verses, as now it is. This is a work purely human, and not divine, therefore fore liable to correction : And I much wonder that the authors of this work should begin this chapter with this verse, which ought to end the former, as both the words and sense of them manifestly shew ; for this chapter ought to begin at ver. 2. where the church begins a new account of her state and case, and of some other remarkable occurrences which befel her, not hitherto spoken of. In this verse may be observed,

- I. Christ's reply to the church's request; in the latter end of the former chapter, where she desires and invites him to come into his garden.
- II. An account of Christ's carriage and behaviour, or what he did when he came into his garden.
- III. A kind invitation given by Christ to his friends, to feast with him.

I. Here is a reply made by Christ to the church's request or invitation, I am come into my garden, my sister, my spouse. The titles which he gives her, have been already taken notice of, and explained, in Ch. iv. 8, 9. and this reply of his, unto her, may be consider'd, either by way of denial to her, so some<sup>a</sup> interpret it ; as though Christ did not answer the church's wishes and desires, but rather gives a reason why he does not ; and wherefore she had no reason to expect his presence a long time ; because, says he, I have been in my garden already, and there I have gathered my myrrh and the rest of my spices ; I have got in my harvest or vintage, and I have eat my honey and honey-comb, and drunk my wine and milk ; and therefore to what purpose should I now come into my garden ? thou canst not expect me, until more myrrh and other spices grow. Or else, as a correction of her mistake, as if he should say, Dost thou invite me to come into my garden, as if I was absent from it ? thou art mistaken, I am always in it, and never out of it, and am now there, gathering my myrrh and spice, eating my honey and honey-comb, and drinking my wine and milk. From hence may be observed, that Christ may be in his church, among his people, or with particular believers, and they not know it : So God was in the place where Jacob was, and he knew it not : And thus it was with Mary at the sepulchre ; Christ was at her elbow, and she knew him not ; he speaks to her, and yet she's ignorant, and takes him for the gardener, until he calls her by her name, Mary, and then she knew him, and turns herself, and saith unto him, Rabboni, that is to say, Master : Though I rather think, the words are to be taken as a direct answer of Christ's to the church ; she desires and invites him to come into his garden, and accordingly he does come, and lets her know of it ; in which we may take notice, 1. Of the speediness of it : She no sooner asks, but it is granted ; no sooner invites, but he comes ; and before she had well done speaking, makes a reply ; his answer was ready, he was as willing to come, as she was to desire him ; which makes good what is said in Isa. lxxv. 24. And it shall come to pass, that before they call, I will answer, i. e. will be ready to give an answer ; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear ; a famous instance of this kind we have in Daniel, who, while he was speaking in prayer, and con-

feeling to God his own sins, and the sins of his people, the angel Gabriel was caused to fly swiftly to him ; who informed him, that at the beginning of his supplications, as soon as the good man was on his knees, and had opened his mouth in prayer to God, the commandment came forth, orders were given, and he, as a messenger from heaven, dispatched to bring him an answer ; but God does not always do so ; the vision is for an appointed time, and must be waited for till it comes. 2. The nature of this answer is worth observing, being exactly according to her request ; Christ does not always do so : When the apostle Paul had a thorn in the flesh, a messenger of satan to buffet him, he besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from him ; but it does not appear by the answer which was given him, that his request was granted immediately ; the answer, My grace is sufficient for thee, was a very glorious one, enough to support him under his present exercise, but gives us no intimation that it immediately freed him from it ; it being sometimes most for our good and for God's glory, not to be immediately and exactly answered ; but here, as she was answered speedily, so exactly ; she desires him to come into his garden, and eat his pleasant fruits ; he tells her, that he was come into his garden, and did eat his honey-comb with his honey ; which shews, 3. That her request was according to his will, in that she was answered so speedily and exactly ; for if we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us ; and therefore our great concern in prayer should be that we might be under the directions and influences of the spirit of God, and that he would make intercession for us, according to the will of God, who perfectly knows it ; and when we ask a favour or intreat a blessing, it should be always with submission to the divine will, in imitation of our dear Lord ; and so shall we be most likely to succeed. 4. It may be observed, that Christ not only answers her, but lets her know it ; not only grants his presence, but gives her intimations of it, he himself acquaints her with it ; for as has been observed, Christ may be present with believers and they not know it : So he was with the two disciples who were going to Emmaus ; he walked with them, conversed with them, opened the scriptures to them, and their hearts burned within them, while he did so ; and yet they knew him not, till he was made known to them in breaking of bread ; 'tis not only an instance of Christ's grace to be present with us, but also to assure us that he is so. I have shewn, in Cb. iv. 16. what is intended by Christ's coming into his garden : And therefore,

II. Shall now proceed to take notice of his carriage and behaviour there, or what he declares he did, or was doing, being there.

1st, He says, I have gathered my myrrh with my spice. Myrrh is one of the chief spices, was a principal ingredient in the holy anointing oil, and was used in other ointments : We read of the oil or ointment of myrrh, in Esth. ii. 12. with which Esther, and the other maidens were purified, in order to be presented to king Abasuerus : This and other sort of ointments, as spike-nard, were used in feasts, and were poured upon the heads of those who were the guests, as appears from Mark xiv. 3. to which custom the Psalmist alludes, Psal. xxiii. 5. Christ being about to make a feast, not only for himself, but for others, gathers myrrh with other spices, to make an ointment of, to entertain and refresh his guests with. By myrrh, with the rest of spices, may be meant, either repentance and humiliation for sin, and mortification of it, according to some interpreters<sup>b</sup>; and indeed, repentance and humiliation for sin, when evangelical, being the work of the blessed spirit, springing from right principles, and κατὰ Θεόν, according to God's mind; when it arises from an apprehension of sin, as committed against a God of love and grace; and when it springs from faith's viewing a crucified Christ, though like myrrh, is bitter to the soul, yet is odorous and well-pleasing to Christ; it is taken notice of by him, as Ephraim's bemoanings, repentance and humiliation were by God; he has a bottle to put such tears as these in, which drop from faith's eye: And so mortification of sin, considered as the spirit's grace, is regarded by him, according to Rom. viii. 13. If ye, through the spirit, do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live. Or else, according to<sup>c</sup> others, by myrrh, with other spices, are intended the suffering saints and martyrs, who have undergone bitter afflictions and persecutions for Christ and his gospel; whom he values, esteems, takes notice of, and gathers into his Father's house, where he clothes them with white robes, puts palms in their hands, and everlasting Hallelujahs in their mouths; see Rev. vii. 9, 10—13, 14. or rather the sufferings of Christ himself, and the fruits thereof, which though bitter to him; yet of a sweet swelling flavour to God the Father, and to all the saints; the fruits of which, appearing in the everlasting salvation of his people, are very delightful to him; for he now sees of the travail of his soul, and is satisfied; he's now reaping with pleasure, a glorious harvest of all his sweat, toil and labour: Though I rather chuse to understand hereby in general, the graces of the spirit, which Christ delights in, and which go under the name of myrrh, and other spices, in Ch. iv. 13, 14. Christ having got in his harvest, as the * word signifies, and the Septuagint render it, provides a feast for himself and others, as was the custom of those times and nations, as it is now with us. And therefore,

2dly, He says, I have eaten my honey comb with my honey. Honey was the food not only of infants but of grown persons, as is manifest from Isa. vii. 22. but that he should eat the honey comb with it, seems to have some difficulty in it: The Septuagint read it thus, * I have eaten my bread with my honey; i. e. either bread dipp'd in honey, or honey being put upon it, or else bread made of it; which sense is favoured by those words in Ezek. xvi. 13. Thou didst eat fine flower, and honey, and oil, i. e. bread made thereof. R. Sol. farchi says, 'tis the honey which grows in canes; he means, sugar, which by<sup>f</sup> Arrianus, is called μέλι καλάμινον; and that for the exceeding love he had for it, he is said to eat the cane with it: But it rather seems to be a piece of an honey comb full of honey, just took out of the hive; such an one as the disciples gave Christ; and this was had in no small esteem among the Jews: and by the honey and honey comb, may be meant, the doctrines of the gospel, or the words of Christ's mouth, which are said to be sweeter than the honey or the honey comb. So that Christ delights not only in the graces of the spirit, but also in the doctrines of the gospel, and the preaching of them.

3dly, He says, I have drunk my wine with my milk. Having eat, he drinks, to shew that he had a compleat feast, and that nothing was wanting to give him satisfaction; not only wine but milk was used for drink, by many nations, and no doubt, by the Hebrews: We find that Jael gave Sisera milk to drink, when he was thirsty, as being preferable to water; but that wine and milk should be drank together, seems somewhat strange; therefore some of the Jewish writers think, that by wine is meant red wine, and by milk, white wine; and so the Targum expounds the words of God's acceptance of the drink offering of red and white wine, which the priests poured upon the altar. R. Aben Ezra gives it as the sense of some of their Rabbins, though he does not approve of it; that by milk, is meant the white which ascends upon the wine; I suppose he means the froth or head that is made by pouring it out: But to leave these empty conjectures, it seems in general to intend the plenty of provisions, and satisfaction therein, which Christ found in his church; by which may be meant, the doctrines of the gospel. Gospel-grace is represented hereby, in Isa. lv. 1. Buy wine and milk without money, and without price. Wine revives and cheers the spirits, makes a man to forget his poverty, and to remember his misery no more; so do the doctrines of the gospel, when they come with power to a poor sinner, sensible of his poverty and misery; they make him to forget it, and fill him with an unspeakable joy: Milk nourishes and strengthens, and so do the doctrines of the gospel; therefore says the apostle, I have fed you with milk, meaning the wholesome and nourishing words of faith. Now from all this I would observe, 1. That here is a variety: As at a feast, there is a variety of dishes, different sorts, both for eating and drinking, so here are myrrh and spice, honey and the honey comb, wine and milk. 2. That here is nothing but what's sweet, savoury and wholesome; myrrh and spice are of a delightful odour; honey is sweet to the taste, and wine and milk are wholesome and nourishing. 3. That all these are Christ's own; 'tis his own he feasts and makes himself welcome with; he does not say, I have gathered thy myrrh with thy spice, which grows in thy garden; I have eaten thy honey comb with thy honey; I have drunk thy wine with thy milk; but it is my myrrh and my spice, my honey and my honey comb, my wine and my milk. Christ would have but a poor entertainment, if he had no other than what we can provide for him of our own. 4. Christ appears exceedingly delighted and well pleased with all this; therefore he plucks and gathers, eats and drinks; the smallest degree of grace, and the weakest performances of his people, he takes notice of and regards; he eats his honey comb, as well as his honey, and drinks his milk as well as his wine; for a bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking flax shall he not quench.

III. In these words is also an invitation of Christ to his friends to eat and drink; he is not willing to eat his morsel alone; as he feeds, feasts, and delights lights himself in the graces of his own spirit in his people, so he will have them feed and feast upon his person and grace; into whatsoever heart Christ comes, he will not only sup with them, but will make them also sup with him: And here are to be considered, 1st, The persons whom he invites. 2dly, What it is he invites them to.

1st, Who the persons are whom Christ invites; and they are here called friends and beloved: By whom are meant, not the angels, which is the mind of some; * though 'tis true, they are Christ's friends, and rejoice at the conversion of elect sinners, and in the prosperity of his church and people; yet I think they are not intended here; nor the priests, whose right it was to eat the remainder of the sacrifices, as many Jewish <sup>a</sup> writers expound the words; but rather believers in Christ, who of enemies are made friends, being first reconciled to God by the death of Christ, and then to himself by his spirit and grace; whom he regards and treats as such, by granting them his presence, paying them visits, and disclosing the secrets of his heart unto them; and so he said to his disciples, John xv. 14, 15. Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: But I have called you Friends; for all things that I have heard of my father, I have made known unto you. Now these are enabled, through divine grace, to shew themselves friendly to Christ again, by valuing his presence, delighting in his company, regarding his ordinances, and observing his commands; for though these things do not make friends, yet they shew them to be so; as Christ says, Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you. These are also the beloved of his soul; he has loved them with an everlasting love, and has given the fullest proofs and clearest demonstrations of it that possibly can be; which being manifested to their souls, begets love to him again, on the account of which he calls them friends and beloved. But,

2dly, It will be proper to consider what he invites his friends and beloved to; to eat and drink, yea, to drink abundantly; but what is it they are to eat and drink of, or to feast upon? Why, Christ himself, who is the bread of life, and the hidden manna, whose flesh is meat indeed, and whose blood is drink indeed; which if a man eats, and feeds upon by faith, he shall never hunger, nor die the second death, but live for ever. Moreover, his love is what they are to drink of, and that largely; it being preferable to wine, may be drank of without danger, plentifully; they may drink, yea, be inebriated with loves, as the <sup>a</sup> words may be render'd; for here's enough of it, and no fear of receiving any danger by it; and all this together makes up that feast of fat things, of wines on the lees well refined, which the Lord's supper is a representation of. And this shews, 1. The plenteousness of the provisions, which Christ makes in his house for his people: It is not an empty house that Christ keeps, a niggardly feast that he makes; but here is food, and that in plenty, and drink enough and to spare. 2. That a believer is heartily welcome to the entertain-entertainment which Christ makes; 'tis true, we are unworthy creatures of ourselves, but seeing Christ has made such entertainments for us, and has so kindly invited us, let us use freedom and eat; and the more heartily we feed on these royal dainties, the more welcome we are; and to assure believers that they are so, he, in his invitation to them, gives them the titles of friends and beloved: Nay, the very manner of the invitation, not only declares the plenteousness of the feast, but also the largeness and sincerity of his heart in it.

3. It also lets us know, that Christ neither invites nor allows any to feed and feast with him, but those who are his friends, whom he accounts and makes so; this is a privilege peculiar to them, which indeed none enjoy but they. And as for the external ordinance of the Lord's supper, that feast of love, none have a right to eat of it but those who are Christ's friends, and to none but those is it profitable and edifying; for he does not manifest himself, or discover his love to any other: These are his darlings and favourites, with these he grants his presence at his table, and satisfies their souls with the goodness of his house.

Ver. 2. I sleep, but my heart waketh: It is the voice of my beloved that knocketh, saying, Open to me, my sister, my love, my dove, my undefiled: For my head is filled with dew, and my locks with the drops of the night.

THESE are the words of the church, who here begins to give an account of her present state and condition; how, that after this spiritual banquet, which she had partook of with Christ, she fell asleep; as the disciples did in the garden, after they had been with Christ at his table; and also what methods he made use of to awake her; how basely and ungratefully she treated him, which he resented and shewed by a departure from her, which when she was sensible of, was troubled at, and made enquiry after him, first of the watchmen, who abused her, and then of the daughters of Jerusalem, who question her about him; which gave her occasion to give that large and excellent account of him, which closes this chapter: And it may be observed, that as Christ speaks most in the preceding chapter, so she does in this. In these words are these two things,

- I. The church's account of her present state and condition,
- II. Christ's carriage and behaviour to her in this condition.

I. The account she gives of her present state and condition; I sleep, but my heart waketh. This case which the church was now in, is different from that recorded in Cb. iii. there she was upon her bed indeed, but not asleep; there she was seeking after her beloved; but here he is seeking to her, and intreating her, in the most kind and affectionate manner to arise and let him in; there she of her own accord arose and sought him in the streets and broad ways; but here she continues in this sleepy and lazy condition; notwithstanding ing the pressing instances and powerful arguments which he made use of, until he exerted his mighty grace, which caused her to arise and open to him; but then he was gone; there she enquires of the watchmen, who, tho' we do not read of any answer they gave her, yet they did not abuse her; but here they smite her, wound her, and take away her veil from her; there, a little after she had passed from them, she found him; but here she appears to be even sick of love, before she found him. In this account of her's, two things are asserted by her; First, That she was asleep. Yet, Secondly, Her heart was awake.

First, She acknowledges that she was asleep; I sleep. This is not the dead sleep of sin in which all unconverted persons are; nor that judicial slumber which God suffers to fall upon some; but such an one, which though displeasing to Christ, and unbecoming the believer, yet is consistent with a principle of grace. The church here was not so fast asleep, but she could hear, know and distinguish the voice of Christ: Her sleep is much the same with that of the wise virgins, who all slumbered and slept, as well as the foolish, and yet had oil in their lamps, which they had not. And in taking notice of this part of the church's case, I'll endeavour, 1st, To shew wherein this sleepy frame, which sometimes attends believers, does consist, or wherein it shews itself. 2<sup>dly</sup>, What are the springs and causes of it, or from whence it proceeds. 3<sup>dly</sup>, The danger of such a frame.

1st, It will be proper to shew wherein this sleepy frame of spirit does consist, or wherein it shews itself. 1. It consists in a non-exercise of grace; tho' there's grace in the heart, yet it is but very little exercised by persons in this condition; it lies dormant; faith is weak and languid, hope abates in its former liveliness, and love in its warmth and fervency, it grows cold; there is such a thing as a leaving, though not a losing our first love. 2. It appears in a sluggishness and sloathfulness to, or in, duty; for though persons have not wholly cast off the fear of God, and restrained prayer before him, as Eli-phaz, Job xv. 4. wrongfully charged Job; yet there's a backwardness to it, and a laziness appears in the performance of it; there is a want of that fervency of spirit, which formerly discover'd itself whilst they were serving the living God. 3. It manifests itself in a contentation in the external parts of religion: Internal religion is at a low ebb in their souls; they hear and read, and pray, and attend on ordinances, contenting themselves with the bare performance of these things, without having their hearts engaged, their faith in exercise, and their affections raised; and so come short of answering the character of being worshippers of God in the spirit, either under the influences of the eternal spirit, or with their own spirits influenced thereby, which formerly was their great concern in religious worship. 4. It discovers itself in a carelessness, lukewarmness, and unconcernedness for the cause of Christ: Persons in such a condition, may be observed, sensibly to abate in their zeal, both for the doctrines of the gospel, and the discipline of God's house; they seek their own things, and not the things which are Jesus Christ's; they mind their own ceiled houses, and let the house of God lie waste; they come far short of imitating Christ, their glorious head; of whom it is said Psal.

lxix. 9. that the zeal of God's house eat him up; things may go how they will, for ought they care, who have got into this frame of spirit. 5. It shews itself in an unconcernedness, as to omission of duty, and commission of sin: Time was, when these persons could not omit a duty occasioned by the hurrying business of life, but it gave them great uneasiness; could not do those things, which, by some, are not accounted sinful, but it burdened their consciences; but now they can neglect duties time after time, fall in with the customs and corruptions of the age, and be very little concerned about it. 6. In a willingness to continue so: They do not love to be jugged; grow peevish when any attempts are made to awake them; their language is that of the sluggard, Prov. vi. 10. Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep. This seems to be the case of the church, who being asleep, did not care to be disturbed, and therefore made those idle excuses she did, when called upon in the most tender and affectionate manner to arise.

2dly, What are the true springs and causes of this sleepy frame, or from whence it does proceed. 1. From a body of sin, they carry about with them, which fleshly, gross, and earthly part in them, induces heaviness, and inclines to sleep: The cold humours of sin benumb the soul, and bring upon it a spiritual lethargy; like the poison of asps, it operates this way: The deceitful charms of sin sometimes lull them asleep. 2. Worldly cares have sometimes this effect upon God's people; an immoderate thirst and pursuit after the things of this world, oftentimes makes persons grow indifferent about the things of another; it runs them into many temptations and snares; it frequently causes them to omit private and family duty, and choaks the word and ordinances that they become unfruitful; being surfeited and overcharged with it, they fall into this drowsy and sleepy frame. 3. It arises sometimes from a cessation from spiritual exercises; idleness, or a want of exercise induces sleep: When believers grow weary of well-doing, and grow remiss in the duties of meditation, prayer, hearing and reading, grace, as to the exercise of it, declines, and their souls fall into a spiritual slumber. 4. It sometimes springs from, and is increased by an absenting from the ministry, especially an awakening one, which might be useful to rouse them; and from the company of lively Christians, by conversing with whom, their souls, through the blessing of divine grace, might be kept awake; but instead of this, they neglect the ministry of the word, leave off the company of those warm and lively souls, and converse with cold and formal professors, which brings them into and continues them in this sleepy frame. 5. Sometimes it follows upon an enjoyment of ease, peace and liberty; therefore <sup>a</sup> some interpret these words of the state of the church in Constantine's time, when the church not only enjoy'd freedom from persecution, but also abounded in riches and prosperity, and upon it, grew careless, secure and sleepy; by reason of which, many errors, both in doctrine and discipline, crept into the church; and I am afraid, that the long enjoyment of peace and liberty, which we have had, has brought us into much the same frame of spirit.

3dly, The danger of being in such a state and condition. 1. When the church of Christ is in such a condition, it lies liable to be filled with hypocrites, and pestered with hereticks; to be filled with hypocrites, because it has not then such a spirit of discerning; these may then more easily impose themselves upon it: To be pester'd with heresies and hereticks, of which there have been lamentable instances, that while men slept, the enemy sowed tares; which roots of bitterness have sprung up with the wheat of sound doctrine, and have troubled some, and defiled others; and, I wish I could say, that this is not the case of the churches of Christ now, and these the dreadful consequences of her being in such an one. 2. Particular believers, who are got into this sleepy and drowsy frame, are exposed to every sin, and every temptation; therefore said Christ to his disciples, Mat. xxvi. 41. Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation; knowing, that when asleep, they might easily be led into it: What may not the devouring lion be suffered to do to persons in such a condition? Into what sins and snares may he not be permitted to lead them, though he shall never destroy them? 3. They are liable to be deprived of Christ's presence, which was the case of the church here: She had had a glorious enjoyment of Christ's presence; he had been with her in his garden, and had made a noble entertainment for her and his friends, quickly after which, she falls asleep; and after he had made some attempts to awake her, and given some notices of his regard to her, withdraws himself from her, ver. 6. 4. Such may be robbed of what is valuable and dear unto them: A man that is asleep, any thing that he has, money, jewels, &c. may be taken from him: So a believer, though he cannot lose his grace, nor that treasure which he has in heaven, yet he may lose his comfort and liveliness; and the truths of the gospel may be more easily wrung out of his hands. 5. Such a sleepy, lazy frame, tends to spiritual poverty; it brings leanness upon the soul: Grace, as to its exercise, is brought low thereby, and the soul in a declining condition. 6. Such persons are liable to be surprized with the midnight-cry; though, it is true, those who are real believers, shall never be found without oil in their lamps, but shall be always ready in Christ, for his appearance; yet it will not be so startling and surprizing to the waking, as to the sleepy virgins. 7. Such a frame is both displeasing to Christ, and uncomfortable to themselves: A lukewarm frame Christ so resents, that he threatens to spue such out of his mouth; neither is it very comfortable to themselves; it is but broken sleep they have; they are disturbed with many startlings and joggings of conscience, like persons who know it is their duty to arise, and be about their business, and yet have no power to do so, being overcome with sleep.

Secondly, She declares, that notwithstanding she slept, yet her heart was awake. R. Sol. Tarchi divides these words, and refers the former clause, I sleep, to the bride; and this here, my heart waketh, to the bridegroom; and so he says it is expounded in an ancient book of theirs, called Pesikta: And then the sense is; though I have been, and am in a sleepy frame of spirit, yet he, who is my heart, my life, my soul, my all; he whom I love with all my heart heart, and who is the rock, the strength of my heart, and my portion for ever ; he, I say, never slumbers nor sleeps, but watches over me night and day, even when I am asleep, that nothing hurts me : But in another ancient book of theirs, called Zohar*, I find both clauses referred to the church, and so they are to be understood ; my heart waketh, i. e. my regenerate part, which is sometimes called in scripture, the spirit, and the inward man ; q. d. so far as my carnal and unregenerate part prevails, I sleep ; and so far as I am renewed and sanctified, my heart waketh ; she was not so fast asleep, but that, 1. She had some thoughts of heart concerning Christ ; he was not wholly out of her mind ; though she was asleep, her thoughts were running upon, and employed about her beloved ; his image was so impressed upon her mind, that she thought him present ; and every thing that stirred, supposed it was he, and that she heard his voice ; even as lovers in their sleep have their thoughts running upon the person who is the object of their love. 2. There were some stirrings of affections in her towards him ; though she had got into this sleepy and lazy frame of soul, yet Christ was still the object of her love ; and therefore she says, it is the voice of my beloved ; she was not so fast asleep but that she could not only know and distinguish the voice of Christ, but she could also call him her beloved. 3. There were, no doubt, some convictions of sin upon her conscience : We must not suppose her to be in such a dead sleep as to be past feeling, or to have her conscience seared with an hot iron ; she was sensible of her evil, in indulging such a frame ; though being overcome with sleep, she had no power to guard against it. 4. It is highly probable, that she was not without some desires after being in her duty, as being uneasy in her present case ; it seems to be with her as it was with the disciples when asleep, of whom Christ says, that the spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak ; they, with her here, had a will to duty, a will to watch and pray with him ; but how to perform they knew not, being overpowered with this fleshly and earthly part.

Now from this whole account, which she gives of herself, as sleeping, and yet waking, we may observe the following things. (1.) That a believer has two different principles in him ; a principle of corruption and a principle of grace ; the one he brings into the world with him, the other is wrought by the spirit of God ; and these are represented as two different persons, both by the church here, who speaks of an I that sleeps, and an heart that wakes ; and by the apostle elsewhere, who speaks of a new man and an old man ; of himself, as having no good thing dwelling in him, and yet of an I that sinneth not ; see Rom. vii. 18—20. Eph. iv. 22—24. (2.) That these two different principles may exert themselves, at one and the same time, in a believer ; the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh, and these are contrary the one to the other. The law in the members wars against the law in the mind, and the law in the mind opposes the law in the members ; and at the same time she sleeps, her heart wakes. (3.) That corruption may seem to have the ascendant in a believer's heart, for a time ; it seems to have had it in the church here ; sleep overpowered her, tho' her heart was awake. This law in the members may carry captive for some time, and have such a power over the believer, liever, as that he cannot do the good which he would. (4.) Notwithstanding true grace cannot be lost in a believer, it is an immortal seed which remains and abides; grace is always alive, though not always alike lively; 'tis a well of living water, springing up into everlasting life. (5.) The difference between a carnal and a spiritual heart; the one is in a dead sleep, the other, though asleep, yet his heart wakes; the one has spirit as well as flesh, the other is nothing but flesh: and considering these as the words of the church, they inform us, [1.] That believers have a discerning of their state and condition; when in the lowest, they know, in some measure, how it is with them, and can observe a difference in themselves, from themselves, and from what they have formerly been, which an unconverted person is a stranger to; he is not capable of making such a remark as this upon himself, which the church here does; though, 'tis true, the believer may be left sometimes to make a wrong judgment of himself. [2.] That believers are ingenuous in acknowledging their sins, failings and infirmities; which is an evidence of the truth of grace, and that there are more or less some stirrings of it, where this spirit is. [3.] That it is the duty of believers to take notice of their grace, as well as of their sin; and therefore the church takes notice of her waking heart as well as of her sleeping I: We should be careful how we deny or lessen the work of the spirit of God upon our souls, but speak of it to the glory of him, who is the author of it; who can, does, and will keep our hearts awake, grace alive there, though we, with the church, may be sometimes suffered to fall asleep. Thus much for her state and condition: Now follows,

II. Christ's carriage and behaviour to her, when in this state, as acknowledged by herself.

1st. He call'd unto her, and that so loud, that she, though asleep, could hear and own it to be his voice, saying, It is the voice of my beloved. By the voice of Christ we must understand the gospel, as preached by his ministring servants; by whom he often calls, to his drowsy and sleepy saints to awake, as he does here. In what sense the gospel is the voice of Christ, and how it may be, and is distinguished by believers, from the voice of strangers, have been shewn on Cb. ii. 8. I need only add here, that as it is a distinguishing character of believers, to know Christ's voice, so they are capable of doing it, even when in a carnal and sleepy frame of soul: Believers, sometimes, under hearing the word, are very dull and heavy; there is but very little exercise of faith in them, yet they can then distinguish the gospel from what is not so, though they are little affected with it, and receive but very little advantage by it: nay, it may be further observed, that she could say, it was the voice of her beloved; for though her faith and love were very low, yet they were not lost; but then let it be carefully remarked, that though she was capable of making such observations on what she heard, yet she was not thoroughly awaked hereby, but sleeps on still: Thus, notwithstanding Christ's passionate expostulation with his disciples in the garden, saying, What, could ye not watch with me one hour? I say, notwithstanding this, they fall asleep again. Christ's word without his power, will neither quicken dead sinners, nor awake sleepy saints; neither of these will be affected by it, unless he puts in the finger of his powerful and efficacious grace, by the hole of the door, as he does in ver. 4. Well, Christ calling her by his ministers, and not awaking her, he takes another method. And therefore,

2dly, Knocks and calls again, saying, Open to me, &c. There is, 1. A knocking at sinners hearts at first conversion. The heart of an unconverted sinner is bolted and barred against Christ with the strong bolts and bars of sin and unbelief: Elect sinners, whilst in a state of nature, are shut-hearted and far from righteousness; they are unwilling to submit to Christ and his righteousness, or to open the doors of their hearts, and let the King of glory in; he stands and knocks there, by the preaching of the gospel, and having the key of David in his hands, he openeth, and no man shutteth, and shutteth, and no man openeth; with this key of almighty and efficacious grace, he openeth their hearts as he did Lydia's; and with the hammer of his word, breaks them in pieces, and causes all bolts and bars to fly before him; plucks down the strong-holds which satan had made, dispossesses the strong man of his armour, wherein he trusted, to keep his palace in peace and safety, and reduces all in obedience to himself; where entering with his glorious train of graces, and having dethroned sin, sets up grace to reign in its stead, and takes possession of the heart as his palace, from whence sin and satan will never be able to eject him. Now in this mighty work of grace, in thus conquering and subduing a sinner's heart, we are not to suppose that here is a force upon the will; for though before they were unwilling, as well as unable, to open and let him in, yet are now made willing in the day of his power, to submit unto him; they become voluntary subjects to him, and Christ meets with a kind reception and hearty welcome from them; so that they are as desirous of having him there, as he is of entering in, when this day of his power has past upon them. But, 2. There is a knocking at churches, or at the hearts of particular believers, and of this we read in Rev. iii. 20. Behold, I stand at the door and knock, &c. The church of Laodicea there appears to be in much the same case and condition as the church is here: The church here was asleep, though her heart was awake; and the church of Laodicea there, was lukewarm, neither hot nor cold; which being highly displeasing to Christ, in order to bring her to a sense of her present condition, comes and stands at the door, and knocks, as he does here. Now we are not to suppose, that Christ is ever turned out of doors; that the key is turned upon him, or that he has not always a dwelling in his churches, or in the hearts of particular believers; for he is Christ in us, and in all believers, the hope of glory; he is there, and will continue there, till he has brought them to that glory which they are hoping for; tho' sometimes they are so shut up in their frames, that they can neither come forth themselves, in the enlargement of their desires and affections, and in the exercise of grace, nor let in Christ unto them; there is but very little communion between Christ and them; and though there is no distance or separation, with respect to union, yet there is with regard to communion; there stands, as it were, a door, a wall, a middle wall of partition, between Christ and their souls, and oftentimes, which is still worse, they are secure, careless and unconcerned about it; therefore Christ, in order to bring them to a sense of themselves, and their present condition, that they may see their need of, and that desires may be stirred up in them, after communion with himself, comes and stands at the door and knocks; which knocking, I take to be, not by the ministry of the word, as before, but in a providential way, in a way of chastisement, by taking in his hand the rod of affliction, or scourge of persecution, and lashing his children with them; with such severe raps and blows of persecution did he knock at the door of the church, in the times of Constantius, Valens and Julian, emperors of Rome, after she was fallen asleep, through the peace and prosperity which she enjoyed in the times of Constantine; the two former of which, persecuted the orthodox ministers, and others, in favour of the Arians; and the latter intirely apostatized from the Christian religion, and became a bitter enemy and cruel persecutor of it; and this is thought, by some <sup>d</sup> interpreters, to be particularly intended here; and in this sense we are to understand knocking, in that parallel text, Rev. iii. 20. as is manifest by comparing it with ver. 19. as many as I love, I rebuke and chasten; be zealous therefore and repent: Behold, I stand at the door and knock, &c. His knocking there, is no other than his rebukes and chastisements, in a way of love, which were designed to bring her to a sense of herself, as appears from that exhortation, be zealous therefore and repent; and that she might see her need of, and have her desires enlarged after communion with him, as is manifest from these words; If any man open to me, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me; which also is his end and design in knocking after this manner here; It is the voice of my beloved that knocketh, saying, Open to me. There is an emphasis upon that word me! Open to me, who am thy Lord, thy head, thy husband and thy friend: And by opening to him, he means an enlarging of their affections and desires to him, which were now very cold and chill; and an exercise of their faith upon him, which was very weak; which they of themselves were no more capable to do, than a sinner is to open his heart to Christ at first conversion; this can only be done by him, who has the key of David, who openeth, and no man shutteth, &c. And therefore we find this knocking was also ineffectual, until he exerted his mighty grace, as in ver. 4. his saying to her, Open to me, is designed to convince her of her present condition, and what need she stood in, of his presence and assistance.

3dly, Christ not only calls by the ministry of the word, and knocks in a providential way, by his rebukes and chastisements; but he also gives her good words, kind and endearing titles and characters: He calls to her, saying, Open to me, my sister, my love, my dove, my undefiled. The three first of these titles and characters have been already considered and explained: The first title, my sister, is expressive of the near relation the church stands in to Christ, being flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bone, and has been spoken to on Cb. iv. 9. The second, my love, shews the strong affection Christ had for her, she being the

the alone object of it, and has been opened on Cb. i. 9. The third, my dove, declares the church's harmlessness and simplicity, her cleanness, purity and chastity, as has been shewn on Cb. ii. 14. And the fourth, my undefiled, or my perfect one, as it is in the Hebrew text, is what we have not yet met with, and therefore will deserve a little more consideration: and here it must be observed, that all the descendants of Adam, by ordinary generation, are polluted and defiled, both in their nature and actions; all the parts of their bodies, and powers and faculties of their souls, are so; their will and affections, understanding and judgment, mind and conscience are all defiled; and indeed, how can it otherwise be, for who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? not one: Nay, believers themselves are not free from pollution, but complain of the uncleanness of their hearts and lips, and frankly acknowledge, that they are all as an unclean thing; and that all their righteousnesses are as filthy rags; it may then seem strange, that Christ should call his church, and that in her present circumstances, his undefiled one; and so she is, not in herself, but as considered in him: Believers are full of spots in themselves, but having on his spotless righteousness, he looks upon them as all fair, and as having no spot in them; they are the undefiled in the way, even whilst in the way to glory, and on this side the heavenly inheritance, which is incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in the heavens for them. Or else, this character may regard her chastity to Christ, who, though she was guilty of many failings and infirmities, yet she had kept his bed undefiled, had not committed spiritual adultery, which is idolatry, but kept close to his ways and ordinances, as those we read of in Rev. xiv. 4. who because they did not join with the whore of Rome in her abominations, are said not to be defiled with women; for they are virgins: These are they which follow the lamb, whithersoever he goeth. Now Christ calls his church by all these loving and endearing titles. 1. To shew that she stood in the same relation to him she ever did, and was loved by him with the same love she ever was; though sleepy and lazy, careless and negligent of her duty, and regardless of him, yet she's his sister, his love, his dove, his undefiled: Notwithstanding all this, here was a change in the frame of her soul, and in her carriage and behaviour towards him, but no alteration in her relation to him, nor in his love to her, which shews him indeed, Jesus, the same, yesterday, to day, and for ever. 2. That all these knocks, raps and chastisements, were all in love; he meant it for her good, and would have her take it so; we are too apt to think, when chastised and under God's afflicting hand, that it is in a way of wrath, and that he deals not with us, as children; but when he knocks and gives such endearing characters as these, it plainly shews, that it is all in love. 3. To manifest how desirous he was of communion with her, and therefore tries all ways to obtain it; he calls and knocks, and calls again, and that in the most tender moving language that can be. And this is not all, but, * תאמינא Sept. Galatinus, i. 3. c. 30. De arcan. Cathol. verit. from the Midrash, would have it, that it was formerly read תאמינא gemella mea, my twin; and I find in Zohar, in Deut. fol. 126. 3. it is observed that it should be read so.

ably, He expostulates with her, and uses very pressing instances and powerful arguments to persuade her to open and let him in; for my head, says he, is filled with dew, and my locks with the drops of the night; here, because of the great love and affection which he has for his church, and the desire he has of enjoying communion with her; here, I say, he is represented as coming in the night season, to pay her a visit, and standing knocking at her door, and waiting so long there for an answer, until his head was filled with dew, and his locks with the drops of the night; which may be understood, either, 1. Of the doctrines and blessings of grace, which Christ came full fraught with; these being compared to dew in scripture; see Deut. xxxii. 2. Hos. xiv. 6. and then the sense is, q. d. “Behold, my love, I stand at thy door knocking and waiting to be admitted in; I pray thee, rise and open to me, for I am come filled with the comfortable and refreshing doctrines of the gospel, and with all the spiritual blessings of the everlasting covenant of grace, which I know are needful and proper for thee.” So R. Sol. Jarchi, by dew, understands God’s blessings, for those who turn by repentance; though by drops of the night, he thinks are meant punishments, for those who forsake and despise him. Or else, 2. These words may intend the sufferings of Christ, which I rather incline to: Thus Nebuchadnezzar’s body being wet with the dew of heaven, is expressive of the forlorn and miserable condition he was in, when being driven from men, he eat grass as oxen, and was exposed to all the inclemency of the heavens; so when Christ’s head is here said to be filled with dew, and his locks with the drops of the night; it may mean his sufferings in his state of humiliation, who had not where to lay his head; whose constant practice it was some time before his death, in the day time, to teach in the temple, and in the night, continued praying in the mount of Olives; and that night in which he was taken, appears to be a very cold one, from Peter’s warming himself: So that there seems to be an agreement between those outward sufferings of his, and these represented in these words; though, no doubt, far greater than those are intended here, which he underwent in his own person, on the account of his church; which may be compared to dew and drops of the night. (1.) Because of the multitude of them, the dew and drops of the night being many; Christ’s sufferings were many and various; there are the sufferings of his body and of his soul, and many of both sorts; What tongue can express? What heart can conceive what he underwent, when he bore our sins and his Father’s wrath? And because of the multitude of them, they are compar’d, not only to dew and drops of the night, but to floods, Psal. lxxix. 1, 2. 2. As the dew and drops of the night are uncomfortable and prejudicial to health, especially in those hot countries; so Christ’s sufferings were uncomfortable to the human nature, as is manifest from what he said to his Father in the garden, and when upon the cross; and they would have been intolerable to any but himself. 3. As the dew and drops of the night, tho’ prejudicial to the health of persons, yet are very useful and fructifying to the earth; so the sufferings of Christ, though uncomfortable to the human nature, yet have produced many blessings of grace, and are the means of bringing many sons to glory; see John xii. 24. Now the sum of the argument then is this; seeing I have suffered so much and so largely on this account; how canst thou be so cruel, so hard hearted, so base and disingenuous, as not to arise and let me in? And yet notwithstanding such a moving and melting argument, what idle excuses does she make to put him off, in the following words?

Ver. 3. I have put off my coat, How shall I put it on? I have washed my feet, How shall I defile them?

THE sleepy and lazy frame which the church had fallen into, together with Christ's carriage and behaviour towards her, in that condition, has been considered in the preceding verse; and in this we have the effect which Christ's calls and knocks, his melting language and moving exhortations had upon her: All the answer he obtains from her, are only some idle excuses and frivolous shifts, to put him off. Some interpreters indeed, have attempted to vindicate the church from slothfulness and rudeness, and would have this ascribed to her modesty, which would not admit her to appear before so great a person, in such a disagreeable dress; but if this had been the case, he would never have resented her behaviour to him, as he did by withdrawing from her; he would never have suffered her to wander about the city, in quest of him, as she did; nor would he have permitted the watchmen to abuse her as they did, by sinning, wounding and unveiling her; nor should she have gone so long, until she was sick of love, before she found him, had not all this been to chastise her for her former slothfulness and rudeness. Nor are we to consider these words as of one asking for information sake, how she should do this and the other thing, as being willing to comply with the request made to her, if she knew but how; for she had no desire to do it, her chief design being to keep her bed, her ease and rest, if possible; therefore, though she is not so rude as to say, that she would not arise and let him in; yet her words and actions manifestly shew that she had no design to do it, and therefore makes the excuses she does; which are to be looked upon as an absolute denial, and were so interpreted by Christ; and may be paralleled with that answer, which the man gave to his friend, who came at midnight to borrow loaves of him, which in Luke xi. 7. 'you will find to be this, Trouble me not, the door is now shut, and my children are with me in bed; I cannot rise and give thee. Having given you this general view of the words, I'll now consider the parts of them, or the particular excuses that she makes.

First, She says, I have put off my coat, and from thence argues, How shall I put it on? It will be proper to consider what is meant by her putting off her coat, and also what the argument she forms upon it, or the conclusion she draws from it, intends. 1. The believer's coat is Christ and his righteousness; his clothing is the garments of salvation, and his covering the robe of righteousness; all which he has from Christ, who is Jehovah, our righteousness, whose righteousness is the saints wedding garment; which being made of fine linen, clean and white, and put upon them, they are clothed as with the sun; their own garments, whether of sin or righteousness, are filthy ones; in the room of which, is given to them change of raiment. Now this coat or garment of justifying righteousness, being wrought out by Christ, and brought to the soul by the spirit of God, faith puts on, according to Rom. xiii. 14: Put on the Lord Jesus Christ, i. e. the righteousness of Christ; which faith puts on, as a man does his clothes; and for this reason we are said to be justified by faith; not that faith, by any virtue of its own, has an influence in our justification, or is a part of it; for we are no otherwise justified by it, than as it apprehends, lays hold, and puts on Christ for righteousness. Now this coat or garment being once put on, the believer can never be disrobed of it; it is an everlasting righteousness, it will never wear out, nor can it be lost, nor will it ever be took away from him; Adam lost the righteousness in which he was created, but the believer's can never be lost; for 'tis not the righteousness of a creature, but of God; those who once have on Christ's righteousness, always have; for being once justified by it, they will always be so; nor must it be imagined, that ever a true believer will be left to despise and reject this righteousness: There is nothing dearer to him, and more valued by him than this is; he often thinks of it in himself, and frequently speaks of it to others; he desires to be always found in it, living and dying; but yet sometimes his faith may be remiss about it; may lie dormant, and be very little exercised on this glorious object: Sometimes a believer is got into such a carnal, secure and lazy frame of spirit, as the church here was, that he contents himself with the bare performance of external duties, without having his soul affected with, or his faith concerned about Christ as the Lord his righteousness; nay, sometimes when he is not in such a frame, he is too apt to dwell upon his own heart, his grace, his frames, his duties; there is a great deal of legality, sometimes, in believers, and their practice runs contrary to their light and judgment. Now so far as we rest in ourselves, in our duties and performances, or dwell on our graces and our frames; so far we may be said to have put off our coat, or to have laid aside and neglected the righteousness of Christ; though 'tis certain believers cannot be really disrobed of it; and, perhaps, this may be the sense of these words. Of else, 2. They may intend her leaving her first love; as her faith in Christ's righteousness was very low, so her love to Christ, his people, ways and ordinances, was very cold; there is such a thing as leaving, though not losing our first love, for which the church at Ephesus was blamed, Rev. ii. 4. Now when saints are in the exercise of this grace of love to Christ or his people, they may be said to put it on, as the apostle exhorts, in Gal. iii. 14: And above all these things put on charity, on love, which is the bond of perfectness, and when they grow remiss and cold in it, may be said to put it off. 3. These words may also represent her neglect of her duty; for she had not only drop'd, in a great measure, the exercise of grace, but likewise the performance of duty; she was grown slothful and inactive; she had put off her clothes, as having done working, and therefore takes to her bed; and composes herself to rest; thus, as a performance of duties may be called a putting of them on; see Col. iii. 12. so a neglect of them may be called a putting of them off; which Eliphaz, in Job xv. 4. calls a casting off fear before God; for he intends thereby a disregard to religious exercises, which he supposed Job chargeable with. 4. These words manifestly shew, that she was in a sleepy, drowsy frame; had put off her clothes, and was gone to bed; that she was now off of her guard, and had dropped her spiritual watchfulness: Thus, as putting and keeping on of clothes is a sign of watchfulness, see Neb. iv. 23. Rev. xvi. 15. so putting them off is an indication of the contrary; and she having done so, is not only exposed to danger, but to shame, disgrace and scandal. 5. Being now free from troubles, afflictions, and persecutions, she puts off her coat, and betakes herself to a bed of ease; and though he calls, yet she's unwilling to arise and go along with him, lest she should meet with the same trials and sufferings as before, for the sake of him and his gospel; so much does the love of worldly ease prevail over God's own children, that they are sometimes loth to arise and follow Christ in his own ways.

Now from hence she argues, and thus she concludes, that seeing she had put off her coat, How should she put it on? Which discovers, (1.) That she was apprehensive of difficulty in doing it, How shall I, &c. i. e. how difficult will it be for me to do it? and indeed, it is easier dropping the exercise of a grace, or the performance of a duty, than it is to take it up again after we have done so; and when grace is called to exert itself, or a duty is presented to be performed, carnal reason raises a thousand difficulties, as insuperable, which faith only gets over. (2.) This way of arguing, shews her sluggishness, and her love of ease; as the sluggard thinks there is danger if he arises and goes into the streets, saying, There's a lion without, I shall be slain the streets; so he is so wretchedly slothful, that having hid his hand in his bosom, it grieves him to bring it again to his mouth: So she having put off her coat, was so exceeding slothful and sluggish, that she was loth, it grieved her, it went to her very heart, she did not know how to bring herself to it, to put it on again. (3.) Nay, there was not only a lothness, but an aversion to it; the carnal and fleshly part in the believer is entirely averse, either to the exercise of grace, or to the discharge of duty, it lusteth against the spirit; though there's a willingness in the regenerate part thereunto, for he delights in the law of God, after the inward man; but the former seems to have the ascendant in the church here, which makes her say, How shall I, &c. I am averse unto it; (4.) It intimates as though she thought it unreasonable in him to desire it; seeing her clothes were off, and she was now in bed; for him to desire her to arise and open, and let him in, was, what she thought, an unreasonable request, and therefore says, How shall I put it on? i. e. How canst thou desire it of me? Though this which Christ call'd her to, and, indeed, had it been much more difficult than it was, was but her reasonable service. (5.) It supposes that she was apprehensive of danger by doing it; that it would be inconvenient and detrimental to her; break her rest, disturb her ease, and be prejudicial to her health; there being danger of it, as she imagined, by rising out of her bed, and putting on her clothes to let him in. Now arguments taken from, and formed upon such selfish principles, are much made use of by carnal reason, and are pleaded with a great deal of force and vehemency by it, against the observance of an ordinance or performance of a duty; 'twas upon this foot that those who were bidden to the wedding, excused themselves; 'twas against their worldly profit and pleasure to comply with the invitation; one had bought a piece of ground, another, five yoke of oxen, and a third had married a wife, and therefore they could not come; and in so doing, declared that they valued their worldly interest before the blessings of grace in Christ; as the church here in saying, How shall I put it on? shews, that she preferred her worldly ease to Christ's company, and that she sought more her own things, than the things which are Jesus Christ's. (6.) It may also signify, that she knew not how to do it, because of that shame and confusion which attended her on the account of her sins and transgressions against him; being conscious to herself of these things, she blushed and was ashamed, not knowing how to shew her face, and appear before him with any confidence, and therefore puts him off with these excuses; and so it is oftentimes with believers, who when they have fallen into sin, neglect their duty through shame, and so add sin to sin, as the church did here; and this sense the Targum gives of this part of the words after this manner; The congregation of Israel answered and said, before the prophets, Lo now I have removed from me the yoke of his precepts, and have served the idols of the people; and how can I have the face to return unto him? Though it makes the latter part of the text to be, not the words of the church, but of the Lord, who makes answer to her, and lets her know, that as he had removed his divine presence from her, because of her sins, how should he return to her again? Which other part of the words come now to be considered.

Secondly, She urges, that she had washed her feet; and therefore how could she defile them. Washing of feet was a custom much used in the Eastern countries, where they wore not shoes, but sandals, and therefore contracted a great deal of soil, especially in travelling, after which it was usual to wash them, which not only removed the filth from them, but much comforted and refreshed them; instances of this we have in Abraham and Lot, who desired that water might be brought to wash the feet of the angels, whom they thought to be men; also in Abraham's servant, in Joseph's brethren, and in Christ's washing the feet of his disciples, a little before his death. Now this is to be understood, not of the washing of regeneration, with which, no doubt, she was washed, being Christ's spouse and bride, as well as washed in his blood; for that is the work of the spirit of God, in the mighty operations of his grace upon her; but this appears to be something of her own doing, I have washed my feet, &c. nor is it meant of the purity of her outward conversation; though feet and walking, when applied to the saints, do, in a spiritual sense, intend this oftentimes; but it does not intend it here; for her outward conversation does not appear to be so clean and pure, and so becoming the gospel, and her profession of it, as it should be. But, i. It may be observed, that she had plucked off her shoes or sandals, which are the gospel, and a conversation agreeable to it, according to Eph. vi. 15. And your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. Now when the believer's feet are shod thus, i.e. when he holds the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience. then may it be said of him, as in Cb. vii. 1. How beautiful are thy feet with shoes, O prince's daughter : But now the church here had pluck'd off her's in order to wash her feet, that is, she was grown very careless about the doctrines of the gospel, and very negligent in keeping up a conversation answerable to them. 2. This phrase shews, that she was grown weary of spiritual exercises: So persons, when weary of work or travelling, used to wash their feet, and go to rest. She was grown weary of well doing, and was much like those in Mal. i. 13. who said, in regard to the performance of religious exercises, Behold, what a weariness is it ? and therefore washes her feet, lays aside an observance of ordinances and duties, and betakes herself to her carnal ease and rest, and being called from thence, she argues, I have washed my feet, How shall I defile them ? which intimates as before, a loathsomeness, an aversion to it, and as though she thought it unreasonable in him to desire it, and criminal in her to comply with it: Where observe her wretched mistake in imagining, that hearkening to and obeying Christ's commands, would be a defiling her; and it also shews us what poor, little, trifling excuses, persons in such a condition will make to keep themselves in their carnal ease and peace, in a state of slothfulness and inactivity; nay, these excuses of her's were not only idle and frivolous, as the putting on of her coat, and defiling her feet, but likewise, vile and sinful, as will appear from the following considerations. (1.) She had slighted the means which Christ had made use of to awake her; she had made them null and void, and of no effect; he had called to her by the ministry of the word, and had knocked in a providential way, and yet to no purpose; she withstands both his knocks and calls, which must needs be an aggravation of her sin. (2.) She sinned against light and knowledge; she knew it was the voice of her beloved that called unto her, and acknowledges it to be so; and yet she sleeps on, and makes these idle excuses, as she does, which must needs increase her guilt. (3.) She had invited him to come but a little before, as in Cb. iv. 16. Let my beloved come into his garden, accordingly he did come; and as soon as he was come, she falls asleep, and treats him after this base and disingenuous manner. (4.) She had purposely composed herself to sleep; it does not seem to have fallen upon her at an unawares; but she, as it were, sought it, and for this reason put off her coat, and washed her feet, that she might be the more fit for rest, and take it more easily. (5.) Yet she endeavours to shift the blame from off herself, as if she was no ways in the fault, but that the thing was either difficult and unreasonable, or else unlawful to be done; and therefore, she says, How shall I, &c. (6.) She appears in all this to be guilty of the greatest ingratitude; she fell into this sleepy and lazy frame, after a noble entertainment, and sumptuous feast that Christ had made for her; she continues herein, notwithstanding the most affectionate characters he gives her, and the most powerful arguments he uses with her; she sleeps on, though he lets her know, that his head was filled with dew, and his locks with the drops of the

the night : Though he had suffered and undergone so much on her account, yet, O vile ingratitude ! she's unwilling to be at the trouble of putting on a coat on his account, or to run the risque of defiling her feet for his sake. (7.) She also discovers the higheft folly, in that she prefers her present ease to Christ's company. Well, but how does Christ take this ? How can he bear to be affronted after this rate ? Does he not highly resent it ? Yes ; but this will farther appear in the consideration of the following verses.

Ver. 4. My beloved put in his hand by the hole of the door, and my bowels were moved for him.

THE church proceeds here to give an account of some further steps which Christ took, in order to awake her, and cause her to arise and open to him ; which, though they are instances of his grace unto her, yet manifestly shew how much he resented her unkindness and ingratitude to him : And she also takes notice what influence this carriage of his towards her, had upon her. In these words we have,

- I. The method which Christ took, in order to have entrance ; he put in his hand by the hole of the door.
- II. The effect it had upon her ; her bowels were moved for him.

I. The method which Christ took to let himself in. Seeing she was so loth and so unwilling to arise and open to him, he attempts it himself, not by breaking open the door, but by putting in his hand by the hole thereof, in order to remove the bolt or bar which kept him from entring in. Some read the words thus, My beloved put down his hand from the hole of the door, or lock, i. e. withdrew or removed his hand from thence ; he had put it in there for the aforesaid reason, but hearing such language from within, as in the preceding verse, I have put off my coat, &c. he desisted from his attempt, and went his way, resolving to chastise her for her base usage of him, by a departure from her ; which, when she understood, it threw her into that concern of mind, which appears in this verse, and also put her upon taking those methods to find him, which the following verses shew she did : But I shall consider the words according to our version of them, My beloved put in his hand by the hole of the door ; and then not to take any notice of the character which she gives him, My beloved, which has been often considered and explained : I shall enquire, 1st, What is meant by the door. 2<sup>dly</sup>, What, by the hole of the door. 3<sup>dly</sup>, What the hand of Christ signifies. 4<sup>thly</sup>, What the putting of it in is expressive of.

1st, It will be proper to enquire what is meant by the door. There are several things in scripture which bear this name, in a figurative and metaphorical sense, as Christ, the church, an occasion or opportunity of preaching the gospel, John x. 9. Cant. viii. 9. 1 Cor. xvi. 9, &c. none of which can be intended tended here. A Jewish writer thinks, that the firmament is here meant, and that God put forth his hand from thence, perhaps, either in a threatening way, or by inflicting some chastisement on the People of Israel, for their slothfulness and neglect of building the second temple; but by the door here, I apprehend, we are to understand, either the door of faith, of which we read, in Acts xiv. 27. And when they were come, i. e. Paul and Barnabas, to Antioch, and had gathered the church together, they rehearsed all that God had done with them, and how he had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles; which must be understood, either of the preaching of the Doctrine of Faith among them, or of the implantation of faith in them, and, perhaps, both are intended: All by nature, whether elect or non-elect, are shut and locked up fast in the prison of unbelief; and when God comes to convert a sinner, he opens the door of faith, and sets them at liberty; though sometimes this door of faith, even afterwards, is so closely shut up, as that there is only a little crevice, a small hole, through which a little love breaks forth from the soul to Christ, and a little light breaks in from Christ unto the soul; which seems to be the case of the church here, and is what Heman the Ezrabite complains of, in Psal. lxxviii. 8. when he says, I am shut up, and I cannot come forth. Or else, by the door, may be meant, the door of her heart, which was in a great measure shut against Christ, through weakness, and the prevailings of Corruptions in her; thus Lydia's heart is compared to a door, which was opened by the hand of powerful and efficacious grace; by the means of which, Christ with his large train of grace, were let in, of whom it is said, Psal. xxiv. 7, 8, 9, 10. Lift up your heads O ye gates, and be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors; which are not to be understood of the doors and gates of the temple, though, perhaps, there may be an allusion to them, but of souls which are of an everlasting make; and the king of glory shall come in; Who is this king of Glory? the Lord of Hosts, he is the King of glory; even the Lord Jesus Christ, who is the King of kings, and Lord of lords; who is glorious in his person, in his offices, and in his saints; and who demands an entrance into, takes possession of, and dwells by faith in the hearts of his people. The door then is either the door of faith, or the door of her heart; or if we put them both together, and say, 'tis faith in her heart here meant, I cannot see that it will be amiss. But,

2dly, What is meant by the hole of the door, is our next enquiry. The word door is not in the Hebrew text, therefore some interpret it the hole of the window or casement, others of the lock; but it seems rather to be of the door. This hole was either in the door, or hard by it, so R. Solomon Jarchi thinks; or else was between the two leaves or foldings of the door, according to R. Aben Ezra; but however, 'tis the mystical and spiritual sense which we are chiefly concerned about: And having interpreted the door, of her heart, or of faith in her heart; and there being but a small hole in this door, through which Christ put his hand, it lets us know that her heart was much narrowed and straitened; her faith was very low in its exercise on Christ, which sometimes is as an open door to receive him; but now was but as an hole, through through which but little light was let in from Christ, and but little love returned to him; her affections were chill and cold, which used to be enlarged with fervency unto him; her obedience to him was but very small, not attended with that chearfulness and spirit of liberty as heretofore; which seems to be the case of David, when he says, Psal. cxix. 32. I will run the ways of thy commandments, when thou shalt enlarge my heart; his heart was then narrowed, and he was shut up in his own soul; there were not that chearfulness and liberty, that warmth and zeal, that liveliness and sprightliness which he had sometimes experienced, in his obedience to the divine commands: And this, no doubt, was the church's case here; but there being a hole open, though, perhaps, but a small one, yet it shews, that her heart was not intirely closed and shut up; it cannot be said of her, that there were in her, no faith in Christ, no love to him, no fear of him; for grace once implanted, can never be lost; though it is not always in exercise, in motion, yet it is always in being: And herein lies the difference between a regenerate and an unregenerate man; the one has his heart entirely closed and shut up against Christ; there is not a crevice, a cranny open to Christ; but the other, though his heart may be much closed and shut up, yet there is always an entrance, though sometimes but a small one, for him: But, you will say, Why then does Christ say, in ver. 2. Open to me, my sister, my love, &c.? I answer, Because he found the entrance into her heart was not so wide, so open and so free, as it had heretofore been; and though he knew she was no more able to widen and enlarge her heart, and open it to him, than she was at first conversion; yet, to bring her under a conviction of her present state, he thus calls to her: No, this work is his alone; he alone can enlarge the heart, and make it wide enough for himself to enter in at; he has a key that can open this door, when he pleases, even the key of David, with which he openeth, and no man shutteth; and shutteth, and no man openeth. But I proceed, 3dly, To shew what is meant by the hand of Christ, which he puts in by the hole of this door: And this I take to be his mighty, powerful and efficacious grace; and so the word is used in Acts xi. 21. And the hand of the Lord was with them: And a great number believed and turned to the Lord. The reason why the ministry of the apostles was so much owned for the conversion of souls, was, because it was attended with the mighty and efficacious grace of Christ; it was the want of this Isaiah complained of, when he said, Isa. liii. 1. Who hath believed our report, and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed? If the ministry of any is made useful for the good of souls, 'tis because this arm is revealed, and this hand put forth; and the ministers of Christ are willing to ascribe it to that, and not to themselves; and can freely join with the apostle Paul, in saying, Not I, but the grace of God which was with me; and without this hand, all the means of Grace are ineffectual; but this can turn the key and open the door of any heart, though never so closely shut, and strongly barred and bolted against Christ; now the same mighty and efficacious grace is equally exerted and put forth in the awaking of a drowsy saint, reclaiming a backsliding professor, and quickening him to his duty, as in the conversion of a sinner, dead in trespasses and sins. Which brings me to consider,

4thly, What is meant by Christ's putting in his hand of mighty and efficacious grace, by the bole of the door. Now this intends the exertion and application of grace to the hearts of believers, which influence and quicken, support and maintain grace in them; this is an internal work, and differs from all the other methods which Christ took with her, and appears to be more powerful than any of them; he had called in the external ministry of the word, and knocked in a providential way, by inflicting some chastisement upon her; he had given her good words, expostulated with her, and used persuasive Arguments, and yet to no purpose; but now he puts in his hand of mighty grace, and the Work is done; which hand moves secretly and invisibly, and yet powerfully and irresistibly; for none can stay his hand, or say unto him, What dost thou? though it uses no force or compulsion, but works sweetly and kindly upon the heart; for how unwilling and loth soever the church was before, to arise and open to Christ, now she's intirely willing to do it, and that not through force or fear, but out of a real affection for him, and love to him. Christ, now, in putting in his hand, and thus powerfully and sweetly working upon her heart, shews, 1. The exceeding greatness of his love and grace unto her; that tho' she had treated him in so rude a manner, and discovered so much dissingenuity and ingratitude to him, which made him take up a resolution to depart from her, yet he would not leave her without giving some evidences of his love to her, without putting in his hand, and leaving some myrrh upon the lock, and sweet smelling myrrh on the handles thereof. 2. His faithfulness to her: Christ never wholly and entirely leaves his people; he has promised that he will not, and he is faithful to this promise; Christ may so withdraw himself from them, as that that they may not have sensible communion with him, but their union to him remains firm and indissoluble; they may think that he has totally and finally left them, when he has not, nor never will: He departs here from the church, but it was not a total departure; for he put in his hand by the bole of the door, and left something there, which stirred up her affections to him, and put her upon a diligent search and enquiry after him. 3. His power: What is it that the hand of Christ cannot do? What the external calls of the ministry, the knocks and raps of persecution, what good words and moving arguments could not do, that's done in a moment, by Christ's putting in his hand; she lay still before, and put him off with idle excuses; but now she arises and opens to him: Which leads me to consider,

II. The effect of this, or what influence this had upon her heart; her bowels, she says, were moved for him; which is expressive either,

First, Of that sorrow and grief which then possessed her heart: The word is used in Jer. iv. 19. Lam. i. 20. to express grief and sorrow; and indeed, it is no wonder that it should be so with her, when she began to be capable of revolving things in her mind, and comparing her carriage and his together, observing the baseness and dissingenuity there were in the one; and the exceeding greatness of love and tenderness in the other. The words have a double double reading in the Hebrew text; some copies read, my bowels were moved why in me, or for me; and this reading the Jewish commentators follow, particularly R. Sol. Jarchi; and so do Junius and Tremellius, the Tigurine version, and that of Pagnine's; other copies read, my bowels were moved why for him, which, by Mercer, is esteemed the best and most correct reading, and is followed by our, and other translators. If we read the words in the first way, they will afford us these two observations; 1. That her grief and sorrow was inward, and so real and sincere; her bowels moved within her; and such a sorrow as this, is what is required, regarded and approved of by God; Thou desirest truth in the inward parts, and in the hidden part thou wilt make me to know wisdom, says David, Psal. li. 6. For it is not a shedding of tears or rending of garments, but a heart broken under a sense of sin, and melted down with the discoveries of boundless love, that is an acceptable sacrifice with God through Christ. 2. That her own sin and unkindness to Christ, was the cause of all this; my bowels were moved for me, or concerning myself; for what I had done, and had been guilty of, I have none to blame but myself; I am the sole author of all this trouble to myself; my own sin and wickedness has brought all this upon me; O it pains me! it cuts me to the very heart, to think that I should use the best of husbands so unkindly, and treat him after so base a rate, as I have done!

But then, if we follow the second reading, it will lead us to make the remarks following, (1.) That sin, as committed against Christ, was the chief and principal cause of her trouble and sorrow; my bowels were moved for him, because I had sinned against him; had it been another, it would not have grieved me so much; but against thee, thee only have I sinned; which shows her repentance to be right, and her sorrow to be true and genuine. (2.) That the sufferings of Christ, occasioned by her sins and transgressions, influenced her sorrow; my bowels were moved for him, it grieves me, I am pained at the very heart to think that my beloved's head should be wet with dew, and his locks with the drops of the night, through me; that he should suffer so much upon my account, and for my sake. Now when repentance springs from faith's viewing a crucified and suffering Christ, it appears to be evangelical; see Zech. xii. 10. (3.) That her frustrating the means which Christ made use of, added to her grief: Did my beloved call and knock, and call again? And did I know that it was the voice of my beloved? Did he give me good words, expostulate and argue with me, in the most moving and tender manner? And yet, vile and ungrateful wretch that I am, Did I lie still, and not move to open and let him in? Could he get nothing from me but mere shifts and evasions? O how does the consideration of all this overwhelm me with grief and sorrow? (4.) That the loss of his company was also an ingredient herein; for as Christ's company and presence fill the believer with the greatest joy, so his absence and departure from him, give him the greatest uneasiness; Thou didst bide thy face, says David, Psal. xxx. 7. and I was troubled; so here, her bowels moved, her soul was grieved, not only for what she had done unto him, but also for the loss of him.

him. Or else, these words, my bowels were moved for him, are expressive,

Secondly, Of the moving and stirring of her affections to him, in which sense the word is used in Isa. lxiii. 15. Philem. ver. 12. for though her affections had been chill, and her love to Christ cold, yet they were not lost; Christ's putting in his hand, stirred up the coals of love, which many waters cannot quench; so that they began to kindle and appear in flames; for not only the grace was in her heart, but in exercise, in motion there, my bowels moved, &c. so that she could say, after all her sleepiness, slothfulness, negligence in duty, and base carriage towards Christ, as Peter, after his backslidings, Lord, thou knowest all things, thou knowest that I love thee: This love of hers was real, hearty and sincere; it was not the moving of her lips or tongue, but of her bowels within her; she loved not in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth; and this her actions testify, which are recorded in the following verses.

Ver. 5, I rose up to open to my beloved, and my hands dropped with myrrh, and my fingers with sweet smelling myrrh, upon the handles of the lock.

IN these words the church gives an account of a second and a third effect of Christ's putting in his hand by the hole of the door.

I. She rose to open to him.

II. Having done so, she laid hold on the handles of the lock, in order to draw it back; and before she proceeds to take notice of any other steps she took, with the success thereof, she stops to give an account of a sweet piece of experience she met with, when she put her hands upon the handles of the lock; My hands, says she, dropped with myrrh, and my fingers with sweet smelling myrrh.

I. She says, that she rose to open to her beloved. This is opposed to her former slothfulness and sleepiness; before she lay still and slept on, notwithstanding Christ's calls and knocks, his melting words and moving language; but now being touched by his hand of mighty and powerful grace, she shakes off her sluggishness, and arises to open to him, which is more than a mere resolution to do it; such an one as she made in Cb. iii. 2. and the prodigal in Luke xv. 18. Now these resolutions were made in the strength of grace; and being assisted by divine grace to perform them, were quickly put in execution; though otherwise resolutions made in our own strength, are seldom or never made good: But this was more than a mere resolution, it was an actual performance of it; not but that she resolved, no doubt, in her mind to do it before she did it; but the dispatch was so quick, and there being so little time between the making, and the execution of it, that she had neither leisure nor room to record it; I rose to open to my beloved; which act of hers shews, 1. That her design and intention to open to Christ, was real and hearty: Had she lay upon her bed, and made ever such fair promises that she would arise and open to him, and yet have kept her bed and slept on, there would have been but very little proof that she really and heartily designed it; but her rising in order to it, is a full indication of it; even as Abraham's rising up early, saddling his ass, his taking his own and only son Isaac with him, and going to the place which the Lord directed him to; his putting the knife and stretching out his hand to slay his son, manifestly shewed, that he really intended to obey the divine command, though so disagreeable to flesh and blood. 2. That her concern at her base and unbecoming carriage to him was sincere and unfeigned; the effects shew that her sorrow was of a godly sort, seeing it wrought in her carefulness to obey his will, zeal for his honour and glory, fear and reverence of his person, a vehement desire after the enjoyment of his presence and company, and an indignation at her own sin and folly; see 2 Cor. vii. 10, 11. Her repentance appears to be true and genuine, because it brought forth fruits meet for it. 3. That she did not stay to confer with flesh and blood, but immediately arose, as soon as touched by the hand of mighty grace; had she done so, she would have argued thus with herself; yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep, and then I will arise and open to him; no, for though she put him off before with idle excuses, having consulted her own carnal ease, yet now, being under the influence of powerful grace, she cannot defer it any longer, but without delay, rises to open to him. 4. That when a soul, in such a case as her's, is made sensible of it, it cannot rest easy upon a bed of carnal security; it may, with David, for a time be senseless, stupid and unconcerned; and with Jonah, lie fast asleep, in the sides of the ship, careless, thoughtless and unconcerned; yet when awaked from hence, anguish and distress seize it, and it cannot be easy without some returning visits of love, some views of Christ's person, and some enjoyment of his presence; and therefore will arise and go out in quest of him. And now no difficulties discourage such a soul, as none did the church; when she was upon her bed of ease, every little thing was difficult to her; her language was that of the sluggard's, There is a lion in the way, a lion is in the streets; it was then a trouble to her to put on her coat, and an intolerable hardship to defile her feet; but now neither the one nor the other hinder her, but she rises, opens, and ventures herself alone in the streets, runs among the watchmen of the city, and keepers of the walls, and from thence to the daughters of Jerusalem, to enquire of her beloved. 5. It also supposes, that she thought Christ still at the door; though no sooner had he put in his hand, but he was gone, being willing to let her know, though he loved her, yet he resented her carriage to him: And here we may observe, that God's children may be mistaken sometimes, about the presence of Christ; sometimes he is present with them, and they know it not, as Jacob said, Gen. xxviii. 16. Surely the Lord is in this place, and I knew it not; and at other times, when they are got into such careless, secure and unconcerned frames of soul, like Sampson, the Lord is departed from from them, and they wist not, i. e. know not that the Lord is departed from them. 6. This shews the power of mighty and efficacious grace, and that she was under the influence of it; though, perhaps, the spirit was willing before, yet the flesh was weak; though she might have a will to open to Christ, yet how to perform it she knew not; though, indeed, her will seemed to be very indifferent about it; there appeared a lothness in her, and a kind of unwillingness to it; but now she is made both able and willing in the day of his power, to arise and open to him.

II. Having rose to open to Christ, she puts her hand upon the handles of the lock, to draw it back, and let him in; which, in order, is the third effect of Christ's putting in his hand by the hole of the door. Now though this is not in so many words express'd in the text, yet it is manifestly implied; for 'if her hands dropped with myrrh, and her fingers with sweet smelling myrrh upon the handles of the lock, it then supposes, that her hands and fingers must first lay hold upon the lock-handles, which was also absolutely necessary to do, in order to open the door. It will be proper here to consider, 1st, What we are to understand by the lock, and the handles of it. 2dly, What by her hands and fingers, which laid hold on these handles, to draw back the lock, and in what sense they might do it.

1st, It is needful to enquire what may be meant by the lock, and the handles of it: and as by the door, I suppose is meant the heart of a believer, so by the lock, which fastens and keeps this door shut, may be meant unbelief; by which, as all by nature are locked and shut up, in the state they are in, so believers, sometimes by it, are so straitned, confined and shut up in their souls, that they cannot come forth in the free exercise of faith, in which they are at other times found: And the handles of this lock may be lukewarmness and indifference of soul, with regard to duty, a sluggishness and lothness to come to it, which oftentimes bring the soul, at last, to a neglect of it; for first, persons grow indifferent about the performance of duties, or attendance on ordinances, do not care whether they perform them, or attend on them or no; then they begin to be slotful in business, not serving the Lord with that fervency of spirit which they have heretofore done; and at last, wholly neglect them, which brings them into a carnal, secure and unconcerned frame of spirit; and all this strengthens unbelief, and keeps the door the closer shut against Christ; which seems to have been the case of the church here, and of that of Laodicea, in Rev. iii. when Christ stood at her door and knocked.

2dly, By her hands and fingers may be meant her faith in its exercise and operation, attended with the fruits thereof. Faith is usually represented in scripture, as the hand of the soul, by which it receives Christ, as the Father's free gift; embraces him as the only Saviour, lays hold upon and retains him, as he stands in all the endearing characters and relations, which he appears in to his own people. Now this faith is not idle and inactive, but works by love to Christ and his people, to his ways and ordinances; it has its fruits, and is attended with the performance of good works, and will put the person that is possessed of it, on the discharge of his duty; it put the church here upon attempting to draw back the lock of unbelief; faith laid its hand and fingers upon the handles of it, and used all its might, power and and diligence to do it: But it may be asked, How could the church be able, with all her faith, industry and diligence to draw back this lock? I answer, Faith cannot do this of itself; unbelief is a sin which easily besets us, but it is not so easily got rid of; it is a weight, that the hand of faith, of itself, cannot lift and lay aside; the believer must say, even in the exercise of faith, with the poor man in the gospel, Mark ix. 24. Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief; this lock goes too hard for faith to draw it back of itself; but yet faith's looking to, and dealing with Christ's person, blood and righteousness, much weakens unbelief: When an unbelieving Thomas was indulged with a sight of Christ's pierced hands and feet, and was enabled to thrust his hand into his side, his unbelief immediately vanished and disappeared; and he could say, My Lord and my God: It is certain, that the stronger faith grows, lukewarmness, indolence, and carnal security decay, and the soul is quickened, stirred up, and put upon the performance of duty; and what is it that a soul is not enabled to do in the exercise of faith? difficulties which are insuperable to carnal sense and reason, are got over by faith; read over the eleventh chapter of the epistle to the Hebrews, and you will see what heroic acts have been performed by faith; though the strength in which these things have been performed, did not arise from the grace itself, but from Christ, the object of it, whose strength is made perfect in faith's weakness; for without him we can do nothing, but his grace is sufficient to enable us to do all things.

Now before she proceeds to tell how she succeeded in this attempt, she gives an account of a piece of sweet experience she met with, whilst she was trying to draw back the lock; my hands, says she, dropped with myrrh, and my fingers with sweet smelling myrrh upon the handles of the lock: By myrrh is meant grace in its boundings and overflowings; but it may be enquired, from whence this myrrh came, and by whom it was brought; if we understand it of the church's myrrh or grace as brought here by herself, as some think <sup>a</sup>, who may be represented as taking up a pot of myrrh, intending with it to anoint and refresh his head, which was wet with dew, which she either unawares or else designedly broke; or else, being in a panick fear, her hands shook, and the myrrh run over her hands and fingers; or rather, not having time to perfume her garments with it, as was usual, see Psal. xlv. 8. she dipped her fingers in a pot of myrrh, to ingratiate and render self acceptable to her beloved; supposing that he might be full of resentment on the account of her carriage and behaviour towards him: And then taking it in this sense, it will teach us these things following, 1. That her grace was now in exercise; it was flowing; this oil of myrrh before was, as it were, congealed and frozen up; but now it's become liquid, it is upon the flow, and flows in such abundance, that it ran off her hands and fingers upon the handles of the lock. 2. Her hands and fingers dropping with it, shew that these actions and good works of hers, intended by her hands and fingers, being performed in faith, were odorous and grateful to Christ: So the prayers of the saints are called odours, in Rev. v. 8. and some mean and small services of the Philippians, are called an odour of a sweet smell, Phil. iv. 18. 3. That when grace is in exercise,

duty is both easy and pleasant; Christ's commands then are not grievous, but his ways are ways of pleasantness, and his paths, paths of peace. Before, nothing more unpleasant than to arise and open to him, but now, nothing more easy and delightful, her hands drop with myrrh, &c. But I rather think, that the myrrh or grace of Christ is here meant, which was brought and left here by him; when he put in his hand by the hole of the door, he then put in this myrrh, and left it in the lock hole; which she found in such abundance when she came to open, that her hands and fingers dropped with it: taking the words in this sense, we may observe that it is called so, (1.) For the preciousness of it: Myrrh is a precious spice, and one of the principal spices; and this in the text is the best of myrrh. The word translated sweet smelling myrrh, signifies passing or current myrrh<sup>b</sup>; it being vendible or saleable, not in the least damaged, but what will pass, and so is in the same sense current, as money is said to be, Gen. xxiii. 16. Or else, it is called passing myrrh, because it diffuses its odour on every side; so R. Sol. Jarchi thinks: Or rather, because it is that myrrh which bleeds or weeps, or drops from the tree of itself, which is always esteemed the best myrrh: And this sets forth the exceeding preciousness of Christ's grace, which is more valuable than all things else. (2.) It sets forth the abundance of it: If there was such an abundance of it brought by Christ, and left in the lock hole, so that it ran in such plenty over her hands and fingers, as to drop from thence; What an abundance? What an overflow of it must there be in himself, who is full of grace and truth? If there is a superabounding of grace in those, in whom sin has abounded; What an overflowing fulness of it must there be in him, in whom is no sin, and who is the fountain from whence all grace flows, and is communicated to his people? (3.) It is expressive of the odorousness of it: There is such a sweet savour in the grace of Christ, as it is in himself, that the love of the virgins is drawn forth to him by it; and it emits so fragrant an odour, as it is in believers, that Christ himself is delighted with it; see Cant. i. 3. and iv. 10.

Moreover, seeing it appears that this myrrh was brought unto, and left in the lock hole, by Christ, it may be asked for what purpose it was brought and left there? which was [1.] To draw and allure her heart unto him. The same grace that draws a soul to Christ at first conversion, draws it to him when it has declined and backslidden from him: Christ uses the same methods, and puts forth the same grace at one time as at the other; he draws with the cords of love, and bands of a man. [2.] To supple and soften her hard heart, and make this rusty lock go easy: This oil of myrrh being left there, removed the hardness of her heart, the stiffness of her will, and the rustiness of her affections; this melted her hard heart, made her stubborn will pliable, set her affections on the flow, her faith in exercise, and made the lock of unbelief draw back more easy. [3.] To excite and stir up her grace: 'Tis Christ's grace manifested and applied unto us, that excites ours; 'tis his love shed abroad in our hearts by his spirit, that raises ours; for we love him because he first loved us. Now all these ends were answered hereby; it was this grace, this myrrh left in the handles of the lock, that fetched her off of her bed, that softened softened the hardness of her heart, and affections to him, that removed the bars and bolts that kept him out, and drew forth her grace into exercise.

Again, the church's hands and fingers being said to drop with myrrh, which Christ had put into the lock hole, shews, 1. That all the grace, all the myrrh that a believer has, comes from Christ; 'tis from his fulness we receive grace for grace, i. e. all sorts of grace. 2. That a believer has most reason to expect a larger measure of grace from Christ, when he is in the way of his duty; whilst the church was sluggish and slothful, negligent of her duty, and taking her ease upon a bed of security, there's no mention of the flowings of this myrrh into her or upon her; but now she is up and in the way of her duty, her hands drop with myrrh, and her fingers with sweet smelling myrrh: Not that our duties are deserving of any thing at Christ's hands, much less such large measures and overflowings of grace as these; yet Christ has been graciously pleased for an encouragement, to grant the promise of his presence, and the communications of his grace to us, when found in the way of our duty, though not for the performance of it. How the church succeeded in this attempt of her's, in opening the door, may be seen in the following words.

Ver. 6. I opened to my beloved, but my beloved had withdrawn himself and was gone: My soul failed when he spake: I sought him, but I could not find him: I called him, but he gave me no answer.

IN these words are,

- I. A fourth and last effect of Christ's putting in his hand by the hole of the door; she opened to him.
- II. The wretched disappointment she met with; he had withdrawn himself and was gone.
- III. What effect this disappointment had upon her; her soul failed when he spake.
- IV. Her endeavours to find her lost spouse.

I. Here is a fourth and last effect of Christ's putting in his hand by the hole of the door, which is the exertion of his mighty and efficacious grace, I opened to my beloved. This was what her beloved desired of her, and called for in ver. 2. and which was his principal end in exerting the power of his grace. Now this opening to him is to be understood of the exercise of her faith, by which her heart was enlarged and dilated to receive Christ; faith is the eye, the ear, the mouth and hand of the soul; faith's eye being opened, sees the beauties and glories of Christ's person, and spies wondrous things in his gospel; its ear being open to discipline, listens to what Christ says in his promises and commands, and takes in the comfort of the one, and carefully observes the other; its mouth being opened, speaks of the promises of Christ, the glory of his person, office and undertakings; and its hand being opened receives and embraces him, opens the door, and lets him in. From this act of the church, in opening to her beloved, may be observed, 1. That Christ had not only wrought in her a will, but had also given her a power to open to him; once she seem'd to have but little inclination; her will did not seem so very free, being overpowered with sleep and sloth; and if her spirit was willing, yet it appears manifest that the flesh was weak; if she had a will to open, how to do it, she knew not; but now, as by her rising off her bed, coming to the door, and putting her hands and fingers upon the handles of the lock, in order to draw it back, she shew'd that Christ had wrought in her to will, so by her actual opening to him, she made it appear that he had also wrought in her to do, of his good pleasure. 2. That she being assisted in this act, by the mighty grace of Christ, is said to do that which is sometimes ascribed to God himself: Thus in Acts xvi. 14. the Lord is said to open the heart of Lydia. 'Tis true, there is a great difference between the opening of a sinner's heart at conversion, which is entirely shut against Christ, and the opening of a believer's, which is, in part, only shut and closed through unbelief, negligence and carnal security; in the one, there were no principles of grace, previous to the opening of it; but in the other there are, though they lie dormant, and are not in exercise; but yet a believer, without the grace and power of Christ, can no more open his heart to him, when in such a case, than he could at first conversion: This work is attended with difficulties insuperable, without the strength of Christ; therefore whilst on her bed, she thought it impossible for her to do it, and unreasonable in him to desire it, till he put in his hand, and left such an abundance of the sweet smelling myrrh of his grace, by which being assisted, she is said to do it. 3. That the heart of a believer is only patent and open to the Lord Jesus Christ, I opened to my beloved; though it is sometimes in a great measure closed and shut unto him; yet when it is opened, it is only opened to him; he is the only object of a believer's faith and love: The church here did not open to strangers, only to her beloved, being espoused as a chaste virgin to him; therefore, in Cb. iv. 12. she is said to be a garden enclosed, a spring shut up, a fountain sealed. 4. Her opening to Christ, supposes that she thought Christ still at the door; so she did when she got off her bed to open to him, and so she did when she put her hands upon the handles of the lock; and, perhaps, was more confirmed in her thoughts, that he was still there, when she found such an abundance of his sweet swelling myrrh in the lock, and upon the handles of it; but she was very much mistaken, as she afterwards found; For,

II. Her beloved had withdrawn himself and was gone; a very great disappointment indeed! she expected, that as soon as ever the door was open, she should have seen him, and that he would have received her in his arms, and embraced her in his bosom; but instead of that, he was gone, and she could neither have any sight, or hear any tidings of him. Here it may be enquired, 1st, What is meant by Christ's withdrawing himself from his church and people? 2<sup>dly</sup>, Why he did now withdraw himself from the church? And, 3<sup>dly</sup>, Why she makes use of two words to express his departure from her, and what they import?

1st, It may be enquired what is meant by Christ's withdrawing himself from his church and people? And, 1. It is not to be understood of him as the omnipresent God, who is every where, and fills heaven and earth with his presence; for as there's no fleeing from it, so there's no withdrawing of it, as David says, Psal. cxxxix. 7. Whither shall I go from thy spirit? or whither shall I fly from thy presence? There is no place exempted from it, nor can be; he does not move from place to place, or from person to person, nor is he sometimes with a person, and sometimes not; for if so, he would not be the omnipresent God. Nor, 2. Is it to be understood of the dissolution of a believer's covenant-interest in Christ and union to him. A believer may lose sight of Christ for a time, but he can never lose his interest in him; the relation between them can never cease; the marriage knot can never be untied, nor the union-bands be ever broken; for Christ has said, Hos. ii. 19. I will betroth thee unto me for ever. The union between Christ and believers, is, in some measure, like to that between the Father and the Son; and I'll venture to say, that the one may as soon be dissolved as the other; see John xvii. 21, 23. Nor, 3. Is it to be understood of a withdrawing of his love and affection from them; for though they may sometimes think he has, yet he never does, nor never will withdraw it; his love to them is as unchangeable as himself; it is the same yesterday, to day, and for ever; for having loved his own, which were in the world, he loved them to the end; he has given his word, that though he, for a small moment, forsakes them; yet, with everlasting kindness will he have mercy on them; and as if this was not enough, he joins his oath to it, and swears, that he would not be wroth with them, nor rebuke them; and declares, that his kindness and his covenant are as immoveable as, nay, more than mountains and hills; which, one would think, is enough to banish all doubts and fears from believers, and fill them with as firm a persuasion as the apostle Paul was possessed of, when he says, I am persuaded, that neither life nor death, &c. shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. But, 4. It is to be understood of the withdrawing of the sensible manifestations of his presence and love: And this is what the church has experienced in all ages; for he is a God that hideth his face from the house of Jacob; and what particular believers have met with, as is manifest from David, Heman, and others. And this was what the church wanted, even some sensible enjoyments of Christ's presence and grace; she had his strengthening and supporting presence, which enabled her to arise and open; but she wanted his comforting and soul-rejoicing presence, and sensible communion with him: Christ's love is always the same, but the sense of it in believers, is variable; the one is sometimes withdrawn, the other never.

2<sup>dly</sup>, It may seem a little strange, and almost unaccountable, that Christ, at this instant, should withdraw himself from his church, seeing he had so importunately desired her to arise and open to him; had used all methods to win upon her, and by his grace had enabled her to do it; and yet now it is done, he withdraws himself and is gone; and therefore it is proper to enquire why he should do so, which was, perhaps, 1. To chastise her for her former carriage to him: Had he, as soon as she had opened the door, shewn himself to her, and received her with all tokens of love and joy, she would not have thought the offence so great, or that he was so much provoked by it, and did so highly resent it as he did; therefore to bring her to a sense of it, and to correct her for it, by suffering the loss of his company, he withdraws himself. 2. To try the truth and strength of her grace: Her grace was now in exercise, as appears by her rising and opening; and now, the more to exercise it, and prove the strength of it, he withdraws himself. Thus all our afflictions, temptations and desertions, are for the trial of our faith, and other graces, which being tried, appear much more precious than of gold that perisheth. 3. To enflame her love and sharpen her desires the more after him; which effect his withdrawing from her, in Ch. iii. 1, 2, 3. had upon her; and so it had here: many such instances we have in Job, David, and others; who being without the presence of God, have the more earnestly wished for, vehemently thirsted, panted and breathed after a re-injoyment of it; see Job xxiii. 2. Psal. xlii. 1, 2. and lxiii. 1. and it is usually so, that the want of a blessing, not only brings us under a conviction of the worth of it, and so draws out our affections to it, but also enlarges and encreases our desires after it. 4. To endear his presence the more to her, when she came to enjoy it: When a soul has been destitute of Christ's presence for a time, and comes to enjoy it again, O how sweet, ravishing and delightful is it to him! and how much is it valued by him! The disciples were without Christ's bodily presence but a few days, and when he appeared to them, we are told, John xx. 20. that then were the disciples glad, when they saw the Lord; and what expressions of joy and intimations of esteem for Christ's presence, does the church give, in Ch. iii. 4. when she had found her lost spouse? 5. To keep her humble: Had she immediately enjoyed his presence upon her rising and opening to him, she might have thought, that she had, by those actions of hers, deserved such a favour at his hands; therefore to hide pride from her, and to let her know the nothingness of all her doings, and that they fell abundantly short of meriting such a blessing, he withdraws himself. Our enjoyment of Christ's presence, and the communications of his love and grace to us, as much depend on his free and sovereign will, as the first display of his grace to us; he gives these favours at pleasure, and that to whom, when, and where he pleases. 6. To shew her the odious nature of sin, which was the cause of this; and that she might, through grace, be more upon her guard against it, and be more cautious of provoking him to it again. It was sin that was the cause of the angels being turned out of heaven, the place of the divine abode, and of Adam's being drove out of Eden, from the presence of the Lord God; and though sin cannot dissolve the union that is between Christ and a believer, nor destroy his covenant-interest in him, yet it is often the cause of God's hiding his face, and Christ's withdrawing his presence from him; Your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, says the prophet Isaiab, Ch. lix. 2. to the people of Israel; and it was the church's unbecoming carriage to Christ, which was the cause of his withdrawing from her now; and therefore to bring her to a sense of it, and to see the odious nature thereof, he withdraws himself; that when she enjoy'd it again, she might might be more careful not to provoke him again by such steps as these; and such an effect it had upon her, in Cb. iii. 4, 5. where she not only held him fast herself, and would not let him go; but also charges the daughters of Jerusalem to give him no molestation or disturbance.

3dly, The church makes use of two words here to express Christ's departure from her, My beloved had withdrawn himself, and was gone; which signify and import, 1. That this was done suddenly and secretly, unseen, at an unawares to her, and unexpected by her; so the word translated, had withdrawn himself<sup>e</sup> signifies a doing it secretly; <sup>d</sup> he turned himself about, and was gone in a moment; he withdrew himself privately from the door, and passed by the window and was gone, so that she could not set eyes upon him, nor hear any tidings of him. 2. That he was gone at a very great distance in her apprehensions; so believers think sometimes, when Christ has withdrawn himself from them, that he is gone a great way off, is not within call, and will never return more; see Psal. x. 1. and this is thought by some, to be the import of the first word; and the other being added to it heightens the sense. 3. That he was really gone: It was not a meer imagination of her's; but it was certainly so, which she found to her great grief and sorrow. 4. The doubling of the words, or her using those two words without a copulative, he had withdrawn himself, was gone, which she seems to speak in the utmost haste and confusion, represent the strength of her passion, the greatness of her sorrow, what a wretched disappointment she met with; and as if she was wringing her hands, and crying out, He's gone, he's gone, he's gone. Which brings us to consider,

III. What effect this disappointment had upon her; My soul, says she, failed me when he spake, or went out of me. I was as one dead, I immediately fell into a swoon, and was as one whose life and soul departed. <sup>f</sup> Some think that the church in these words excuses herself from the blame of not rising and opening to him sooner; as if she should say, I am not so much to be blamed, nor has my beloved so much reason to be provoked at, or so highly to resent my not rising and opening sooner; for as soon as ever I heard his voice, saying, Open to me, my sister, my love, my dove, &c. it overcame my heart, my soul failed at these words of his; I immediately fell into a swoon, and lay as one lifeless and helpless, and was not able to arise and open to him; but as soon as ever I came to my senses and was recovered a little out of this fit, I arose and opened to him: but it does not appear from the context, that she did fall into such a fit at his calling to her, or was rendered non compos mentis; for she was capable all the while of observing all his words and ways; how he carried himself to her, and proceeded with her; what steps he took, and methods he used, till he had brought her to arise and open. Therefore the words seem rather to be expressive of that confusion of mind she was thrown into, when she found he was gone; even

as it is said of the queen of Sheba, that there was no more spirit in her, occasioned through wonder and surprize in beholding Solomon's wisdom, and the order and management of his house and servants, so that she knew not what to think or what to say: So the church here being surprized at Christ's absence, her soul fails her, no spirit is left in her; she knew not what to think, say, or do: or else they are expressive of the exceeding grief and sorrow that she was overwhelmed with; My soul failed when he spake, or at his word, i. e. at the remembrance of it; O now I call to mind how lovingly, kindly and tenderly he spoke to me, when he said, Open to me, my sister, my love, &c. yet vile, ungrateful wretch, as I am, I took no notice of it, I put him off with idle excuses, I kept my bed and indulged my self in sloth and ease; but now it cuts me to the heart, it grieves me, I cannot bear up under it; when I remember his love, and my unkindness, I sink, I faint, I die; I cannot live without his presence, his absence is death unto me; my soul fails at his words of love, and grace which he spoke to me, and at his word of command, which he enjoined me, to which, being disobedient, I have now lost his company, which is intolerable to me. She seems to be much in the same case that the Psalmist was, when he said, Psal. cxliii. 7. Hear me speedily, O Lord, my spirit faileth: Hide not thy face from me, lest I be like unto them that go down into the pit.

IV. Being somewhat recovered out of her fainting fit, she rallied together all the spirit and strength she had, and out she goes in search of her lost spouse; the methods she took, and how she succeeded therein, are as follow;

1st, She sought him, viz. in the publick ordinances, in the streets and broad ways of the city, as she had done before, in Cb. iii. 2. and that with the same success; she sought him, but found him not. The nature of seeking a lost Christ, and how to be perform'd, as also why the church succeeded no better, have been there shewn, which will equally serve to explain and illustrate this,

2<sup>dly</sup>, She called him, viz. by name, as she went along the streets and broad ways, i. e. she pray'd unto him, that he would manifest himself to her in his own ordinances; and no doubt but the method she took was right, and may serve to instruct us, that we should not only, before we attend upon an ordinance, pray for the presence of Christ in it; but also, when we are attending, our souls should be breathing after, and secretly begging for it: But, how did she succeed herein? she called him, but he gave her no answer; resolving still to chastise her for her former ingratitude, to try her faith, and exercise her patience, to enflame her love to him, and encrease her desires after communion with him. But, 1. This seems contrary to those kind promises, Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find, &c. Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will deliver thee, &c. but she asked, and it was not given to her what she asked for; she sought, but found not; she called, but no answer is returned: to which it may be replied, that God does, and certainly will make good his own promises, and fulfil the petitions of his people; yet he does not always answer immediately, or just in that way which they are desirous of: The church had his upholding presence, though not sensible communion with him; she was so far answered, as to be strengthened with strength in her soul, to continue in her search and enquiries after him, though she had not those manifestations of his grace and love, which she was desirous of. 2. It is a very great affliction to a believer, when he labours under such apprehensions, that his prayers are not heard and answered: The church mentions this among her sore afflictions, in Lam. iii. 8, 44. that God had shut out her prayer, and had covered himself with a cloud, that her prayer should not pass through. Unconverted men, hypocrites and carnal professors, are not concerned about the answer of their prayers; it is enough to them to perform these duties; but believers are concerned about the returns of prayer, and are grieved to the heart, as the church here was, when they cannot observe any. 3. Christ here treats her just in the same way, in which she had treated him; she is paid in her own coin; he had called to her, but she disregarded him, and turned a deaf ear to him, and returned him no answer, that deserved the name of one; she now calls to him, but he disregards her, turns a deaf ear to her, and gives her no answer; he treats her here, not in a way of vindictive wrath and punishment, as he will do the wicked, at the last day; see Prov. i. 24—28. but in a way of chastisement and correction. What success she afterwards met with, will be seen in the following verses.

Ver. 7. The watchmen that went about the city, found me; they smote me, they wounded me, the keepers of the walls took away my veil from me.

THE church in the former verse gives an account of the wretched disappointment she met with, when she opened the door to her beloved, who had withdrawn himself and was gone, at which she fell into a fainting fit, out of which, when she was a little recovered, she resolved not to stay at the door, lamenting the loss of her spouse, but to go out in search of him, which she did, but with no success; and she does in these words give an account of what she met with in the adventure; how she was took up by the watch, and evilly treated by them: Where we have to consider,

I. Her being found by the watchmen that went about the city, and keepers of the walls.

II. Their treatment of her, and carriage to her.

I. In this search of her beloved, she falls into the hands of the watchmen that went about the city, and the keepers of the walls thereof; who were officers of the church, set for the defence it, and for the administration of those ordinances, in which she sought her beloved; and the description of them, or these titles and characters which they bear, may lead us to observe,

1st, That the church is a city; and, no doubt, is called so in allusion to the city of Jerusalem, which was builded as a city, that is compact together; it was the metropolis of the land of Judea, where Solomon kept his court, was well fortified, and delightfully situated; and therefore the church militant, as well as the church triumphant, is called by the same name, which is the city of God, of which the psalmist says, Psal. lxxxvii. 3. Glorious things are spoken; it is the place of the residence of the King of kings, where his honour dwells, where he keeps his court, and has his palace, and therefore is called the city of the great King, in whose palaces God is known for a refuge; here he shews himself, here he may be seen; therefore she was in the right of it to seek him here. In this city are all needful and delightful accommodations; it is beautiful for situation, a river of boundless love and grace runs through it, whose streams supply, refresh and make glad the inhabitants of it; here are the best provisions to be had, which are called the goodness and faithfulness of God's house; here are the most delightful company, and agreeable conversation; here souls have fellowship with the Father, and with his son Jesus Christ; those who are brought unto, and are made inhabitants of this city of the living God, have communion with an innumerable company of angels, and spirits of just men made perfect, by Christ's righteousness: In this city are many special and peculiar privileges and immunities, which the inhabitants of it enjoy; for being Christ's freemen, and freemen of this city, they have a right to all the ordinances of the gospel, and share in all the promises which concern the grace and presence of Christ; they are under no obligation to any other laws but those of Christ's, and are freed from the curses and condemnation of the law of works; so that to be a citizen of this city, and a fellow citizen of the saints, is no small privilege; see Eph. ii. 19. Rev. iii. 12. but of the church's being compared to a city, see more on Ch. iii. 2.

2dly, Mention being made of the keepers of the walls of this city, shews us, that this city of God is a walled one, it is a fortified place, even as Jerusalem was, to which the allusion is made, when the church of God is spoken of, as in Psal. li. 18. and cxxii. 7. and it may be proper to enquire what are the walls of the church, which render it strong and impregnable. And, 1. God himself is the wall of it, according to what he himself says, Zeck. ii. 5. For I, saith the Lord, will be a wall of fire round about, and will be the glory in the midst of her; he is not only a wall that keeps the enemy from entrance into the city, but a wall of fire, that consumes and destroys all that make near approaches to it; all the divine perfections are as so many walls, which encompass and defend the church, especially that of Almighty power, by which saints are kept <sup>a</sup> as in a garrison, through faith unto salvation. Jerusalem was fortified, not only by art, but also by nature, not only with walls but with mountains; and as the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people, from henceforth, even for ever, Psal. cxxv. 2. 2. Salvation by Christ is the church's walls, which render it strong and impregnable: Hence we read, in Isa. xxvi. 1. In that day, i. e. in the gospel-day, when salvation is accomplished by Christ, shall this song be sung in the land of Judah: We have a strong city; But what is it which makes it so? salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks: And this song will be sung more clearly in the latter day, when the church shall call her walls, salvation, and and her gates, praise. Salvation wrought out by Christ, is the church's protection from all enemies; hereby believers are screened and secured from sin and satan, law, hell, and wrath to come; no enemy can destroy them, no condemnation reach them, nor any wrath fall on them; but they shall be saved in the Lord, with an everlasting salvation. 3. Ministers may be called so who are set for the defence of the gospel: So the Lord told Jeremiah, Ch. i. 18. That he had made him a defended city, an iron pillar, and brazen walls against the whole land: Though they seem not to be intended here, because they are called the keepers of the walls, and not the walls themselves. Now the city of God being thus walled and fortified, shews, (1.) That it would otherwise be in danger from enemies; for the church of Christ has many enemies, who are lively and strong, crafty and cunning, vigilant and active, seeking all opportunities to get within, and there make disturbance and do mischief; but this city is so well walled and firmly built, that let satan, with all his emissaries, use all their power and cunning, and lay the closest siege unto it, the gates of hell will never be able to prevail against it. 2. The great care which God takes of his church and people; for as birds flying or fluttering over and about their nest, in order to preserve their young, when they are in danger of being took away from them; so will the Lord of hosts defend Jerusalem; defending also, he will deliver it; and passing over, he will preserve it, as it is said, in Isa. xxxi. 5. which care for their preservation is manifestly seen in his placing such walls about it.

3dly, In this city are proper officers appointed and set to watch over and guard it, and these go under two titles or characters in the text. 1. They are called watchmen that went about the city: These are the ministers of the church, who are called so, both in the Old and New Testament; because they ought to watch over themselves, their doctrine and conversation, and to watch over others, who are made their care and charge: The business of watchmen is also to give the time of night, to give notice of present or approaching danger, either by fire, or by thieves and robbers, and to take up disorderly persons, and bring them to correction; so the ministers of the gospel give notice what time of day or night it is with the churches of Christ; they give notice to sinners of the danger which they are in, whilst in a state of nature; and also what danger churches may be in through contentious persons and hereticks, who endeavour to sow the seeds of discord, error and heresy among them: Likewise their business is to awake and arouse sleepy professors, who are indulging themselves in carnal ease and security, in the streets of Zion, and to admonish, reprove and rebuke all that stand in need thereof, and so bring them under the notice and censure of the church. These are said to go about the city. (1.) To distinguish them from those upon the walls: Those that went about the city, were to take care of the peace and safety of the city within; the keepers of the walls were to descry an enemy without; observe his motions, repel him, if able, and to give notice to those within, of danger from him; the one was a running watch, the other a standing one. (2.) To shew the nature of their work, and their diligence in it: It was the business of the keepers of the walls, to keep their stands, and not stir from their places; but the work of these was to go from place to place, to see that all was in peace and safety; but of these watchmen, see more on Cb. iii. 3. 2. These officers are called keepers of the walls; by which, some understand <sup>a</sup> angels, who encamp about, and protect the people of God; others <sup>c</sup>, civil magistrates, who, the apostle says, Rom. viii. 3, 4, are not terrors to good works, but to the evil; and that he is the minister of God for good, and beareth not the sword in vain: But if these were civil magistrates, they terrified the church in the way of her duty, and discouraged her in it, nay, turned the point of their swords against her, as often the princes of this world do, being ignorant of Christ and his church; but I rather think, church-officers are here intended, and that they are the same with the watchmen, who went about the city; only they may be expressive of different branches in the ministry, or of different talents which ministers have, and are to use in the discharge of their work; some, their work chiefly lies in comforting and establishing the church, in answering cases of conscience, and keeping peace and order within, and they have gifts suitable thereunto; and these may be called watchmen that go about the city; others, their work lies chiefly in defending the gospel, against the avowed enemies of it; these keep the outworks good, and repel the enemy, whenever he makes an attack upon any doctrine of the gospel; and these may be called the keepers, or watchmen of the walls; and so ministers are called in Isa. lxii. 6. The Jews in Shirbasirim Rabba and in Talkut on the place, understand by these keepers, the tribe of Levi, the keepers of the walls of the law.

But it may now be enquired, whether these were the true ministers of Christ or no: <sup>d</sup> some think that they were; they are called watchmen, and watchmen in the city, the church; though 'tis true, false teachers may bear the same name as true ones, and be in office in the church, as well as they; but what seems most to strengthen this opinion, is, that they were about their work, and in the discharge of their office; the watchmen were going about the city, as they should do, and the keepers of the walls were upon their stands, as they ought to be: Others <sup>e</sup> think, that they were not the true and faithful ministers of the gospel; but such who are called blind watchmen, &c. in Isa. lvi. 10, 11. and that, (1.) Because the church makes no enquiry of them, nor any application to them, which she did in a like case to the watchmen, in Cb. iii. 3. and therefore it seems to intimate, that she not looking upon them as ministers of Christ, had nothing to say to them, but would have shunned them if she could. (2.) Because of their cruelty to her: They are not so pitiful, compassionate and tender, as becomes the ministers of Christ to be to souls in such cases; they seem rather to be ravenous wolves than faithful shepherds or watchmen, and are most like those in Ezek. xxxiv. 2, 3, 4.—21.

Now ~~these~~ found the church seeking and enquiring for her beloved; which shews, that she was in the city, in the streets and broad ways of it; she searched all over the city, where the watchmen that went about it, found her; and escaping from them with blows and wounds, finding that her beloved was not there, she makes to the out parts of the city, perhaps, designing to go without the city in search of him, where she fell into the hands of the keepers of the walls. This finding of her, also appears to be accidental, and at an unawares; they were not seeking her, nor was she enquiring after them; it was on a sudden that they found her; and as soon as they did find her, they fell upon her, and took her up for a stroler or night-walker; and by their treatment of her, manifestly shewed that they found her, not as a friend, but as an enemy, and therefore did not let her go safe, but with blows, wounds, and the loss of her veil: Which brings us to consider,

II. Their treatment of her, and carriage to her: And;

1st, The watchmen that went about the city, smote and wounded her; which, if we understand of the true ministers of the gospel (though I rather think, that others are intended) must be meant, either of their upbraiding and reproaching her for her former unkindness to Christ, and negligence of her duty; when they told her, and hit her in the teeth of her former sins and miscarriages, they smote and cut her to the heart, opened the wound, and made it bleed afresh; and so like Job's friends, proved miserable comforters, who broke him in pieces with words, with words both of reproof and reproach; they laid open her sins to her, and sharply reprov'd her for them, when they should have comforted her with the doctrines of justification, by Christ's righteousness, and pardon by his blood; for Christ's own ministers may sometimes be mistaken in timing reproofs and corrections; or else, The being under the ministry of the word, and hearing some sweet discourses concerning Christ's person and grace, her heart was smote and wounded therewith, which made her charge the daughters of Jerusalem, in the following verse, that when they found her beloved, they would tell him, that she was sick of, or wounded with love. But if we understand it of false teachers, which seems most agreeable, then by those smitings and woundings, are meant, the scandalous lives of such persons, the rents and divisions they make, the false doctrines which they preach, and those human traditions, which, with force, they impose upon the consciences of men, being assisted by civil magistrates, whom they stir up to make penal laws, and put them in execution against the saints; by all which means they make the hearts of the righteous sad, and wound the consciences of God's Children.

2<sup>dly</sup>, The keepers of the walls took away her veil from her; veils were used by women in those countries, sometimes for ornament, Isa. iii. 23, sometimes as a token of modesty: Thus Rebekah, when she found that Isaac was coming to meet her, covered herself with a veil, Gen. xxiv. 65, and sometimes as a token of subjection to the husband; for which reason the apostle argues, that women ought to be covered, 1 Cor. xii. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. Now for them to take away her veil from her, was to strip her of her ornaments, and expose her frailties and infirmities, which ought to be covered; it was to disown her as the spouse of Christ, and to represent her as a whorish and impudent woman; and whereas she professed herself to be Christ's, to serve him in the way of his appointments; they endeavoured to corrupt her from the simplicity that is in Christ, and to draw her aside to a reception of false doctrines, and to a compliance with human traditions. And then, more especially may they be said to take away her veil, when they oppose and endeavour to subvert or remove the doctrine of imputed righteousness by Christ; Christ's righteousness is the believer's veil or covering, this is the wedding garment, περιβόλαιον νυμφικόν, the nuptial robe, as Gregory Nyssen calls the veil here; and when persons attempt to take away this doctrine, they do as much as in them lies to take away the church's veil. And now all this cruelty was exercised by persons professing religion, under a mask of godliness, by those who were officers in the church, from whom she might have expected a quite different treatment; and indeed, who were more bitter enemies to Christ and his apostles, than the priests and Pharisees were? And who have more cruelly persecuted the church in after-ages, than those who have professed Christianity? The church thus escaping from the watchmen and keepers, with blows, wounds, and the loss of her veil, meets with the daughters of Jerusalem, to whom she speaks in the following manner.

Ver. 8. I charge you, O daughters of Jerusalem; if ye find my beloved, that ye tell him, that I am sick of love.

THE church having met with a disappointment, as has been observed in ver. 6. by her beloved's withdrawing himself from her; but resolving to find him, if possible, she seeks for him in the publick ordinances, where she is taken notice of, by the officers of the church, the watchmen of the city, and keepers of the walls, who very much abuse her, smite, wound her, and take away her veil from her; by reason of which, she making a hideous outcry in the streets, the daughters of Jerusalem, the wise virgins, who were then sleeping and slumbering on their beds, were awakened and alarmed, and rose up to know what was the matter; who being observed by the church, had the charge in the text given unto them; by her; in which we have,

- I. The persons whom she addresses, and in this solemn manner adjures; the daughters of Jerusalem.
- II. The charge itself, which she gives them; which is, to tell her beloved, when found by them, that she was sick of love.
- III. The condition of this charge; if ye find my beloved.
- IV. The manner in which this charge is given, which is very solemn and serious.

I. The persons to whom she gives this charge, the daughters of Jerusalem; by whom we are not to understand the prophets, as the Targum does; though these were proper persons for the church to make application to in her present condition ; but having been so evilly treated by the watchmen and keepers of the walls, she had but little encouragement to go to them : Nor are angels here meant, as <sup>a</sup> some think ; though they are ministring spirits sent to the heirs of salvation, and are often useful to the saints on many accounts ; yet it does not seem to be their business, nor are they capable of assisting and relieving souls in such a case as this of the church's : Nor are saints departed meant, as some <sup>b</sup> popish interpreters imagine ; as if the church desired their prayers for her, who are incapable of giving her any assistance : But by them we are to understand saints here on earth, the friends and companions of the church, who belong to that Jerusalem, which is free, and is the mother of us all ; these were fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God ; perhaps, were young converts, as has been observed in other places of this song ; and 'tis certain, that they were believers of the weaker sort ; their knowledge of Christ was but small, though they had a great respect for the church, and a desire of seeking Christ with her, ver. 9. and Ch. vi. 1. The church now making application to these persons in her disconsolate condition, shews, 1. Her humility : That she is willing to be assisted by mean christians or weak believers, who were much inferior to her in faith and knowledge ; it is the nature of grace, and the tendency of such trying dispensations as these, in which the church was, to make and keep souls humble ; the more grace they have, the more humble they will be ; the greatest believer reckons himself the least of saints, and the chief of sinners, is willing to be instructed and admonished by the meanest saint ; see Psal. cxli. 5. and is glad of the prayers and assistance of weak believers, when in distress. 2. Her resolution to use all means to find her beloved, as Job did, Ch. xxiii. 8, 9. She will leave no stone unturned, nor let slip any opportunity, where there was any probability or possibility of finding him ; she had sought him in publick ordinances, but with no success ; nay, had met with ill treatment from church-officers ; yet she is not discouraged, but is resolved to persist in her search of him ; she had spread her case before Christ in prayer, and could get no answer ; and now she betakes herself to the company of private Christians, that by conference with them, and through their prayers for her, she might be brought to the enjoyment of what she was seeking after. 3. That communion and conversation with saints is a very proper method to be taken by believers in such cases ; conversing together about the things of God, is very acceptable and well pleasing to him ; it is said, Mal. iii. 16. of the saints, who spake often one to another, that the Lord hearkned and heard, listened as it were unto it, and took such notice of it, that a book of remembrance was written before him, for them ; he did, as it were, take notes and minutes of what they said and thought, and laid them up : As we should spread our cases before God, so it is very proper, and often very useful to spread out cases before one another ; and therefore there should not be a forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is, but so much the more should we assemble together, as our various wants and cases require.

4. That

4. That when souls are in distress, it is their duty and interest to make application to others; they should not only pray for themselves, which should be done in the first place, but they should also desire the prayers of others for them; for the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much; and 'tis no disgrace nor dishonour for a person superior in office, gifts and grace, to others, to desire their assistance by their prayers for him at the throne of grace; instances of this we have, not only in the church here, but in that great man of God, and instance of grace, the apostle Paul, who frequently desired the prayers of meaner saints for him; see Eph. vi. 19. 2 Thess. iii. 1, 2.

5. That it is the duty of saints to be assisting to each other in their distresses, as much as in them lies; by singing the praises of God together, by praying one with, and for another, and by conferring with each other about divine things, and so building up one another, on their most holy faith. There ought to be a sympathizing spirit in the saints; they should bear one another's burdens, and should mutually help each other; they should weep with those that weep, and rejoice with those that rejoice. But,

II. Let us consider the charge itself, which is given to them by her, and that is, to tell her beloved, when they found him, that she was sick of love. This does not suppose that he was ignorant or unmindful of her present state; he heard her, though he would not answer; he knew that she was enquiring after him, and what hardships she underwent in doing it; and also, how much her soul was filled with love to him, and longed for the enjoyment of him; though he would not immediately shew himself, intending a little longer to chastise her for her former carriage to him: But the words shew the ardency of her love to Christ, and that she would have them declare this to him, in their prayers for her, which she thought might be a means to induce him to manifest himself to her; as also they shew, what familiarity souls may use at the throne of grace, what freedom they may take with Christ, when they come into his presence, tell him that I am sick of love. They may tell him their own cases, and the cases of others, as one friend may tell another, or as a child may tell its father; they may go with boldness to him, and spread their own and others cases before him, without fear of being chided or upbraided by him; and indeed, it is their duty to bear upon their minds, at the throne of grace, not only their own cases, and the cases of the churches in general, as the apostle Paul frequently did; but also the cases of particular persons, whom they know to be in distress; therefore Christ taught his disciples to pray after this manner, Our Father, &c. and forgive us our debts, &c. to shew that they should be concerned for others in prayer, as well as for themselves. The words in the Hebrew text may be render'd thus, What shall ye, or should ye tell him? as if she should say, Do not tell him the blows and wounds that I have received from the watchmen, nor desire him to revenge the injuries and affronts they have given me, I freely forgive them; nor am I so much concerned at the sufferings that I undergo, as I am for the loss of him: What shall ye tell him? Tell him that which lies most upon my heart, under which I shall sink and die if he does not not relieve me, tell him that I am sick of love. Again, What shall ye tell him? Tell him that which will be the most acceptable and agreeable to him; tell him I love him so, that I cannot live without him. She knew that he valued her love, and that his heart would be ravished with it, from what he had said, Ch. iv. 9, 10. and therefore would have this told him. Again, What shall ye tell him? What shall I say to you to tell him? I have a great many things to tell him of; but I will not overburden your memories, but I will give you my mind in a few words, in the most concise manner, tell him that I am sick of love; and when I meet with him myself, I'll tell him all my mind; but for the present, only tell him this. But let us a little more particularly consider the matter of this charge, or what the church would have the daughters of Jerusalem tell Christ, when they found him, which is, that she was sick of love: And it will be proper to enquire,

1st, The causes of this sickness, which sometimes are, 1. A want of the views of pardoning grace, under a sense of sin, which, perhaps, was the case of the church here: She had sinned against Christ, in neglecting to arise and open to him; and she was now sensible of it, but wanted the manifestations of pardon; and was therefore in a languishing and fainting condition on the account of it; and it is only this which will cure this sickness; The inhabitant shall not say, I am sick. Why so? The people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity; i. e. they shall have the manifestations of pardoning grace to their souls, which shall cure them of their sicknesses and maladies; which was what the church here wanted. 2. The absence of Christ is sometimes the cause of this sickness; and this also was the church's case: Christ had withdrawn himself from her, and was gone, as in ver. 6. and though she had diligently sought him, yet she could not find him, nor hear any thing of him, and this brought this sickness upon her. 3. An eager longing after Christ's presence and the discoveries of his love, is another cause of it; when a soul has sought Christ a long time in ordinances, and cannot find him, has lived in the hopes and expectation of enjoying his presence, time after time, and yet is still at a loss for him, then comes this sickness upon it; for, as Salomon says, Prov. xiii. 12. Hope deferred maketh the heart sick. 4. Sometimes the large discoveries of love which believers have, cause a sickness, which may be called a love-sickness; and this is what the church speaks of, in Ch. ii. 5. Stay me with flagons, comfort me with apples; for I am sick of love: She had been with Christ in his wine cellar or banqueting house, and had as much of his love let into her soul, as she could hold, nay more; she was overpowered with it; his banner over her had been love. But this was not the church's case here; her sickness here arises rather from the aforesaid causes, and chiefly from a want of that love which she had such large discoveries of there.

2<sup>dly</sup>, It may not be amiss to consider the nature and properties of this sickness. And, 1. It is not a sickness unto death; none ever died of this sickness; Christ will never suffer any to die with love for him; for he loves them that love him, and will cause them to inherit substance; to enjoy himself, the substance of all felicity, and to inherit eternal glory, which is the better and the more enduring substance, where they shall have sweet and uninterrupted communion with him. 2. Yet it is a very sore and painful sickness; like Hezekiah's, 'tis a pining one, and oftentimes wailes the body as well as affects the mind: The Septuagint render it, For I am wounded with love, which gave her a great deal of pain and uneasiness; for love is as strong as death. 3. 'Tis an immedicable sickness without the enjoyment of Christ, the object loved; bodily physicians cannot cure it. These are in this case, like Job's physicians, of no value; merry companions are of no service to remove it: The enjoyment of another beloved will not do; the language of a soul in such a case, is, None but Christ, none but Christ; give me Christ or I die, I cannot live without him. This sickness can only be cured by the object loved, and this infallibly cures: for as hope deferred maketh the heart sick, so when the desire cometh, it is a tree of life.

3dly, We may now consider the evidences of this love-sickness, or how it manifests itself: And, 1. There is in souls that labour under it, a violent pulsation and panting of the heart after Christ, even as the hart panteth after the water brooks; they are restless and uneasy without him; their thoughts are continually running upon him; the desire of their souls, night and day, is to his name, and to the remembrance of him. 2. They are prodigious jealous of him and his love; and this is exceeding afflicting to them, for jealousy is as cruel as the grave: They are exceedingly afraid that he does not love them, or that he loves others better than they; for as the Poet<sup>d</sup> says, Res est solliciti plena timoris amor. 3. They are very active and diligent, careful and industrious to gain his love; they use all the methods and stratagems they can devise, are bold and resolute, are not discouraged at any difficulties; but are willing to run all risks for the enjoyment of him. 4. They love to hear his name mentioned, and especially to be spoken well of; his name to them is as ointment poured forth, exceeding grateful; it attracts their love, therefore do the virgins love him; they love his ways, his ordinances and his doctrines, and cannot bear to hear them spoke against; they love to look upon and converse with his people, because they are like him, and bear a resemblance to him.

III. The condition of this charge is, if ye find him; which shews, 1. That at present, these daughters of Jerusalem had not any sight of Christ, or communion with him; and this appears also manifestly from the following verse, where they enquire of her, concerning him. 2. That it was possible that they might find him before she did; for Christ is sometimes found of them that sought him not, and is made manifest unto them that asked not after him; she was enquiring after Christ, but found him not, and yet it was possible that they might find him before her, who had not been seeking after him: Also Christ may manifest himself to poor, mean and weak believers, when he does not to some that are superior to them in faith, light and knowledge; he shew'd himself after his resurrection, to a poor woman, to Mary Magdalene, out of whom he cast seven devils, before he did to his disciples. 3. That when they did find Christ, and had liberty of access to his presence, that they

they would then spread her sorrowful case before him, and use their interest with him, to take pity and compassion on her, who was sick of love for him; she entreats to do such a favour for her, as Joseph requested of the chief butler, when he should be restored to his place; says he, Gen. xl. 12. But think on me, when it shall be well with thee; and shew kindness, I pray thee, unto me; and make mention of me unto Pharaoh, and bring me out of this house. So the church would have these virgins, when it was well with them, when they enjoy'd the presence of Christ, to think on her, and her sorrowful case, and make mention of it to him.

IV. This charge is delivered in a very solemn manner, • I adjure you, or I put you to your oath, I make you swear, as the word signifies, that when you find him, you will tell him what I have said to you; I have given you your oath to do it; and now as you will answer it before God, in whose name and presence you have took it, that you will carefully observe what I say to you, and faithfully deliver the message; if you have any regard to this solemn oath you have took, or any love to me, I beg you will tell him that I am sick of love. She delivers herself in this solemn manner, not only to shew the strength of her love to him, and that she was hearty and sincere in her search and enquiries after him; but also that she was serious in what she said to them, and would have them be serious, diligent and faithful in telling her case to Christ: The answer returned by them, is as follows.

Ver. 9. What is thy beloved more than another beloved, O thou fairest among women? What is thy beloved more than another beloved, that thou dost so charge us?

THE church having solemnly adjured the daughters of Jerusalem, that when they found her beloved, they would tell him, that she was sick of love. In these words we have their reply to her, which shew what an opinion they had of her, and what effect her words had upon them: In which may be observed,

- I. The title and character they give her; O thou fairest among women.
- II. A question they propose to her; What is thy beloved more than another beloved?
- III. This question repeated; where the reason of it must be considered.
- IV. What the occasion was of their putting this question to her; which was her solemn charge, that thou dost so charge us.

I. The title or character which they give her, the fairest among women; which is expressive of the exceeding greatness of her beauty: She was not only fair, but the fairest, and that among women, whose beauty is excelling; she was the fairest of any of her sex; not as she was in herself, but as she is in Christ, justified by his righteousness, wash'd in his blood, and sanctified by his spirit; and being considered thus, she appeared to these daughters, as indeed she really is, a perfection of beauty; and they were not mistaken herein, for Christ, who knew her perfectly well, and from whom she received her comeliness, gives her the same character in the very same words, in Ch. i. 8. but then this opinion, which they entertained of her, though it entirely corresponds with that which Christ has entertained of her, yet is extremely different from that which the world has embraced; which shews, that these persons were not of this world, but called by grace out of it, seeing they had different sentiments of the church; the saints are by the world esteemed the filth thereof, and the off-scouring of all things; they are accounted by them, the foolish, base, weak and contemptible things of the world; nay, even things that are not, as if they were mere non-entities, and did not deserve the name of men or beings; and indeed, as they see no beauty or comeliness in Christ, it is no wonder that they can see none in the church; but these daughters of Jerusalem could, for they judged not according to the outward appearance; the world only sees the outside of the people of God, which is generally poor, mean and abject; but these could penetrate into the inside of the church, and viewed her, who is the King's daughter, as all glorious within, and therefore call her the fairest among women; for outwardly she was now black with sins, infirmities, reproaches and persecutions; yet notwithstanding she is highly esteemed of by them, for they had made Moses's choice, having thought it more eligible to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season, esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt. Young converts, as I suppose these daughters were, have generally a great respect for old professors, for such that were in Christ before them; these are the excellent in the earth, in whom is all their delight; they love to see them, and take pleasure in their company and conversation; and indeed, as love to the brethren is made an evidence of passing from death to life, by the apostle John, 1 John, iii. 14. so it shews itself in young converts, as soon as any thing else; for oftentimes, where there is but a small knowledge of Christ, and acquaintance with him, there is a great deal of love to Christ's people; which was the case of these daughters here. Also it may be supposed, that they give her this title to assure her of the high esteem which they had for her, and that opinion which they had of her, that she might not think that they designed her any hurt by asking the following question; but rather, seeing they had such a value for her, that their design was to do her all the service, and be as assisting to her in her search of her beloved, as they were able; and no doubt, also, but this opinion which they had of her, made them listen to, and regard the more what she afterwards says of her beloved; for they concluded, that he must be some great and extraordinary person, that she, who was the fairest among women, had made the object of her choice and love; they took it for granted, that one so fair, so wise and prudent as she was, would not take notice of any person, or lavish and throw away her love upon every object, and this made them the more forward and eager to put the question, which is now to be considered.

II. The question which they propose to her, is, What is thy beloved more than another beloved? which is not put in a scornful, disdainful or profane way, as Pharaoh said to Moses, when he demanded the dismissal of the people of Israel, who is the Lord that I should obey his voice? or as Rabshakeh to the men of Judab. in that railing profane speech of his, in 2 Kings xviii. 33, 34, 35. the design and sense of which was, What is the God of Israel more than the gods of the nations? but such was not this question here; these persons were not the profane people of the world; they had a great esteem for the church, and therefore it cannot be supposed that they would insinuate any thing in a scornful and reproachful way of her beloved. Nor did they propose this question with a design to ensnare her, as the Scribes and Pharisees frequently did to Christ; nor with a design to shift off any trouble from themselves, which, they might suppose, would arise from an observance of her solemn charge, but rather are willing to be assisting to her all they could; and therefore desire to have some distinguishing characters of him, that they might not lose their labour in seeking, and when they found him, might perfectly know him; which when she had given, to their entire satisfaction, they then desired to know whither he was gone, which way he took when he left her, that they might seek him with her, as is manifest from Ch. vi. 1. Nor does this question suppose that they were altogether ignorant of her beloved; for though their knowledge of Christ was small, yet they were not entirely destitute of it; and therefore, as <sup>a</sup> one well observes, they do not say, who, but what is thy beloved, &c. and, indeed, it cannot be reasonably thought, that they should be entirely ignorant of him; for she had, in Ch. i. 5. given some account of herself to them; that though she was black in herself, yet comely in another, which is the reason why they here call her the fairest among women; and there is no doubt, but she also gave them some account of him, from whom she received all her comeliness; and in Ch. ii. 7. and iii. 5. she charges them very strictly, to give him, her love, no molestation or disturbance, which could not very well be, without informing them who he was; and in Ch. iii. 11. she invites them to come forth, and see this glorious person, who was her lord and husband, in all his glory, on his coronation and espousal-day; to which invitation, they, no doubt, complied, and therefore must have some knowledge of him. The design then of this question is, that they might know him more and better; which also is the desire of every gracious soul, even of those who have made the greatest proficiency in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ; the apostle Paul, perhaps, knew as much of Christ as ever any meer man on earth did, and yet he desired to know more of him, and the power of his resurrection; for he valued the knowledge of him above all things else. These daughters of Jerusalem, though they knew but little, were willing to know more of Christ; as they had begun to know, they desired to follow on to know him, and make a greater improvement in this kind of learning; and being sensible of the church's abilities, desire her assistance, and are willing to be instructed by her. Also those who know the most of Christ, are frequently desirous of having his praises and excellencies set forth by others; for they can never hear him enough extolled; his name to them is as ointment poured forth; therefore they love him, as did the virgins here, who excited the church hereunto, by putting this question, and so had their ends answered. And, perhaps, likewise they might have in view, the trial of her faith in Christ, her knowledge of him, and love to him in her present state; she was now under his resentments, he had withdrawn himself from her, and she was exposed to the scandal, reproach and persecutions of her enemies; and they were willing to know how her faith stood now, whether she loved him now, as well as ever, and whether by his absence she had not lost all just ideas of him; and in this she gives them full satisfaction in her answer to them, where she gives an exact account of him, describes him from head to foot, and shews the strength of her faith in him, and affections for him, particularly in the close of it, ver. 16. Also in this question they seem principally desirous of knowing what those excellencies were, which were in him, that distinguished him from other beloveds, and made him preferable to them: Christ was the chiefest among ten thousands in her esteem, to all that believe he is precious; not only precious upon an equal foot with others, but far more precious than all other things or persons besides; for there's none in heaven, nor any upon earth, that saints desire besides him. There are indeed a great many other beloveds, but Christ is preferable to them all, and in what he is so, the daughters of Jerusalem were willing to know.

1st, The world, with the riches and grandeur of it, is the beloved of some persons. There are too many, both in the world and in the church, that have their affections too much set on earthly things, who neglect their own souls, and the cause and interest of Christ Jesus, having, Demas like, loved this present world; but alas! What is this world, or any thing in it, to be compared to Christ, the believer's beloved? every thing, even the best that is in the world, is fading, perishing and transitory; many temptations and snares, foolish and hurtful lusts, does an immoderate care for, and sinful love of this world run persons into; therefore says the apostle John, 1st John, ii. 15. Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world; for they are not to be mentioned with Christ; he is infinitely preferable to them. See Prov. iii. 13, 14, 15.

2<sup>dly</sup>, The sinful lusts and pleasures of this life, are the beloveds of others: Every natural man has his beloved lust or lusts, and these he idolizes and adores, falls down to and worships; he makes gods of them; as the apostle says, Phil. iii. 19. of some, whose God is their belly; and it may be said of all by nature, that they are serving divers lusts and pleasures, being lovers of them; who are never better pleased and more satisfied than when they are fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind; but these pleasures are but short lived, they afford no real satisfaction now; and, if grace prevent not, will end in bitterness and death; wherefore the worst of a believer, even his afflictions, are better than these, and therefore he thinks it more eligible, to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; and if so, much more preferable must Christ, an interest in him, union to him, and communion with him, be, to all such beloveds as these.

3dly, The praise and applause of men is another beloved of some persons: This was the beloved of the hypocritical Pharisees, who, in all the parts of their religion and devotion, sought the honour of men, and not of God; as also of those who, though they were convinced in their consciences, that Christ was the Messiah, and believed him to be so, yet did not confess him; for they loved the praise of men, more than the praise of God; they were afraid that their good names, characters and reputations should be blasted, as too many are now, and therefore drop the doctrines of the gospel, and desert the cause and interest of Christ Jesus; but though a good name is better than precious ointment, it is not better than a precious Jesus, whose name is as ointment poured forth, nor better than the precious doctrines of the gospel; it is much preferable to be nicknamed, reproached and vilified, with Christ and his gospel, than to have the best name, character and reputation in this world without them; for what will it avail a man, though he hath gained all this, when God taketh away his soul?

4thly, Near and dear relations are the only beloveds of others, as parents, children, &c. They set their affections so much on these, that Christ has little or no share in them. Now, says Christ, Mat. x. 37. He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me: And he that loveth son or daughter more than me, is not worthy of me. Christ is preferable to all such beloveds, and indeed, to any creature-enjoyment whatever.

5thly, And lastly, Self is the beloved of many; nay, may not I say, too much the dearly beloved of us all; self lies close to us, is near and dear unto us; and we too much deserve that character, lovers of our selves more than lovers of God; and yet Christ requires of us, that we should deny this beloved self, sinful self, and part with it for him; nay, even righteous self; our beloved righteousness, which we are naturally so fond of, and which is so hard and difficult a work to do; and yet souls are enabled by divine grace, to do this, seeing a super-excellency in Christ and his righteousness, as the apostle Paul did; who, though he had been so much in love with his own righteousness, it had been his darling, he valued himself much upon it, and thought to have gained much by it, yet threw it all away as loss and dung, and desired to be found in Christ, and in his righteousness only, that being far preferable to his former beloved.

Thus Christ excels all other beloveds; and he must needs do so, for, 1. He is fairer than all others; there is no such beauty to be found in any beloved whatever as is in him; he is the brightness of his father's glory, and the express image of his person. 2. He is wiser than all others; he is a perfection of wisdom, as well as beauty; in him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. 3. He is richer than all others; he is possessor of unsearchable riches, riches which can never be told over, in time, or to all eternity; he has riches of grace and riches of glory, yea durable riches and righteousness. Now one, in whom all beauty, wisdom and riches meet, must needs be an excellent person, and appear preferable to all beloveds: Christ is such an one; he has all the accomplishments and perfections of the divine and human nature to make him so.

Again,

Again, the daughters of Jerusalem putting such a question as this to the church shews, (1.) Their regard unto her, and compassion for her : The watchmen and keepers of the walls, as soon as ever they found her, without asking any question, who she was, where she came from, whether she was going; or whom she was seeking; I say, as soon as ever they found her, they fall upon her, smite, wound her, and take away her veil from her; but these persons shew'd more regard and compassion, for being willing to assist her in her present case, if possible, they stand conferring with her. (2.) It appears from hence, that these were enquiring souls, which discovers a work of grace begun in them; for no sooner are souls awakened to see their lost state, by nature, but they are enquiring the way of salvation; and having got some glimmering knowledge of Christ, and salvation by him, they enquire still more after him, concerning his person, office and grace; and having some impressions of his love on their souls, enquire the nature of a church, and the ordinances of Christ therein; they ask their way to Zion with their voices ~~thitherward~~. (3.) It is evident from the question they proposed, that they were docible and teachable; they were willing to be instructed; they were not haughty, scornful, and above instruction; they did not think, that they knew enough of Christ, and needed to know no more, nor be instructed better; but being conscious of their own ignorance, and extremely desirous of being informed better, they put this question to her,

III. This question is repeated by them; which shews, the surprize that they were in at her solemn charge, and the stir she made about her beloved; and concluded from thence, that there must be some peculiar excellencies in him, which they had not been made acquainted with yet, and therefore repeat the question; as also to manifest their seriousness in it, and that they were in good earnest, desirous of knowing Christ more and better; and likewise it is expressive of their importunateness, to have a speedy answer from her.

IV. Here is also that which gave occasion to them, to put this question to her; and that was her strict and solemn charge, in the former verse, that thou dost so charge us, that is, so awfully and solemnly, so seriously and strictly, with so much warmth and vehemence; they were eye and ear-witnesses to her sufferings, at the hands of the watchmen, and to her courage, constancy and undauntedness therein; they saw that she was no ways discouraged by what she met with, from seeking her beloved, but seemed rather, by her solemn charge to them, to be more warm and zealous, serious, diligent, and resolved to go on in search of him; and seeing all this, it put them upon enquiring what he was, what peculiar excellencies were in him, and what distinguishing characters he might be known by. Thus the warmth, zeal and liveliness of some Christians have been the means of stirring up and quickening others to their duty; nay, the sufferings of the saints, and their courage and boldness therein, have not only filled beholders with wonder, but have put their very enemies upon making enquiry into the religion they have suffered for, and to ask, who and what that Christ was, for whom they have underwent such severe tortures and punishments; and this has been the means of the conversion of thousands, which gave rise to that saying, The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church. And this is the gloss of R. Solomon Jarchi on this text, viz. Thus the nations asked the Israelites, What is your God more than all gods, that ye are burnt and hanged for him after this manner? Next follows a glorious description of Christ, the church's beloved, in answer to this question of the daughters of Jerusalem.

Ver. 10. My beloved is white and ruddy, the chiefest among ten thousand.

THE church having, in ver. 8. given the daughters of Jerusalem a strict and solemn charge, that when they found her beloved, they would tell him, that she was sick of love, made them, in ver. 9. very inquisitive after him, being, as it were, uneasy till they knew what he was, and wherein he excelled others; and therefore put this question to her, What is thy beloved more than another beloved? To which an answer is returned by her, in this and the following verses, in which she first gives a more general description of him, and then descends to particulars: The general description of him is in the words now under consideration; in which she describes him,

I. Positively, in regard to what he was in himself, as to his favour and complexion; my beloved is white and ruddy.

II. Comparatively, as he may be considered with regard to others; the chiefest among ten thousand.

I. She describes him by his favour and complexion, white and ruddy; which <sup>a</sup> some understand of his two natures, human and divine; who may be said to be white, as to his divine nature: The ancient of days, the everlasting God is represented in Dan. vii. 9. as being clothed with a garment white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool. The description which John, 1 John, i. 5. gives of the divine being, is, that he is light, and in him is no darkness at all; which is thought <sup>b</sup> to be best represented by this colour, which is simple, and has no mixture and composition in it. Christ is the light of the world; he was known by this character to the old Testament-saints; he was prophesied of as the great light which should lighten the Gentile world; this was owned by old Simeon, witnessed by John, and asserted by himself: And then it is thought by these interpreters, that he may be said to be red or ruddy, as to his human nature. The first man, who was a type of Christ, and a figure of him that was to come, was called Adam, which signifies red; and, perhaps, he had his name from the Hebrew word אָדָמָה Adamah, which <sup>c</sup> signifies red earth, out of which he was formed, Gen. ii. 7.

So Christ is called the last Adam, 1 Cor. xv. 45. because he took part of the same flesh and blood the children, whom he loved, are partakers of. Now according to this sense of the words, her answer is this; Would you know who and what my beloved is, and wherein he excels others? I'll tell you, and be it known unto you, that he is no mean, common and ordinary person; no, he is a glorious and an extraordinary one; his name is פֶּלֶא Pele, wonderful, a wonder, a miracle; and so is his person, two natures meet in him; he is God and man in one person; he is the great mystery of godliness, God manifest in the flesh; and when you hear this, you will cease to wonder, why I so charge you, and why I love, value and esteem him above all others.

Again, <sup>d</sup> others understand these words of Christ's human nature only; and that he may be said to be white, because of the innocence, purity and holiness of his human nature, which was not tainted with original sin, as ours is, he not descending from Adam by ordinary generation, but was miraculously conceived in the womb of a virgin, by the power of the Holy Ghost, and therefore it is called that holy thing; neither was there any sinful action committed by him in all his life, but both in nature and practice he was holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners; he never sinned in thought, word or deed, though he was made sin for us. Also they suppose he may be said to be red or ruddy, on the account of his sufferings in this nature, by reason of which, he may be represented, in Isa. lxiii. 1, 2. as being red in his apparel, and as being clothed with died garments; for what with buffetings and scourgings of his body, the crowning his head with thorns, and piercing his hands, feet and side, with the nails and spear, the garment of the human nature was like a vesture dipped in blood. To this purpose is Alcuin's note on the text, which is not to be despised; he is white, says he, because without sin, red with the blood of his sufferings, chosen out of ten thousand, because he is the only mediator of God and men. Now there cannot appear a more beautiful and delightful sight to those who desire to know nothing but Christ and him crucified, than to see the just Jesus suffering for unjust ones, him that knew no sin, made sin for them, and the holy, harmless, innocent and unspotted lamb of God, shedding his blood for the vilest of sinners; according to this sense, the church's answer is, Would you know what my beloved is, and wherein he excels others? I'll tell you, he's not black with original and actual sin, as you and I are; for though you see him red with sufferings, yet he was not cut off for himself, but was wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities; for in his nature and actions he is white, pure and spotless; and such a mixture of white and red, of innocence and sufferings, render him extremely amiable and lovely to me. Or else,

As <sup>e</sup> others have observed, these words may be understood of the different administrations of mercy and justice. Thus when Christ pardons sinners, though their sins be as scarlet, he makes them as white as snow; and though though they be red like crimson, they become as wool; and when he justifies persons, he is said to clothe them in fine linen, clean and white, which is the righteousness of the saints; and when he promises glorification to them, it is in such words as these, they shall walk with me in white, for they are worthy: And so glorified saints are represented, clothed with white robes, palms in their hands, and hallelujahs in their mouths; for all which see Isa. i. 18. Rev. iii. 4, 5. and vii. 9. 13, 14. and xix. 8. and then when he is represented as taking vengeance on his enemies, and executing wrath upon his foes, he is said to be red in his apparel, and to be clothed with a vesture dipped in blood; for so they understand Isa. lxiii. 1, 2. Rev. xix. 13. and it may be further observed, that the wrath which the Lord poureth forth upon the wicked of the earth, is represented by a cup of red wine, expressing the fierceness and fury of it; for in the hand of the Lord there is a cup, and the wine is red, &c. Psal. lxxv. 8. and this agrees with the common notion of the cabalistic doctors, that when God appears in mercy and kindness, then he may be said to be white; but when in wrath and anger, red; of this frequent mention is made in Zohar, and in other cabalistic books<sup>f</sup>: According to this sense it is as if she should say, My beloved has mercy and grace for his people, which he bestows in a sovereign manner upon them, and he has vengeance for his adversaries, which he executes upon them, according to the strictest rules of justice; and this mixture of mercy and justice, of white and red, renders him an extraordinary person; it makes some to love him, and others to fear him. Or else,

These words may be interpreted of Christ's battles and victories, and may represent him as a mighty warrior, and a triumphant conqueror: Thus in Rev. vi. 4. the warrior, who had power given him to take peace from the earth, is introduced as riding upon a red horse; and in ver. 2. He that went forth conquering and to conquer, as riding upon a white horse: Thus Christ, who is the Lord of hosts, the man of war, considered as fighting the Lord's battles, may be said to be red or ruddy; and as returning from the field of battle, as a mighty conqueror, having spoiled principalities and powers, and got an intire victory over all his and our enemies, may be said to be white. And now this great person, as if she should say, has done all this for me, and made me also more than a conqueror, and this person is my beloved.

But passing these several senses, which, perhaps, may be thought too nice and curious, though agreeable to the analogy of faith, yet it may be will not bear so well here; therefore I chuse rather to understand them of the beauty, glory and excellency of Christ, as mediator, without applying particularly these colours of white and ruddy, to either nature, or to any particular actions performed in either; and I cannot but think, that the church in this description of Christ, has some reference to the account that is given of David, 1 Sam. xvi. 12. which is, that he was ruddy, and withal of a beautiful countenance, and goodly to look to: David was an eminent type of Christ, of his line the Messiah came, who is sometimes called David in scripture, and is both his root and offspring, the bright and the morning star; and as described by David, is fairer

than the children of men, being white and ruddy, which discovers the best temperate, the most healthful constitution, and the completest beauty : As mediator, he is a perfection of beauty ; all divine perfections are in him ; the glory of them all shine resplendently in his face or person ; and they are all glorified in him and by him, who is the brightness of his Father's glory, and the express image of his person. There is also a mediatorial glory that he is possesser of, which is the result and consequence of his work ; and which renders him exceeding fair and beautiful in the eyes of believers now, and is what they will, with wonder and pleasure, everlastingly gaze upon in another world. Likewise as mediator, all fulness of grace dwells in him ; and as full of grace and truth, his glory appears as the glory of the only begotten of the Father.

Again, Christ, as mediator, is white and ruddy, a perfection of beauty in the eyes of believers, as considered in all his offices of prophet, priest and king, and in all his relations as husband, father, brother and friend, which he bears and stands in to his people : Moreover he is exceeding beautiful in their esteem, in all that he has done and suffered for them ; but of this beauty and fairness of Christ, see more on Cb. i. 15.

II. Christ is here described by the church comparatively, as he may be considered with regard to others, the chiefest among ten thousand.

The Septuagint render the words thus, <sup>2</sup> Chosen out of, or from ten thousand ; so Christ is both by God and men ; he is chosen of God from among ten thousand, as man and mediator ; when that large number of all the individuals of human nature, which he resolved to create in time, came up in his vast and eternal mind, a certain number of them he singled out for himself, whom he meant to make instances of his mighty grace and mercy, and therefore ordained them to life and salvation ; and out of this select company which he had in his eternal view, he chose the man Christ Jesus, and singled out that single individuum of human nature only to be united to the eternal λογος logos, the second person in the glorious trinity, and therefore he is said to exalt one chosen out of the people ; he chose this glorious person to be the saviour, head and mediator of his elect ones ; that living stone, which is disallowed and rejected by some men, who would be accounted builders, is chosen of God, and precious ; he has laid him as the foundation, and made him the head of the corner ; he knew that he was furnished with suitable abilities to be the sinner's saviour, therefore he laid help upon one that is mighty ; he called him to the work, invested him in the office of a mediator, and appointed him his salvation to the ends of the earth ; and now had all human and angelic beings been summoned together to have chosen a saviour for themselves, they could never have made a better choice than God has made for them ; with this choice every sensible sinner is well satisfied, and rejoices in it, and was it to be done again, would say as the psalmist did, He shall choose our inheritance for us, Psalm. xlvii. 4.

He

He is also chosen of men from among ten thousand ; there is none among all the angels in heaven, the large number of inhabitants that fill the upper world ; nor any among the vast crowds of the sons of men, so desirable to sensible sinners as he is ; they make choice of him only for their saviour ; for being sensible that in vain is salvation hoped for any where else, they say of all the works of their hands, even of the best their hands ever wrought, ye shall not save us ; neither will we any more give you such honour, or have such a dependance on you, as to say, Ye are our gods ; but Christ, and he only, shall be our salvation ; and though he slay us, yet will we trust in him. They choose him for their ruler and governor, their Lord and King ; and though they have formerly been under, and have submitted to the government of others, yet they now desire to be his subjects and servants only, and to be obedient to his laws and commands. They likewise fix on him as the alone object of their love, whom they have the strongest affection for, and desire to keep the most inviolable chastity to ; for though he is out of sight, he is not out of mind, whom having not seen they love ; nor can he be out-rivalled by any, being preferable in their esteem to all others.

Moreover, the Hebrew word may be rendered, <sup>a</sup> a standard bearer, or one standarded among ten thousand. The church of Christ, here below, is in a militant state, she has many enemies to grapple with, which cause fightings without, and fears within ; and though these enemies are mighty and powerful, crafty and cunning, yet in the name, and strength of her Lord, she sets up her banners, and appears as terrible to them, and as majestic to others, as an army with banners ; and this banner, or standard, which is both her covering and her comfort in the day of battle, is love, according to Cb. ii. 4. It is the love of Christ, as a banner display'd, an ensign set up, and standard erected, which invites and engages so many to enlist themselves in Christ's service, and when enlisted, animates them to fight the Lord's battles so courageously as they do : Christ, he is the standard-bearer, and the great captain of our salvation, being by God the Father given as a leader and commander to the people. Now Christ being said to be the standard-bearer among ten thousand, may be understood of the multitude, either <sup>i</sup> of ministring angels who are under him, and at his command ; or of saints, who are enlisted in his service, and ready to do his pleasure ; he having set up his standard, and being himself an ensign to the people, multitudes flock unto him, and fulfil the prophecy of him, as the great Shiloh, to whom the gathering of the people should be : Herein lies the glory and excellency of Christ, that he has ten thousand, i. e. a large number of choice and select ones under his standard, such as there are not the like in all the world besides ; and how stately and majestic does Christ look, and what a noble sight is it to see him bearing the standard before such a company ; such a sight as this John had of him, at the head of a vast multitude of those shining ones, who were clothed with white robes, and had palms in their hands, having just obtained a glorious victory over

But these words, by our translators are rendered, the chiefest among ten thousand, and the sense of them is no ways opposed by the former versions; for if he is chosen out of, and is the standard-bearer among ten thousand, then he must be the chiefest among them; he is the chiefest among all the angels in heaven; for to which of the angels said he at any time, thou art my son, &c. He is the son of God in a higher sense than angels and men are; angels are the sons of God by creation, saints by adoption, but Christ is the son of God by an ineffable generation; as he is God, he is the creator of angels, and to him they pay homage and adoration; they are his servants, and are at his command, whom he sends forth as ministering spirits, to do his pleasure; and though as man, in the state of his humiliation and abasement, here on earth, in the days of his flesh, he was made a little lower than the angels, yet now in the very same nature in which he was abased below them, he is now exalted above them at the Father's right hand; for to which of the angels said he at any time, Sit on my right hand, &c. As mediator, he has obtained a more excellent name than they; for the name of a saviour or mediator, is given to none of them, and as such they are beholding to him, though not to make peace and reconciliation for them, they having never sinned and incurred the divine displeasure; yet they are obliged unto him for confirming grace to secure them in that state in which they stand. He is also the chiefest of all on earth, as well as of all in heaven; in all things, and over all persons, he has the preeminence; he is the head of saints, their everlasting father, and tender husband; he is the great master of the family, and the first-born among many brethren; he is the king of saints, and Lord of the creation; and should be the chiefest, and have the chiefest place in the desires of our hearts, in the contemplations of our minds, the affections of our souls, and in our ascriptions of glory; for he is the chiefest among ten thousand.

THE church having given a general description of her beloved in the former verse, pursuant to the request of the daughters of Jerusalem, does in this, enter into a more particular commendation of him, and continues unto unto the end of the chapter ; which commendation consists of ten particulars, two of which are in these words ;

I. She describes him by his head ; which she says, is as the most fine gold.

II. By his locks ; which are busby, and black as a raven.

I. She describes his head as the most fine gold. By Christ's head may be meant, either,

1st, God the Father, who is in scripture called so: Thus the apostle says, in 1 Cor. xi. 3. The head of every man is Christ, and the head of the woman is the man, and the head of Christ is God, i. e. God the Father, which is to be understood of Christ as man and mediator; for as he is God, the Father is not his head, he is not above him, nor superior to him in nature, power, or glory; for being in the form of God, he thought it no robbery to be equal with him. It is true, the Father is the first person in the trinity, but he is not first in order of time, dignity or causality; some of the fathers and schoolmen have indeed said, that the Father, with respect to the other two persons, is fons Deitatis, principium, causa, the fountain of the Deity, beginning and cause thereof; these phrases are better let alone than used: But he may very properly be said to be the head of Christ, as man and mediator; for as he is man he is God's creature, the work of his hands, a body hast thou prepared me, and so subject to him, and under his power and government; and in this sense are those words of Christ to be understood, where he says, John, xiv. 28. My Father is greater than I, being his creator, Lord and head. And, 1. Christ, as man and mediator, has his life from his Father; as he is God, his life is original and underived, it is not communicated to him from another; but his life as man and mediator, is given him; he asked life of his Father, in the everlasting covenant, both for himself and for his people, and it was granted to him; and in this sense is that text to be understood, John, v. 26. As the father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the son to have life in himself. As we derive our life from Christ, and have it maintained and supported by him, so Christ, as man and mediator, has his life from his father, by whom also it is supported, he lives by him; as the living Father hath sent me, says Christ, John, vi. 57. and I live by the Father: So he that eateth me shall live by me; and in this sense is God the head of Christ; he communicates life unto him, as man and mediator, and continues it in him. Christ, as man and mediator, is subject to his Father, as the members of the body are to the head: Thus, as God's righteous servant he was sent by him about the great work of man's redemption, was obedient to him, and carefully observed all the commands which he enjoined him; he still is, and will be to all eternity, subject to his father, as man and mediator; for when all things shall be put under the feet of Christ, as king of saints, then he the son shall be subject to him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all, 1 Cor. xv. 28. 3. Christ as man and mediator, was guided and directed, taught and instructed by his father, what he should speak, and what he should do, as the great prophet in Israel, and saviour of the world; and this gives light to those scriptures, John, v. 20. and viii. 28. and xii. 49, 50. and proves the father to be the head of Christ. 4. Christ, as man and mediator, was strengthen'd and supported in his work by his father, as his head; this was promised him in the everlasting covenant, and was made good to him in an acceptable, suitable and seasonable time, in the day of salvation; in the day he wrought out the salvation of sinners, which animated and encouraged him in the view of all that he was to go through; see Isa. l. 8, 9, 10. and proved him to be the son of man, whom God made strong for himself. Now this head of Christ is as the most fine gold: Here are two words used in the Hebrew text, which both signify gold<sup>a</sup>; the one signifies pure, fine and shining, the other strong and solid gold; and they may also be render'd<sup>b</sup> the gold of Fez, from whence either the land of Fez had its name; or else, this gold had its name from the land where it was in abundance, and perhaps, is the same with the gold of Upbaz, mentioned in Dan. x. 5. Jer. x. 9. and this being the best and finest gold, the church uses it to set off the glory and excellency of Christ's head; not that we are to suppose, as the apostle observes, Acts, xvii. 29. that the Godhead is like to gold and silver, &c. for no likeness and similitude can be formed of the divine being; and indeed, the church seems to be almost at a loss what to compare this head to; but gold being the richest, most excellent and durable metal, and the gold of Fez the best of any, she uses this to set forth the glory of it by: and yet as not being satisfied, she says, it is as the most fine gold; if there is any better, it is like that; or as the words may also be rendered, his head is as the gold of gold; and it is as if she should say, I would compare it to gold, because I can think of nothing better, richer, and more glorious; but I cannot find gold good enough to compare it to; this is the gold of gold, there is no such elsewhere, the whole universe cannot furnish us with the like; he that is my beloved's head, is more glorious and excellent than the mountains of prey, yea, than all the golden mountains of Peru. Or else, 2dly, By Christ's head may be meant<sup>c</sup>, the divine nature in him, which is the head, the chief and principal nature in Christ, in which his highest characters are wrote, and which puts a glory and efficacy in all he has done and suffered as mediator; and it is this which supported him and enabled him to go through the great work of man's salvation; all divine perfections are in Christ, and these all shine resplendently in him, who is the brightness of his father's glory, and the express image of his person; this head is an head of pure, fine and shining gold; all the fulness of the Godhead dwells bodily in him, and the glory of it is very manifest and conspicuous. Or, in Dan. ii. 32—37, 38. And now Christ, as Lord of the church, and King of saints, may be compared to the most fine gold. 1. Because his kingdom and government is the most excellent and glorious; it is managed with the utmost wisdom and prudence, and according to the strictest rules of justice and equity; his head is a golden one, and fit for the work he is called to, for in it are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge; and therefore he is the only wise and just, as well as the only rich and powerful potentate in the universe; he is King of kings, and Lord of lords; all others receive their crowns and kingdoms from him, and are set up and put down by him at pleasure; and therefore it is by him that kings reign, and princes decree justice; all the wisdom and prudence, justice and equity which appear in any of the governments of this world, are but faint resemblances of what of this nature appear in Christ's government; he is the head of gold, all the rest are but like brass, iron and clay. 2. He is compared to fine gold, because his kingdom is pure and spiritual; it is not of this world, it consists in nothing that is worldly, earthly and carnal; it is not meat and drink, but righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. 3. Because like gold 'tis solid and substantial; it does not consist in external pomp and gaudy shews, as the kingdoms of this world, which yet are fading, transitory and perishing; but this, though it does not come with observation, but looks mean and abject in its outward appearance, yet is all of pure and solid gold, and will appear bright and glorious when the gild of others is worn off and gone. 4. It is compared to the most fine gold for the richness of it: Christ is the richest prince in the world; his riches are lasting and durable, they are unsearchable and incomprehensible; his kingdom is the richest on earth, and the meanest subject in it, is a prince, nay a king; that may be much more truly said of Christ's subjects, what the proud Assyrian monarch said boastingly of his princes, Are not my princes altogether kings? Christ's meanest subjects are so, for he has made them kings and priests unto God, Rev. i. 6. 5. Christ's kingdom may be compared to gold, because it is lasting and durable; Christ's throne is for ever and ever; there will never be any end of his government, nor of the increase of it, and of the peace and prosperity thereof; when all other kingdoms are destroyed, and all other rule, power, and authority put down, Christ's kingdom will stand, it will be more visibly set up, and appear more glorious, and so continue for ever. Thus Christ, as head of the church, and king of saints, may be compared to the most fine gold, which is the first particular the instances in, by which he may be known from others. The Jewish <sup>a</sup> writers by this head of fine gold, understand the law, which is more to be desired than gold; as they do by the locks in the following clause, the several letters, sections, doctrines and senses of it.

3dly, By Christ's head may be meant, his headship over his church, or his regal power and government, which I rather incline to; thus he is represented in Psal. xxi. 3. as having a crown of pure gold upon his head, denoting his royal dignity and authority. So Nebuchadnezzar, or the large and flourishing monarchy which he was ruler of, is set forth by an head of gold, in

II. She describes him by his locks, which, she says, are bushy and black as a raven. By his locks may be meant, either, purposes of his heart concerning man's salvation; his thoughts of love, grace and mercy towards sinners, cannot be reckoned up in order to him, they are more than can be numbered; the sum of them is so great, that they exceed the sand upon the sea shore. 2. Like busby and black locks, are intricate, dark and obscure, unsearchable and incomprehensible; God's thoughts and purposes of distinguishing grace, are out of our reach, and beyond our comprehension, and therefore are said to be higher than our thoughts, even as the heavens are higher than the earth; when we seriously consider that the great and infinite being, should pitch his thoughts of love from all eternity, upon poor, sinful creatures, and upon some, and not all, and resolve on their everlasting salvation, and not on others; it obliges us to say with the apostle, O the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! Rom. xi. 33. 3. Yet these thoughts and purposes of God's heart, so far as they are made known to us, are like busby and black locks of hair, very beautiful and delightful: How glorious and beautiful is the draught, the model and scheme of salvation, which was drawn in the eternal mind? with what exactness is it managed? what wisdom and grace appear in that fellowship of the mystery, which the gospel leads us into an acquaintance with? How precious are those thoughts of love which run through all, as well as how great is the sum of them? Or,

2dly, By those locks may be meant<sup>f</sup>, the multitude of believers, which grow upon Christ as the head of the church; and these may be compared to hair for their number, their dependance on Christ, and their reception of life and nourishment from him, as has been observed on Ch. iv. 1. and these being called locks of hair, may intend their being congregated in gospel order, their being united in faith and love, and their walking together in all the ordinances of Christ, endeavouring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace: Now saints being thus join'd together in holy fellowship, having a strict regard to Christ's truths and commands, do much adorn the head Christ Jesus, and are a lovely and delightful sight to spectators. See Col. ii. 5. And these locks are said to be, 1. Busby; the word may signify beaps,<sup>g</sup> and so denotes the multitude of believers that spring from, and have the dependance on Christ the head; or it may be rendred<sup>h</sup> thick, being well set, or pendulous<sup>i</sup>, hanging down in a beautiful order: And this may intend the ornament that believers are to Christ; childrens children are the crown of old men; believers are a crown of glory to Christ; they are a royal diadem in his hand, and upon his head: or it may be translated<sup>k</sup> crisp or curled, and so be expressive of the hardness and strength of believers, <sup>l</sup>curled hair being the strongest and hardest; believers, though weak in themselves, yet are strong in Christ;

Christ; not only to perform duty, but to withstand enemies, and endure hardness as good soldiers of Christ Jesus; they are strengthen'd with all might in the inner man, to fight the Lord's battles, are undaunted in their spirits, and immoveable as a rock. 2. They are said to be black as a raven; saints are black with original and actual sin, as they are also with infirmities, reproaches, scandal and persecution; they have mean thoughts of themselves, and though exalted on the head Christ, yet look upon themselves as the least of saints, and chief of sinners; though I rather think this does not intend their blackness by sins, infirmities, &c. Nor their humble thoughts of themselves, but rather their real beauty which they have from Christ, and that ornament and glory which they are unto him: Or else, 3dly, By these locks may be meant Christ's administrations in the discharge of his kingly office: And this seems to me to be the best sense; for as by his head is intended his regal power and government, so by his locks the administrations of it; which though sometimes dark, intricate, and obscure, being attended with severity to his enemies, and so may be said to be busby and black, yet being managed with the utmost wisdom and prudence, and according to the strictest rules of justice and equity, look very beautiful and comely, and are admired and wondered at by all the saints. See Rev. xv.

3, 4. Moreover, in general these busby and black locks of Christ may denote, 1. The fulness of wisdom which is in Christ; curled hair is a sign of <sup>m</sup> an hot and dry brain, which produces acuteness and sharpness of wit. All wisdom is in Christ, he is the wisdom of God, who has not only fulness of it for himself, which is requisite to qualify him for, and carry him through the work he's engaged in, but has also a fulness of it for the saints, to whom he is made of God wisdom as well as righteousness. 2. His youthful strength, vigour and courage, of which black hair is accounted a sign; in Rev. i. 14. Christ's hair is said to be as white as wool, as white as snow, to denote his senile gravity, that he is the ancient of days, who exists from everlasting to everlasting; but here his locks are said to be black, to set forth his juvenile vigour and strength, which is always in its bloom, without any change or alteration. He is the mighty God in his highest nature, and mighty to save as mediator: He gave the fullest proofs of his strength and courage in fulfilling all the law required, in bearing all that justice inflicted, and in conquering all his and our enemies. 3. These black locks set forth the beauty of Christ; black hair was accounted the most beautiful, not only by the Jews, but by the Romans, as is manifest from what the poet <sup>a</sup> says,

And in another place, •

*Et Lycum nigris oculis nigroque

It was very desirable to them, inasmuch that those, whose hair was not naturally black, used various ways and methods to make it so; and among other things, both Pliny<sup>p</sup> and Ælianus<sup>q</sup> tell us, they used the eggs, brains, and blood of ravens for that purpose. Now when Christ's locks are said to be black as a raven, the meaning is, that he looks exceeding beautiful, being fairer than Absalom, or any of the children of men: His black shining locks hanging down in a beautiful order from his head of gold, make him look very stately and majestick; and as the blackness of the raven is a very fine black, and what is natural to it, and not made by art, so the beauty of Christ is exceeding great, it is natural to him, it is not derived from another, as ours is from him, but what is original, underived and essential to him; and this proves him to be the most excellent beloved, and the chiefest among ten thousand.

Ver. 12. His eyes are as the eyes of doves, by the rivers of water, washed with milk, and fitly set.

THIS is the third instance of Christ's beauty or distinguishing character of him, which the church gives to the daughters of Jerusalem, whereby they might know him from others; having described him by his head and hair, she here describes him by his eyes. The order and method in which she proceeds is very just and natural. By his eyes may be meant either,

First, * The gifts and graces of the spirit which are in Christ, as man and mediator, who is represented in Rev. v. 6. as a lamb that had been slain for the sins of men, with seven eyes, which are said to be the seven spirits of God; not that there are seven personal, distinct, divine subsistencies which are called so, but the phrase intends that variety, fulness and perfection of the gifts and grace of that one spirit of God, who is the third person in the blessed Trinity; which gifts and grace of his being bestow'd on Christ, as man and mediator, furnished and qualified him for his work; of which seven spirits, or various gifts of the spirit which he received for this purpose, you may read in Isa. xi. 2, 3, 4. Now these may be said to be as the eyes of doves by the rivers of water, because the spirit of God did in an eminent and public manner descend upon him, as a dove, at the time of his baptism in the river of Jordan. And they may also be said to be as doves, or as the eyes of doves washed with milk, to express the purity and holiness of his nature, sanctified thereby; for as man and mediator he was holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners: Likewise they may be said to be as the eyes of doves fitly set, or set in fulness, because the spirit was not given to him by measure, but in fulness; the whole fulness of the gifts and grace of the spirit is given to him; and therefore he appears full of grace and truth, and from hence they are communicated unto men. Or else,

Secondly, By his eyes may be meant the church's teachers, or ministers of the gospel, who as they are the mouth by whom Christ speaks, so they are his eyes by whom he sees, provides for, and watches over his church and people; and therefore are called watchmen, whose business is to watch for, and over the souls of men. These are the eyes which give light unto, guide and direct the members of Christ's body, who point out unto them the way of salvation, and guide their feet into the way of peace. Now these may be said to be as the eyes of doves, on the account of those dove-like gifts of the spirit by which they are fitted for their work, and made able ministers of the new testament; also for their honesty, faithfulness, and simplicity in preaching the everlasting gospel; and likewise for that harmlessness and innocency which do and ought to appear in their lives and conversations. These may also be said to be as doves, or as the eyes of doves by the rivers of water, which may intend the scriptures of truth; for as doves delight to sit by rivers of water, so do the ministers of the gospel delight to be reading of, and meditating upon the scriptures, which is their work and business. And from hence they fetch the doctrines they preach to others; they speak according to the oracles of God, and that not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual, 1 Cor. ii. 13. Likewise they may be said to be as doves, or as the eyes of doves washed with milk, because of their light and knowledge in the gospel, which is the sincere milk of the word, whereby they are made capable of feeding others with the plain and wholesome truths of the gospel: Or else this phrase may intend that pure and spotless conversation which they ought to lead as examples to others in faith and purity. They may also be said to be fitly set; for God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, &c. 1 Cor. xii. 28. This was the fit and beautiful order in which the first ministers of the gospel were placed by God himself; and indeed all the ministers of it are fitly set in the more eminent part of the body, the church, to overlook, direct, and be useful to the several members of it. But these seem rather to be the eyes of the church, than the eyes of Christ; which also are compared to doves eyes in Cb. i. 15. and iv. 1. as has been there observed; and therefore I chuse rather,

Thirdly, To understand by these eyes, the omniscience of Christ: R. Aben Ezra seems to understand them of God's omniscience, for his comment is that text in Prov. xv. 3. The eyes of the Lord are in every place. Christ is the omniscient God, every creature is made manifest in his sight, all things are naked and open unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do; who is the living word, and a critical discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. In the days of his flesh here on earth, he needed not that any should testify of man; for he knew what was in man; and gave convincing proofs to the scribes and pharisees, that he was well acquainted with the secret thoughts of their hearts. Peter bore a noble testimony to Christ's omniscience, when he appeal'd appeal'd to him, saying, Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee. And indeed was he not the omniscient God, how could he be capable of acting as the head of his church, or as the mediator between God and man, or of judging the world at the last day: But then he'll give an incontestable proof of this divine perfection's being in him; he'll let all the churches, and all the world know, that he it is which searcheth the reins and hearts. Now when these eyes of Christ's omniscience are fixed on persons in a way of wrath and anger, they are said to be as flames of fire, especially when fixed upon hereticks, idolaters, false worshipers, or any of his, and his church's enemies. See Rev. i. 14. and ii. 18, 20, 21, 22, 23. and xix. 11, 12, 15. But when they are fixed in a way of special love and grace upon his own people, they may be said to be,

1st, As the eyes of doves, which are loving, lovely, clear and chaste. 1. Christ's eyes may be said to be as doves, because of the lovingness of them; the eyes of doves are not fierce and furious, as the eyes of some creatures are; there's no fury in Christ's eyes as fixed upon his people: The eye of the Lord is upon them that fear him, upon them that hope in his mercy; i. e. his eye is upon poor trembling sinners, who come to the throne of grace, and prostrate themselves at his feet; humbly imploring his grace and mercy, and venturing on him as sinners ready to perish: His eye is upon them all the while, not to destroy them, and cut them off from his sight, but to deliver their soul from death, and to keep them alive in famine: His eyes are upon all his righteous ones; not to cut off the remembrance of them from the earth, which he threatens to the wicked, but to deliver them out of all their troubles. His eyes are upon all creatures, and all things, for they run to and fro throughout the whole earth; but then it is to shew himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect towards him. His eye of love is always upon his people, to succour, relieve, protect and defend them: His eye is upon them under all their trials, temptations, desertions, sorrows and afflictions: His eye is upon them when in the furnace, to observe the exercise of their grace upon him, their carriage to him, and when tried, to deliver out of it; for his eyes behold, and his eye lids try the children of men. 2. They may be compared to doves eyes, because they are lovely as well as loving; and 'tis for this reason he compares the church's eyes to doves, in Ch. i. 15. and iv. 1. every part of this description serves to set off the beauty and loveliness of Christ's eyes; they are said to be as the eyes of doves, by the rivers of water; because doves delight to sit there; where being pleased with the pure and purling streams, their eyes look more quick and lively, and so more beautiful and lovely. Also they are said to be as doves washed with milk, either as milk white doves, which look very pleasant and delightful; or as doves washing themselves in streams of water, look as clean as if they had been washed in milk. Likewise they are said to be as the eyes of doves sitly set, i. e. neither too much staring out, nor too much sunk within; neither hollow eyed nor goggle eyed, which are both extreme deformities in the eye. 3. They may be compared to doves eyes, because of their clearness and perspicuity: Christ's eyes are so clear, he's so sharp sighted, that he can see all persons persons and things, in all places, at one view; for the eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good. More especially his eyes behold, and he takes cognizance of his own people: These he knows by name, and distinguishes them in his care and affections from all others; he sees and knows all their wants perfectly well, is able to supply them, and has an heart to do it: And seeing that all things are naked and open unto him, with whom they have to do at the throne of grace, they are encouraged to come thither with the greater boldness. He sees and knows all the contrivances and designs of wicked men against his people, though form'd in the dark, for the darkness and the light are both alike to him; his eyes are so clear, sharp, and penetrating, that there is no darkness, nor shadow of death, where the workers of iniquity may hide themselves. And this makes much for the comfort of his people, as well as serves to commend and set off the loveliness and excellency of him. 4. They may be compared to doves eyes for their faithfulness and chastity. Christ is faithful to God, who appointed him to be the Mediator and Saviour of his people; and to that covenant of grace which he made with him, in which he promised many things, which are fully performed by him, and received many blessings of grace for his people, which he is faithful to distribute unto them, and bestow upon them: He hath given meat to them that fear him, as an indication that his eye is upon, and that he will ever be mindful of his covenant; he has a respect unto it, and therefore calls those by his grace, and brings them to glory, who are interested in it. Also as the eye of the dove is only upon its own mate, is faithful and chaste unto it, and has no regard to any other, so Christ's eye of love is only upon his church: As she's his dove, so she's his only one: Hence he says, my dove, my undefiled is but one; and as he loves her above all others, so he loves none but her with his special and peculiar love, in which he always rests and continues.

2dly, Christ's eyes of love, as fixed on his own people, are as the eyes of doves by the rivers of water. Now this sets forth the loveliness and beauty of Christ's eyes, as has been already observed; the eyes of doves being more brisk, quick, and lively, when sitting by rivers of water, where they are delighted in, and pleased with the clear and running streams thereof; and may also lead us to observe these two things. 1. The fixedness and constancy of Christ's eye of love being set upon his own people. Doves sitting by a river side, keep their eyes fixed upon the purling streams; and in drinking, as Pliny observes, don't resupinare colla, erect their necks, and lift up their heads, but keeping their eyes fixed upon the water, drink a large draught of it in the manner of beasts. Christ being sweetly delighted with his own people, has fixed his eye upon them, and never removes it from them; he withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous; his eye was upon them before time, continues so in time, and will be so to all eternity; for having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them to the end. 2. It may intend the object of Christ's love. Some of the Jewish writers, by the rivers of water, would have their schools and synagogues intended; where the waters of the law flow, the difficulties of it are explained, and its proper senses given; but they may be much better understood of gospel churches made up of righteous persons, who are justified by Christ's righteousness, sanctified by his grace, sprinkled with the clean water of the everlasting covenant, and who have low, mean, and humble thoughts of themselves. On such as these Christ's eye is fixed, and to these he looks. See Isa. lxvii. 2. Here, the ordinances of the gospel are administered in their purity, the waters of the sanctuary flow, the doctrines of grace are powerfully preached, and souls hereby much delighted and refreshed.

3dly, These eyes of Christ are said to be as the eyes of doves washed with milk. And this is expressive both of the beauty and clearness of them, as has been already observed: Eyes, when washed, are clearest, and so most lovely, like milk-white doves which look the most beautiful, especially when they have just washed themselves. And this may also intend the purity of Christ's eyes, who is of purer eyes than to behold evil, with any pleasure or approbation; and likewise the meekness and mildness of them: His eyes are not red and furious, but look as if they had been washed with milk, being full of mercy, pity, and compassion to poor sinners; his heart is full of it; and his eyes shew it; and his actions as God-man, and mediator, give the strongest proofs of his being a merciful as well as a faithful high priest.

4thly, These eyes are said to be fitly set, or sitting by fullness, i. e. by full channels of water. Christ himself is as rivers of waters, which denote the fullness and abundance of grace that is in him; and by these full fountains of grace, life and salvation, he sits, dwells and abides, and thither he, the lamb, in the midst of the throne, leads his people: Or the words may be rendered, sitting in fulness, and so expresses the loveliness and beauty of Christ's eyes, as has been already observed. His eyes were neither sunk too low within, nor stood too much out, but exactly filled their holes; they were fitly set as diamonds in a ring, or as precious stones in the breast-plate of the high priest, which exactly filled the cavities which were made for them, and therefore were called stones of fullness. See Exod. xxv. 7. and xxviii. 17, 20. So R. Sol. Jarchi, & R. Aben Ezra, understand the words; tho' they may be better translated, sitting upon fullness. Christ's eyes are set or sitting, 1. Upon the fullness of this world, the earth is the Lord's, and the fullness of it; as he has a right unto it, so his eyes are upon it, for his eyes run to and fro throughout the whole earth; they are in every place at one and the same time beholding, at one view, the evil and the good, all their persons, and all their actions; his eye is upon that vast number of persons and things that fill the whole universe, and upon the large variety of actions performed there. Now this sets forth the extensiveness of Christ's omniscience, and that general and universal knowledge he's possessed of; which sense is much favoured by R. Sol. Jarchi's note on the words. 2. Christ's eyes were set, or sitting upon the fullness of time in which he was to come into the world, and perform the great work of redemption; for as he was appointed to be the author of this work, and the persons were pitched upon, whom he was to redeem, so the time was also fixed, when he was to do it; and this is called the fullness of time, in Eph. i. 10. Gal. iv. 4. And now from the first making of the everlasting covenant, down throughout the whole Old Testament-dispensation, Christ's eye was fixed on this fullness, waiting, watching, and as it were, longing till the time was come, when he should appear in human nature, and do the work which his heart was so much set upon: Witness his many appearances in a human form before his incarnation, and the frequent notices he gave of his near approach. 3. Christ's eyes are set, or sitting upon his fullness, the church, whom in the fullness of time he came into this world to redeem. The church is called so in Eph. i. 23. which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all; and then is she, and will she appear to be so, when all his elect ones are called by grace; and these all filled with those gifts and graces of the spirit designed for them by him who is ascended to fill all things; and more especially when they are all grown up in proportion, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. Now Christ's eye is upon his church, and upon every member of it, until all this is done; and will be so when time shall be no more. 4. His eyes were, and still are set, or sitting upon the fullness of the Gentiles, until that is brought in: His eye was upon them in the everlasting covenant; therefore both he and his Father thought fit that he should be not only the redeemer of Israel, but a light to the Gentiles also, and be God's salvation unto the ends of the earth. His eye was upon them during the Old Testament-dispensation, and therefore gave out many promises and prophecies concerning their calling: His eye was upon them when he died and suffered, and therefore he became a propitiation, not for the Jews only, but also for the gentile world: His eye was upon them when he gave the commission to his disciples to preach the gospel; and therefore bid them go into all the world, and preach it to every creature, which he owned for the conversion of thousands; and his eye is still upon them, and will be so, until all those other sheep are brought in which are not of the Jewish fold. 5. His eyes are set, or sitting on his own personal fullness as God; for in him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily: His eye was upon this when he undertook the work of redemption, and so it was when he was actually concerned in it; therefore he failed not, neither was he discouraged; this supported him under it, and comfortably carried him through it. 6. His eyes are set, or sitting upon his fullness as mediator, which is a dispensative, communicative fullness put into his hands, to be distributed to his people; and his eye is continually upon it, to supply the wants of his people out of it, under all their straits, difficulties, temptations, sorrows, and afflictions; and where Christ's eyes are fixed, there should ours be also: We should be continually looking to, and be strong, not in ourselves, but in the grace which is in Christ Jesus.

IN these words are the fourth and fifth particular instances of Christ's beauty; for having described him by his head, locks and eyes, she here describes him by his cheeks and lips, still keeping in a beautiful and regular order in her description of him. And,

First, She describes him by his cheeks, which she says are as a bed of spices, as sweet flowers; by which we are to understand, not the smooth and naked cheeks, but with hair growing upon them, which best suits with the metaphor of a bed of spices; for as aromatic plants, and sweet smelling flowers bud out, and spring up from a bed of spices, and make it look very beautiful, so the hair of a man's beard puts itself forth, and grows upon his cheeks, or jaws, as the word may be rendred, and makes him look very graceful and majestic. R. Aben Ezra understands by his cheeks, his beard, as also do many christian interpreters. And this was literally true of Christ, who was not an infant of days, but a man grown up when he suffered in the room and stead of sinners; as is manifest from his giving his back to the smiters, and his cheeks to those that plucked off the hair; and being taken in a mystical and spiritual sense, may intend either,

1st, Believers, who are the hair of his cheeks as well as of his head; these grow upon him, receive their life and nourishment from him, and are ornamental to him: These are as a bed of spices, and sweet flowers; for being perfumed with the myrrh and frankincense of his grace, they ascend upwards in the exercise of faith, hope and love, as towers of perfumes,<sup>a</sup> as the words translated sweet flowers may be rendered; they are fruitful in themselves like a spicy bed, odoriferous to Christ, and delightful to each other. Or else,

2<sup>dly</sup>, The graces of the spirit which are in Christ as man and mediator: These, like the hair of a man's beard, which grow upon his cheeks, adorn the man Christ Jesus, and render him very lovely and graceful. These grow in large numbers on him; he is full of grace and truth; and though there is a large communication of grace made daily to believers from this fullness which is in Christ, yet it is no ways lessened thereby, even as the hair of a man's beard, which the oftner cut, the thicker and faster it grows. Now these lovely cheeks, thus adorned, may be said to be as a bed of spices, as sweet flowers, because of their beauty and loveliness: No spicy bed set and filled with aromatic plants, and sweet smelling flowers, can be more lovely and delightful to the eye of sense, than Christ, with all his grace, is to the eye of faith. The reason why he appears to a believer fairer than the children of men, is, because grace, in all its fullness, is poured into his lips. Also they may be compared to these, because of the sweet odour of them; the effluvia's of the sweetest flowers and most fragrant spices, growing in large numbers,

bers, in beds of them, cannot be more grateful to the smell than the graces of Christ are to believers: And therefore they are compared to ointments, the savour of which cheers the minds, and attracts the hearts of his people to him. This oil of gladness being poured plentifully on his head, ran down his beard, and so to every part of his garments, which makes them all smell of myrrh, aloes, and cassia, and renders him and all that belong to him sweet, savoury, and delightful to his saints. Likewise they may be compared to a bed of spices and sweet flowers, because of the variety of them; as in an aromatic garden there are various beds, and in those beds various spices, plants and flowers, so there is in Christ a variety of the gifts and graces of the spirit; there are diversities of gifts, and all sorts of grace which make up that fullness from whence believers receive grace for grace. Or else, 3dly, This may be expressive of the manliness and courage, prudence, gravity and majesty of Christ. When the beard appears in men like a bed of spices, thick and well grown, it is a manifest indication that they are grown up to the estate of men, and are at years of discretion. Now Christ's manliness and courage appeared in his boldly refuting the errors of the pharisees and sadducees, and preaching the everlasting gospel, though he often ran the risque of his life in doing it; and to the very last he bore a noble testimony to it, and witnessed a good confession of it before many witnesses: As also he gave a manifest discovery of it at the time of his being taken by his enemies, as well as in Pilate's hall, where he was smote, buffeted, scourged, mocked, and spit on; and yet in the midst of all, discovered the greatest undauntedness and composure of mind; but never more than while he was bearing his Father's wrath, and the strokes of divine justice, grappling with his and our enemies, and undergoing a painful and ignominious death; for under all this he failed not, neither was he discouraged. His cheeks being as a bed of spices, shew him to be endued with manliness and courage, which he thus discovered; as they also shew his prudence and gravity, which he manifested in all his discourses, questions and answers; for in him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge; for at twelve years of age, when the lovely dawn scarce appeared upon his cheeks, he discoursed with so much wisdom and gravity, put such questions to the doctors, and returned such answers to theirs, as filled them with wonder and surprize; and much more did he so when his cheeks were as a bed of spices, when he was grown up to man's estate, and was entered upon his publick ministry; he spake with so much wisdom and authority, that his audience was amazed at him; he dealt so prudently, according to the prophesy of him, that the subtle scribes and pharisees did not care to meddle with him; for as they could not answer his questions, so they dare not put any to him; his enemies themselves being witnesses, never man spake like him. And this prudence and gravity of his appeared throughout the whole conduct of his life; his words were with power and authority, his deportment was grave and serious, and his walk and conversation, as it was in all holiness and righteousness towards God, so it was in all wisdom and prudence towards men.

But if by cheeks we understand that part of the face as smooth and naked; without the additional consideration of hair growing upon them, then by them may be meant either,

1st, The scriptures of truth. The Targum understands them of the two tables of stone which were written in ten lines, like the rows or beds of an aromatic garden, productive of acute and delightful senses: Much to the same purpose does R. Sol. Jarchi give the sense of them; but it seems better to understand them of the whole word of God, the scriptures both of the Old and New Testament. These are as it were the cheeks or face of Christ, which represent and set forth the glory of his person, the virtue of his blood, the excellency of his righteousness, and the riches of his grace: These may be said to be as a bed of spices, as sweet flowers, being in several distinct plots or beds; for this garden of the scriptures was not thrown up at once, and formed in that beautiful order in which now it is; but first one spicy bed was made, and then another; for God at sundry times, and in divers manners, spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets. These beds are set with a variety of exceeding great and precious promises, and excellent doctrines, which the meditating soul, like the industrious bee, sucks much sweetness from. All those excellent spices, and sweet smelling flowers which grow here, have their different usefulness; for all scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for reproof, for correction, and for instruction in righteousness, 2 Tim. iii. 16. And as aromatic plants and fragrant flowers are delightful to the eye, sweet to the smell, and refreshing to the senses, so are these truths and promises; they are like apples of gold in pictures of silver to the eye of faith, diffuse a delightful odour to the smell, give a savour of Christ's knowledge, when and wherever explained; and being held in the hand of faith, refresh all the spiritual senses, and are the joy and rejoicing of the heart. Or else,

2<sup>dly</sup>, By Christ's cheeks may be meant his presence with his people, and the manifestation of himself unto them in his word and ordinances. Thus the presence of God is frequently called his face in scripture; as when saints are said to seek his face, or he is said to bide his face from them, which are to be understood of God's withdrawing his presence from them, and their desire of enjoying it. Thus Christ's presence with his people may be set forth by his cheeks or face, which when they enjoy, they see him in his beauty, behold him in his glory, and are ravished with his love; and this may be said to be as a bed of spices, as sweet flowers, for nothing is so desirable and delightful to believers as this; walking in the light of Christ's countenance is far preferable to walking among beds of spices, where the most fragrant plants and odoriferous flowers grow; nothing that is earthly and sensual, with all its affluence and pleasure, can so strike the carnal senses, as the presence of Christ does the spiritual ones. Or else,

3<sup>dly</sup>, The cheeks being the seat of modesty, bashfulness, and blushing, may intend the humility of Christ, which appeared in his assumption of our nature, and throughout the whole course of his life, and more especially at his death: And this is a very great ornament to him, and renders him very delightful to his people ; how lovely does the meek and lowly Jesus look, how beautiful are those blushing cheeks of his, who, though he was equal with God, yet was found in fashion as a man ; and though possessed of all divine perfections, and transcendent excellencies, yet always spoke modestly of himself, and did not seek his own, but his Father's glory, and the good of his people.

Secondly, Which is indeed, the fifth particular instance of his beauty, she describes him by his lips, which she says are like lilies, dropping sweet smelling myrrh ; lips being the instruments of speech, by them may be meant the words of Christ ; which are like lilies. 1. For purity ; The words of the Lord are pure words, as silver tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times. Christ's words are free from all pollution and defilement, from all scurrility and raillery, from all deceit and hypocrisy, and from all human mixtures whatever ; and therefore his word is called the sincere milk of the word. 2. His lips are compared to lilies for the beauty of them ; and I suppose that not white lilies are here meant, but purple or red lilies, of which Pliny <sup>a</sup> speaks, the flower of which, he says, some call the the rose-lily : So Maimonides <sup>e</sup> speaks of red lilies, by which he interprets וורד the rose, which he says have a good smell, and of them it is said, his lips, like lilies, Cant. 5. 13. and also R. Alsbech on the text. The best of these grew in Antioch and Laodicea ; and these best suit with lips, for not white but red lips are accounted the most beautiful ; and therefore Christ compares the church's lips to a thread of scarlet, in Ch. iv. 3. There is a beauty and loveliness in all Christ's words ; they are pleasant ones, they are gracious words, or words of grace which drop from his lips ; and indeed how can his lips drop any other ? His speech cannot be but always with grace, and with gracefulness, when grace itself is poured into his lips. 3. They may be compared to lilies for the fineness, thinness, softness, and delicateness of them ; thinness as well as redness adds a beauty to the lips. Christ's voice was not heard, his lips did not move in setting forth his own praises ; for he sought not his own, but his father's glory ; he did not bear witness of himself, for he had another which did it for him ; he did not speak for himself, but his words and actions spoke for him ; he did as Solomon advised, Prov. xxvii. 2. Let another man praise thee, and not thine own mouth ; a stranger, and not thine own lips. 4. They may be compared to lilies for the sweet odour of them : Christ's lips drop sweet smelling myrrh ; his words, his gospel, and the doctrines of it diffuse an agreeable favour ; to some they are the savour of life unto life : And though they are the savour of death unto death to others, yet that does not arise from Christ's words in themselves, but is owing to their being rejected, slighted, and contemned by men. 5. They may be compared to lilies, for the glory and majesty of them. Christ says, that Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of the lilies of the field : Christ's words come with authority, and are clothed with power, The voice of the Lord is powerful, the voice of the Lord is full of majesty, Psalm xxix. 4.

Aggah,

Again, These lips of Christ are said to drop sweet smelling myrrh; for the construction is not with lilies but with lips; for myrrh does not drop from lilies, but may be said to do so from Christ's lips. And here we may consider, 1. The matter of those words which drop from Christ's lips, which is said to be as sweet smelling myrrh. 2. The manner of the delivery of them, which is dropping.

1st, The matter of Christ's words is like sweet smelling myrrh. 1. Grateful and acceptable as such; Christ's lips drop the sweet smelling myrrh of peace and reconciliation to rebellious sinners, pardon to guilty ones, rest to those that are burdened, comfort to the distressed, and life to all his people: This he did in the days of his flesh, and still continues to do by his ministering servants, who are his lips, by whom he speaks, and are thought by some to be chiefly intended here; and so will his lips drop sweet smelling myrrh, the words of eternal life, when he shall say, come ye blessed of my Father; inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. 2. His lips drop words, for matter like sweet smelling myrrh, preserving from rottenness, putrefaction and corruption: Christ's words preserve from the corruption of sin, his doctrines are according to godliness; they are so far from having a tendency to encourage persons in sin, that they are the best antidote and preservative against it; the doctrines of grace teach us to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts; they are the means of implanting and maintaining principles opposite to them. They also preserve from the corruption of false doctrines, which are pernicious to souls, and eat as do a canker; but Christ's words are wholesome ones, and those whose hearts are established with them are not carried about with divers and strange doctrines; nor are they tossed to and fro with every wind of error, but retain their steadfastness in Christ Jesus; likewise wherever Christ's words come with power, they preserve from going down to the pit of corruption; for Christ says, that whosoever keeps his sayings, shall never see death, i. e. the second death.

2<sup>dly</sup>, The manner of the delivery of Christ's words; which as the matter of them is grateful, this is graceful, and is said to be dropping. 1. Gradually, and not all at once; Christ did not speak all at once to his disciples, but by little and little, as they were able to bear it; they had not their light, knowledge and comfort all at once; no more have saints now, nor must they expect it; we are first babes, then young men, and then fathers in Christ. 2. Seasonably, at proper times, as the wants and necessities of his people require; for God hath given him the tongue of the learned, that he may know how to speak a word in season to him that is weary, Isa. l. 4. 3. Constantly; his lips dropped sweet smelling myrrh when on earth, and still drop it now he is in heaven; see that ye refuse not him that speaketh; that now speaking, continues to speak, and will do so until all his people are gathered in. 4. Powerfully and effectually; though his words do but drop, yet they drop with power, they make and leave impressions where they drop; they work effectually in them that believe. 5. Yet sweetly and gently; not like hasty and sudden showers of rain, which beat down the grass and corn, but as rain that drops drops gently and mildly, and so is acceptable to the earth, and makes it fruitful. My doctrine shall drop as the rain, my speech shall distill as the dew, &c. Deut. xxxii. 2. Now this graceful and agreeable manner of his delivery, as well as the grateful matter of his words, render him very acceptable to his church, and shew him to be a most excellent person, and the chiefest among ten thousand; which is what she attempts to demonstrate, in this description, to the daughters of Jerusalem.

Ver. 14. His hands are as gold rings set with the beryl: His belly is as bright ivory, overlaid with sapphires.

THESE words contain the sixth and seventh particular instances of Christ's beauty, or distinguishing characters of him, whereby he might be known from all other beloveds, and wherein he was preferable to them.

- I. She describes him by his hands; which she says, are as gold rings set with the beryl.
- II. By his belly or bowels; which she says, is as bright ivory overlaid with sapphires.

I. She sets forth the beauty and loveliness of his hands, by comparing them with gold rings set with the beryl, which is the sixth particular instanced in; and by his hands may be meant, either,

1st, The munificence and liberality of Christ, manifested in the distributions of his grace to his own people; all grace is in Christ's hands, being put there by God the Father, as an instance of his love to Christ, as mediator, and his regard to those whom he made his care and charge; The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hands, John, iii. 35. all fulness of grace is in Christ, of justifying, sanctifying, pardoning and adopting grace; all the blessings and promises of the covenant are in his hands; all fulness of wisdom and strength, light and life, peace, joy and comfort is with him; which is all lodged in his hands, in order to be distributed to God's chosen ones. Christ, as the ascended Lord and King, received gifts for men, and as such, gives them to them: The daily experience of souls testify it, for of his fulness we all receive, and grace for grace. Christ does all this liberally, and upbraideth not; he does not do it with a reflection on our unworthiness, nor does he hit us on the teeth of our manifold sins and transgressions; as he does not withhold the blessings of grace from those they belong to, so when he gives, he does not do it grudgingly, but freely and cheerfully; not sparingly but plentifully; he openeth his hands wide, and largely communicates to his people all which he does wisely and prudently, at such times and in such ways, as will best suit with their wants and necessities; for as a wise and faithful steward of God's grace, he gives to every one their portion of meat in due season. And now these hands of Christ's, which so faithfully and wisely, so liberally, freely and largely distribute the blessings of grace to the saints, are as beautiful and lovely as hands adorned with gold rings, set with the most valuable precious stones; How glorious does he appear to the eye of faith, as exalted to be a prince and a Saviour, to give repentance unto Israel, and forgiveness of sins, with his hands full of grace, and a heart to give it? How beautiful do both his right and left hand look, in whose right-hand is length of days, and in whose left-hand are riches and honour? Or else, 2dly, By his hands may be meant his power in working: Christ's hands have always been active, My Father worketh hitherto, and I work, i. e. I have been working, and I continue to do so. These hands of Christ, which are said to be as gold rings, &c. laid the foundations of the heavens and the earth, formed all things out of nothing, rear'd up the beautiful structure of the universe, and filled it with proper inhabitants; for without him was not any thing made that was made: and in doing this, his hands look like gold rings; there is a shine, a lustre on them; the glory of the divine perfections appears in them; the heavens declare his glory, and the firmament sheweth his handy work; these hands also bear up and support the pillars of the earth, and in this he appears to be the brightness of his Father's glory, and the express image of his person, in that he upholds all things by the word of his power: These hands likewise hold the reins of government; the government of the whole universe in general, as well as of the church in particular, is in the hands and upon the shoulder of our Lord Jesus Christ; but in nothing does Christ's hands appear more beautiful and lovely, like gold rings set with the beryl, than in grasping, holding and retaining the saints; who are put into his hand by God the Father, where they are safe and secure, for out of his hands none can pluck: How beautiful do the hands of Christ look, in holding those bright stars, the ministers of the gospel there; for he holdeth the seven stars in his right-hand; and more do they appear so, when we view all the saints there, who are so many gold rings, jewels, pearls and precious stones in Christ's esteem. Or else, 3dly, By his hands may be meant, his works performed by his almighty power; as lips being the instruments of speech, intend Christ's words in the former verse, so hands being the instruments of action, may intend his works in this; such as the works of creation and providence, which are all formed in a beautiful order, in a delightful connection with, and an agreeable subordination and subserviency to each other; his works of miracles here on earth, on all which were a shine of deity, and were a demonstration of his being the true Messiah and Saviour of the world; and more especially his works of grace and redemption, which may be said to be as gold rings set with the beryl. 1. For the perfection of them: The circular form is accounted the most perfect, and therefore they are compared to gold rings, which are of such a form. Christ is a rock, and his work is perfect, and particularly this of redemption: He does none of his works by halves, and especially this, which he never left till he could say, it is finished; and so being made perfect himself through sufferings, having perfectly fulfilled both the preceptive and penal part of the law, he became the compleat author of eternal salvation to all them that open him. 2. For the excellency and glory of them; gold rings are valuable, beautiful and ornamental: All Christ's works of grace are glorious and honourable, and more especially this of redemption, in which the glory of all the three persons, and the glory of all the divine perfections, is manifestly display'd, and eternally secured; his glory is great in thy salvation, Psal. xxi. 5. 3. For the variety of them; gold rings in the plural number are here mentioned: Christ's works of grace are many and various, they are more than can be reckoned up; and even in the work of redemption, there is an admirable variety; many are the things which he has wrought out, brought in, and procured by his precious blood; such as a justifying righteousness, pardon of sin, peace and reconciliation, liberty of access to God, deliverance from all enemies, sin, satan, hell and death, &c. 4. Christ's hands in working out redemption, may be said to be as gold rings set with the beryl. This is one of the precious stones in the high priest's breast-plate, mentioned in Exod. xxviii. 20. and is one of the pearl-foundations of the new Jerusalem, Rev. xxi. 20. The appearance of the wheels in Ezekiel's vision is said to be like it, Ezek. i. 16. and the body of that great person, who appeared to Daniel, Ch. x. 6. is said to be as this stone; so that it is no wonder that Christ's hands should be said to be as gold rings set with it.

The Hebrew word, Tarsish, here used, is sometimes the name of a person, and at other times the name of a place, and is used sometimes to signify the sea; and naturalists tell us, that the best beryl is that which most resembles the colour of the sea: Thus all the three Targums on Exod. xxviii. 20. call it כְּרוֹם יָמָא crum yamma, from its being of a sea colour; and Junius and Tremellius here render it beryllus thalassius, the sea coloured beryl. This stone is found in India, and being carried about by persons, is said to inspire them with courage, to help them to conquer their enemies, and to put an end to strifes and controversies. Christ, whose bands are said to be as gold rings set with beryl, in working out man's redemption, discovered the utmost courage, resolution and magnanimity of mind; when he was bearing his Father's wrath, suffering the severe strokes of justice, and grappling with all his and our enemies, when he was deserted by his friends, forsaken by his God, and insulted by his enemies, he failed not, neither was he discouraged; when he saw that there was none to give him the least assistance, his own arm brought salvation to him; he stood the field, fought the battle alone, got an intire victory over all enemies, sin, satan and the world, saved us out of the hands of them all, and put an end to that grand controversy between God and us, occasioned by sin; he repaired that breach, made up that distance, and reconciled those two contending parties, by making peace between them, through the blood of his cross. 5. Some think that the Chrysolite is here meant, as Ainsworth and others; which is a precious stone of a golden colour, from whence it has its name; it is mentioned in Rev. xxi. 20. and is said to be good against melancholy, fear and folly, and to fill the mind with courage, cheerfulness and wisdom; which being applied to Christ's hands in working out redemption, may shew that Christ not only performed this work with courage, but with chearfulness, and also with the utmost wisdom; his wisdom appears in all the works of his hands, as the psalmist says, Psal. civ. 24. O Lord, how manifold are thy works, in wisdom hast thou made them all; but in none more than in this of redemption, wherein he hath abounded towards us in all wisdom and prudence; this was so well contrived, and so fully effected, that all the divine perfections are glorified in it; he has herein secured the glory of justice and holiness, as well as given the greatest display of his grace and mercy; he has satisfied a broken law, destroy'd sin, and yet saved the sinner; herein appears the manifold wisdom of God; there is such a variety of it, and such a glory in it, that angels are amazed at it, and desire to look into it. Christ, as the great redeemer, is not only the power, but also the wisdom of God, for in him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge; of which he gave the fullest proof when he was concerned in this work. 6. Others think that the Hyacinth or Jacynth, is here intended: Pagnine renders it full of precious stones; like Hyacinth. The Vulgate Latin, and Tigurine versions, render it the same way. This is likewise mentioned in Rev. xxi. 20. 'It is of a violet or purple colour; for which reason the flower so called has its name: Also it is said 'to be good against the bitings of venomous beasts, and being worn on the finger, and put about the neck, keeps strangers safe, and renders them grateful to their host. The bluish and purple colour of this stone, and its ruby veins, which some say it has, may represent a crucified and bleeding Christ, when his precious hands, which are as gold rings, wrought out man's salvation; by whose blue wounds and purple streams of blood souls have a cure for every disease, and particularly for those wounds which their sins, those scorpions within, and Satan that old serpent without, have made in them, for by his stripes we are healed; it is the precious blood of Christ, and spotless righteousness and glorious redemption wrought out thereby, which being applied by the spirit, and laid hold on by faith, preserve souls safe from all enemies and evils, as sin, Satan, law, hell and wrath, and which only render them grateful and acceptable to God; for saints are only accepted in the beloved on the foot of redemption, and upon the account of his justifying righteousness; for the Lord is well pleased for his righteousness sake, because he hath magnified the law, and made it honourable, Isa. xlii. 21. 7. Others have thought, that the Sardonyx is intended, as Cocceius *. This is an Arabian gem, and one of the principal ones; it is a composition of the Sardius, and Onyx stones, as appears from the name; it is of a white and ruddy colour, and much resembles the nail of a man's hand, set in flesh, both for colour and smoothness. This is also mentioned in Rev. xxi. 20. and may represent the glorious deity, innocent humanity, and bloody sufferings of Christ, whose hands have obtained eternal redemption for us; it was necessary that he should die, in order to satisfy for our sins, which he could not have done, had had he had any sin of his own; neither would the sufferings of this innocent person have been sufficient, had he been a meer creature, and not truly God: It is by the precious blood of Christ that we are redeemed, and by the blood of Christ, as of a lamb without spot and blemish; and what made this blood powerful and efficacious to such a purpose, is the influence of the divine nature: All these three may be observed in one verse, Heb. ix. 14.

II. She describes him by his belly, which, she says, is as bright ivory overlaid with sapphires. The <sup>h</sup>generality of ancient interpreters understand by belly, the human nature of Christ, which is expressed by this part, because of the frailty and weakness of it: Christ's human nature, though not attended with sinful, yet with all sinless infirmities; he was encompassed with them, and was a man of sorrows, and acquainted with griefs; and yet, like ivory, was firm, constant and immoveable in suffering; being supported and strengthened by the divine nature, he appeared to be the man of God's right-hand, the son of man whom he made strong for himself; and like bright and white ivory, pure, holy, innocent and spotless; and now like bright ivory overlaid with sapphires, being glorified and exalted at God's right-hand. Thus the sapphire is used to express the glory and majesty of the divine being, in Exod. xxiv. 10.

The Septuagint render it thus, his belly is an ivory box upon a sapphire stone. And this serves very well to represent the belly, and may very aptly be applied to the human nature of Christ, in which the fullness of the Godhead dwells, and displays its glory; but the words may be better rendered, his bowels are as bright ivory, &c. So the same word is translated in ver. 4. and may express the love, grace, mercy, pity and compassion of Christ to poor souls; which may be compared to bright ivory. 1. For the valuableness and excellency of it; the ivory is the tooth of the elephant, and is very valuable: Solomon made himself a throne of it, and overlaid it with gold, i. e. studded it, and enamelled it with gold, as this is said to be with sapphires: Nothing is so valuable as Christ's love; the brightest ivory, the richest jewels, most precious stones, and excellent sapphires, are not to be compared to it; his loving kindness is better than life, or all the things which render life comfortable and delightful. 2. For the purity, sincerity, and chastity of it; there's no spot, stain or blemish of hypocrisy and deceit in it, but like pure bright ivory, is without the least tully or tarnish; nor is there any reason for jealousy of it, both the ivory and the sapphire are observed to be preservatives of chastity; and though God's children are often jealous of Christ's love, yet they have no reason for it, for as he loves them above all others, so he loves none but them in that way; and he rests in his love towards them, and is the same yesterday, to day, and for ever. 3. For the firmness, constancy, and durableness of it; ivory is firm and lasting, Christ's love is so, it is from everlasting to everlasting, always the same, never varies, and will continue so for ever; for having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end. 4. For its reviving, refreshing, and strengthening nature; ivory, to which Christ's bowels are here compared, is said <sup>k</sup> to be a great strengthener of the bowels, and inward parts. Christ's love being shed abroad in our hearts, revives our fainting souls, puts new strength into our graces; and makes us not ashamed or confounded, even in a day of trouble. 5. It is like bright ivory overlaid with sapphires, i. e. either covered with them, as the word signifies, or rather enamell'd with them. Of this precious stone frequent mention is made in scripture; it is used to express the glory of God, Exod. xxiv. 10. and the throne of his majesty is said to be as the appearance of it, Ezek. i. 26. the beauty of the Nazarites is represented by it, Lam. iv. 7. and the glory of the church in the latter day, Isa. liv. 11. it was one of the precious gems in the high priest's breast plate, and one of the foundations of the new Jerusalem. Some of the Jewish writers <sup>l</sup> say, that the two tables in which the law was engraven was made of this; it is a very clear and transparent gem <sup>m</sup>, of a cærulean, or sky colour, shining with golden specks; it is said <sup>n</sup> to help those that are bitten with scorpions, to defend the heart from the infection of poison, and to cure intestine ulcers: This may all serve to set forth the glory and excellency of Christ's love; it is this oil of love, grace, and mercy, which being poured in by the good Samaritan, heals the wounds that sin has made, and preserves from the dreadful effects of its poison and venom. Albertus Magnus says, <sup>o</sup> that the sapphire creates peace and concord, and renders the mind pure and devout to God; but whether this be so or no, it is certain that the love of Christ, discovered to a poor distressed sinner, produces calmness and serenity of mind, creates a peace which passeth all understanding, removes that enmity, and weakens the remains of it, which is naturally in the heart of man against God, Christ, his gospel, people, ways and ordinances; there's nothing attracts our love to Christ as this does, we love him because he first loved us: nor is there any thing that more engages our hearts in acts of obedience to him, than this; it is this which lays us under obligation, constrains us to, and enforces on us a regard to all his commands and ordinances, and makes us most chearful in our observance of them.

But there are some interpreters <sup>p</sup> who think, that not any part of the body is here described as the belly or bowels, but rather that some covering of those parts is intended; and indeed it does not seem so agreeable with the rules of decency, nor consistent with the spouse's modesty, to describe her beloved by those naked parts to the daughters of Jerusalem, any more than it does with the scope of the place, which is to give some distinguishing marks and characters of him to them, that they might know him from another; but these parts being out of sight, and not exposed to public view, a description of them could be of no service to them in this respect; nor indeed, does what is said serve so much to commend the belly, as it does some covering of it. R. Aben Ezra thinks, the girdle about the loins is here meant; and if so, it may intend either Christ's royal girdle, which is a girdle of righteousness and faithfulness; all his regal administrations being performed, as well according to the strictest rules of justice and equity, as with the utmost wisdom and prudence; or else his priestly girdle, which is called a golden one, Rev. i. 13. and is, no doubt, an allusion to what the high priest wore; or else the covering intended may be the embroidered coat of the high priest, which covered his whole body, whose embroidery were holes or incisions, in which, as Jarchi<sup>a</sup> says, were put jewels and precious stones; and so as the church described Christ as a prince before, she is thought to describe him here as a priest: or rather the ephod with the breast-plate is here intended, in which were twelve precious stones, and among the rest, the sapphire on which were engraven the names of the twelve tribes of Israel; and it is certain, that the Targum on this place has reference to it, for it mentions the stones one by one, with the several names of the tribes engraven on them; and this may represent Christ as the great high priest, bearing all his elect ones upon his heart in heaven, having enter'd there in their name, to appear and plead for them, and to take possession of glory for them in their stead, until they are brought into the actual enjoyment of it themselves<sup>c</sup>.

Ver. 15. His legs are as pillars of marble, set upon sockets of fine gold: His countenance is as Lebanon, excellent as the cedars.

THESE words contain the eighth and ninth particular instances of Christ's beauty, given by the church to the daughters of Jerusalem, or distinguishing characters of him, whereby they might know and discern him from all others: And,

- I. She describes him by his legs; which, she says, are as pillars of marble, set upon sockets of fine gold.
- II. By his countenance; which she says is, 1st, As Lebanon. 2<sup>dly</sup>, Excellent as the cedars.

I. She describes him by his legs; which, she says, are as pillars of marble, set upon sockets of fine gold; which is the eighth particular of this glorious description of Christ. The word translated legs may as well be render'd thighs; which may very well be compared to marble pillars, both for form and colour; especially when we consider that it does not appear that the ancient Jews did in common wear any thing upon their thighs and legs, but only sandals upon their feet; or perhaps, by thighs may be meant, the femoralia or garments on the thighs, which were wore by the priests when they ministered in holy things. I have observed, that some interpreters think, that some garment of the high priest, either his girdle, or his embroidered coat, or the ephod, with the breast-plate, is intended by the belly, in the latter part of the preceding verse: So that as Christ was described as a prince before, he's

he's now described as a priest; which description may be still carried on here. These femoralia, or garments for the thighs, were made of fine linen, Exod. xxviii. 42. and so are very aptly represented by white marble; they are also said to be made of fine twined linen, Exod. xxxix. 28. which the Jewish Rabbins<sup>a</sup> say was of thread six times doubled, and therefore these breeches must sit very full and stiff, like pillars of marble; and this may set forth the pure and spotless righteousness of Christ, which is called, in Rev. xix. 8. fine linen, clean and white; 'tis this which covers our nakedness, hides the impurities of our nature, and renders us acceptable unto God. Moreover, below these breeches of the priest, was the hem of the holy robe, round about which were set pomegranates and golden bells, which, perhaps, may be meant by the sockets of fine gold, on which these pillars of marble were set; and may intend the glory and excellency of the righteousness of our great high priest, Christ Jesus.

Moreover, in this description, the church seems to take in thighs, legs and feet; his thighs and legs are compared to pillars of marble, and that very aptly; his feet are intended by the sockets of fine gold, which either respects the sandals bound about the feet with golden ribbands, or the custom of some, who used to adorn their shoes with gold and precious stones; and that nothing may be wanting to set off her beloved, as the most excellent, she represents him as having such sandals or shoes upon his feet. And now Christ's legs being said to be as pillars of marble, &c. may denote,

1st, The strength and power of Christ to bear up and support what is or has been laid upon him. Much of a man's strength is in his legs; these are by Solomon called the strong men, Ecl. xii. 3. and are the pillars and support of the body, which, when they begin to bow themselves, 'tis an indication that this earthly tabernacle is ready to be dissolved. Christ is the rock of ages, in whom is everlasting strength; his legs are as pillars of marble, set upon sockets of fine gold, firm and immovable, lasting and durable. 1. To bear the weight of the whole universe. <sup>a</sup> The earth, with all the inhabitants thereof, would soon be dissolved, did not he bear up the pillars of it; as he has made all things, so he upholds all things by the word of his power; both worlds, with all the created inhabitants of it, have their dependance on him, and are upheld by him; for as he is before all things, so by him do all things consist. 2. To bear the whole weight of the covenant of grace: It was the business of the Levites to bear the ark of the covenant; but Christ is the covenant itself; he is so both materially and fundamentally; he is the matter, sum and substance

Et pedibus niveis fulserunt aurea vincla.

substance of it; he is the basis and foundation of it; all the blessings of it are upon him, and all the promises of it are in him, yea and amen: 'Tis this which makes the covenant of grace, with all its blessings and mercies, sure, and renders it preferable to the covenant of works, because it is established upon better promises, which promises are upon a better foundation, and that is the Lord Jesus Christ. 3. To bear all the persons of the elect. As the legs of a man bear and support the whole body, so Christ's legs, which are as pillars of marble, bear up and support his whole body, the church: Thus Christ bore and represented the persons of the elect, in the everlasting covenant, and received all grace for them; and so he did, when he hung upon the cross, when he died and rose again; and so he does now, he is in heaven, even as Aaron bore the names of the children of Israel upon his breast-plate, for a memorial before the Lord. 4. To bear all their sins and transgressions: So Aaron bore the iniquity of the holy things of the children of Israel; and so did the scape goat bear upon him their iniquities, unto a land not inhabited; and therein were both types of Christ, who was manifested in our nature for this purpose, on whom God the Father laid the iniquity of us all, and who actually bore it in his own body on the tree; and by so doing, made satisfaction for it. 5. To bear all the punishment due to sin: Sin being laid on him, he, as the sinners surety, bore the whole weight of his Father's displeasure for it; he had not the least abatement of his wrath, but suffered the severest strokes of his justice; and yet he failed not, neither was he discouraged, or was not broken; it was enough to have broken the strength of men and angels; but he stood up under it, his legs being as pillars of marble, set upon sockets of fine gold. When God banished Cain from his presence, as an indication of his displeasure for his sin, he cried out, My punishment is greater than I can bear; and indeed, Who can stand in his sight when once he is angry? And yet, What was this to what Christ bore, in the room and stead of the elect? 6. His legs are as pillars of marble, &c. to bear the whole care and government of his church. The government of the church in general, is upon his shoulder; and indeed, no other shoulder is capable of it but his, who is the mighty God, the everlasting Father, and prince of peace: It may be said of him in a much more eminent sense, what Paul said of himself, 2 Cor. xi. 28. that the care of all the churches was upon him; the care of every particular believer, as well as of the church in general, is upon Christ; for they cast their care upon him, who careth for them. 7. They are so, and need be so, to bear all the burdens of his people. There was a complaint of the Jews in Nehemiah's time, Neb. iv. 10. that the strength of the bearer of burdens was decay'd; but no such can be made of Christ, who is the bearer of his peoples burdens; for his legs are as pillars of marble, &c. he has said, Psal. lv. 22. Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee; he has both willingness and ability, a heart and a hand to do it. 8. To bear up his people under all their afflictions, trials and temptations; in all their afflictions he is afflicted; he supports and upholds them then with the right hand of his righteousness; he suffers no temptation to beset them, but what he gives strength proportionate to it, that they may be able to bear it; he comfortably carries them through all the difficulties of life, and will not leave them till he has brought them to glory; for even to boary bairs he will carry them; he has made, and he will bear them. 9. To bear them up and keep them from falling; he is able to do it, and he will do it; he is that sure foundation on which their souls being built, the gates of hell cannot prevail against them; and though they may be attended with many failings and infirmities, yea, with many slips and falls, yet they shall never fall totally and finally, for he upholdeth them with his hand. 10. His legs are as pillars of marble, &c. to bear all the glory of his father's house; for as he builds the temple, 'tis proper that he should bear the glory. Adam had a great deal of glory put upon him, in being made after God's image and likeness, and in being the representative of, and a federal head unto all his posterity, but he being in honour, did not abide long; the crown was too heavy for him, it soon fell from his head, he being a mutable creature; but Christ is the same, yesterday, to day, and for ever; and will for ever continue to bear the glory, of the God-man and mediator, which no mere creature is capable of, being no ways able to effect the work. And now, when we consider all these things, Christ's legs had need be, as indeed they are, as pillars of marble, set upon sockets of fine gold.

2dly, By Christ's legs may be meant, his ways and paths, which he has trod in; for as legs are for the support of the body, so they are likewise the instruments of walking; and may intend, either, 1. Christ's ways of love, grace and mercy in the covenant, whose goings forth in it were from of old, from everlasting; these were like pillars of marble, firm and constant; his counsels of old are faithfulness and truth, and like such, set upon sockets of fine gold, glorious and excellent; the steps which were then taken, the measures and methods that were then concerted, were all to advance the glory of the three divine persons, as well as to bring about and secure the salvation of sinners: Or, 2. The path of the incarnation, which he trod in, as never any did before or since; it was a wondrous stoop, a surprizing instance of his mighty grace, that he should come down from heaven and converse with mortals on earth, in our nature; and the manner in which this was done is no less amazing, as well as it is an indication of his love to his people, to be a partaker of the same flesh and blood with them. Or, 3. His walk and conversation here on earth, which, like pillars of marble, was always upright, even and constant; he never went awry or step'd aside from the path of righteousness and holiness, but always acted in a perfect conformity to the law of God, which he made the rule of his obedience; and upon the whole of his conduct and conversation, there appeared a beauty, glory and lustre, so that his legs looked like marble pillars set upon sockets of fine gold. Or else, 4. His walks in his churches, which are his golden candlesticks, among whom he delights to be, and to whom his presence is very beautiful and glorious, delightful and desirable. Or, 5. His providential dispensations to his people, which are sometimes past finding out; for his way is in the sea, and his path in the great waters, so that his footsteps are not known: He seems sometimes to come forth against his people, in a way of anger and displeasure; and then his feet are like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace, as they are represented in Rev. i. 15. but yet these are, (1.) Like pillars, straight and upright; for he is righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works; and though wicked men, and sometimes God's own children, through perverseness, impatience and unbelief, may say that the Lord's way is not equal, yet his is always equal, and theirs unequal. And, (2.) Like pillars of marble, are firm and constant, for he is in one mind, and who can turn him? And what his soul desireth, even that he doth. And, (3.) They are like such pillars, set upon sockets of fine gold; the basis and foundation of them are his eternal purposes and decrees; for he worketh all things after the counsel of his own will; and these will all appear exceeding beautiful and glorious, when the book of purposes, and the book of providences are opened, and saints behold that delightful harmony and agreement which is between them; then will they sing the song of Moses, and of the Lamb, saying, Just and true are thy ways, thou king of saints, who shall not fear thee, &c. for thy judgments are made manifest, Rev. xv. 3, 4.

3dly, These legs may set forth the power of Christ, in treading under and trampling upon all his and our enemies: So his legs were like pillars of marble, &c. when he hung upon the cross, who then trampled upon and triumphed over sin, satan and the world; and so they are now, he is in heaven, for he must reign until he hath put all his enemies under his feet. Christ's legs and feet, in the government of his church, and in the subduing of his enemies, are not like the legs and feet of Nebuchadnezzar's image, in Dan. ii. 33. whose legs are said to be of iron, and his feet part of iron and part of clay, which were easily demolished and destroyed; but Christ's kingdom being a more glorious, durable and lasting one, yea, an everlasting one, as in ver. 44. therefore his legs are here compared to pillars of marble, and his feet to sockets of fine gold; his head and his feet are both of fine gold, which shews that his kingdom is glorious and excellent, and preferable to all others; and because Christ's legs and feet are such, hence the saints are more than conquerors, and shall have all enemies trodden under their feet.

4thly, Some by these legs understand Christ's apostles, and the ministers of the gospel; who bear the name of Christ, carry his gospel, run to and fro, and diffuse the savour of his knowledge in every place; are pillars in his house, are instruments to support and strengthen his interest; and are marble ones, constant and immoveable in their work, cannot be diverted from it, either by the frowns or flatteries of the world; and in the discharge of their work, are very beautiful, how beautiful are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings! and what makes their feet so beautiful? because they are as it were shod with gold; they are shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, with the golden truths of the gospel; and this makes them look like pillars of marble, set upon sockets of fine gold.

II. She describes him by his countenance, which is the ninth particular instanced in: By this is meant his whole shape, form, appearance or personage; and this she says is,

First,

First, As Lebanon, which intends either,

1st, The mountain of Lebanon, which was a large and goodly mountain, abounding with fruitful and fragrant trees, situated on the north side of the land of Canaan; to which Christ may be compared, 1. For the height of it: Christ, as God, is over all, blessed for ever: As God-man and mediator, he has a name given him above every name; he is higher than the kings of the earth, or than all the angels in heaven; he is of a more excellent nature, and has obtained a more excellent name than they. 2. For pleasantness; Lebanon is called by Moses, that goodly mountain, which, before his death, he had a great desire to see. Christ's countenance, form or personage, is more glorious and excellent than Lebanon, or any other mountain whatever; he is the brightness of his father's glory, and the express image of his person. 3. For the fruitfulness of it: Lebanon was a fruitful mountain for vines and cedars; on Christ all those trees of righteousness grow, which are the Lord's planting; from him they receive their life and nourishment, their verdure and fruitfulness, and by him they are supplied with all needful grace, for in him all fulness of it dwells. 4. For the fragrantcy of it: Hence we read, that the saints smell is as Lebanon, Hos. xiv. 6. the trees and plants which grew there, were very odoriferous, and diffused a grateful smell to passers by. Christ's person, grace, righteousness, sacrifice, and all that belong to him are exceeding savoury, to believers; and hence it is that he is in this song compared to spikenard, myrrh, camphire, the rose and lily, &c. Or else,

2<sup>dly</sup>, It may be meant of the forest of Lebanon. * Some think that she has a regard in this part of the description to the attire of the high priest, in whose garments were curiously wrought the figures of animals, trees and flowers; so that when he had his robes on him, he might be thought, in some measure, to resemble a forest, and particularly this of Lebanon; which was esteemed the most excellent; and so may be expressive of the glory and excellency of Christ, as our great high priest, who far exceeds Aaron and all his sons. Or else,

3<sup>dly</sup>, It may be meant of the temple, which is sometimes called Lebanon, as in Zech. xi. 1. and it may be very well called so, because it was chiefly made of the wood of Lebanon: And Christ may be very well compared unto it, for the stateliness and magnificence of it, as well because that all that belonged to it, or were performed in it, were eminently typical of him; and did gloriously prefigure him; and hence he calls his body the temple, in John, ii. 19.

Secondly, She says that his countenance is excellent as the cedars which grew in Lebanon; and her meaning is, that as the cedars in Lebanon were the choicest, and were preferable to all other trees, so was Christ her beloved unto her. Saints are compared to cedars. See Psal. xcii. 12. and Numb. xxiv. 5, 6. But Christ is the chief cedar, the choicest of all the cedars, in whom these are planted and take root, and by whom they are made fruitful: To these sort of trees Christ may be compared for their tallness, stateliness, fragrantcy and durableness; but these and all other things falling short to express his beauty, and set off his greatness, she concludes the description in the following words.

Ver.

* Bp. Patrick in loc.

Ver. 16. Former part. His mouth is most sweet, yea, he is altogether lovely.

IN these words we have,

- I. The tenth and last particular instance of Christ's beauty, or distinguishing character of him, whereby he might be known from all other beloveds; his mouth is most sweet, or sweetnesses.
- II. A comprehensive summary of all his excellencies and glories; yea, he is altogether lovely.

I. She here describes him by his mouth, which, she says, is most sweet, yea, sweetness itself, and that in the highest degree of it: And by Christ's mouth here may be meant, either,

1st The words of his mouth *. In this sense is the word used, in Prov. v. 3. and viii. 7. and by them may be meant, the doctrines of the gospel, which are the gracious words that proceed out of Christ's mouth; and are sweet to a believer's taste, administer spiritual refreshment to his soul, and are preferred by him to his necessary food: Likewise the precious promises of it are the words of Christ's mouth, which if ever spoke to any purpose to a believer, they are spoke by Christ; and when they are so, they are exceeding sweet, and fill the soul with an unspeakable satisfaction. The kind invitations of the gospel, also are not to be excluded, such as Isa. lv. 1. Mat. xi. 28. Rev. xxii. 17. which manifestly speak out the love and grace of Christ to sinners; and when applied with power by the blessed spirit, are exceeding sweet, comfortable and refreshing to the consciences of distressed sinners. Moreover, the comforts which Christ speaks to his people, either by his spirit or by his ministers, may be included here; as well as his commands, which also are the words of his mouth, which he has enjoined us the observation of, and which are no ways grievous, but joyous to a believer; especially when he has the presence of Christ, the discoveries of his love, and is under the influences of the spirit of grace whilst he is engaged in acts of obedience to them: These statutes and judgments of the Lord, as they are right and just in themselves, so they are to believers, more to be desired than gold, yea, than fine gold; sweeter also than the boney or the honey comb; for such is the grace of Christ, that what he has made the believer's duty, he also has made his privilege; and hence it is, that all wisdom's ways are ways of pleasantness to him, and the words of Christ's mouth are carefully regarded by him. Or,

2<sup>dly</sup>, The kisses of Christ's mouth may be here intended, or the sensible manifestations of his love and grace to souls, which are what the church earnestly desired, in Chap. i. 2. than which, nothing can be more delightful to the saints: These give them more pleasure and satisfaction than all the things this world can afford; but both these seem to be intended before, viz. the words of his mouth by his lips, and the manifestations of his love by

3dly, Some think, that Christ's voice and the sound of it are here meant: This is not omitted in that glorious description of Christ which John gives, in Rev. i. and which bears some resemblance to this, and is there said to be as the sound of many waters. Now if it is not intended here, it does not appear in this whole description; and whether the word be translated, the throat, mouth, or roof of the mouth, as it may be either, they are all the instruments of the voice, and so may be expressive of it. Moreover, nothing is more common with lovers than to admire each other's voice. Christ was taken with the church's voice, and therefore desired to hear it, in Ch. ii. 14. saying, Let me hear thy voice—for sweet is thy voice; and no wonder then that the church should admire Christ's voice, and that it should make such sweet musick in her ears, as it seems from hence, it did; his mouth or voice is most sweet, I am charmed with it, and so would you, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, did ye but hear it.

The voice of the law is harsh and unpleasant; it pronounces guilty, curses and condemns; it is a voice of wrath and terror; it is a soul-cutting and soul-killing one; it is a voice of words, and of words that are not grateful; and therefore those who had once heard it, entreated that it might not be spoken to them any more: But the voice of Christ in the gospel, is exceeding sweet, delightful and alluring; and no wonder it is so, for it is a voice of love, grace and mercy; it speaks peace and pardon, and brings the agreeable news of life and salvation by Christ, to lost sinners; it is also the voice of the church's beloved, of him whom she loves with all her heart and soul, and therefore must needs be sweet unto her; it is what she is well acquainted with, perfectly knows, and can distinguish from a stranger's; nor is she ever more delighted, than when under the sound of it: Hence, in Ch. viii. 13. she says, as it is commonly understood, O thou that dwellest in the gardens, where the companions hearken to thy voice, and are charmed and ravished with those warbling notes of thine, cause me also to hear it; for no consort of musick whatever is equal to it.

4thly, The word translated mouth, may be render'd taste, as it is in Ch. ii. 3. or rather the palate or roof of the mouth, which is the instrument of tasting, as it is in Ch. vii. 9. and as the roof of the church's mouth is there commended by Christ, Why may not the roof of Christ's mouth be here commended by the church? Christ has a palate or taste, that, as Job says, Ch. vi. 30. can discern perverse things; distinguish between the precious and the vile, knows the difference between the good and bad, and can tell what food is best for his people, and what a portion of it is necessary for them, and therefore gives to every one of them their portion of meat in due season; he has a taste that disrelishes all carnal and earthly things, even in his own people, as well as others, that savours nothing but what is spiritual; a believer being a compound of flesh and spirit, the spiritual part of him savours the things of the spirit, and the carnal part the things of the flesh; flesh; but Christ having no flesh, no carnal part in him, savours nothing but the things of the spirit: Hence he provides no food for his people but what is wholesome in itself, and savoury to them; and they may very safely eat of it, when Christ, whose taste is most sweet, has prepared it for them, set it before them, and bid them welcome; nay more, he himself sits at the table, and sups with them and they with him. Again, his taste is most sweet, i. e. the taste of him is so; Come, taste and see, says the psalmist, Psal. xxxiv. 8. that the Lord is good; and every regenerate soul finds him so: Christ, and all of Christ is sweet to a believer's taste, his person, grace and righteousness; what he is in himself, and what he has done for his people, are all so; and hence the church could say, in Ch. ii. 3. by good experience, His fruit was sweet unto my taste. Or else, 5thly, And lastly, By Christ's mouth may be meant, the breath of his mouth, which being most sweet, wonderfully recommends him to the church's love and affection. Job's breath was strange to his wife, but Christ's is sweet to his people, nay, sweetness itself; and by it we may understand, either, 1. The expressions of Christ's love to his people: Wicked men breathe out threatnings, cruelty, ruin and destruction to God's children; but Christ breathes out nothing but love, grace and mercy; fury is not in him, but mercy is, for with the Lord is mercy, and with him is plenteous redemption; it is true, the breath of the Lord is like a stream of brimstone, even an overflowing stream, to destroy the wicked, for with the breath of his lips shall he slay them; but it is like an overflowing stream of love, grace and mercy, which abounds and superabounds towards his people in their everlasting salvation. Or, 2. It may be understood of Christ's mediation. The prayers of believers are called their breathing, in Lam. iii. 56. Christ's prayers, mediation and intercession, upon the account of his people, may bear the same name. Now this is most sweet, and is therefore compared to incense; it is sweet and acceptable unto God, and what sweetens and perfumes the saints sacrifices of prayer and praise; and hence it is that the prayers of the saints are called odours. See Rev. v. 8. and viii. 3, 4. Though, 3. A late writer thinks, that this may as well be referred to Christ's breathing upon his apostles, when he bid them receive the Holy Ghost, which was one of the finishing actions of his life on earth, as this is the finishing part of his description here; and indeed, Christ's breathing the gifts and graces of his holy spirit upon his apostles then, and upon his churches and ministers in all ages since, he having the fulness of it with him, renders him exceeding amiable and lovely to them.

II. She sums up the whole character, and closes the description of him, in saying, Yea, he is altogether lovely, or he is all desire, as the Septuagint read it, or all desires, as it is in the Hebrew text; he is exceeding desirable to believers; there is none in heaven or in earth they desire besides him; and one of the characters which he was known by, under the old Testament, was, the desire of all nations: And now what makes him so desirable to the church and to all believers, are, 1. The divine excellencies and perfections which appear in his person; for in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. There is no perfection or excellency in the deity, but what may be found in Christ; and if so, there can be nothing that is excellent in any creature, either in heaven or earth, but what is eminently so in him, and therefore he must needs be a desirable person. 2. The mediatorial qualifications he is possessed of; he has a fulness of the gifts and graces of the spirit in him, which qualify him as man and mediator for his office; he has a fulness of fitness for it, and a fulness of abilities to carry him through it, which render him a suitable and a desirable high priest unto us. 3. The fulness of grace, life and salvation in him, makes him altogether desirable to souls; when they can see nothing in themselves, and all in Christ, an emptiness in the creature, and a fulness in him, that it is in vain to expect salvation elsewhere; but that there is enough in him to answer all their wants, present and future, every thing that will make them comfortable here, and happy hereafter; how can he be otherwise than exceeding desirable to them? 4. His agreeable carriage and deportment towards souls, render him so; which is so wise and prudent, so loving, tender and compassionate, so meek and humble, so courteous and affable, and attended with such an air of familiarity, that it at once fixes our eyes upon him, attracts our affections to him, and makes him all desires unto us. 5. The names and titles which he bears: He has a name that is above every name, which awes and commands our fear, being full of majesty; and he has a name which draws our love, being full of sweetness, which is that sweet and precious name Jesus, which is as ointment poured forth, and therefore do the virgins love him; and so are all those names which are given him, in Isa. ix. 6. 6. The characters he bears, and the relations he stands in to his people, make him exceeding desirable to them; and indeed, how can he be otherwise than so unto them, when he stands in the relations, and bears the characters of a tender husband, an indulgent father, a loving brother, and a faithful friend?

Again, If we read the words as they are translated in our bibles, he is altogether lovely, we may observe, 1. That Christ, and all of Christ, is lovely to believers; he is so in his person, in all his offices, in his people and in his ordinances; nay, the worst of Christ, or what may seem the most scaring and frightful to others, is lovely to the saints, as the cross of Christ, reproaches and sufferings on his account; for though they are not lovely in themselves, yet they are for his sake, and are therefore preferred by believers, to the pleasures of sin, and profits of this world. See Heb. xi. 25, 26. 2. That there is a perfect loveliness in Christ; every thing in him is lovely, and there is nothing lovely but what is in him; he is comprehensively so. If the church is a perfection of beauty, and is perfectly comely, through the comeliness which Christ has put upon her; he must needs be so from whom she has it, even altogether lovely. 3. That he is so to all: He is lovely to his father, as he is his own son, the dear son of his love; and as he is man and mediator, engaged in our cause, as having assumed our nature, and obtained eternal redemption for us; he is so to all the holy angels, many of which descended at his incarnation, and sang his praise, ministered to him in his state of humiliation, ation, attended on him when tempted in the wilderness, and when in his agonies in the garden, and gazed with wonder and delight upon his glorious person, as they accompanied him in his ascension to glory: Hence this is said to be one branch of the great mystery of godliness, that God, who was manifest in the flesh, was seen of angels, and appeared lovely to them: and so he is to all the saints, for to them that believe he is precious; and indeed, is so to all but Christless sinners, who see no beauty, form or comeliness in him, wherefore they should desire him. 4. As Christ is lovely in himself, and lovely to all others, so it is he that makes all the saints lovely to God; there is nothing in them, or done by them, that can render them grateful to him; they are only accepted with him in the beloved; he is pleased with Christ and his righteousness, and with them as considered therein. He must needs be lovely, yea, altogether lovely, that makes all the saints lovely too.

Now the church having given such an ample description of her beloved to the daughters of Jerusalem, they might from henceforward cease to wonder, why she, who was the fairest among women, was so deeply fallen in love with Christ; why she made such a stir about him, was so much concerned at his absence, was so diligent in her search of him, and gave them so strict a charge concerning him; as well as they need not now be any longer at a loss to know who and what he was, she having given such distinguishing characters of him; and having done this, she closes all with claiming an interest in him, and appropriating him to her own soul, in the latter part of this verse, she having a clear sight of him, and her faith more strengthened in him.

Ver. 16. Latter part. — This is my beloved, and this is my friend, O daughters of Jerusalem.

THE church having given a large description of Christ, in the preceding verses, to the satisfaction of the enquiring daughters of Jerusalem, closes the account of him with a comfortable appropriation of him to her own soul, and a holy boasting of him before others, which she does by considering him under those two characters;

I. As her beloved.

II. As her friend.

I. She points him out to the daughters of Jerusalem, and distinguishes him from all other beloveds, and boasts of him in the views of her interest in him, under the character of her beloved; which shews, 1. That her love and affection to him were strong and ardent, such as many waters could not quench, nor any thing separate from; though she was forsaken by him, and had suffered much from the watchmen and keepers of the walls, for the sake of him; she had sought him with a great deal of care and diligence to little purpose; she had called aloud, and with great importunity herself, and had made use of the interest of others with him, and yet could not prevail upon him to show himself; she could neither see him, hear him, or get any tidings of him; yet notwithstanding all this, he is her beloved still. 2. It bespeaks the strength of her faith in him; for notwithstanding the sense of sins and infirmities, which she now had, the desertions, temptations, sufferings, &c. which she was attended with, yet she could say, This is my beloved: this is the trial of faith; and herein lies the glory and excellency of it, when a soul can believe in the dark, or as Abraham did, believe in hope against hope; herein the church acted in some conformity to Christ her head, who, when upon the cross, in the agonies of death, deserted by his friends, and forsaken by his God, yet nevertheless could say, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? 3. This shews that Christ only was her beloved; that she had singled him out from all others, and that he was, in her esteem, preferable to all others: There is none among all the angels in heaven, nor any among all the sons of men on earth, neither is there any creature enjoyment whatever, comparable to him; and it is as if she should say, let others take their beloveds to themselves, the idols of their own hearts, their carnal lusts and sensual pleasures, whom they have chose; for my part I ingenuously confess that this excellent person, whom I have just now described unto you, is only my beloved; him I have chose, and I desire no other; and now I leave you to judge whether there is any comparison between him and others. But having met with this character already in this song, I shall not any longer insist on it now, but proceed,

II. To consider the other character which she gives of him; this is my friend. There is a mutual friendship between Christ and believers; he calls them his friends in ver. 1. of this chapter, as the church does him in this; and it is worthy of observation, that the very same characters of beloved and friend, which Christ gives to his church there, are given to him by his church here; it being usual for them in this song to take up each others words, and return them. This character of a friend, undoubtedly suits well with Christ; in opening of which, I shall endeavour, First, To give some instances and proofs of Christ's friendship to his people. Secondly, to shew the transcendent excellency of this friend. And, Thirdly, Consider in what manner the church here delivers herself.

First, It will be proper to give some instances of Christ's friendship to his church and people; from whence it will manifestly appear, that he justly deserves such a character. And, 1. His engaging as a surety for them, is a manifest indication of it; when our cause was desperate, he engaged in it; when justice was ready to give the blow our transgressions deserved, he interposed and averted it, and took it upon himself; when he knew that we should run through all our stock, and become bankrupts, he became our bondsmen, and engaged to pay the whole debt; when he saw that we should fall into the depths of sin and misery, he undertook to bring us out of them, cleanse us from all sin, clothe us with his righteousness, and safely conduct us to glory: And must not all this be esteemed a proof of Christ's friendship to us?

us? 2. His dying for us is another: This is the greatest act of friendship among men, for one man to die for another; Greater love hath no man than this, says Christ, John xv. 13. that a man lay down his life for his friends; but Christ has given a greater instance of friendship than this, in that he has laid down his life for his enemies; for when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his son: O matchless love! unparallel'd friendship!

3. He has paid all our debts; our sins are called so in scripture, and a large score of them we have run; we owe ten thousand talents, and have not one farthing to pay; and to prison we must have gone, where we should have lain until we had paid the uttermost farthing, had not Christ engaged to do it, which he has actually done by making satisfaction to law and justice; on the account of which, God the Father has cancelled the bond, cross'd the debt-book, and discharged both sinner and surety; it was an act of friendship now, to be bound for us, but still a greater to pay the whole debt.

4. He has purchased our persons, and procured all things needful for us; we are not our own, but are bought with a price, which price is not corruptible things, as silver and gold, but the precious blood of Christ Jesus, which he has shed for the ransom of us: For a king to give a large sum of money for the ransom of any of his subjects out of Algiers, or any other place of slavery, is an instance of his beneficence, humanity and friendship to them; but was he to give himself a ransom for them, it would be an unheard of one; but Christ has done this for his people, and thereby redeemed them from the slavery of the law, sin, satan and the world; and not only this, but has washed them from their sins in his own blood, stripp'd them of their filthy garments, and clothed them with change of raiment; nay, has procured an inheritance for them, of which he now gives them the pledge and earnest, and e'er long will put them into the full possession of it: And now to do all this for persons who are intirely undeserving of it, is an instance of friendship indeed!

5. Not only so, but he is also gone to glory, to take possession of it in our name, room and stead, that so we may not be under any fear of losing it, or of being by any means deprived of it, and in so doing, acts the part of a loving brother, a trusty co-heir, and faithful friend; as well as he is gone thither also to prepare a place for us, that it may be ready for us, when we, by his spirit and grace are made ready for that.

6. His acting the part of an intercessor and advocate for us with the Father, is another instance of his friendship; he appears in the presence of God for us, presents our services and petitions to him, pleads for every blessing we stand in need of, for converting, pardoning, adopting, sanctifying and glorifying grace, and answers all satan's charges and accusations; and in so doing, shews himself friendly to us.

7. He supplies all our wants; he has all grace treasured up in his person for this purpose, and he does not withhold it from his people; but at proper times, chearfully and freely distributes it, according as their wants and necessities require; and this he does, not merely for their importunities-sake, but because they are his friends; when disconsolate, he comforts them; when tempted, he succours them; when distressed, he relieves them; when hungry, he feeds them; when sick and wounded, he heals them, and discharges all the good offices of a friend unto them.

8. He shews his friendship to us, and maintains it by the kind and comfortable visits which he makes to us ; for though he may absent himself for some time, yet he will not leave us comfortless, but will come and see us, and visit us with his salvation ; which is such an astonishing piece of friendship, that we have reason to say as the Psalmist, Psal. viii. 4. What is man that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man that thou visitest him? 9. Whenever he pays those visits, it is with such an air of freedom and familiarity, as renders them exceeding delightful, and justly entitles him to this character ; it was his free, courteous and affable deportment to men in the days of his flesh, which occasioned the pharisees, by way of reproach, to call him a friend of publicans and sinners ; and so free and familiar are his converse with his people, in a spiritual way ; he talks with them as one friend may with another ; he walks with them, nay, he sits down at table with them, sups with them, and they with him. 10. He shews himself to be a friend unto them, and that he looks upon them to be his friends, by disclosing the secrets of his grace unto them : Hence says he to his disciples, John xv. 15. I call you not servants ; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth ; but I have called you friends ; for all things that I have heard of my Father, I have made known unto you : He lay in his Father's bosom, and so was privy to all his secret thoughts, counsels, purposes and decrees, and makes a discovery of them to us, so far as is needful to advance our good and his glory ; for the secret of the Lord is with them that fear him : And he will shew them his covenant, Psal. xxv. 14.

And lastly, His friendship appears in the good and wholesome counsel which he gives unto us ; which being taken, is always useful, and infallibly succeeds, being given with the utmost wisdom, and the greatest faithfulness ; of which, see an instance in Rev. iii. 18. Nay, his reproofs for sin, as well as his advice in distress, are exceeding friendly, and ought to be taken so ; for, as the wiseman says, Prov. xxvii. 5, 6. Open rebuke is better than secret love. Faithful are the wounds of a friend ; but the kisses of an enemy are deceitful. Thus much may suffice for some instances and proofs of Christ's friendship to his church and people. I come now,

Secondly, To shew the transcendent excellency of this friend ; this is my friend ; he is a nonsuch ; there is none like him, or to be compared with him ; for, 1. He is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother ; which may be expressive of that near union there is between Christ and believers ; they are as if but one soul actuated them, and indeed, but one spirit does, which is in Christ without measure, and in believers, in measure ; for he that is joined unto the Lord is one spirit. Christ stands in a nearer relation than that of a brother, to his church ; he is her head and husband, her bosom-friend, she is flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bone ; though all these relations fall short of fully expressing the nearness, strictness and indissolubleness of this union : Or else, this character may intend that sympathy and affection which Christ bears to his people in all their afflictions, sorrows, sufferings, temptations, desertions, sins and infirmities ; as well as signify this close adherence to our cause, who having once undertook it, never left it till he had compleated what he had engaged to do ; all which shews the transcendent excellency of this friend. 2. He is a constant friend, one that loves at all times ; he was a friend to us, when we were enemies to him ; and merely by his love and acts of friendship to us, he overcame us, slew the enmity of our natures, and of enemies made us friends ; and continues to be a friend to us in all the adversities and afflictions of life. When men are in prosperity, they have usually many friends ; but when the day of adversity comes upon them, they soon forsake them ; but Christ does not treat his people so, he is a friend to them in adversity, as well as in prosperity ; he knows their souls then, when no body else will ; he owns them for his own, and treats them as his friends, and so he will continue to do, even until death ; and at that time will not fail to shew himself friendly to them, no more than he will at the day of judgment, when he will publicly own them before angels and men, to be his friends ; set the crown of righteousness upon their heads, and give them an admittance into his Father's kingdom and glory. 3. He is a faithful friend ; we may safely tell him all the secrets of our hearts, he will not betray us ; we may trust him with our all, he will never fail us ; and though the prophet says, Mic. vii. 5. Trust not in a friend, and put not confidence in a guide ; yet we may safely trust in this our friend, the Lord Jesus Christ, who will be our almighty God, and our trusty and faithful friend and guide, even unto death. 4. He is a rich friend ; such an one is often useful and needful : A man may have a friend that has a heart to help him, but not in a capacity ; but Christ, as he is heartily willing to help us, so he has an ability to do it ; he is possess'd of unsearchable riches, and these he distributes among his friends ; for it is from those riches in glory, which are in Christ's hands, that all the wants of his people are supplied. 5. He is an everlasting friend : A man may have a friend, but this friend may die, and then all his dependance on him is gone ; but Christ ever lives, and ever lives to be a friend unto his people ; death parts the best friends, and puts them into an incapacity of serving each other ; but here is no fear or danger of this in Christ, over whom death shall no more have the dominion. 6. He is an unchangeable friend ; he is always the same, yesterday, to day, and for ever. Sometimes little trifling things separate chief friends, but nothing can separate Christ and believers ; his mind never changes, his affections never cool, nor are the communications of friendship ever cut off ; his ears are not open to every idle story, nor is he tempted to break off friendship with his people, by their unkindnesses and ingratitude unto him. But,

Tbirdly, A little to consider the manner in which the church delivers her self in these words, which appears to be, 1. In the strength of faith ; she could comfortably appropriate Christ to herself, under each of the characters here mentioned ; and though she had not the sensible manifestations of Christ's love to her, which she was desirous of, and had not those visible instances of his friendship she had formerly experienced, yet she did not doubt but that he was both her beloved and her friend. 2. She seems to speak in an exulting and rejoicing manner ; her soul was filled with joy unspeakable and full of glory, as an effect of her faith, in an unseen Jesus ; and indeed, she had all the reason in the world to rejoice in the views of her interest in such a beloved, and in such a friend, whom she had before described. 3. She seems also to speak in a kind of boasting manner, this is my beloved, and this is my friend; and indeed, believers may do so; for though they may not glory in themselves, nor in any thing done by them, yet they may in Christ, and in what he has done for them; and so the psalmist David did Psalm xxxiv. 2. who says; My soul shall make her boast of the Lord: And thus the church did here, before the daughters of Jerusalem; and what effect this whole discourse of her's had upon them, may be seen in the following words.

C H A P. VI.

Ver. 1. Whither is thy beloved gone, O thou fairest among women? Whither is thy beloved turned aside? that we may seek him with thee.

THE church having answered the former question of the daughters of Jerusalem, to their satisfaction, by giving them an ample account of her beloved, what he was, they proceed to another question, and ask, whither he was gone, which we have in this verse: In which may be consider'd,

- I. The title or appellation they give her, or their manner of addressing her; O thou fairest among women.
- II. A question proposed by them to her, which is also repeated; Whither is thy beloved gone? Whither is thy beloved turned aside?
- III. The end of their asking this question; that we may seek him with thee?

I. The title or appellation which they give her is the fairest among women; which is, no doubt, designed to express the exceeding greatness of her beauty, women being the fairest of human race, and she the fairest of all that sex; she was in their eye the perfection of beauty, and therefore they give her this character; and they were not mistaken in it, for Christ gives her the very same encomium, and that in the same words, in Chap. i. 8. But now we must not understand this of her, as considered in herself, neither did the daughters of Jerusalem so understand it, who had been better inform'd from her own mouth; for she had told them that she was black in herself, though comely in Christ; nor is it to be understood of her outward appearance in the world; for under that consideration she appears also black with reproaches, scandals, persecutions and afflictions; but this character suits her as she is consider'd in Christ her head, as justified by his righteousness, washed in his blood, and sanctified by his spirit. It may also be observed, that these persons continued in their esteem of her; for the same character they give her here, they gave her when they proposed the first question to her, in Chap. v. 9. nay, perhaps their esteem of her, and value for her, might rise higher than heretofore, they having a clearer knowledge of Christ than they had before; for as our knowledge of Christ and love to him increase, so do our love unto and our esteem for his people; and it is very probable, that the beauty and loveliness which they saw in her, drew their pity and compassion towards her, so as to take notice of her case, condole her misfortunes in the loss of so excellent cellent a person, and offer their service to assist her in the search of him. Likewise, no doubt, but the veneration and esteem which they had for her person, made them more carefully attend to what she said concerning her beloved; for thus it is with persons under the preaching of the gospel; if they come prejudiced against the person who ministers, they take but little notice of what is said, unless it be to calumniate and reproach, and so reap but little advantage from it; when on the other hand, if persons come, not only unprejudiced against, but having a veneration and respect for the minister of the gospel; they generally give the greater heed unto, and are most likely to profit by his ministrations.

Moreover, the daughters might make use of this title or appellation in their addressees to assure her that they were serious, and in good earnest in asking this question, as well as in the former; and that it was not to indulge a vain curiosity in themselves, nor designed for her disadvantage, but rather the contrary.

II. Here is a question put by them, Whither is thy beloved gone? <sup>a</sup> Which way did he take? What course did he steer? On which hand did he turn when he withdrew from thy door? Which question is repeated, though another <sup>b</sup> word is used, yet to the same purpose, Whither is thy beloved turned aside? Which way did he look? Which way did he turn his face when he turned it from thee? Now, 1. The putting of this question, and not insisting any longer upon the former, or upon the explication of any branch of her answer to it, supposes that they were intirely satisfied with it; therefore the question is not now, who or what her beloved was, for they knew that full well, from the description she had given of him; but now the question is, Whither is he gone? This may teach us, that when younger Christians have any doubts, scruples, cases of conscience, or questions relating to faith or experience, to the person, office and grace of Christ, or to any part of the great mystery of godliness, to be resolved, they should make their application to elder ones: This method these young converts, or daughters of Jerusalem, took here, which God was pleased to bless and succeed for their increase in light and knowledge, and for the stirring up of their affections and desires after the Lord Jesus; and may serve to encourage the private conferences and conversations of the saints with each other; which when carried on in an agreeable manner, when filled with spiritual discourses, and taken up with asking and answering proper questions relating to faith or experience, are highly well pleasing to God, and tend much to the edifying of one another. This may also serve as a direction to ministers to insist chiefly upon the glories and excellencies of Christ; for this is the way of preaching, which God owns and blesses for the conversion of sinners, and consolation of saints; the church's insisting on this subject, was made of great use to these persons, to draw out their love to Christ, and to make further enquiries after him. 2. It may be observed from this question, that when Christ is known, who he is, and what he is, the next question is, where he is, and how he may be come at? Whilst persons are insensible of their wretched state by nature, they see no need of Christ; and whilst they are ignorant of him, they have no value for him, nor desire after him, ignoti nulla cupido; there's no desire after an unknown thing; an unknown Christ is an undesired Christ: The reason why souls, in a state of nature, seek not after God, is, because they have no understanding of him; There is none that understandeth, says the apostle, Rom. iii. 11. there is none that seeketh after God: The same reason holds here, with respect to Christ; for whilst souls remain strangers to the beauties and glories of Christ's person, they will have no value for him, nor make any enquiry after him; but as for those that know the Lord, they will follow on to know him, and make use of all means appointed for that purpose; for the more a soul knows of Christ, the more it desires to know; mere speculative notions of his person, without knowledge of interest in him, and communion with him, will not satisfy them; an account of him by hearsay, though exceeding ravishing and delightful to them, is not enough without seeing of him; for where Christ's worth is once known, there is no contentment without the enjoyment of him; when he is once discovered as the pearl of price, the soul is willing to run all risks, endure all hardships, part with every thing that is near and dear, so it may but be posselt of him; its language is, Give me Christ or I die; ten thousand worlds, if I had them, for an interest in this glorious person: This seems to be the case of the daughters of Jerusalem here. 3. The repetition of this question, shews that they were serious and in good earnest, and did not speak <sup>c</sup> sarcastically, and that they were impatient until they received an answer; Whither is thy beloved gone? Whither is thy beloved turned aside? pr'y-thee give us an answer speedily, keep us not in suspense; thou hast given us such a character of his person, that we long to see him, and are uneasy until thou givest us some notice of the place whither he is retired, that we may, along with thee, be searching after him. 4. There may be some knowledge of Christ, love to him, and desires after him, when there is but little faith in him that is discernable; all the graces of the spirit are implanted at one and the same time; but they do not all appear at once, in their actings upon Christ; love and affection to Christ, and desires after him, appear before faith does; so they did in these persons, they had got some further knowledge of Christ from the church's description of him, were filled with greater love and affections to him, and had more ardent desires after him, and yet had but little faith in him; for they could not say, that he was their beloved; and therefore, as one <sup>d</sup> well observes, they do not say, where is our beloved gone, but where is thy beloved gone. 5. It appears that they were willing to take the least hints, nay, even conjectures, that if it was possible, they might improve them towards finding him, Whither is thy beloved gone? Canst thou not give us some hints of it? Canst thou not guess which way he took? Which shews how intent they were of using all means, so that they might but find him; let it be which way it would, they were resolved to pursue it, could they but have the least notice of it, whither it was to the right-hand or left, backwards or forwards. 6. Their putting this question to her, shews that she was, or at least, that they thought she was capable of giving giving them some directions, though she was at the same time destitute of his presence; and it seems she was, by the answer she gives them in the following verse. The church knew where Christ usually retired, and granted his gracious presence to his people; and though he was not willing, at present, to shew himself to her, yet she did not know, but he might to them, and therefore directs them; nay, sometimes believers are capable of advising and directing others, when they cannot take advice themselves.

III. The end they propose in asking this question, is, that they might seek him with her; which may be considered as a motive to prevail upon her to comply with their request; for this shews that they were serious and in good earnest; that their end was not mere speculation, but practice, which indeed ought to be the end of all our enquiries; that it was their purpose and resolution to seek him; they had agreed and resolved among themselves to do it; for so the words may be read, and we will seek him with thee; and if thou wilt tell us which way he went, it will lay us under an obligation to make good our resolutions; nay, it shews also, that it was her good they had in view, as much as their own, and self-interest goes a great way; so that put all together, it is no wonder that she readily, and without any hesitation, answers the question. Now this being the frame of soul that these daughters of Jerusalem were brought into through her discourse concerning Christ, and seeking Christ being the thing which they had in view, and were desirous of being directed in, may lead us to observe the following things. 1. That the end of setting forth the excellencies of Christ, whether in private conversation, or in the publick ministry, is to set souls a seeking after him; for this purpose the ministers of the gospel insist upon the glories of Christ's person, the excellency of his righteousness, the efficacy of his blood, and the fulness of his grace; it was with this view that the church took so much pains, and spent so much time in discoursing concerning this excellent person, her beloved, which had its answerable success. 2. It is very discouraging to seek Christ and not know where he is: 'Tis true the church knew where Christ used to retire, when he withdrew himself, and therefore knew where to seek him, in hopes of finding him; but the daughters of Jerusalem were unacquainted therewith, and therefore it was very proper for them to put such a question, previous to their seeking of him. 3. This should be the principal thing we should have in view in all religious duties, seeking and seeing of Jesus; this is that one thing that should be uppermost in our hearts and desires, when concerned in the duties of hearing, reading, praying, meditating and conferring, that we may behold the king in his beauty. 4. Our seeking of Christ should be jointly and together; we should seek him, not separately, but with the church: Though this does not exclude our seeking him alone in our closets, and in our families, yet there is a social part of worship that we should be concerned in jointly, in which we are to worship the Lord with one shoulder and one consent, and not forsake the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some too often is. 5. We should should seek Christ in his ordinances, and where his church seeks him : We cannot expect the presence of Christ, when we run away from his church and ordinances, or when we seek him elsewhere ; we should seek him with the church, and where the church seeks. 6. Their saying that they would seek him with her, was, no doubt, to encourage her in hopes of finding ; they do as good as desire her not to be cast down at his departure ; for they hoped he was not gone far, and that he would be found again, and at the same time, promise her all the assistance they were capable of giving ; tho' there is also reason to believe, that they were in hopes of sharing with her in so valuable a blessing ; and indeed, it was but reasonable, that if they bore part with her in the fatigue of the search, they should also participate with her in the enjoyment of the blessing ; which, no doubt, she was willing to, and therefore immediately gives the following answer.

Ver. 2. My beloved is gone down into his garden, to the beds of spices, to feed in the gardens, and to gather lilies.

THESE words contain the church's answer to the second question of the daughters of Jerusalem ; they had asked her what her beloved was more than others ; she told them : They then proceed to ask, whither he was gone ; to which she here replies : In which may be considered,

I. The place whither she says he was gone ; My beloved is gone down into his garden, to the beds of spices.

II. The end of his going down, or what his business and employment was, when there ; which was twofold. 1st, To feed in the gardens. 2<sup>dly</sup>, To gather lilies.

I. The place whither, she says, he was gone, into his garden ; and more particularly, to the beds of spices. And,

1st, It may be enquired what is meant by his garden, into which he was gone down. Some understand it of the heavenly paradise, whither Christ was gone, to share the everlasting joys thereof, and converse with angels and saints ; which may be said to be the trees of righteousness, those spicy plants and precious flowers which are planted there, and in the midst of which stands the tree of life, Christ Jesus, the glory of the whole garden ; and into this, Christ's lilies, when fully ripe, are transplanted by him. This sense is favoured by R. Aben Ezra's gloss upon the text, who says, This is he who ascended on high, to feed in the gardens, and to gather lilies, because he dwelleth with the angels, who are the righteous ones. But if the words design Christ's ascension to heaven, they should rather have been expressed thus, My beloved is gone up into his garden, than as they are, My beloved is gone down into his garden ; therefore I rather think, that the church of Christ, here on earth, is meant ; which is as a garden separated by Christ from this world ; whose inclosure is sovereign and distinguishing grace ; in which are various trees, plants and spices, set and planted there by Christ himself, and where he takes his walks with pleasure ; but in what sense the church may be compared to a garden, see more on Chap. iv. 12.

2dly, It may be observed, that this garden is said to be his; and so it may very well, for of all others he has chosen this to be his garden; he asked it of his father for this purpose, and he gave it him; he has also purchased it by his own blood, and distinguished it by his grace; he takes the care of it, waters it and watches over it; 'tis he that has brought it to its present perfection, and will bring it to a far greater; so that Christ retires and takes his walks here, not as one either upon trespass or sufferance, and by the leave of others, but as having an undoubted right and title to it, and as being sovereign lord and owner of it: But of this, see more on Chap. iv. 16.

3dly, Christ is said to be gone down into his garden; which, perhaps, may be an allusion to Solomon's gardens, which lay lower than his palace; and 'tis probable, that those stairs which went down from the city of David, the palace royal of the kings of Judah, were made to go down to the kings gardens, of both which you read in Neb. iii. 15. and so the garden of nuts, in ver. 11. seems to be in the valley; and in the spiritual or mystical sense, may point out, 1. The low estate of Christ's church here on earth: The saints are compared to myrtle trees, and these are said, Zech. i. 8. to be in the bottom, i. e. in a low estate, being depressed with many sorrows, afflictions and persecutions; they are doves, but doves of the vallies, mourning under a sense of their iniquities, being burdened with the weight of sin; and they are not only in a low estate, but also low and humble in their own eyes; and with such Christ delights to dwell; he often goes down into his garden, to those humble souls, pays them a visit, grants them his presence, and bestows larger measures of his grace upon them. 2. It is also expressive of Christ's condescension in doing this: It was a wonderful stoop, and an amazing instance of his condescension, to come down from heaven, clothe himself with our nature, and converse with sinful mortals here on earth; for a king to come from his royal palace and enter into the cottage of a beggar, and to eat, drink and lodge there for a time, would not express so much humility and condescension as this does: And next to this is his granting his presence to his churches, and to particular believers here on earth; so that we have reason to say, when we consider the greatness of his majesty, and our vileness, sinfulness and unworthiness, with Judas not Iscariot, How is it, Lord, that thou wilt manifest thyself to us, and not unto the world? John xiv. 22. And if,

4tly, It should be asked, how she could tell the daughters of Jerusalem, where her beloved was, when she was at a loss for him, and in the search of him herself? It may be answered, 1. That though she had sought him, and found him not, though he was not pleased to manifest himself to her at that present time, yet having had large experiences of these things, she knew where Christ usually was, and would be found of his people; therefore she directs them where formerly she had, though now she could not find him, in hopes that they might. Or, 2. It may be supposed, that the case was altered with her, that she was no longer at a loss for him, but having sought him, had found him, or at least, had got some intelligence of him, which she no sooner had, but she informs them of it. Or, 3. Their inquiring whither he was gone, might bring to her remembrance what she had formerly heard him say, in Chap. v. 1. I am come into my garden, my sister, my spouse, &c. but falling asleep immediately, entirely forgot it, until her memory was refreshed by the enquiries of these persons. Thus you see that weaker Christians may be useful to stronger ones, and even the very questions they put for information sake, may prove the quickening of believers, and be the means of increasing light and knowledge, or at least, of reviving past experiences. But, 5thly, It may be observed, that she not only says that he was gone down to his garden, but that he was gone down to the beds of spices; by which I understand particular believers, who are as so many beds in Christ's garden, in which are planted those precious spices, the graces of the spirit, which for rareness, excellency and fragrantcy are called so; and these more especially intend growing, thriving and flourishing souls, lively believers, whose spices flow out, whose grace is in exercise; such Christ has a particular regard unto, and delights to be with.

II. She declares the end of his going down into his garden, or what it is he employs himself about, when there. And,

1st, She says, it was to feed in the gardens. By gardens, I understand particular congregated churches<sup>b</sup>; for though there is but one general assembly and church of the first born, which are written in heaven; which is redeemed by Christ's blood, and will be presented a glorious church, without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing, and therefore, before called a garden, in the singular number; yet there are many distinct and particular churches; such as those of Rome, Corinth, Galatia, Ephesus, Colosse, Philippi, Thessalonica, and the seven churches of Asia, were; which were as so many distinct gardens, or plots of earth, that the one garden was subdivided into. And by feeding here, is meant, either, 1. His feeding himself<sup>c</sup>; which is to be understood of that pleasure and delight which Christ takes in being among his saints, and seeing their graces exercised upon their proper object; for as believers feed themselves by exercising their grace on Christ, so he feeds or delights himself in observing this; this is his meat and drink; this is his supping with them, as the other is their supping with him; and this Christ is invited to in Chap. iv. 16. to which he complies in Chap. v. 1. Or else, 2. It may be understood of his feeding his flock, as R. Sol Jarchi observes; for he feeds his flock like a shepherd, tho' in such places as other shepherds do not; he feeds them in the gardens, which are unusual to feed sheep in; commons or enclosed grounds, and not gardens, being the most usual places for that purpose: And she makes mention of gardens, in the plural number, to shew that Christ is not tied to one particular church, but feeds in all his churches, in all his gardens; where he feeds his people with himself, who is the bread of life, the bidden manna, whose flesh is meat indeed, and whose blood is drink indeed. O precious food! delicious fare! he feeds them by and with his ordinances, which are those breasts of consolation, which convey much strength strength and nourishment to them, those green pastures into which he leads them, and the fatness of his house with which he feeds them; and particularly the Lord's supper is that feast of fat things, by which he sweetly refreshes them; he feeds them also by his ministers, who are his under-shepherds, to whom he has given a commission, and also ability to feed his people with knowledge, and with understanding; and so he does likewise by his spirit, who takes the things of Christ, and shews them unto us; the love of Christ, and sheds it in us; and the promises of Christ, and applies them to us; for which reason he is called the spirit of promise. And now this may serve to direct poor hungry souls where to go for food, and where to expect it, even in Christ's gardens, in his churches and in his ordinances, where he himself feeds.

<sup>b</sup> The Jews in Sbirbasirim Rabba in loc. by gardens understand their schools and synagogues; as do also R. Sol. Jarchi, and Alshech in loc. The whole is expounded in the Talmud thus, my beloved, this is the holy blessed God; is gone down into his garden, this is the world; to the beds of spices, these are the Israelites; to feed in the gardens, these are the nations of the world; and to gather lilies, these are the righteous that spring up among them. T. Hieros. Beracot, fol. 5. 2, 3. vid. Talkut in loc.

Now there was, 1. A gathering of these lilies at Christ's death. As all the sins of the elect were collected together, and were laid on Christ, when he hung upon the cross; so all their persons were collected and gathered together in one head, Christ Jesus; they all met in his person, and were represented by him; for this purpose Christ came down from heaven, took our nature and suffered in it. See John xi. 51, 52. Eph. i. 10. 2. There is a gathering of these lilies, in effectual calling through the ministry of the word by the mighty power of divine grace; and this work Christ is daily concerned in, in his church, and will be until all his elect are gather'd in. 3. There is a gathering of them into church-communion, which is also Christ's work, who takes one of a city, and two of a family, and brings them to Zion; and in doing this, he shews his regard to the good of souls, and at the same time, glorifies the house of his glory. See Isa. lx. 7. 8. 4. There is a gathering into nearer communion with himself, which he often does after great deserts. See Isa. liv. 7. 5. This may be expressive of that great delight and pleasure which Christ takes in his people; no man can take more delight in plucking fruit, or gathering flowers in a garden, than Christ does in his own people, and in his own grace in them. See Cant. v. 1. 6. This may be meant of their being gathered by death: So Abraham and Isaac, when they died, are said to be gathered unto their fathers, Gen. xv. 8. and xxxv. 29. Christ comes into his garden, the church, sometimes to plant new lilies, and sometimes to crop and gather old ones, when they are fully ripe; not to destroy them, but to remove them into his paradise above; and at the last day, by the means of angels, he will gather in all his elect ones from the four winds, as wheat into his barn, and as lilies into his garden. See Mat. iii. 7. and xiii. 48. and xxiv. 31. This sense of the words is given by several <sup>a</sup> Jewish writers. And now, lest any should think that this was a mere surmise, conjecture and imagination of hers; or if any should call in question her knowledge in this matter, she declares in the following verse, that she was not only well acquainted with him, but was nearly related to him, and therefore was capable of informing any person where he was, and what he was about.

Ver. 3. I am my beloved's, and my beloved is mine: He feedeth among the lilies.

THAT these words are expressive of that mutual interest and propriety which Christ and the church have in each other, of that strict and inseparable union that there is between them, and also of that mutual affection and complacency which they have to and in each other, as well as of her knowledge and assurance of her interest in Christ, has been shewn on Chap. ii. 16. but it may be further observed, that the order of the words is here inverted; that whereas in Chap. ii. 16. the order of the words is this, My beloved is mine, and I am his; from whence has been observed, that Christ is first ours, and then we are his, which is an undoubted truth; for Christ first gives himself to us before we are capable of giving ourselves to him; but that which was first there is here last, and what was last is first; for she first says, I am my beloved's, and then my beloved is mine: From whence it may be observed, that though Christ is first ours, in fact, yet our being his, may come first to our knowledge, may be first in discovery; that is to say, that we may know that he has called us by his grace, and enabled us thereby, to give up ourselves to him: So that we can say, Lord, we are thine, thou hast conquered our souls by thy grace, and hast took possession of us, which thou wouldst never have done, had we not been thine; and from this work of grace upon our souls, we conclude that thou art ours. Thus the cause may be known by the effect, and our interest in Christ, by the displays of Christ's grace to us, and in us: Likewise if we consider the words as connected with her former carriage and behaviour to Christ, and what she had met with from him; they will lead us to observe, that all the infirmities, sins and miscarriages of God's people, do not destroy their union with, and interest in Christ Jesus; she had treated him very rudely, when he in the most moving manner, and with the most tender language, entreated her to arise and let him in; she put him off with idle excuses, which he so much repented, as to absent himself from her, and left her to seek him in vain, and to be abused by the watchmen and keepers of the walls; and though he thus visited her transgressions with this rod of correction, his own absence, for that is so to God's children, and with those stripes and blows which she received from the watchmen; yet he did not take away his loving-kindness from her, nor break his covenant with her, and she was satisfied of this; and therefore could say, notwithstanding all this, I am my beloved's, and my beloved is mine: and if with R. Aben Ezra, we connect the words with the preceding verse, there will appear a beauty and glory in them, My beloved beloved is gone down into his garden, &c. 'Tis true, he is so; but though he's gone, and I am left alone, he is departed from me, and when he will return, I cannot tell; perhaps I may never see his face more here on earth, in a way of sensible communion and fellowship with him, as I have heretofore done, though I hope I shall; yet if I never do, I am satisfied as to my covenant-interest in him, and union to him; I know that I am my beloved's, and that my beloved is mine; here lies the glory and excellency of faith, thus to believe in an unseen Christ: Though it may be as the Targum intimates, that she had now the presence of Christ, the glorious Shechinah, with her; he had once more shewn himself to her, and upon the sight of him, she says, as Thomas did, my Lord, and my God: But however, whether she had or had not the visible tokens of Christ's presence, her faith was certainly in exercise upon him; nay, she had not only faith, but the joy of faith; she not only knew her interest in Christ, as her salvation, but also had the joys of this salvation restored to her. And again, it may be observed, that though she excludes all other beloveds from having any share in her affections, or from being in competition with him; yet by saying what she does, she does not exclude others, particularly the daughters of Jerusalem, from having an interest in him, as well as she, as R. Sol. Jarcbi thinks; who paraphrases the words thus, I am my beloved's, and ye are not his, and therefore shall not build with us, and then explains it by Ezra iv. 3. but though the church knew that a whole Christ was hers, yet she knew that he was others also, and would therefore never say so to the daughters of Jerusalem, to discourage them in seeking of him.

Moreover, she adds, as in Chap. ii. He feedeth among the lilies; which may be considered, either as an Apostrophe to him, O thou that feedest among the lilies; or as descriptive both of him and of the place where he was, that others might readily know where her beloved was, and where he was to be found; but of this we have spoken on Chap. ii. 16. and shall not here repeat it, only observe, that Christ having been a long time absent from his church, and would not make himself known, nor speak one word a great while, at last breaks silence, and like another Joseph, cannot refrain himself any longer from her, but must make himself known to her, and bursts out with words of love and joy, in the following commendations of her.

Ver. 4. Thou art beautiful, O my love, as Tirzah, comely as Jerusalem, terrible as an army with banners.

THESE are the words of Christ, who having absented himself from his church, for a considerable time, to shew his resentment of her former carriage to him, now manifests himself unto her, and declares that he has the same love and affection for her as ever he had, and therefore addresses her with this title or character, O my love: Nay, that she was as beautiful and comely in his eye, as ever she was, notwithstanding all her failings and infirmities; which beauty of hers he describes first more generally in this verse, and then more particularly in the following ones. In this general description of her beauty are three parts.

I. He says that she is as beautiful as Tirzah.

II. Comely as Jerusalem.

III. Terrible as an army with banners.

I. He declares her to be as beautiful as Tirzah. The Septuagint does not take it to be the proper name of a place, as we, with R. Aben Ezra, do, and therefore translate the word, and render it thus, ὡς εὐδοκία, as good will or good pleasure; which may be expressive of the sweetness of her temper and disposition, which is heightened by using the abstract; she was all over good will and good nature, not only sweet, but sweetness itself, as she says of him in Chap. v. 16. Moreover, this may be spoken of her as she is the object of God's good will and pleasure; and so she appears to be, as chosen in Christ by him, to be a partaker of grace and glory with him; which was not done upon the foot of works, but by an act of his sovereign good will and pleasure, who will have mercy on whom he will have mercy: Also as she is redeemed by Christ, in which there was such a discovery of the exceeding riches of God's grace, such an appearance of his good will to men, that the angels could not but take notice of it, when they celebrated with a song the birth of an incarnate saviour, Luke ii. 14. Likewise, as called and sanctified by the blessed spirit of grace, who worketh in us, both to will and to do of his good pleasure. And now if we thus consider the church as the object of God's good will and pleasure, in those several instances of it, she will appear beautiful and lovely: Or else, this may be said of her, as she is filled with good will to God, Christ, his people, gospel, worship, ways and ordinances; the church and all true believers in Christ bear a good will to God; they love him because he first loved them; they love him, not only for what he is unto them, and what he has done for them, but also for what he is in himself; for he is in his own nature, in his own perfections, amiable and lovely: they bear a good will to Christ, he is altogether lovely to them; they have none in heaven but him, nor is there any on earth they desire besides him; every thing that belongs to him is exceeding precious to them; his name is as ointment poured forth, therefore do the virgins love him; they bear a good will to his people, who have his image instamped upon them, and to his gospel, which they prefer to their necessary food, and to his worship, ways and ordinances; they love the habitation of his house; his tabernacles are amiable; his ways are ways of pleasantness; his commands are not grievous, but exceeding delightful to them. Now if we consider the church as being of this sweet and loving disposition, which is wrought, influenc'd and maintain'd by divine grace, how beautiful does she appear.

Again, the word Tirzah comes from a root, which signifies to be grateful, or to be accepted; and so R. Sol Jarchi paraphrases the words, Thou art beautiful, O my love, seeing that thou art acceptable to me. And so he says it is explained in an ancient book of theirs, called Sipbre<sup>a</sup>: and if we take the words in this sense, they set forth the beauty and glory of the church, as she stands before God, accepted in Christ the beloved. God is well pleased with Christ, and with the church in him; he is well pleased for his righteousness sake, fake, and with her as she appears in that; for so considered, she is a compleat beauty, fair and without spot, lovely to look upon, delightful to Christ, and acceptable to God.

The Targum paraphrases the words thus, How beautiful art thou, O my love, in the time it is thy will to do my pleasure: Our righteousnesses are indeed as filthy rags, and we our selves as an unclean thing; yet when we are made willing in the day of God's power, to act according to his will, and that in faith, from a principle of love, and with an eye to his glory, it is accepted by him, the same way as our persons are.

But I see no reason, why we should not take the word as the proper name of a place, seeing it is certain, that there was such a city as Tirzah, in the land of Judea, which was a very pleasant and delightful place, as its name manifestly shews; for which reason, no doubt, it was made choice of by one of the ancient kings of Canaan, to be the place of his residence; see Josh. xii. 24. as it was afterwards by Jeroboam and his successors, until Zimri's time, who, when the city was taken, burnt the king's house with fire: Now either for its pleasant buildings, or beautiful situation, or some such thing, the church is here compared unto it, being array'd with Christ's righteousness, and adorned with the graces of his spirit. But,

II. Left this should not be sufficient to commend her beauty, he says also, that she is as comely as Jerusalem, which was not only the chief city in Judea's land, but as Pliny says <sup>b</sup>, was the most famous of all the cities in the east; nay more, it was the joy of the whole earth. The church goes under this name both in the Old and New Testament; for which, see the following texts, Isa. xl. 2. and lii. 1. Gal. iv. 25, 26. Heb. xii. 22. Rev. xxi. 2. Now she may be said to be comely as Jerusalem, for the following reasons. 1. Jerusalem was a well built city; its houses were closely joined together, and its streets uniform: Hence the Psalmist says, Psal. cxvii. 3. Jerusalem is builded as a city, that is compact together: So the church of Christ, and the members of it; as they are built upon the same foundation, and are closely joined to the same head, Christ, so they are strictly united one to another, and are like a building fitly framed together, or like an human body that is fitly joined together, and compacted by that which every joint supplieth; all the members being set in their proper places, in a just symmetry with, and suberviency to each other; see Eph. ii. 20, 21. and iv. 16. 2. Jerusalem was not only the metropolis of Judea, but was the chief city in all the world, as has been observed: And this may set forth the superexcellency, glory and comeliness of the church, above all the world besides; which will more manifestly appear, when the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and be exalted above the hills, and God's Jerusalem be a praise in the earth; see Isa. ii. 2. and lxii. 7. 3. It was a very beautiful city; it had many beautiful structures in it, particularly the temple, which was the finest building that ever was seen in the world: It was also very beautiful for situation, as well as for buildings, and therefore was called the perfection of beauty, as the church also is, being beautified with the garments of Christ's salvation. 4. It was a very rich and opulent city, especially in Solomon's time, who made silver to be in Jerusalem as stones; in the church not only the unfearchable riches of Christ are preached, but also the immense riches of divine grace and mercy are expended upon the members of it; so that every inhabitant of this Jerusalem, is a king and a prince: How rich must that city be, all whose inhabitants are kings and princes? Such are the saints, the members of Christ's church, who are made, by Christ, kings and priests to his father. 5. It was not only the place of the residence of the kings of David's line, where they had their palaces, and kept their courts, but also what made it more glorious and comely than all the rest, it was the city of the great king; even of him, who is the king of kings, who was set up by his father, as king over his holy hill of Zion: So the church is Christ's palace, where he keeps his court, grants his presence, shews himself, and entertains his friends as courtiers; it is his rest, his habitation, where he dwells and delights to be, having chosen it for that purpose. 6. What made Jerusalem also exceeding comely, was, that the worship of God was kept up there: Here was the temple; here sacrifices were offered up; hither the tribes went up to worship, and therefore is called the city of our solemnities. Christ's church is the place of worship where saints assemble together, where God is revered and adored by them, where the sacrifices of prayer and praise are offered up, where the word of God is preached, and his ordinances administered, to the comfort of his saints, and to the glory of his name. 7. Jerusalem, as it was beautiful in its inward buildings, so it was likewise in its outward fortifications, which were both natural and artificial; it had not only many towers and bulwarks, which were its artificial fortifications, but had also mountains around it, which were natural ones; and for this reason the church and people of God are compared to it, in Psal. cxxv. 2. As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people, from henceforth, even for ever. God himself is a wall of fire around his church; Christ is a strong tower in the midst of it; and salvation has God appointed for walls and bulwarks about it. 8. Jerusalem was a free city, as is Jerusalem, which is the mother of us all; it had many privileges and immunities, as has also the church of Christ, and all the members of it; all who are fellow citizens of the saints, and of the household of God, are all Christ's freemen, and enjoy the liberty of the gospel, and can never lose their freedoms, or be deprived of them; they shall never be arrested by divine justice, or come into condemnation; or be reduced to a state of bondage.

III. He also says of her, that she was terrible as an army with banners. This comparison manifestly shews, that it was not any single person that is intended in this song; not Pharaoh's daughter, nor any single inhabitant of Jerusalem, but a considerable company of persons, a collective body, such as the church of Christ is; for a single person cannot well be compared to an army with banners. Now this shews, that the church of Christ on earth is militant; she is in a warfare state, and has many enemies to fight with, as sin, Satan and the world; she has enemies within, and enemies without, a great fight of afflictions to endure, and the good fight of faith to fight, after which she is to receive eternal life. The use of banners has been took notice of on Cb. ii. 4. Moreover, this comparison may lead us to observe, that the church church was as an army; in good order, well disciplin'd, having proper officers and good armour: Christ is the chief general; the ministers of the gospel are the under officers; the banner is love; and the armour they are accoutred with, what you read of in Eph. vi. nay, not only so, but that she was in a posture of defence; ready to fight, whenever the enemy should attack her; she appeared like an army, having its general at the head of it, its colours flying, drums beating, and sword in hand; and being so, she was terrible to her enemies, sin, satan, and the world.

Now the terribleness of the church of Christ, here spoken of, may be understood, either, 1. Of that awe which godly persons have over the wicked. The good examples and pious conversations of the saints often distress the consciences, and strike an awe upon the minds of the ungodly; they are deterred sometimes by them, from evil practices, especially when in the presence of them, and are awed by them from doing them any hurt: Thus Herod feared John the Baptist, because he was a holy man, Mark vi. 20. Or, 2. Of the invincibleness of the saints, when united together; when they are at peace one with another, and have no discord and mutiny among themselves, but keep close to each other, and endeavour to keep the unity of the spirit, in the bond of peace, they are like an army in battle array, that cannot easily be broke in upon by the enemy. Or, 3. Of her constancy and undauntedness in seeking of him; and it is as if he should say, When I parted from thee, what difficulties didst thou meet with? How wast thou abused by the watchmen and keepers of the walls? who smote and wounded thee, and took away thy veil from thee; and yet thou wast not discouraged, but still went on in search of me, marching like an army with banners, bearing down all before thee, surmounting all difficulties until thou hadst obtained what thou soughtest for. Or, 4. Perhaps Christ may say so of her, as regarding himself, who had felt the power of her arms, and was conquered by her; like another Jacob, she had power with God and prevailed. Her love to Christ was so great, her faith so strong, she so diligent in her search, and so importunate in her desires, that he could not withstand her; and therefore, as one that had found her to be terrible as an army with banners, says in the following words,

Ver. 5. Former part. Turn away thine eyes from me, for they have overcome me.—

IN this and the two following verses, Christ gives a more particular account of the church's beauty, and begins with her eyes; in these words; for though they are delivered in such a manner as they be, yet they serve to commend that particular part of her, here mentioned, which is never took notice of by Christ in this song, but with commendation. See Chap. i. 15. and iv. 1. 9. and vii. 4. And in these words may be observed,

- I. Something that is enjoined the church by Christ; which is, to turn away her eyes from him.
- II. The reason of it; for they have overcome me.

I. Here is an injunction laid upon the church by Christ, to turn away her eyes from him; in which may be enquired, 1st, What is meant by her eyes. 2<sup>dly</sup>, What by turning them away from him.

1st, By her eyes may be meant, as has been observed on Chap. i. 15. the ministers of the gospel, who are that to Christ's body, the church, as eyes are to an human body; they are placed in the more eminent part of it; their business is to watch, inspect and overlook the several members of the body, and therefore are called watchmen and overseers; they pry, search and penetrate into gospel truths, and discover them to others; they guide and direct those who are under their watch and care, teaching them to observe all things which Christ has commanded them. The Targum by eyes understands the Rabbins, and wise men of the great congregation; and R. Aben Ezra, by the turning of them away, the removal or ceasing of prophecy in the second temple. Or else, by eyes may be meant, the enlightened eyes of the church's understanding, the eyes of her faith, love and knowledge; that eye of faith which looked upon Christ in the dark, and was the evidence of an unseen Jesus to her; so that she could say, I am my beloved's, and my beloved is mine; this eye of faith, I say, had pierced the heart of Christ, won it and got an intire conquest over it, which obliged him to say these words, Turn away thine eyes from me, &c. That love which she had shewn unto him, though absent from her, discovered in a variety of expressions to the daughters of Jerusalem, appeared exceeding fair and beautiful to him; her strong and constant affections to him being attended with solid judgment, and an exact knowledge of his person and grace, took much with his heart, struck the passions of his soul, which shewed and gave themselves vent in such expressions as these. And these eyes of faith and love, I take to be principally intended here. But,

2<sup>dly</sup>, It may be enquired what is also meant by, turning away these eyes from him. Some read the words thus, Turn about thine eyes over against me; so Ainsworth: And this is favoured by the Targum or Chaldee paraphrase upon the text; and so indeed the word signifies, to turn to, as well as to turn from: And this, 1. Suits well with the mind and will of Christ, which is, that his church, and all believers, should be continually looking to him for life and salvation, righteousness and strength, peace and pardon, joy and comfort; and in short, for every needful supply of grace, until they are brought safe to glory; his language is, Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth: For I am God, and there is none else, Isa. xlv, 22. 2. It suits with the experience of God's children, who often have their eyes took off from Christ, and set either upon their own righteousness, their duties and their frames, or else upon creature-enjoyments, the transitory and perishing things of this world; and therefore have need to be called off from them, to look to him; and perhaps, this was the case of the church here; she had had her eyes intently fixed on Christ, for some time, and now, on a sudden, they are diverted from him, and therefore he gives her this exhortation, to turn them again to him: Which shews, 3. That he was well pleased and exceedingly delighted delighted with them. Faith is a precious grace ; it is so in its own nature, and in the actings of it upon the person of Christ ; it is a precious grace to believers, being very useful to them in dealing with Christ, and receiving from him ; and it is also precious to Christ, seeing it brings all the glory back to him. How much Christ is delighted with both these eyes of faith and love, may be seen in Chap. iv. 9, 10. 4. This version or reading of the words, may lead us to observe, that Christ would have us not take side looks only of him, but full views ; turn about thine eyes over-against me, right over-against me, look me full in the face : 'Tis true, Christ's countenance is as the sun when it shineth in its full strength, which we, in this imperfect state, cannot so fully and directly look at, yet there is a vast difference between faith's looking at Christ at one time and at another : Sometimes we have only a glance, a side look at Christ ; at other times, faith, with open face, beholds, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord. Our eyes, as Solomon directs, Prov. iv. 25. look right on, and our eye lids look straight before us ; and this is what Christ would have his church do here. 5. It gives us an intimation, that we should look all around Christ, and take, as it were, a survey of his person, and the glories and excellencies of it ; turn about thine eyes, look all around me, view me from head to foot, on all sides : It is true, thou hast been viewing me, as if he should say, and giving an excellent description of me, but turn thine eyes about me again and again, thou wilt find more glories still, fresher beauties, and be able to make new discoveries of my person and grace. 6. This being the first time of their meeting together, after she had so shamefully and basely treated him, she might be filled with so much shame and confusion at the thoughts of it, that she could not lift up her eyes and look him in the face ; which agrees with the experience of the Psalmist, when he said, Psal. xl. 12. Mine iniquities have taken hold upon me, so that I am not able to look up. And this now being her condition, Christ speaks these words to her, for her encouragement, turn thine eyes unto me ; look up with an holy and humble confidence to me, for thine iniquity is done away.

But then, if we consider the words as our translators have rendered them, we are not to understand them, either, 1. As a reprehension of her curiosity, in prying and searching into the glory and greatness of his majesty, which is the sense that some give of the words ; for though Christ, as God almighty, cannot be found out to perfection, nor can we comprehend his person and grace as God-man, in this imperfect life, nor see him as he is, which is reserved to another and more perfect one ; yet, this does not forbid our search and inquiries, in order to obtain a more perfect knowledge of him, tho' a check should be given, and a restraint laid upon all vain curiosity : But this does not appear to be the case of the church here ; Christ was not displeased with her, nor had he absented himself from her on such an account as this, but because of her slothfulness and negligence in duty ; besides, it does not appear likely, that Christ, when he is extolling and commending his church in such a manner, should give so severe a rebuke unto her. 2. Nor were these eyes of her's carnal and sinful, haughty and lifted up, or wanton and unchaste, and therefore disagreeable to him ; no, her eyes are said to be doves eyes within her locks, modest, humble and chaste, which are well pleasing to him, and are always commended by him. Nor, 3. Are we to understand the words as if Christ did not approve of her looking to him by faith; for there is nothing more grateful to him, faith always meets with a kind reception from him, and is always commended by him: Souls need not fear its being accounted a piece of boldness or presumption in them to believe in Christ, for he gives all encouragement to it; Ye believe in God, says he, believe also in me, John xiv. 1. But, 4. It is expressive of the exceeding great passion of love he was in with her; he could stand it out no longer, but must acknowledge he was overcome by her, and therefore bids her turn away her eyes from him, not through any dislike, but as having his heart overpowered with love by them. The expression is designed to signify the exceeding greatness of Christ's love to the church, as well as her surpassing beauty; unless, 5. We would rather understand it as his will, that she should cease petitioning to him, seeing he had granted her request: Thus lifting up the eyes to God, signifies prayer to him. See 2 Chron. xx. 12. Psal. cxxiii. 1. and if we take it in this sense here, it is as if he should say, Thou hast been lifting up thine eyes to me, and petitioning of me, that thou mightest have some discoveries of my grace, enjoyment of my presence, and communion with my person; and now thou mayst turn away thine eyes from me, or cease petitioning; for thou hast the thing thou hast been praying and looking up to me for.

II. The reason of Christ's saying so to his church, or bidding her turn away her eyes from him, is, because they had overcome him. These words are very differently render'd. 1. Some read them thus; for they have lifted me up, so Ainsworth: or that they might lift me up; so Junius; i. e. make me chearful, comfort and encourage me: There is a near union between Christ and his church, from whence arises a very great sympathy; he has a fellow feeling with his people, in all their afflictions, both inward and outward, temporal or spiritual; when they are afflicted, he is afflicted; when they are cast down, he is as it were cast down with them; and when they are chearful, he is so too; he weeps with them that weep, and rejoices with them that rejoice. The church being in a comfortable frame, and in the exercise of faith and love upon him, he is as it were cheared by it, and rejoiced at it; but this must be understood only as expressive of that near sympathy there is between them, and not as implying weakness or alteration in him, who is subject to no change. 2. Others read the words thus, for they have strengthened me; and so our translators have rendered the word, in Psal. cxxviii. 3. and then the sense is, they have strengthened my desire towards thee, and confirmed me in it, as R. David Kimchi<sup>a</sup> observes; and it is as if he should say, It is true, as I am thine, and thou art mine, I always had a desire towards thee, and to thy company; and it is not long since I signified it to thee; but since thine eyes have been so intently fixed on me, thy faith and love have been so much exercised upon me, methinks my desire towards thee is strengthened and increased: But this must be understood as expressive of that great regard which Christ had to her, and be taken with the same caution tion as before. 3. Others, * as R. Sol. Jarchi, read the words thus, for they have made me proud: The word is rendered, to behave one's self proudly, in Isa. iii. 5. by our translators. Christ, as I may so say, is proud of his people, whom the father has given him, and he has purchased with his own blood; he takes a kind of pride as well as pleasure in them; he is proud of that beauty which he himself has put upon them, and of those graces which he has wrought in them, and especially that of faith, when it is in exercise: What notice did he take of the Centurion's faith, and in a kind of a boasting manner, as being proud of it, say to his followers, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel. Here is an instance of faith for you; such an one as is not to be match'd in Israel. 4. Others† read them thus, they have made me fierce; not with anger and indignation, but with love; for there is a power, a force, a fierceness in love as well as in wrath; love is strong as death; 'tis so not only in Christ's people towards him, but more especially in him towards them; his affections are very strong towards them, and are sometimes let out with a greater force upon them than at other times, as they seem to be here. 5. R. Aben Ezra‡ renders them thus, they are stronger than me, or they have taken away my strength; so that I am as one that is dead, and have no life and spirit in me: These sparkling eyes of thine have transported me into a kind of an extacy, that I am scarce myself: And to this purpose the Septuagint render it, <sup>h</sup> they have made me to fly away; i. e. out of myself, which agrees with our version, they have overcome me, I am not master of myself; the sense is the same with Chap. iv. 9. Now this shews us, (1.) The power of faith; which not only subdues kingdoms, stops the mouths of lions, and puts to flight the armies of the aliens, but conquers God himself. (2.) This is owing very much to the importunity of it, which is increased by seeming denials: Faith will not let Christ alone, nor let him go, nor will it cease petitioning, till it has got the blessing; and the repulses it meets with, do but increase its importunity. See Gen. xxxii. 26. Exod. xxxii. 9, 10. Mat. xv. 24—28. 3. Christ's being overcome by the church, does not imply any weakness in him, but is a discovery of his astonishing, condescending love and grace, that he should be willing to be held, as it were a captive, by a poor sinful creature; that he should be willing to be overcome by us, who has conquered all our enemies, sin, satan, hell and death for us, is surprizing and amazing; and perhaps, on this account, as well as upon some others, we may be said to be more than conquerors, because we are the conquerors of him who has conquered all.

Ver. 5. Latter part.—Thy hair is as a flock of goats that appear from Gilead.

Ver. 6. Thy teeth are as a flock of sheep, which go up from the washing, whereof every one beareth twins, and there is not one barren among them.

Ver. 7. As a piece of a pomegranate are thy temples within thy locks.

THESE commendations of the church's beauty are delivered in the same words, in Chap. iv. 1, 2, 3. but the repetition of them here is not vain and idle, but may be for the following reasons: 1. To shew the reality and certainty of her beauty; that it was no imaginary beauty, but a real one. So things are sometimes repeated for the confirmation of them. 2. To put her in mind of it, that she might value it, and herself upon it, as coming from Christ, who had made her perfectly comely, through the comeliness which he had put upon her. 3. To assure her that her beauty was still the same, and that he had the same opinion of it as ever he had, notwithstanding all her failings and infirmities; and therefore expresses it in the very same words he had used before her backslidings from him. 4. To manifest the unchangeableness of his love towards her; that he is Jesus, the same to day, yesterday, and for ever; that he is the Lord that changes not, and therefore the sons of Jacob are not consumed. But having explained those words in Chap. iv. I shall not consider them any further here, but only just observe some few variations and differences between them; though they are not indeed very material. In ver. 5. the word mount is omitted, which may be supplied from Chap. iv. 1. In ver. 6. the word sheep is expressed, which is understood in Chap. iv. 2. as is the word even shorn omitted here, though expressed there. In ver. 7. is wholly omitted that part of the description which concerns the beauty of the church's lips and speech; though 'tis added at the end of the sixth verse, by the Septuagint, but is not in the hebrew copies; neither is it took notice of by the Targum, on the place; nay, the Masora on Chap. iv. 3. remarks some words as only used in that place, and therefore this was not repeated here in the copies then in use.

Ver. 8. There are threescore queens and fourscore concubines; and virgins without number.

Ver. 9. My dove, my undefiled is but one, she is the only one of her mother, she is the choice one of her that bare her: The daughters saw her and blessed her; yea, the queens and the concubines, and they praised her.

CHRIST having commended the church's beauty, both in general, and in particular instances, as she might be considered by herself, without respect to others in the preceding verses, now commends her, as she might stand related to, or be compared with others. And,

- I. The persons with whom she stands compared, and to whom she appears preferable, are queens, concubines and virgins without number.
- II. The things in which she appears to be preferable to them, are, First, That she is but one. Secondly, the only one of her mother. Thirdly, The choice one of her that bare her. And then,
- III. Her beauty is commended by the notice the daughters, queens and concubines took of it, who, as soon as ever they saw her, blessed and praised her.

I. The persons with whom she stands compared, and appears preferable to, are the threescore queens, and fourscore concubines, and virgins without number, mentioned in ver. 8. which words may be considered, either as an assertion that there are so many, a certain number being put for an uncertain one; or else as a supposition, though there may be so many, yet my undefiled is but one, &c. Queens are those who were the principal wives of kings, who brought portions with them, whose children inherited, and they themselves, with their royal husbands, had the management of affairs: Concubines are secondary wives, or half wives, as the <sup>a</sup> word may be render'd; they were such who brought no portions <sup>b</sup> with them; and though they were admitted to the fellowship of the bed, yet their children did not inherit, but had only some gifts given to them; nor had they themselves any share in the government of the house, but rather acted like servants under the others; such were Hagar, Zilpah, Bilhah, &c. The virgins without number, are unmarried persons; these were the maids of honour, who waited and attended upon the queens. Now there are in the words, an allusion either to the custom and practice of kings and great persons, who had more wives than one, had many concubines, and a large number of virgins to attend upon them: And this was not only the practice of Heathen, but also of Jewish princes, as David and Solomon, which latter, more especially, had a large number; and 'tis thought, that a regard is had more particularly to his queens and concubines in this text; for which reason some have thought that this book was written before he gave so great a loose to his lusts, as we find he did; for we are told, 1 Kings xi. 3. that he had seven hundred wives, princesses, and three hundred concubines. Or else, the allusion is to a nuptial solemnity, and the ceremony of introducing the bride into the bridegroom's house, who used to be attended with a large number of persons of distinction; see Psal. xlv. between which and this song; there is a very great resemblance; and perhaps, that was the plan of this; there the queen is represented as standing in gold of Ophir, which answers to Christ's church and bride here, and means the same there; also kings daughters, which answer to the queens here, are said to be among her honourable women, who were attendants on her; and the virgins, her companions, are said to follow her, when she was introduced into the king's presence.

Now by these threescore queens, fourscore concubines, and virgins without number, may be meant, either,

1st, The several kingdoms and nations of the world: And by queens, may be meant those kingdoms and countries, which are more large, rich and flourishing: By concubines, those which are inferior to them, either in largeness, riches or numbers: And by virgins, the vast multitude of inhabitants which fill them: And then the sense is this; though there are many large, rich and populous nations in the world; yet my church is preferable to them all: These all put together, cannot equal her; for as the lily is among thorns, and is preferable to them; so my love is among the daughters, the nations of the world, and is preferable to them all. Or,

2<sup>dly</sup>, By them may be meant false churches, who pretend to be the true spouse of Christ, but are not so. By queens may be meant, those who boast them-themselves of their riches and numbers, and would be esteemed on that account the true bride of Christ, as the church of Rome, who saieth in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow; and yet is an harlot, nay, the mother of harlots. By concubines, such who are inferior in wealth and numbers, but equally corrupt in principles, and which make the same pretensions the others do; such are the Arian, Socinian, &c. churches: And by virgins without number, the large multitude of poor, weak and ignorant people, which are seduced and carried aside by them. But now Christ's church, though it does not make so great a figure in the world, nor does it appear in so much external pomp and splendor, nor has it the riches and numbers that these may have, yet in Christ's esteem, is preferable to them all. Though,

3dly, Others think, that the several sorts of preachers in the church are here intended; and that by queens are meant ministers of the first rank, who are faithful to Christ and his gospel, and are instrumental in bringing forth many souls unto him; and by concubines, such who corrupt the word of God, and handle it deceitfully, who are false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ; who seek not Christ, but themselves, not his honour, but their own applause. And by virgins, such who, though regenerated, yet, at present, are not fit for the ministry, but are training up for it in the several churches or schools of learning; and may be such, whom the apostle calls novices, not a novice perfect, a young tender plant, one that is newly planted in christianity, and has arrived to some knowledge of the gospel, but as yet not fit for the office of a bishop. But,

4thly, The words seem rather to be understood of the several degrees<sup>d</sup> of believers. By queens may be meant believers of the highest form, such whom Christ has honoured with greater gifts and larger measures of grace; in whose hearts and lives grace reigns more gloriously than in others, and who have a greater nearness to Christ, and more communion with him than others have; and by concubines, believers of an inferior sort, who are of a more servile and legal spirit; have more of a spirit of bondage than the spirit of adoption, but yet these have fellowship and communion with Christ at times; and by virgins, young converts, new born babes, that have not so much experience as either of the former: So that this distribution of believers into queens, concubines and virgins, seems to suit with the division of them into foibers, young men and children, which is made, 1 John ii. 13, 14. and what seems to strengthen this sense of the words, is their blessing and praising the bride in the following verse. In an ancient tract of the Jews, called Midrash Hanneclam, the queens, in the next verse, are said to be the fathers or patriarchs; the concubines, the proselytes of righteousness; and the daughters, the daughters of Jerusalem. Now Christ's church, considered as a collective body, is preferable to single believers, even to the greatest of them. And it is also well observed by<sup>e</sup> one, that there are more concubines than queens, and more virgins than either of them; for there are more weak believers and

babes in Christ, than there are strong ones; those of the highest rank and form are very rare; there are but few to be found in comparison of the other; but Christ's bride comprehends them all, and is preferable to them, which is the next thing to be considered.

II. Christ, in ver. 9. commends his church above all those queens, concubines and virgins; he gives her two excellent titles, which shew her to be superior to others; the first of which, my dove, has been explained in Chap. ii. 14. and the other, my undefiled, in Chap. v. 2. and therefore need no further explanation here. The things in which she appears to be preferable to all these forementioned persons, are,

First, That she is but one, and they are many; which may be expressive, 1. Of the church's fewness in number, who, if compared with the nations of the world, which is the first sense given of the former words, she is but like one to sixty or eighty, nay, to an innumerable multitude; there are but few that are chosen, though many are externally called: Christ's church is but a remnant, according to the election of grace; 'tis but one of a city, and two of a family, that Christ brings to Zion; they are but a little flock, to whom the heavenly kingdom is bequeathed. 2. Of the church's unity in herself. (1.) She is but one body; as there are various members in an human body, and yet but one body, so likewise is the church, though consisting of many believers: As there are many sheep and lambs in a flock, and yet but one flock, under the care of one shepherd; many beds in a garden, and a variety of spices, flowers, herbs and plants in these beds, and yet but one garden; even so, though there are many particular congregated churches, and in those churches many believers, yet there is but one general assembly and church of the first born, which are written in heaven. (2.) She has but one spirit, which actuates and influences this body; the same spirit that dwells in the head, Christ, dwells in his body, the church; and the same that dwells in the body, dwells in every member of it; for though there are diversities of gifts, and various graces, yet there is but one spirit who distributes them to the several members for their use and profit. (3.) She has but one head and husband, Lord and Saviour; she has but one head, to whom she holds, and from whom she receives life and nourishment, and so increases with the increase of God; but one husband, whom she owns and acknowledges as such, and to whom she's espoused as a chaste virgin; but one lord, under whose government she is, and to whom alone she yields obedience; and but one mediator, that she regards, and makes use of, and that is the man Christ Jesus. 4. Though the church consists of many members, yet being but one body united to one head, and actuated by one and the same spirit, they enjoy the same privileges; they are built upon one and the same foundation, Christ; they are washed in the same blood, they wear the same righteousness, and receive from the same fulness, grace for grace. (5.) They make a profession of one and the same faith; for as there is but one Lord, so there is but one faith; the doctrine of grace is invariable, 'tis like the author of it, the same yesterday, to day, and for ever; there never was another gospel, nor never will be; the faith which the church now professes, is what was once delivered to the saints, to be kept by them, and which they, standing fast in one spirit, should strive for the purity of; which cannot be, unless they are perfectly feetly joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment. (6.) They are one in worship: The object of worship is one and the same, and so is the Spirit which afflicts them in it, as well as the form of it; for as there is but one Lord, and one faith, so there is but one baptism; whose subjects and mode of administration should continue the same without any variation, until the end of time; and but one Lord's-supper; and so it may be said of every other ordinance, and of every part of religious worship; for saints as they worship one and the same God, under the influences of one and the same Spirit, and in the same way, so likewise should they, with one consent; which they cannot be said to do, when an ordinance is administered by some, one way, and by some, another. (7.) They are one in affections, or at least ought to be; their chief business should be to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, and that from the aforesaid considerations: for this is one end of their calling, the glory of their profession, and a distinguishing character of their being the disciples and church of Christ. 3. This may be also expressive of her being the only spouse and bride of Christ, my dove, my undefiled is but one; that is, though other princes may have their sixty queens and eighty concubines, and an innumerable company of virgins to wait upon them, yet I have but one, and am well satisfied with her, I desire none but her; my one is preferable to their many; as she says, I am my beloved's, that is, I only am his, he has none besides me, and his desire is towards me, and to none else.

Secondly, He says, that she is the only one of her mother. By her mother, is meant Jerusalem, which is above, which is the mother of us all; and by her being the only one of her mother, we are to understand that she had no other but her; for though we read in Chap. i. 6. of her mother's children, yet we are to understand them of carnal professors, who had the name but not the nature of children, were not true sons of the church, were bastards and not sons. Or else the meaning is, that she was to him as a mother's only child; no mother could more tenderly love an only child than he did her: So that it may be expressive of that strong affection and tender passion which he bore to her.

Thirdly, He says, that she is the choice one of her that bore her, which is a periphrasis of her mother; and her being the choice one of her, shews how much she was valued and esteemed by her; of all her mother's children, she was loved the best. Moreover, the word <sup>2</sup> may be translated the pure or clean one; and so she is as clothed with that fine linen, clean and white, which is the righteousness of the saints, as washed in Christ's blood, which cleanseth from all sin, as sanctified by the Spirit, purified by faith, and sprinkled with clean water, the grace of the everlasting covenant. Also, as she was free from the pollution of error and false worship, was of an unspotted conversation, and was now, or at least, had been lately in the furnace of affliction, where Christ had purified her, and made her white and clean.

III. Christ commends her beauty by observing what notice the daughters, queens and concubines took of it, and how much they praised and commended her for it. The daughters saw her, and blessed her, the queens and the concubines; concubines, and they praised her; which may be understood, 1. Of the great esteem which the church had or should have in the world, and that from the great men of it: which will appear more visibly in the latter day, when those prophecies shall be fulfilled, of which we read in Isa. xlix. 23. and lx. 3, 10, 11. when kings shall be her nursing fathers, and queens her nursing mothers, and God's Jerusalem, the church, shall be the praise in the whole earth. Or, 2. Of the great value and esteem which professors, and especially young converts, have of the church; in whose eyes she's the fairest among women; who as soon as ever they saw her were ravished with her beauty, loved her, and wish'd themselves as happy as she; for, 3. They blessed her, i. e. accounted her happy, as well they might, seeing she was blessed with all spiritual blessings in Christ; and indeed, whether we consider the saints either as to their entertainment in God's house, or their employment there, it may be said of them what the queen of Sheba said of Solomon's servants, 1 Kings x. 8. Happy are thy men, happy are these thy servants which stand continually before thee, and hear thy wisdom. And, 4. They wished all happiness to her, and prayed for it, which also may be the sense of the words, they blessed her; see Psal. cxxix. 8. They prayed for the peace of Jerusalem, which was their duty; and in doing which they shew their affection to the church: Nay, 5. They not only thought well of her, and wished well to her; but they also praised her, i. e. they spoke well of her, and highly commended her beauty: So that Christ was not alone in his opinion of her; for others thought her to be an accomplished beauty as well as he; and this, as it serves to commend her beauty, so its being took notice of by Christ, shews how much he was pleased with it; for as those that touch his people, touch the apple of his eye; and whatsoever is spoken against them, he takes as spoken against himself: So whenever they are praised and spoken well of, he is well pleased with it.

Ver. 10. Who is she that looketh forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners?

THESE are either the words of Christ, commending and wondering at the beauty of his church, and confirming the daughters praises of her; which shews that they were neither wrong, nor were they alone in their opinion of her; for she was an astonishing beauty in the eyes of him, who seeth not as man seeth, neither judges after the outward appearance: Or else, they are the words of the daughters of Jerusalem continued; and this I rather incline to, for the following reasons, 1. The connection between this and the preceding verse is very easy, especially if we supply the word, saying, as it is sometimes done, as in Jer. xxxi. 3. and so read the words thus, The daughters saw her and blessed her, the queens and the concubines; and they praised her, saying, Who is she that looketh forth as the morning, &c. 2. This gives a ready answer to such a question that might be asked, What was it the daughters, queens and concubines said of her, when they gave her commendations, declared her the happy person, and sung her praises? Why, it was this, Who is she that looketh forth as the morning, &c. 3. It confirms what Christ had said of her, in ver. 4. that she was terrible as an army with banners; that they had just the same opinion of her as he had, and therefore use the same words ; but if they were supposed to be the words of Christ, it would make a manifest tautology, which is scarce to be allowed of in the same commendation. 4. It best agrees with other parts of this song, which appear to be the words of the daughters of Jerusalem, as Chap. iii. 6. and viii. 5. 5. The Targum or Chaldee paraphrase upon this text, takes them to be the words of the people or nations of the world, which, in this paraphrase, are sometimes understood by the daughters of Jerusalem. And though the words are interrogatory, yet they are not the effect of ignorance, but of wonder and surprize. These daughters were not ignorant of the church ; they knew who she was, but were surprized at her glory and beauty ; the way of speaking is much like that in Isa. lxiii. 1. Who is this that cometh from Edom, &c. Having now considered whose words they are, I shall in the next place consider the words themselves, and the meaning of them ; and they may be expressive,

First, Of the state and condition of the church in the several ages of the world ; especially in those three remarkable ones, that before the law, that under the law, and this under the gospel. There is a manifest gradation in the text, and this appears in the church, in those several periods in which there was an increase of her faith, light, knowledge and glory. And,

1st, The state of the church before the law was given, from Adam to Moses, may be intended in the first expression, Who is she that looketh forth as the morning ? And here give me leave to observe, 1. That Adam's sin brought not only a night of darkness upon his own soul, but also upon all the world besides. Man, who in his first creation was endued with light and knowledge, is now become a poor, dark creature by the fall ; nay, is darkness itself ; he is born and brought up in darkness, and walks on in it, not knowing whither he goes until he is called by divine grace ; when he appears to be a child of the day, and not of night nor of darkness. 2. The first display of grace to fallen man, which was in the garden, after the night of darkness had invaded his soul, was like the dawn of the morning, when the seed of the woman, the glorious Messiah, was made known to Adam, as who should break the head of the serpent, and so redeem him, and those of his fallen race, whom God had set apart for himself ; this struck the light of joy and comfort into his soul ; those dark and dreadful apprehensions he had of things, in a great measure, then vanished and disappeared ; this breaking up of covenant-grace unto him, was like the break of day, or like the first appearance of a glorious morning : And as for Satan, whose works are works of darkness, and cannot bear the light, like a beast of prey, he leered off, and lurked into his den, when this morning-light thus first broke out. This was the first appearance and revelation of grace to fallen man. 3. This light of grace which now began to shew itself, like the morning-light, increased yet more and more ; there were greater breakings forth of it afterwards, not only to Adam himself ; who was taught by God the way of sacrificing, and therein to look by faith to the great sacrifice, Christ, who was to be offered up for the sin of man ; but also to succeeding patriarchs, particularly to Noah, who found grace in the eyes of the Lord, became a preacher of righteousness, and that not of moral righteousness only, but also of evangelical, even the righteousness which

which is by faith; but more especially to Abraham, to whom it was promised, that the Messiah should be of his seed, and in that seed all nations be blessed: There was so great a discovery of grace made unto him, that the gospel is said to be preached unto him; and then to his grandson Jacob, there was a greater discovery made; for not only the Messiah was revealed unto him as God's salvation, which he says he waited for, and that he should be of Abraham's seed; but also more particularly that he should spring from the tribe of Judab. The time of his coming is pointed out by him, as well as the glory and magnificence which should attend him, by a mighty confluence of people to him, in that famous prophecy of his, Gen. xlix. 10. Thus the morning-light of the gospel went on apace, and increased exceedingly. But, 4. Though here was light broke forth, and that increasing, yet it was but small, in comparison of what appeared in after ages. The first display of grace seems rather to be by way of threatening to satan, than by way of promise to fallen man; and though it was made known to our first parents, that the Messiah should be the seed of the woman; yet, perhaps, it was not so clearly revealed, till Isaiab's time, that he should be born of a virgin; which might be the reason that our mother Eve was so mistaken in the birth of her first son, as to imagine that she had got the Messiah; for so those words in Gen. iv. 1. according to some, may be read, I have gotten a man<sup>a</sup>, the Lord; and Jonathan Ben Uzziel, in his Targum on the place paraphrases it thus, I have got the man, the angel of the Lord; but she could never have thought so, had she known that he was to be born of a virgin. Moreover, the greatness of his person, his several offices of prophet, priest and king, the nature, efficacy and end of his sufferings, his resurrection, ascension and session at the Father's right-hand, are more clearly spoken of by David, in his book of Psalms, and by Isaiab in his prophecy, than were before; and no doubt but there was more light in the church, in David's, Solomon's, and more especially in Isaiab's time, than there had been in ages preceding. But yet, 5. Those discoveries of grace which were made before the law was given, like the cheerful morning, brought joy and comfort along with them, particularly to Adam, who stood trembling, expecting every moment to have the awful sentence of wrath pronounced, and the severe stroke of justice given; when on a sudden, grace appears, a Saviour is revealed, and the darkness of guilt and horror which filled his soul, disappears, and in the room of it an universal joy and pleasure diffuses itself. The Jews tell <sup>b</sup> us of ten songs that are sung in the world, and the first, they say, was that which Adam sung when the Lord pardoned his iniquity; and indeed, he had a great deal of reason for it. Nay, it was not only joy to Adam, but also to all the angels in heaven, who stood astonished and surprized to see all human nature lost at once, and that, to all appearance, irrecoverably; but whilst they were waiting to see what the issue of things would be, a glorious display of grace is made, the way of salvation, by the incarnate son of God, is opened, which caused these bright seraphs to clap their wings, and these morning stars to sing together, Glory to God in the highest; for if they rejoice at the conversion of a single sinner, much more would they at the tidings of salvation to Adam, and so many of his race. And so all after-discoveries of grace, to succeeding patriarchs, were more or less attended with joy and pleasure: It is particularly remarked of Abraham, John viii. 56. that he saw Christ's day and was glad:

2dly, The state of the church under the law, may be represented under the second expression, fair as the moon. Such was the nature of divine worship, under that dispensation, that it may very aptly be set forth by this phrase; and I cannot but be of opinion, that the ceremonial law is intended by the moon, which is said to be under the church's feet, in Rev. xii. 1. for tho' it was abolished by the death of Christ, yet it was kept up and maintained by many of the Jews, even of those that believed; so that it was one of the greatest difficulties that the Christian church had to grapple with; for tho' it was under the feet of Christ, yet it was a long time before it was under the feet of the church, and a wonder it was when it was accomplished; for persons are naturally fond of ceremonies, and many had rather part with a doctrine or an ordinance of the gospel than with an idle ceremony or an old custom, tho' never so ridiculous; and this was, in a great measure, the case of the Jews; Thou seest brother, says James to Paul, Acts xxi. 20. how many thousands of Jews there are which believe, and they are all zealous of the law. Now the ceremonial law may be very aptly represented by the moon; for, 1. It consisted much in the observance of new moons; its solemn feasts were govern'd by them; see 2 Chron. viii. 12, 13. Isa. i. 13, 14. Amos viii. 5. Col. ii. 16. 2. There was some light in it, and it gave light to the saints in the night of Jewish darkness; it pointed out Christ unto them, and was their school-master, to teach and lead them to him. But, 3. Like the moon it was the lesser light, that which ruled by night, and not by day: the light it gave was inferior to that which saints have under the gospel-dispensation. 4. As the moon has its spots, so had this its imperfections; had it been faultless, there had been no need of a new dispensation to have succeeded; but God had provided some better thing for us New Testament-saints, that they, the Old Testament-saints, without us should not be made perfect; for this law could not make them so, it could neither perfectly sanctify, nor justify, nor expiate sin. 5. Like the moon, was variable and changeable; it is done away, this middle wall of partition is broken down; this band writing of ordinances is blotted out; it is not only like the moon in the wain, waxen old, but is also entirely vanished away. But now, notwithstanding all this, the church, as considered in her observance of the ceremonial law, was fair; there was a beauty in that kind of worship: The laws of it being the ordinances and institutions of God, and when performed in faith, and according to the will of God, were amiable and lovely. But,

3dly, The state of the church under the gospel-dispensation, may be said to be clear as the sun; for now the glorious sun of righteousness is risen, that great light of the world has appeared and made that day, which, by way of emphasis, is so often spoken of in the books of the prophets. Now the shadows are fled and gone, Christ, the substance, being come, greater light and more knowledge, with clearer faith, are the saints possessors of than they were under the law; the least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than John the Baptist. Now saints, not with faces veiled, but with open face, not through gloomy gloomy shadows and cloudy sacrifices, but as in a clear, transparent glass, behold the glory of the Lord, and are changed into it. Some Jewish writers<sup>c</sup> interpret this of the coming of the Messiah, and redemption by him, before whom darkness will flee away.

Moreover, as there is one glory of the moon, and another glory of the sun, and that of the sun far exceeds that of the moon, so the glory of the gospel-dispensation far exceeds that of the legal one: If the church was then fair as the moon, she must be now clear as the sun. The excelling glory of the gospel-dispensation is set in a true light by the apostle, in 2 Cor. iii. 7, 8, 9, 10. Now, 4thly, The church, in all these several periods, whether she be considered before the law or under the law, or under the gospel, is terrible as an army with banners; the church was always militant in all ages of the world; and as she never wanted enemies to fight with, so she never wanted a leader, and a commander to march before her; nor proper officers to keep her in order, nor suitable armour to put on and use, nor did she ever fail of victory, but was always more than a conqueror through him that loved her; and so was like a well ordered or well disciplined army, terrible to her enemies.

Secondly, The state of the Christian church, from the times of Christ and his apostles, until his second coming and presentation of her to himself in glory, may be here represented. And,

1st. The primitive church, or that in the age of the apostles, may be intended by the first expression; Who is she that looketh forth as the morning? for then the morning of gospel-light broke, and swiftly and suddenly spread itself over the nations of the world; it produced joy and gladness wherever it came, and moved on irresistibly, maugre all the opposition that was made against it, and could no more be stopped in its progress than the morning-light can.

2dly, The state of the church, in some after-ages, may be set forth by the next phrase, fair as the moon, it being variable and changeable; and like the moon, had different phases and appearances; sometimes lying under fore trials and grievous persecutions, and at other times enjoying rest and peace; sometimes retaining the doctrines and ordinances of the gospel in their power and purity, and at other times over-run with errors and heresies.

3dly, The church being said to be clear as the sun, may either be descriptive of her state and condition in Constantine's time, when she was clothed with the sun, was in a great deal of splendor and glory, had the moon, the ceremonial law, under her feet, and a crown of twelve stars upon her head, the glorious doctrine of the twelve apostles, and were as terrible to her adversaries as an army with banners: Or else, the state of the church in the latter day-glory, when the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be sevenfold: Or else, as glorified in heaven, enjoying consummate happiness with Christ in the kingdom of his father, where the righteous shine forth as the sun, and are out of the reach of all their enemies.

Thirdly, These words may also be expressive of the state and condition of particular believers, who in their first conversion, may be said to look forth as the morning; their light and knowledge being but small, and their faith weak ;

but yet like the morning-light, increasing; for the path of the just is as the shining light, which shines more and more unto the perfect day. As also her being compared to the morning, may intend the beauty<sup>a</sup> and glory of believers, both in their faith and walk, she looks forth as the morning: The look of faith is exceeding beautiful in Christ's eye. See Chap. iv. 9. or goes forth as the rising morn<sup>c</sup>, as the Vulgate Latin reads it; i. e. her walk and conversation is exceeding comely: Moreover, believers, as to their sanctification, may be said to be fair as the moon, which has its spots in it; and what light it has it derives from the sun: So the sanctification of believers is imperfect, and all the light, grace and holiness they have come from the sun of righteousness; but then, as to their justification they are clear as the sun, all fair and no spot in them, and in their faith and conversation are terrible to their enemies, as an army with banners.

Ver. 11. I went down into the garden of nuts to see the fruits of the valley, and to see whether the vine flourished, and the pomegranates budded.

THESE are either the words of the church, or of Christ; <sup>a</sup> some take them to be the words of the church, who not finding Christ on earth, sought him in the heavenly paradise, which they understand by this nut-garden; and by her going down into it, the lively exercise of her faith on the unseen joys and glories of it, in looking to them, seeking of them, and pressing after them; though <sup>b</sup> others, who also understand them as the words of the church, yet think that they represent her as giving a reason why, upon his departure from her, she went not only into the city, but also into the fields, and that in the night-season, which might not appear so reputable to one of her sex; therefore, to wipe off all reproach, and to remove all suspicion of evil designs in her, as well as to inform him how she had employed herself during his absence, she tells him that she went into the nut-garden, to inspect the fruits of it, and to see in what case the vines and pomegranates were. Though I rather think, that they are the words of Christ, declaring to his church where he went, and what he employ'd himself about, when he departed from her; and that he was not even then altogether unmindful of her, but narrowly looked into the state and case of her, and her members, when she thought he was at a distance from her; and this agrees with what Christ had said in Chap. v. 1. I am come into my garden, &c. and also confirms what she had said in ver. 2. of this chapter, My beloved is gone down into his garden, &c. Besides, it best suits with him who is the owner of the garden, to look after the fruits of it, and to see in what case it stands:

Moreover,

<sup>a</sup> So of Helena in Theocrit. Idyll. 18. it is said, ὡς ἀριέλλοισα καλὸν διαφανὲς πρόσωπον, that she shewed her beautiful face as the rising morn.

Moreover, this was the usual place of Christ's residence. Taking them then to be the words of Christ, there are two things to be considered,

- I. What is meant by this garden of nuts, into which, Christ says, he went down.
- II. The end of his going there; which is threefold. 1st, To see the fruits of the valley. 2<sup>dly</sup>, To see whether the vine flourished. 3<sup>dly</sup>, Whether the pomegranates budded.

I. I shall enquire what is meant by this garden of nuts into which Christ is said to go. Some Jewish interpreters understand by it, the second temple, which was built by the commandment of Cyrus king of Perſia; but it ſeems better to underſtand it of the church of Chriſt, which is compared to a garden, in Chap. iv. 12. and for what reaſons has been there ſhewn. And Chriſt being ſaid to go down into it, may be an alluſion to Solomon's gardens, which lay low, and required a deſcent unto them from his palace; and this not only is expreſſive of the ſtate and condition of Chriſt's church, but alſo of his condeſcenſion in viſiting it, as has been obſerved on ver. 2. Now this garden here, is ſaid to be a garden of nuts; the words are, by ſome <sup>d</sup>, tranſlated the pruned gardens, or the gardens of pruning or ſhearing, deriving the word from a root, which ſignifies to cut or ſhear, and ſo ſignifies that it is a garden well dreſſed, and pruned, and kept in good order; and ſo indeed is Chriſt's church, and therefore is oppoſite to, and different from the field and vineyard of the ſluggard, Prov. xxiv. 30, 31. which was neither in good order without nor within; without, its ſtone wall, its fence was broken down; and within, it was all over-run with thorns and nettles; but Chriſt's garden is in a much better caſe; for, 1. It is well fenced with ſovereign, powerful and diſtinguiſhing grace; nay, God himſelf is a wall of fire about it, and has appointed ſalvation for walls and bulwarks all around it; ſo that it is ſtrongly incloſed, and well ſecured from the beaſt out of the wood waſting it, and from the wild beaſt of the field devouring it. 2. It is well planted; it is not an empty garden within, but is well ſtored with plants of all ſorts, and thoſe the moſt excellent, as appears from Chap. iv. 13, 14. it is filled with trees of righteouſneſs, which are laden with the fruit thereof, and therefore are very valuable. 3. It is well pruned; for as Chriſt is the vine, the principal plant in this garden, on which all others grow, and from whence they receive their life and nourishment: So Chriſt's father is the huſbandman, the vine dreſſer, the keeper of the garden, and he keeps the plants in good order; for every branch that beareth not fruit, he lops it off, and taketh it away; and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth or pruneth it, that it may bring forth more fruit, John xv. 1, 2. 4. It is well watered: As the Lord is the keeper of it, ſo he waters it every moment, with the reſreſhing dews and delightful ſhowers of divine love and grace; there is a fountain in the miſt of it to water all the beds, and this is Chriſt himſelf; who therefore, in Chap. iv. 15. is called the fountain of gardens, who alſo is the well of living waters, and whoſe grace is as ſtreams from Lebanon: So that every particular believer, every plant here, is like a watered garden, and like a spring of water, whose waters fail not. 5. It is well weeded: There are tares grow up in Christ's field, and weeds in his garden, such as hypocrites and carnal professors; and Christ sometimes weeds his garden of many of these; and that by causing the sun of persecution to arise upon them, which scorches and burns them up, they not having root in themselves; he sometimes takes his fan in his hand, and with it purges his floor of the chaff, and clears his churches of such sort of persons as these; but this he will do more effectually at the last day, when he shall send his angels to gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them that do iniquity, Mat. xiii. 41.

Moreover, by these well dressed or pruned gardens may be meant, those particular churches of Christ, which are regularly formed, are in good order, and are well disciplined; whose members are lively in the exercise of their faith, walk agreeably in their lives and conversations, are zealous for the truths of the gospel, and for the maintaining the ordinances of it in their purity, and are not remiss in dealing with offenders, whether they be immoral in their lives, or erroneous in their principles; such were, in a great measure, the churches of Ephesus and Colosse; see Rev. ii. 2, 3. Col. ii. 5. and with such churches Christ delights to be, and these may expect his presence.

But the word nut, though only used in this place, is, by Jewish writers, generally render'd a nut; and so it is by the Septuagint, as well as by our translators and others; and by the garden is meant the church of Christ, as has been observed before; and by the nuts which grow in this garden, from whence it has the name of a nut-garden, are meant believers, who may be called so for the following reasons; (1.) Because tho' they are mean and abject without, yet are glorious and valuable within; the king's daughter is all glorious within. The inside of a believer, like that of the nut, is the best part of him; the outward appearance of saints is but mean, and the world judging according to that, not being capable of seeing any further, look upon them as the off-scouring of all things; but Christ, who knows their inside as well as their outside, knows what they are by his grace, as well as what they are by nature, that though they are black in themselves, yet are comely in him; he reckons them the excellent in the earth, in whom is all his delight. (2.) Because of their several coverings: In the nut there are the husk and shell, and besides these, an inward covering. Believers have several coverings, they have the robe of Christ's righteousness to cover them, which may answer the shell of the nut, being lasting and durable, will abide for ever, and will bring the soul that is enwrapped in it, safe to glory. There is also the new man, or garment of sanctification, which is put on by the believer; and this may answer the inward covering of the nut, as being more thin and tender, weak and imperfect; and then there is likewise the outward garment of a gospel-conversation; and this may answer the husk of the nut, as being the coarser and more imperfect covering, which continually needs washing in Christ's blood. (3.) Because of their hardness in enduring afflictions: They wade through a sea of troubles in this world before they enter the kingdom; and this this they do with becoming cheerfulness, patience, courage and magnanimity of mind; they are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; are perplexed, but not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed, 2 Cor. iv. 8, 9. and that because they are supported under all these trials and exercises, and carried above them by a superior power. (4.) Because of their hiddenness: The best part of the nut is hid. The saints are hid from everlasting, in the bosom of the Father, in the hands of the son, and in the everlasting covenant of grace, until they are made openly to appear to be the people of God, by powerful and efficacious grace in conversion, and therefore are called God's hidden ones; and after conversion they are hid from the men of the world; the work of grace upon their souls is hid from them, and therefore called the hidden man of the heart; their joys and comforts are hid from them, and so indeed is their whole life of grace here, as well as their life of glory hereafter; for though they are the sons of God, yet it does not yet appear so fully to themselves, much less to the men of the world, what they shall be. (5.) Because of the safety and security both of their persons and their graces: Nuts, in the greatest showers of rain, have only their outside washed the more, but their inside remains untouched, and is no ways hurt. So saints are safe and secure, notwithstanding all the floods, storms and tempests of temptations, persecutions and afflictions, being built upon the rock, Christ Jesus, and hid in him, the ark of the covenant; the inward principle of grace in them cannot be lost; that hidden seed is incorruptible, and will abide so for ever. (6.) Nuts often grow in clusters, which may not only denote the multitude of believers, and their close adherence to Christ, his gospel, cause and interest, but also their unity among themselves; and as it is a very pleasant and delightful sight, to see nuts grow in clusters, so it is much more to see brethren dwell together in unity. (7.) Saints being compared to nuts, and to those of the best sort, which grow in gardens, shews, that they have not only the shell of an outward profession, but also the kernel of true grace: Some have only the form of godliness, but deny the power thereof; profess to know God in words, but in works deny him; have a name to live, but yet are dead; but such are not these who are here compared to nuts. (8.) Their being compared to nuts, may denote their preservation from the pollutions of the world, though in the midst of them: As a nut, though it may fall into the mire and dirt, yet the inside is no ways defiled therewith; so R. Solomon Jarchi, out of the Midrasses <sup>1</sup>, explains these words, of the impollution of the works of the Israelites, when they were in captivity among the nations of the world. (9.) The kernel of the nut does not <sup>2</sup> appear, unless the shell be broke: The graces of God's children generally shew themselves most, ~~when~~ they are under afflictions; for tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope; that is, makes those graces to appear more in their lively exercise, even as spice smells most when beat in a mortar. Moreover, this rich treasure of divine grace, which is put into our earthen vessels, will not be so clearly seen, until these vessels are broke in pieces; nor will the soul appear so beautiful and glorious, being clothed with Christ's righteousness, and adorned with the graces of his spirit, as when it is dislodged from the earthly house of its tabernacle, and is joined with the spirits of just men made perfect. (10.) Some think, that not the common nuts, but the fruit, which we call nutmegs, are here intended; and may be expressive of the fragrant and sweet odour of the saints, as they are clothed with Christ's garments, which smell of myrrh, aloes and cassia; and as they are perfumed with his ointments, which are exceeding savoury. But,

II. Let us consider the end of Christ's going down into this garden of nuts, which is,

1st, To see the fruits of the valley. By fruits are meant the graces of the spirit, the growth, actings, and exercise of which, Christ went down to take notice of; and these are said to be the fruits of the valley, because they grew upon humble souls, with whom Christ delights to be, and on whom he bestows more grace; though it is a wonderful instance of his grace and condescension to vouchsafe a regard to such poor, low, mean and worthless creatures; see Isa. lvii. 15. and lxvi. 1, 2. The Septuagint translate the words, the shoots of the brook or river, agreeable enough to the Hebrew word, which signifies a torrent, as well as a valley; and so are expressive of the fertile soil, in which believers are planted, and which is the occasion of their fruitfulness; see Psal. i. 3.

2<sup>dly</sup>, To see whether the vine flourished. In what sense particular churches or believers in Christ may be compared to vines, has been shewn on Chap. ii. 13. who may be said to flourish, when they increase in numbers, gifts and grace, and become fruitful in every good word and work, which Christ much looks after in his churches, and in particular persons.

3<sup>dly</sup>, To see whether the pomegranates budded. By pomegranates are meant believers; see Chap. iv. 13. and by their budding, the beginnings or first puttings forth of grace in them, which Christ takes much notice of, and is highly well pleased with: And from all this may be observed, 1. The particular care and notice which Christ takes of his plants; he misses none, but goes from one to another, observes them all in what case they are, takes notice of the meanest, as well as the greatest, the fruits of the valley, as well as the vines and pomegranates. 2. That Christ is well pleased with the fruitfulness of them; he has been at a great deal of labour and expence to make them so; for this purpose he has made, planted, dunged and watered this garden: And now it must be some pleasure to him to see of the travail of his soul, and to have the pleasure of the Lord prosper in his hands; for as herein is his father glorified, so herein is he well pleased that his people bring forth much fruit. See John xv. 8. Col. i. 10. 3. That he particularly takes notice of the first appearances and buddings of grace in young converts; these he has a tender regard for, and takes a more than ordinary care of. See Chap. ii. 15. Isa. xl. 11. and xlii. 3. 4. That Christ has plants of various sorts and different growths in his garden; some vines, some pomegranates, and some nut-nut-trees; all have gifts, and grace differing one from another; some have ripe fruit upon them, others are blossoming, and some are but just budding forth. 5. Yet they are all fruit-bearing trees in Christ's garden; there are none else mentioned here; and there are none in it, which are of his planting, but what are fruitful. Seeing then that Christ does so narrowly inspect the plants and trees in his garden, and expects fruit from every one of them, how much should we be concerned to be filled with the fruits of righteousness, lest when he comes into his garden, and finds no fruit upon us, neither in the blossom nor in the bud, he should give orders to cut us down for cumber-ground. See Luke xiii. 6, 7.

Ver. 12. Or ever I was aware, my soul made me like the chariots of Amminadib.

THESE are either the words of the church, or else the words of Christ; if we consider them as the words of the church, then they may be expressive, either,

1st, Of that rapture which her soul was in, in the views of those heavenly joys, which, some<sup>a</sup> think, she had been taking notice of, and meditating upon in the former verse; which, whilst she was doing, or ever she was aware, her soul took wing and fled as swiftly towards those happy regions as ever the chariots of Amminadib ran; she seems to be in much such an extacy as the apostle Paul was, 2 Cor. xii. 2, 3, 4. when he was caught up into the third heaven, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter; who then knew not whether he was in the body or out of the body, and therefore in his account of it, leaves it as a thing only known to God; so she here says, or ever I was aware, or as it is in the Hebrew text<sup>b</sup>, I knew not, i. e. scarce where I was, or whither I was going, or whether I was in the body or out of the body, I cannot tell; so sudden was the snatch, so surprizing the rapture, that I cannot tell what better to compare it to than the swift run of Amminadib's chariots. Or,

2<sup>dly</sup>, Of her ignorance where Christ was, and yet her diligence in seeking of him, I knew not, i. e. where my beloved was; he departed from me, and was absent a considerable time, and I could hear no tidings of him; it is true, I had heard him say that he was come into his garden; but alas! through my drowsiness and sleep I had entirely forgot it, until discoursing with the daughters of Jerusalem about him, it came fresh into my mind; but even then, when I knew not where he was, my soul made me like the chariots of Amminadib; I ran about here and there in search of him until I found him, as swiftly as ever his chariots did; see Chap. iii. 1, 2, and v. 6, 7, 8. and Job xxiii. 2—8, 9. Or else,

3<sup>dly</sup>, Of that prodigious haste she made, as soon as ever she knew where he was; and it is as if she should say, as soon as ever I understood that my beloved was gone down into his garden to take a view of the trees and plants which grow there, and of the fruits of it; immediately, on a sudden, as it were, at an unawares, such was the strength of my love and affection to him, that I moved as swiftly after him as if I had been upon the chariots of Ammiadib. Or,

4thly, Of her courage and resolution in surmounting all difficulties for the sake of him: Love makes persons bold and daring; perfect love, as the apostle says, 1 John iv. 18, Cast out fear; and so it did in her, for she feared nothing that might befall her, and what did, did not discourage her; for though she was abused by the watchmen, and unveiled by the keepers of the walls, yet she drove on as briskly and as courageously as ever Ammiadib drove on his chariots in the field of battle. Or,

5thly, They may be expressive of the modesty and humility of the church, in not thinking that such praises as those which had been given her both by Christ and by the virgins in the preceding verses, belonged to her; I know not, I did not think, being conscious to myself of my own imperfections, that such commendations belonged to me; but finding that they did, my soul made the greater haste to answer those characters, and to enjoy the company of him whom I dearly love; and therefore she takes her leave of the virgins, her companions, who had hitherto accompany'd her, in the search of her beloved, that she might be alone with him; which occasioned them to say, in the following words, Return, return O Skulamite, return, return that we may look upon thee. Though I rather think that these are the words of Christ, as those in ver. 11. also are, who having gone down into his garden, to observe the fruitfulness of the trees and plants of it, declares in these words, in what case he found them, or rather, in what he did not; I know not, or I did not perceive them to be in a fruitful and flourishing condition: And to this purpose Junius and Tremellius read the words, Nondum percipientem hac, Not yet perceiving these things, i. e. the vines to flourish, or the pomegranates to bud; therefore his soul put him upon using speedy methods to bring his garden, and the plants of it, into a more fruitful condition: From whence we may observe, 1. That sometimes there may be but little fruitfulness appearing in the churches of Christ: Faith may be very low, as to its actings and exercise; the life and power of godliness may be much decayed; there may be but little warmth, zeal and activity for Christ, his gospel, cause and interest; the ministry of the word may meet with but small success; so that there may be no pomegranates budding as well as no vines flourishing. But, 2. Christ will not always leave his churches in such a condition; but will make haste unto them, and bring them into a more fruitful state; he will come and revive his work upon the hearts of his people, and make them fruitful in every good word and work; he will bless the ministry of the word, not only for comfort and edification, so as his vines shall flourish, but also for conversion, so that the pomegranates shall bud forth. And, 3. It may be observed, that it is Christ's presence that makes churches fruitful: As his absence causes a winter-season, both with churches and particular believers, so his presence is as the returning spring, which renews the face of the earth, causes the flowers to appear above ground, the pomegranates to bud, and the vines to put forth their tender grapes; he is that sun of righteousness, by whose warm and quickening beams of light and love, souls grow up as calves of the stall.

Moreover,

Moreover, these words may be expressive of that transport of love, with which Christ was filled towards his church, which caused him so speedily to return to her, as is here intimated; or ever I was aware, i. e. on a sudden; and in a surprizing manner, my love and affection to my church broke out and discovered itself, which powerfully moved and inclined me to make speedy haste unto her, and afford her all the assistance I could, as well as grant her my presence, which she was so desirous of; not that we are to suppose that any thing comes to Christ at unawares, or is done inadvertently by him; but this he says to shew the strength of his love, and in what a sudden and surprizing manner it brake forth towards his church and people: And in these words may be considered these three things;

- I. What it was that put him upon this speedy return to his church; my soul made me, &c.
- II. In what manner this was effected, or what his soul made him to his church, in his return to her; it made him like the chariots of Amminadib.
- III. Whose chariots these are which Christ's soul made him like unto, or set him upon; or rather, who the persons are to whom his soul made him as chariots.

I. In these words we have an account of what it was that moved him to, or put him upon this speedy return to his church; which was not any worth or worthiness, love or loveliness in her; it was not her grace, nor the exercise of it considered in themselves, but his own soul that moved him to it, that is, that love and affection which he bore in his own heart towards her; it was this that moved him first to undertake her cause, assume her nature, and die in her room and stead; and it is this which causes him to manifest himself in a way of grace, and pay those love-visits to her, which he frequently does.

II. The manner in which this was effected, or what his soul made him to his church and people, may be here also observed; it made him like the chariots of Amminadib. 1. Like these chariots he moved swiftly to her: Christ is a present help to his people in their time of need; he helps them, and that right early; he makes haste and delays not to afford them his assistance; for which reason he is said to be as a roe or a young hart, leaping upon the mountains, and skipping upon the hills, in Chap. ii. 8, 9. 2. He is like chariots, to support, bear up and carry his people; he takes them up in his chariots of salvation, and carries them through all the troubles and difficulties of this life, safe to glory, as he himself declares he will, in Isa. xvi. 3, 4. 3. He is as chariots to them, to protect and defend them from their enemies: That which chariots and horses are to others, that is Christ to them, and much more so; whilst some trust in chariots, and others in horses, they trust in the name of the Lord their God; who comes with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire, Isa. lxvi. 15. 4. It may denote the majesty and glory in which he visited her; which, as it was an instance of his condescension, so it was putting an honour upon her, that one so great as he, who is the King of kings, and Lord of lords, should visit one so poor and mean as she.

III. It may also be considered whole chariots these are, which Christ's soul made him like unto, or who the persons are to whom his soul made him as chariots. Some take Aminadib here to be the proper name of a person, who, perhaps, was one of Solomon's chariot-drivers, and was famous in that way, was an artist in it, and successful in it, and who, Jebu-like, drove on swiftly and furiously; and therefore Christ speedily returning to his church, compares himself thereunto. Though I rather think, with R. Aben Ezra, Jarchi and others<sup>c</sup>, that it should be considered as two words, thus, Ammi, which signifies my people, and Nadib, willing, or princely; and so the words may be rendered<sup>d</sup>, the chariots of my willing or princely people. And this may be understood either,

1st, Of angels, who are Christ's willing people, who are always ready to do his pleasure, obey his orders, and execute his commands with the utmost cheerfulness and alacrity imaginable; see Psal. ciii. 20, 21: and therefore, one of the petitions in that prayer, which Christ directed his disciples to, is, that God's will might be done in earth as it is in heaven. These are also the chariots of the Lord, as is manifest from Psal. lxxviii. 17. The chariots of the Lord are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels: These are made use of by him in a providential way, to execute his will, and do his pleasure; see Zech. vi. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. and so they are in a way of grace; they are made use of by him to carry messages of grace to his people; for they are all ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation. These are his chariots which he sends out to bring his children home; in these Elijah was conducted body and soul to glory; for the chariot and horses of fire which carried him thither, were no other than angels, who appeared in such a form; by whom also Lazarus was carried into Abraham's bosom; and perhaps, Christ might here make use of the ministry of angels, and ride in these chariots in this discovery of himself to his church. Or else,

2<sup>dly</sup>, It may be meant of the ministers of Christ, who preach Christ and his gospel freely, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind. These may be called the chariots of the Lord, as Elijah, in 2 Kings ii. 12. is called the chariot and horsemen of Israel; and they may be called so, because they bear the name of Christ, and carry and spread his gospel throughout the world, and are his chariots to bring home souls unto him, as the trophies of his grace; see Isa. lxvi. 20. and in which Christ frequently rides, and shews himself unto his people. Though,

3<sup>dly</sup>, I should rather think that the people of Christ themselves are here intended, whom Christ is as chariots to; for so I think the words may very well be rendered, or ever I was aware, my soul made me as chariots to my willing or princely people: And so it points out the persons who shared in this instance of his grace: And these are said, in Psal. cx. 3. to be a willing people in the day of his power; and they may be called so, 1. Because they are made willing to part with sin. This God requires, but man is naturally loth to do it; for sin is a sweet morsel in his mouth, he bides it under his tongue, he spares

and forsakes it not, but keeps it still within his mouth; but when the spirit of God convinces him of the exceeding sinfulness of it, then what was before sweet, is now bitter, and what was delightful, is now odious; and what his soul adored, it now abhors, and says, as in Hos. xiv. 8. with Ephraim, What have I to do any more with idols? 2. Because they are made willing to part with sinful companions: This is what God calls his people to, but is a thing that is not so easily complied with, until by mighty grace they are made willing to it; for it is no other than a forsaking a man's own people, and his father's house, besides a great deal of reproach that is cast upon them for so doing; for he that departs from evil, maketh himself a prey; but when the spirit of God convinces the soul of the necessity of parting with such company, and the danger of continuing in it, it is not only willing to it, but also laments that it has been so long in it, saying, as in Psal. cxx. 5, 6. Wo is me that I sojourn in Mesek, that I dwell in the tents of Kedar. 3. Because they are made willing to part with their own righteousness; not in point of obedience, but in point of dependence; not as ornamental to the Christian, but as constitutive of him; not as it glorifies God, but as it is made use of as a plea with him, either for grace here, or glory hereafter. Again, not as it is a guard or fence against the reproaches of men, but as matter of boasting before God; not as it is agreeable to God's law, but as it is opposite to God's revealed method of justifying sinners by his son's righteousness; but this, man is not naturally willing to, it goes against him to part with it, because this is most agreeable to nature; it is his own offspring, the effect of great labour and toil, and what affords matter of boasting to him; but when the spirit of God convinces him of the weakness and insufficiency of it, and shews him the glory and fulness of Christ's righteousness, he then desires, with the apostle Paul, Phil. iii. 9. to be found in him, not having on his own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ. 4. Because they are willing to be saved alone by Christ. Man is naturally for bringing his own works either as the sole cause of, or as partners with Christ in salvation-work; but when souls are made to see the imperfection of these, and that salvation is only by Christ, and in no other, their language is, Asbur shall not save us; we desire to be saved no other way than by Christ; and therefore they say with Job, Chap. xiii. 15, 16. Though he slay us, yet will we trust in him; he also shall be our salvation. 5. Because they are as willing to serve Christ as they are to be saved by him, and this, not from fear of punishment, but from a principle of love; the love of Christ constrains them to it; nor do they perform it in a servile, mercenary way, but freely, not as a task, but as a pleasure; for to them wisdom's ways are ways of pleasantness, and her paths are paths of peace. 6. Because they are willing to bear the cross of Christ: This Christ requires of them, and this they readily and voluntarily submit unto. Christ's cross is to them preferable to crowns and kingdoms; with Moses, Heb. xi. 25, 26. they chuse rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. Now to such a free and willing people as these, Christ makes himself as chariots.

But again, the word may be render'd, my princely people; and such are the people of Christ; see Psal. cxiii. 7, 8. they are all princes, being the sons of a king; they are all heirs to a kingdom, have a crown of life, righteousness and glory laid up for them, and a throne of glory prepared for them to inherit; they wear princely robes, enjoy princely fare, and have a princely equipage; the angels of the Lord attend them continually, as their life-guard. So the church is said to be a prince's daughter, in Chap. vii. 1. and to her Christ here makes himself as chariots, and takes her up along with him, that she might enjoy his delightful company which she had so long sought after, and so much desired; which occasion the daughters of Jerusalem, who had hitherto accompanied her in the search of him, to say in the following words:

Ver. 13. Return, return, O Shulamite, return, return, that we may look upon thee: What will ye see in the Shulamite? As it were the company of two armies.

THESE words consist of two parts.

- I. A call either of Christ or of the daughters of Jerusalem, to the church, to return, that they might have a full view of her.
- II. A reply to that call which is made by proposing a question and returning an answer to it.

I. Here is a call either of Christ or of the daughters to the church, to return, that they might have a full view of her; in which may be considered,
First, The name she's called by, or the title and appellation which is given to her, Shulamite. Secondly, What she is called upon to do, and that is to return, which is repeated over and over. Thirdly, The end of it, which is, that they might look upon her.

First, The name she bears, or the title and appellation which is given her, is, Shulamite; and she may be called so for the following reasons:

1st, Because she was an inhabitant <sup>a</sup> of Salem or Jerusalem: As the woman with whom Elisba lodged, is called a Shunamite, from her dwelling in Shunem. So the church is here called a Shulamite or a Jerusalemite, from her dwelling in Salem or Jerusalem. Jerusalem was formerly called Salem; so it was in Melchizedek's time, who was king of that place; which ancient name of it is mentioned by the Psalmist, in Psal. lxxvi. 2. In Salem also is his tabernacle. And now it is no wonder that the church, or any particular believer, should be called a Shulamite, seeing the church, both in the Old and New Testament, frequently bears the name of Jerusalem; so that to be a Shulamite, is to be a fellow citizen of the saints, and of the household of God, and to share in all the privileges and immunities thereof as they do: who besides the company of angels, and conversation of saints, enjoy the presence of Father, Son and Spirit, and share in all the blessings of the everlasting covenant; for to these Shulamites, these natives of Zion, or inhabitants of Jerusalem, do these properly belong; see Isa. xxxiii. 24. Zech. xiii. 1.

termination, which suits well with her : And as it is a common thing for the wife to have the same name with the husband, so it is no unusual thing for the church to be called by the same name as Christ is : Is he the Solomon ? she is the Shulamite : Is he Jehovah, our righteousness ? this is also the name wherewith she is called ; see Jer. xxiii. 6. compared with Chap. xxxiii. 16. Hence it is that she shares in all the blessings he is possessed of, and in every thing he has a property in ; for Christ being her's, all that he has is her's :

3dly, The word <sup>c</sup> from whence this is derived, signifies both perfection and peace. So that she may be called the Shulamite, from that perfection and peace which she enjoys in and through Christ. 1. She may be called so from that perfection which she is or shall be possess'd of ; Return, return, O Shulamite, or O thou perfect one, who art an accomplished beauty, being the perfection of it, whose renown is gone forth among the beaten for it ; for thy beauty is perfect thro' the comeliness which the Lord hath put upon thee. Now the church may be said to be a Shulamite, a perfect one, these several ways : (1.) Not as she is in herself, but as she is in Christ ; as she is in herself, she's black, but as she is in Christ, she's comely ; as she is in herself, she is imperfect, but as she is in him, she's compleat ; as she is in herself, she's full of spots, but as she is in him, she's all fair, and without spot. (2.) She is perfect, not as considered in her own righteousness, but as considered in Christ's ; as she is considered in her own, she's imperfect, that being so, which she frankly acknowledges, saying, Isa. lxiv. 6. We are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags ; but as she is considered in Christ's righteousness, she's perfect, being compleatly justified, acquitted and discharged thereby, from all sin, and so may be justly reckoned among the number of the spirits of just men made perfect. (3.) She may be said to be perfect, not absolutely as in herself, but comparatively, with regard to others. So saints may be said to be perfect, when compared either with themselves before conversion, or with hypocrites and carnal professors, or with the prophane men of the world. So Job, though he may be said to be a perfect and an upright man, on the account of his having Christ's righteousness upon him, and the truth of grace within him, yet he may also be said to be so, as being compared with the men of that generation in which he lived ; and therefore the Lord says of him, There is none like him in the earth, a perfect and an upright man. (4.) She may be said to be perfect, with a perfection of parts ; but not of degrees : It is true, the believer has a compleat sanctification in Christ, but not in himself. Moreover, every part, power and faculty of the soul may be sanctified, but not wholly, or to that degree as it shall be. The new creature is formed in all its parts, but is not yet grown up to be a perfect man in Christ ; it is not adult, it is as yet in its nonage, in its infancy. (5.) She may be called the Shulamite, or the perfect one, not as she is now, but as she shall be hereafter ; for tho' saints are now the sons of God, yet it does not yet appear what they shall be ; they are now in some measure, like to Christ, but then they shall be perfectly like unto him ; they have now spots upon them, but then they shall be without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing ; they will then appear to be compleat in Christ, and to be the fulness of him, as the church is called, in Eph. i. 23. which then she may be said to be, when all the elect are called by grace, and not one member of the body is missing ; and when all these members are filled with all the gifts and graces of the spirit in their measure, and are all grown up to a just proportion in the body.

2. She may be called the Shulamite, from that peace which she does or shall enjoy, in and through Christ. (1.) She may be called so from that peace which she has thro' Christ, who is her peace, and has made peace for her thro' the blood of his cross, and thereby has reconciled her unto God; so that being now justified by faith in his blood and righteousness, she has peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ. (2.) From that peace which she has from Christ, who gives unto her such a peace as the world can neither give nor take away; Peace I leave with you, says Christ, John xiv. 27. my peace I give unto you, not as the world giveth, give I unto you; which is such an one as the believer can experience, even in the midst of the world's frowns, troubles and persecutions: This is a peace which passeth all understanding; and which is spoken only by the blood of Jesus, that speaketh better things than that of Abel; and which the God of peace gives to men, by leading their faith to the person, blood and righteousness of Christ. (3.) From that peace which she does or should enjoy in her members; who ought to endeavour to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace, which they will do, if the peace of God rules in their hearts as it should do; for hereunto are they called. (4.) From that peace which she is entitled to, and shall enjoy hereafter; for though this world is a world of trouble to the believer, yet he's no sooner out of it but he enters into peace, and into such an one as will never be interrupted and broke in upon, either by sin, satan or the world; for mark but the upright and perfect man, the true Shulamite, for the end of that man is peace. But,

Secondly, Let us now consider what is said unto this Shulamite, and that is, return, return; which if we understand as the words of Christ, may be expressive either, 1. Of the spiritual return of his church and people to him after sin and backslidings; which sense is favoured by the Targum or Chaldee paraphrase upon this place, and also suits with the former state and condition of the church; who was fallen into a piteous frame of spirit, was sleepy and drowsy, negligent of her duty, and slighting Christ, for which reason he departed from her; but now returning himself, invites her to return also to him, which shews the exceeding greatness of his love unto her, and tenderness for her; and therefore, to answer all objections, and remove all discouragements, he not only speaks to her in such loving and endearing language, but also repeats the call over and over, to shew how earnestly desirous he was of it, as well as the haste and speed he would have her make in it; see Jer. iii. 1—12, 12. Hos. xiv. 1, 2.—4. Or, 2. Of the conversion of the Jews: The name by which the church is here called, may more especially intend the Jewish church, and the words, return, return, aptly represent the present state of the Jews, who are in a state of blindness, impenitence, and unbelief, and have not only veils over their heads, but also over their hearts, when the law of Moses is read and expounded among them; they have their backs turned upon God, and their hearts set against the true Messiah, Christ Jesus. Moreover, their conversion is expressed both in the Old and New Testament,

* This is interpreted of a nation that both makes and enjoys peace in Sbirbasbirim Rabba in loc. and in Bereishith Rabba, par. 66. • Vid. Aben Ezra and Brightman in loc. and Carpov. Critica Sacra, par. 3. p. 904.

Testament, by a turning or a returning unto the Lord; see Hof. iii. 5. 2 Cor. iii. 16. and the repetition of these words, return, return, not only shews the power and haste in which this shall be accomplished; for then shall that prophecy be fulfilled, which is mentioned with so much wonder and surprize, in Isa. lxvi. 8. Who hath heard such a thing? Who hath seen such things? Shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day, or shall a nation be born at once? but also their being repeated four times<sup>1</sup>, may denote the collection of the Jews, at the time of their conversion, from the four corners of the earth; see Isa. xi. 12. I rather think that these are the words of the daughters of Jerusalem, who perceiving that the church was going away from them, call after her to return unto them. They first met with her in the time of her beloved's absence from her, and had accompanied her in her search after him hitherto; but now having met with her beloved, who had made himself unto her as the chariots of Amminadib, she takes her leave of them, and in all haste goes along with him, which they observing, call to her after this manner: Or else, these daughters having observed how the church, through modesty and shamefacedness, being conscious of her former treatment of Christ, hung down her head and hid her face, as blushing and being ashamed to look up, being now in his presence: They call to her to turn, as some<sup>2</sup> render the word, that is, to turn her face, that they might behold the beauty and glory of it; which leads us to consider,

Thirdly, The end of this call, which is, that they might look upon her; and if we take them to be the words of Christ, then the we are either the trinity of persons, Father, Son and Spirit, who are all well pleased with returning sinners, look upon them with delight and pleasure, and grant them communion and fellowship with them; or else, Christ and his angels, who together with Christ, not only rejoice at the conversion of prophane sinners, but also at the return of backsliding ones: Or else, he and the daughters, her companions, who, as well as he, were in love with her, and with wonder gazed at her. Though they seem rather to be the words of the daughters themselves, who here express their desire of seeing her, and therefore call to her to return unto them<sup>3</sup>. They had heard very great commendations of the church's beauty, in the preceding verses, which had excited their desires more narrowly to look upon, and take a fuller view of her than hitherto they had done; as also, that they might again enjoy her company and conversation, which had been so useful and instructive to them, and, which, they might imagine, would be more so, seeing she had so lately met with Christ, and had some fresh experiences of his love unto her. So much for the first part of the words.

II. Here is a reply made to this call of Christ, or of the virgins to the church, to return; which is done, 1st, By proposing a question, What will ye see in the Shulamite? 2dly, By returning an answer to it, as it were the company of two armies.

1st, A reply is made, by proposing this question, What will ye see in the Shulamite? which is done either by Christ, who was best able to answer it; and

and this he does, not as being ignorant of what was to be seen in his church, nor with a design to lessen his church's glory and excellency, but rather to heighten it, and to animate and excite the desires and affections of these virgins more strongly towards her: Or else this question is put by the virgins, one to another; some of them wished for her return, and others asked what they would, or what they expected to see in her: Though I rather think, it is put by the church herself, who perceiving that the daughters were so very importunate with her to return to them, that they might look upon her, ask what they could expect to see in her, who was in herself and in her own opinion, such a poor, mean and unworthy creature, not fit to be looked upon, there being nothing in her that was extraordinary, or indeed valuable, or worth seeing.

2dly. An answer is returned unto this question, thus, As it were the company of two armies; which is either given by Christ as an answer to his own, or to the daughters question, and that with a design to set forth the glory and majesty of the church; should it be asked as if he should say, What is to be seen in my church? I answer, a great deal of glory; for though she is militant, yet she is terrible as an army with banners; nay, there is as much stateliness and majesty to be seen in her, as in two armies set in battle-array: Or else, they are the answer of the virgins one to another, declaring what they expected to see in Christ's spouse, and that is, either such a glorious and joyful meeting between Christ and his church, as is often between great persons, which is frequently attended with singing and dancing; for the word translated company, signifies a company of those who dance and sing; and therefore is rendered by the Septuagint, χοροί, choirs; an instance of which spiritual joy, signified by such metaphors, see in Psal. lxxviii. 24, 25. or as an army at the reception of their prince, for the sake of greater honour and majesty, divides itself into bands: Or else it was an angelic glory which they expected to see in her, or to see her face as the angel of the Lord; which would be as delightful and refreshing a sight unto them as that was which Jacob had, when he had just parted with Laban, and was in danger from his brother Esau, who, Gen. xxxii. 1, 2. saw the angels of God as two bands, the one to go before and the other behind him; and therefore he called the name of the place Mabainaim, which signifies two hosts or two armies, and is the same word that is here used; and to this history the allusion seems* to be here made: Or else, by this company of two armies, which these virgins expected to see, and were desirous of seeing in the church, may be meant, the union of Jews and Gentiles in one body, which will be effected in the latter day, and when it is, it will be a glorious and delightful sight. Though I rather think, that both the question and the answer are the church's, who first asks what they could expect to see in her, and then replies, that nothing could be seen in her, but as it were the company of two armies; i. e. flesh and spirit, grace and sin, which were continually warring against and opposing each other. See Rom. vii. 23. Gal. v. 17. and this surely could be no pleasant or desirable sight, as she thought, to them: But notwithstanding, she had such a mean opinion of herself, yet very large and noble commendations are given of her in the following chapter, which fill up the greatest part of it: And thus it begins;

C H A P. VII.

Ver. 1. *How beautiful are thy feet with shoes, O prince's daughter !
the joints of thy thighs are like jewels, the work of the hands of a cunning workman.*

THESE are either the words of the daughters of Jerusalem, who having desired the church to return unto them in the latter part of the preceding chapter, that they might take a view of those incomparable and astonishing beauties, for which she had been commended ; to which request she complying, they now, with wonder, look upon her, and give those large commendations of her, which are in this and some following verses. And what seems still more to strengthen this sense of the words, Christ is spoken of in ver. 5. as a distinct person, both from the person who is described, and also from the persons by whom the description is made. Though I rather think that they are the words of Christ, who observing his church think so meanly, and speak so modestly of herself, enters afresh upon the commendation of her beauties, to the end that all her discouragements might be removed, her objections answered, and she be fully assured that she was as beautiful in his eyes, and as much the object of his love as ever she was, notwithstanding her unkind treatment of him, and behaviour to him. Moreover, it may be observed, that the title, love, which is given the church, in ver. 6. does not suit well to come out of any other's mouth but Christ's, whose love peculiarly she is : Nor indeed, would it appear so proper to any as to Christ, to give such commendations of the church as here are given. And it is also worthy of our notice, that the order in which Christ proceeds here, in the description of the beauty of his church, is not only different from that method which she took in setting forth his glory, in Chap. 5. but also from that which he himself took, when upon the same subject, in Chapters iv. and vi. for as he there began with the hair of her head, her lips, teeth, cheeks and temples, and so proceeded downwards, he here begins with her feet, and rises upwards ; which may be,

1. To shew that he takes notice of, and has a value for the meanest members of his mystical body, the church ; he takes notice of her feet, which, though they have the lowest place in the body, yet are not without their usefulness ; for the head cannot say to the feet, I have no need of you ; and as they are not without their usefulness, so neither are they without Christ's notice, who has a real value, and has made provisions of grace for them, as well as for the other members of his body, and therefore appears in a garment down to the feet ; which garment of his justifying righteousness, covers the feet and toes, as well as the other parts of the body : Nay, Christ not only takes notice of, and has a value for his meanest saints, but also for their meanest performances ; he hears and despises not the prayers of his destitute ones ; he bottles up their tears, and forgets not their labour of love towards his saints ; such as as visiting them when sick, feeding them when hungry, and clothing them them when naked, nay, even the giving them a cup of cold water, in the name of a disciple ; all which he looks upon as done to himself, and will remember, and speak of them when they have forgotten them, and at a time when they little thought to have heard of them. 2. It may be also to lead the church, together with the daughters of Jerusalem, gradually, by little and little, into the glory and beauty which she received from him, and so bring them to consider what glory and beauty he must be possessed of, from whom she received all her's ; for if her feet with shoes were so beautiful, what must the other parts of her body be, which were still more gloriously adorned ! and if she in all her parts was so glorious, what must he be, who made her so ! 3. He takes notice first, of her feet, because she was now upon the return unto him after her backslidings from him, which was exceeding grateful to him ; the returning prodigal was not more welcome to his father, who seeing him afar off, ran and fell upon his neck, and kissed him, than a poor backsliding sinner is to Christ Jesus. 4. He inverts his former order and method, to shew that the manifestations of his love are not always alike ; he sometimes takes one way and sometimes another ; and whether a believer is considered either one way or another, he is always beautiful in Christ, and in his eyes. But let us now consider the words themselves, in which may be observed,

- I. The noble and excellent title which is given her ; O prince's daughter.
- II. The commendations of her ; which are, 1st, Of her feet, and these are said to be beautiful with shoes. 2<sup>dly</sup>, Of the joints of her thighs, which are said to be as jewels, the work of the hands of a cunning workman.

I. Here is a new and noble title given her, O prince's daughter. Christ finds new names and titles for his spouse, and that not only to set forth her excellency the more, but also to express the largeness of his love and affection to her ; who may well be called a prince's daughter ; as she is the king's daughter, in Psal. xlv. 13. and that because she is the daughter of the King of kings, and Lord of lords ; and so she is, 1. By covenant-grace, which makes her so ; for God has in covenant made over himself unto his people, and declared that he will be their Father, and they shall be his sons and daughters ; for even thus saith the Lord Almighty : And now that same grace which has took them into that relation, will make it appear manifestly that they are so, by bestowing all that grace which is laid up in covenant for them, and all that glory which is there provided for them. 2. By birth, or by the grace of regeneration ; the church of Christ is a prince's daughter by birth, being born again, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. The original and descent of the children of God is not base, mean and low, but high and noble : Those that are born again, are born ἀνωθεν, from above, as that word may be rendered ; they are born heirs to an inheritance that is not of this world, which is fading and perishing, but to one that is incorruptible, undefiled, and which fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for them ; and as they are born, so they are brought up, as the sons and daughters of kings and princes ; they are brought up in the king's palace ; they they feed at his table, and participate of all his royal dainties; their clothing shews them to be such, which is all of wrought gold; as does also their equipage and retinue, who besides the virgins or maids of honour to wait upon them, have also a guard of angels continually to attend them. 3. By adopting grace: Angels are the sons of God by creation, but saints by adoption; they are predestinated to it, and by the spirit of God, who is the spirit of adoption, are put into the possession of it, and reap the benefits, and enjoy the comfort of it, through his witnessing with their spirits, that they are the children of God; which is such a surprizing instance of God's grace, that all that share in this privilege, have reason to say with the apostle John, 1 John iii. 1. Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God. 4. By marriage: The church is married to Christ the eternal son of God, whose titles are the prince of peace, and the prince of the kings of the earth: So that she is both a prince's daughter and a prince's wife; and is the former by becoming the latter; she is espoused as a chaste virgin to Christ, who is the only son of the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God.

Moreover, the words may be rendered, O noble or princely daughter, i. e. who art of a noble and princely spirit: And this is, (1.) A free spirit, in opposition to a servile one; and so the word is translated, in Psal. li. 12. Uphold me with a free or princely spirit; and such a spirit believers have, being freed from the servitude of sin and satan; and being delivered from a spirit of bondage to a law of works, serve the Lord with all cheerfulness and readiness, being made a willing people in the day of his power. (2.) To be of a princely spirit, is to be of a free, noble, generous, bountiful and a liberal spirit; and such a spirit saints have, not only in distributing their temporal things to the necessities of the poor, but also in communicating their spiritual things to the mutual comfort and edification of each other.

II. Having considered the title, it will be now proper to take notice of the commendations given her; 1st, Of her feet, which are said to be beautiful with shoes. 2<sup>dly</sup>, Of the joints of her thighs, which are said to be as jewels, the work of the hands of a cunning workman.

1st, Her feet are here commended; by which may be meant, either, 1. The ministers of the gospel<sup>b</sup> whose feet being shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, are exceeding beautiful, according to Isa. lii. 7. How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace, &c. These are the church's feet, which run to and fro in the world, whereby the knowledge of Christ and his gospel is increased; which was eminently true of the apostles and first ministers of the gospel, who swiftly ran over the Gentile world; and where-ever they came, diffused the favour of Christ's knowledge, and were instrumental in the conversion of thousands of souls; for their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world. And now these feet being said to be beautiful with shoes, may denote, (1.) The promptitude and readiness of Christ's ministers to preach the gospel; as the people of Israel having their shoes upon their feet when they eat the passover, just when they departed out of Egypt, shew'd their readiness for their journey; so these feet of the church, having shoes on, shew the readiness of the ministers of the gospel to preach it in every place

where they are called to it, though in the face of the greatest opposition ; I am ready, says the apostle Paul, Rom. i. 16. to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also ; his feet were shod with it, and he was prepared to preach it, even where not only the seat of the empire, but the seat of persecution was, where it was the hottest, and raged the most furiously ; and the reason he gives is ; for, says he, I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, no, not in Cæsar's palace ; faithful ministers are ready to preach it any where, and at any time, and are instant in season and out of season ; they preach not by constraint, but willingly ; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind. (2.) It shews their intrepidity in preaching the gospel : A man that has his feet well shod, regards not the roughness of the way, nor the sharp stones which lie in it, or the pricking briars and thorns, through which he walks. The ministers of the gospel, whose feet are well shod with it, regard no difficulties that lie in their way, so as to be discouraged by them, and desist from their work, but with the utmost courage and magnanimity of mind, bear and surmount them ; with scorn and contempt they trample upon all the briars and thorns of reproaches and scandal that are cast upon, and persecutions which are levelled against them ; none of these things move them, neither do they count their lives dear to themselves, so that they may finish their course with joy, and the ministry, which they have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God. (3.) It is expressive of their beauty and glory : The ministers of the gospel are not only beautiful in the eyes of those to whom they are made useful, either for conversion or consolation, but also in the eyes of Christ, especially when they faithfully discharge their work, though they run the risque of losing their credit, honour and reputation in the world, nay, their lives also. Or else, 2. By those feet may be meant, the affections of the church towards Christ, which are that unto the soul, as feet are to the body ; these carry it up and down, hither and thither, at pleasure ; and being said to be beautiful with shoes, shew that they moved in an orderly way, constrained her to turn her feet to his testimonies, and enlarged her heart to run the way of his commandments, which made them appear exceeding beautiful to him, so that his heart was ravished with them ; see Chap. iv. 9, 10. The eyes of Holofernes are said to be ravished with the sandals upon Judith's feet, which she had put on on purpose to deceive persons ; see Judith x. 4. and xvi. 11. And this shews it to be the custom of women to adorn their shoes or sandals, that they might enamour their lovers, to which custom, perhaps, the allusion is here made. Or else, 3. By them may be meant the actings of faith on Christ, in saints coming to him and walking on in him, as they have received him : As faith is the eye of the soul, which sees Christ, and the hand which receives him, so it is likewise the foot which goes to him and walks in him ; and nothing is more pleasant and delightful to Christ than for souls to come unto him, and venture their all upon him, in expectation of receiving life and salvation, righteousness and strength, peace and comfort, grace and glory, all from him and through him ; for such he willingly receives, and has promised never to reject ; and as their first coming, so their continued walking in him, by fresh repeated acts of faith, is well pleasing to him. These feet are beautiful with shoes : though, 4. By them may be meant, the outward conversation of the saints, which is frequently expressed in scripture, by walking in the ways, commands and ordinances of Christ; see Luke i. 6. Eph. iv. 17. Col. iv. 5. which may be said to be beautiful with shoes. (1.) When they appear to be ready to every good work; who no sooner are enlightened into an ordinance, or called to a duty, but they readily comply with it, being beforehand furnished and prepared for it, having their shoes upon their feet, in a posture of readiness to do it. (2.) When the conversation is so ordered, as that the shame of our nakedness does not appear to the eyes of the world: To walk barefoot was accounted shameful: see Isa. xx. 4. and so it is to have an ill ordered conversation; but a well ordered conversation is like shoes to the feet, which cover them, so that the shame thereof does not appear. (3.) When it is conformed to God's law, which is a lamp unto the feet, and a light to the path. (4.) When it is becoming Christ's gospel. (5.) When it is guarded against the reproaches and offences of the world: As shoes upon the feet keep off the thorns and briars from pricking, so does a good conversation, in some measure, keep off the reproaches of the world, or at least, keep from being disturbed at them; for great peace have they which love God's law, and nothing shall offend them; and though it does not afford matter of boasting before God, yet a believer, whose conversation is becoming the gospel, may say as Samuel did, Chap. xii. 3. Whose ox have I taken? Whose ass have I taken? Whom have I defrauded? so that hereby he is fenced and guarded against the world's calumnies and contempt. (6.) Then is it so, when there is such a lustre in it as cannot but be seen by, and is conspicuous to all beholders, which raises their admiration, and gives them occasion of glorifying God; see Mat. v. 16. And this, as it is commendable among men, so it is beautiful in the eyes of Christ; for to such who order their conversations aright, that is, whose feet are beautiful with shoes, will he shew the salvation of God.

2dly, The joints of her thighs are said to be as jewels, the work of the hands of a cunning workman: By which may be meant, either, 1. Some ornaments of gold, silver or precious stones, which were used to be worn about the legs or feet by women in those times; which was a custom not only used among the Heathens, but also among the Jews, as is manifest from Isa. iii. 18. where among the rest of the attire of the Jewish women, the bravery of their tinkling ornaments about their feet is mentioned; and so may be expressive of the greater glory, lustre and beauty of the church's conversation. Or, 2. The garments which covered the thighs<sup>f</sup>; for it is not agreeable to the rules of decency and modesty, to describe the naked thighs. The word signifies the compassing of the things, which does not intend the ambient flesh, or the thickness of it about them, as R. David Kimchi<sup>h</sup> supposes, but rather the femoralia, or garments about the thighs, which encompassed and covered them; by which may be meant, the garments of salvation, and robe of Christ's righteousness, whereby the persons of God's elect are covered, so that the shame of their nakedness does not appear; and with which they are as richly adorned as the bridegroom is with his ornaments, and the bride with her jewels; on their marriage-day. Moreover, this is not the bungling work of a creature, but the work of the hands of a cunning workman, even of one that is God as well as man, and therefore is called the righteousness of God. Or, 3. The girdle about the loins, according to some<sup>1</sup>, which was wont to be worn in those times; thighs being put for loins, as in Gen. xlv. 26. and may intend that girdle of truth with which the loins of believers are girt, and is joined with the preparation of the gospel of peace, with which their feet are shod, in Eph. vi. 14, 15. which metaphor is frequently made use of, when a gospel-conversation is directed and exhorted to; see Luke xii. 35. 1 Pet. i. 13. Or, 4. By these joints of the thighs may be meant, young converts. The Targum expounds it of the children which sprung from the thighs or loins of the people of Israel: see Gen. xlv. 26. Exod. i. 5. Judg. viii. 30. where this phrase, to come out of the loins, or as it is in the Hebrew text, the thighs, is expressive of generation; and therefore these words, in a mystical and spiritual sense, may have reference to those many souls that are born again in the church, who are as jewels in Christ's esteem, and are the curious workmanship of the blessed spirit, created in Christ Jesus unto good works. Or else, 5. By these joints or turnings of the thighs, by which they move orderly and regularly, may be meant, the principles of a believer's walk and conversation, as <sup>k</sup> one well observes, without which 'tis little worth, nor can it be ordered aright; for principles denominate actions to be either good or evil. Now the principles of grace, from whence a believer acts in his conversation, and by which he moves in his Christian walk, are as valuable and as precious as jewels, and are wrought by no less a hand than the spirit of God, who worketh in them, both to will and to do, of his good pleasure.

Ver. 2. Thy navel is like a round goblet, which wanteth not liquor : Thy belly is like an heap of wheat, set about with lilies.

CHRIST here continues the commendation of his church, and gives two other instances of her beauty. And as in the former verse he had commended those parts, which may be expressive of her outward walk and conversation, and of the principles of grace from whence she acted, so here he may be thought to set forth her inward glory by these, the navel and belly, which are more hidden and less conspicuous; for this king's daughter is all glorious within, as well as her conversation is honourable without; her adorn- ing not being the outward adorning, of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; but is the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price. But what is particularly intended by these parts, will more manifestly appear from a distinct consideration of them. And,

I. Her navel is said to be like a round goblet, which wanteth not liquor.

II. Her belly as an heap of wheat, set about with lilies.

I. Her navel is compared to a round goblet, which wanteth not liquor: By which some <sup>a</sup> understand, not that part of the body itself, but some covering

or ornament of it; as some jewel or plate of gold, which was so called, either because it was in the shape of the navel, or else, because it covered and adorned it; as also, because the word translated round, in the Chaldee language, signifies the moon, it has inclined them to think, that this ornament may be the same which the Jewish women are said to wear, in Isa. iii. 18. where mention is made of their round tires like the moon; which figure is also understood by the Targum upon our text. Though others <sup>b</sup>, who are also of opinion that some covering of these parts is intended, yet think that the reference is made unto that cloathing of wrought gold, with which the church is said to be array'd, in Psal. xlv. 13. in the midst of which, or in that part of it, which covered the navel and belly, was a raised or embossed work, which resembled an heap of wheat, or rather sheaves of wheat, round about which was an embroidery of curious flowers, and especially lilies; and in the midst of the whole work a fountain or conduit, running with several sorts of liquors, into a great bowl or basin. By all which, the glory and beauty of the garments of salvation, and robe of Christ's righteousness, with which believers are adorned, may be represented to us. R. Aben Ezra, by the navel, understands the great <sup>c</sup> sanbedrim, as he does by the belly, the lesser. R. Sol. Jarchi, lishcat gazit, or the paved chamber in which they sat. Moreover, nothing is more frequent with <sup>d</sup> Jewish writers, than to call the land of Canaan, and particularly Jerusalem, the navel of the earth, which they suppose to be in the very midst of it, for which reason they call it so; and it was from this navel of the earth, that the gospel of Christ went forth into all the world; for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem: The Targum or Chaldee paraphrase on the place, applies it to the head of the school, by whose righteousness the whole world receives nourishment, even as the child receives nourishment through its navel, in its mother's bowels. And I am inclined to think, that by it we are to understand the ministers of the gospel, who in the administration of the word and ordinances, are that to Christ's body, the church, as the navel is to an human body. And, 1. As the navel is placed in the more eminent part of the belly, so are the ministers of the gospel in the highest place in the church; who being called to the greatest work, have the greatest gifts, and largest measures of grace bestowed upon them to furnish them for it; to whom others are exhorted to submit themselves, they being set over them in or by the Lord. 2. As the navel, they are placed in the midst of Christ's body, the church: 'Tis in the midst of the church they do all their work, preach the gospel, and administer ordinances in imitation of, and conformity to their great master, and prophet in Israel, Christ Jesus, who said, In the midst of the church will I sing praise unto thee, Heb. ii. 12. 3. As the navel is the strength of the intestines, so the ministers of Christ are not only strong themselves, in the power and grace of Christ, as they had need be, but are also strengtheners of others; one principal part of their work being to strengthen the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees, as our Lord said to Peter, When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren, Luke xxii. 32.

4. As the navel much conduces to the health of the body, so do the ministers of the gospel to the health of the church. Solomon speaking of the fear of the Lord, says, That it shall be health to thy navel, and marrow to thy bones, Prov. iii. 8. where, by the navel, he means the whole body; that being in a good plight, and a healthful condition, has much influence upon the whole body to make it so. The ministers of Christ, in preaching the everlasting gospel, and feeding souls with the wholesome words of our Lord Jesus Christ, are very serviceable for the increasing and maintaining the health of the church: Many things in the book of Proverbs are applicable to them in this case. See Chap. xii. 18. and xiii. 17. and xvi. 24. 5. The navel is that part through which the child receives its nourishment in the womb. The ministers of Christ, as they are instruments in begetting souls again, so they are useful in the nourishing of them, even when in embryo, as well as in feeding of them, with the sincere milk of the word, which they, as new born babes, are desirous of, and with which they are nourished and brought up.

Moreover, the navel of the church is compared to a round goblet, bowl or bason. I need not observe how aptly the metaphor agrees with this part of the body, it being like a bowl or bason, both round, and hollow; which, in a mystical sense, may be expressive of, 1. The perfection of gospel-ministers: The round or circular form is accounted the most perfect; these, though they are not absolutely perfect, yet may be said to be comparatively so, having a more perfect knowledge of the gospel, and the mysteries of it, than private believers usually have; see Phil. iii. 15. for having a larger acquaintance with the scriptures of truth, they are thereby in a sense made perfect, and thoroughly furnished unto all good works, as the apostle observes, in 2 Tim. iii. 17. 2. It may also be expressive of that workmanship which is bestowed upon them; who of themselves are not sufficient for these things, until by the gifts and graces of the spirit they are made able ministers of the new testament, and in some good measure qualified for the work of the ministry; and then are they like a round goblet, turned and formed by some curious artist. 3. It may likewise serve to set forth the capacity which they are endowed withal, to hold and retain gospel-truths; they are not like colanders, which immediately let out whatever is poured into them, but like round goblets, bowls or basons, which hold and retain whatever they receive; and this is esteemed as a necessary qualification of a gospel-minister, by the apostle Paul, in Tit. i. 9. That he be such an one as holds fast the faithful word, and does not let it slip or go from him, but continues in the things which he has learned, knowing of whom he has learned them.

Also it is worthy of our notice, that this navel of the church is not compared to an empty goblet, but to one that wanteth not liquor: By which may be meant, (1.) The grace of the blessed spirit, which is more or less in all believers, which much conduces to their healthfulness, as the moisture of the navel does to the body. It is no unusual thing in scripture, for the grace of the spirit to be compared to water, and to an abundance of it, even to rivers of living water, which are said to be in the belly of a believer, and these are never failing ones; for grace is in them, as a well of water springing up into everlasting life. Or, (2.) The church's cleanness may be intended ded by this expression, who being washed in Christ's blood, and sprinkled with the clean water of the everlasting covenant, needed no other liquor to be washed with : And thus, as a navel not cut and unwashed, represents the impurity and corruption of nature, in Ezek. xvi. 4. so a navel cut and washed, as the church's is here, may be expressive of her purity and cleanness, through the blood and grace of Christ ; so that she needs no other liquor to make her clean. Or rather, (3.) It intends those large and never failing supplies which the ministers of the gospel continually have from Christ, who is ascended on high, to fill all things, and particularly ministers, that so they may never want the liquor of gospel-truths to communicate to others ; for which reason he has promised to be with them, unto the end of the world, as he accordingly is, and continues filling of these golden pipes as fast as they empty the golden oil of gospel-truths out of themselves. And, 4. The Hebrew word translated * liquor, properly signifying a mixture, or a mixed liquor, may be expressive of that variety of gospel-grace and gospel-truths, which they are possessed of, and distribute to others ; which is a mixture, not of human inventions, and the doctrines of the gospel together, but of wine and milk, which are joined together, in Isa. lv. 1. to which souls are invited to partake of ; and which, perhaps, is the mingled wine in Prov. ix. 2—5. such a mix'd liquor † being what was drank in those countries, as appears from Cant. v. 1. and such a mixture as this, for thirsty, distressed and fainting souls will never be wanting in the gospel, or with gospel-ministers.

Likewise, it may be observed, that the words may be read as a wish for a continued supply of this mixed liquor in this vessel ; thus, * Let there not want liquor ; and so is expressive of Christ's strong affection to his church, and tender concern that there might be a continued supply in the ministry of the word for her nourishment, as well as implies a promise that it should be so.

II. Her belly is said to be as an heap of wheat, set about with lilies ; which, as the former expression sets forth the nourishment which she has through the ministry of the word, this may be expressive of her fruitfulness thereby ; for the allusion seems to be to a woman with child, as † one well observes ; she is fruitful and big, not with wind, but with wheat : By which may be meant, either, 1. The word or gospel of the grace of God, which is comparable to wheat ; He that hath my word, saith the Lord, Jer. xxiii. 28. let him speak my word faithfully ; for what is the chaff to the wheat ? There's as much difference between a teller of dreams, and a faithful preacher of the gospel, or between the dreams which the one tells, and the word which the other preaches, as there is between the chaff and the wheat. The gospel may be compared to wheat for the excellency of it : Wheat is the most excellent of grain, it is not only preferable to chaff, but to all other grain whatsoever ; so the gospel is preferable to all other doctrines whatever, and ought to be valued by believers, more than their necessary food, seeing that those who are fed therewith, are fed with the finest of the wheat ; and there-fore fore may not only be compared to wheat for its excellency, but also for the nourishment which it conveys. Besides, wheat is a solid, weighty and substantial grain; as are also the doctrines of the gospel, which are not like wind but wheat, and is a quite different food than what Ephraim fed upon, of whom it is said, Hos. xii. 1. Ephraim feedeth on wind. Moreover, this is an heap of wheat, which the church's belly is compared to here, such an one as is upon the corn-floor, ready thresh'd and winnow'd, and cleared of the chaff; see Ruth iii. 7. and so may intend the purity of the gospel, and and its being clear of all human inventions and mixtures; 'tis wheat that is clear from and not mixed with the chaff; for as faithful ministers will not set forth such to feed upon, so neither will enlightned and experienced souls receive it. Also this heap may be expressive of the variety and multitude of soul-comforting doctrines, and exceeding great and precious promises, with which the gospel abounds; there are many of them, an heap of them, and a fulness of the blessing in every one; they are full of spiritual blessings, and consolations, especially when they come in power, and in the Holy Ghost. Or else, 2. By it may be meant the graces of the spirit of God, with which she was filled; which may also be compared to wheat for the excellency of them, being more valuable than, and to be preferred unto all the desirable things of nature; and to an heap of wheat, for the variety of them, which souls receive from Christ, of whose fulness they receive grace for grace, i. e. grace in some measure, answerable to the grace in Christ; or grace in abundance, grace for grace, i. e. 'heaps of grace; for there cannot be one grace but there must be every grace, even heaps of grace: As also for the purity of them, being free from all mixtures of hypocrisy; their faith is a faith unfeigned; their hope, which is fixed on Christ's person, blood and righteousness, is of a different nature than that of the hypocrites; their love to God, Christ, his gospel, ordinances and people, is without dissimulation: In short, sincerity runs through all their graces; they are like an heap of wheat winnow'd and clear'd of chaff. Moreover, these may be compared to wheat for their permanency; they will abide the sieve of satan's temptations, as Peter's faith did; for though it was shaken much, it did not fail, because Christ prayed for it; and they will also abide the world's fan of persecution; and likewise the awful scrutiny and discrimination, which will be made at the day of judgment; when the florid profession and external works and righteousness of others will be as chaff, which the wind shall carry away, and vanity shall take, these will abide and appear in their greatest glory and full perfection. Though I rather think, 3. That by this heap of wheat, to which the church's belly is compared, are meant young converts <sup>k</sup>, who are not only born in the church, but are also brought forth by her; for as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children. And these are the wheat which Christ will gather into his garner, when he will burn up the wicked, the chaff, with unquenchable fire: As wheat is the noblest of seeds, is full of meat, is solid and substantial, these are born, not of corruptible, but incorruptible seed;

and being full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, and continually receiving from Christ's fulness, are solid and substantial believers; and will abide the force of persecution now, and stand the trying and discriminating time hereafter; when the ungodly shall not be so, but shall be like the chaff which the wind driveth away; for they shall not stand in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous; but even then this wheat will continue on the floor, and be gathered into Christ's barn. Moreover, this heap of wheat signifies the large number of souls that shall be born again in the church; and when those scriptures, in Isa. xlix. 19, 20, 21. and lx. 8. have had their full accomplishment, then will this description of the church be exactly answered, and appear very glorious.

Moreover, this heap of wheat is said to be set about with lilies, or as in the Hebrew text, hedged with lilies; which would incline one to think, that not an heap of wheat upon the corn-floor, but a field of standing wheat is here intended; whose inclosure is not an hedge of thorns and briars, but of lilies: By which lilies may be meant, either the precious promises and comfortable doctrines which abound in, and encompass around the word of God: Or else, the sweet odour which the graces of the spirit emit on every side; or rather, the beauties of holiness, in which men appear as soon as they are born again; and may be expressive of their secrecy and security, as well as of their beauty and glory.

There is one thing more which I would not omit the mention of, and that is, that some interpreters<sup>m</sup> think, that by these two parts, the navel and belly, here described, are meant the two ordinances of baptism and the Lord's supper: By the former, the ordinance of baptism, which is the first ordinance administered to believers, and which none but those who are born again, receive any comfort, nourishment or benefit from; and by the latter, the Lord's supper, which, like an heap of wheat, affords solid and substantial food to believers; where Christ, who is the bread of life, whose flesh and blood are meat and drink indeed, is set forth to them who are kindly invited, and are heartily welcome to his table; which table of his is graced and adorned, or at least, should be, not with the weeds, or thorns and briars of scandalous and prophane sinners, who eat and drink unworthily, but with the lilies of precious saints and true believers, who sit as olive plants, or rather are set as lilies about it. Though I should rather think that these are intended in the following verse.

Ver. 3. Thy two breasts are like two young roes, that are twins.

THE breasts are the fifth part which is here commended by Christ; what is intended by them has been shewn in Chap. iv. 5. where we have met with the same commendation, and that in the same words; only here is an omission of a clause which is added there, viz. which feed among the lilies. The Targum here again makes mention of the two Messiahs, whom the Jews vainly expect. R. Aben Ezra expounds these words of their two laws, oral and written, as he had done in the chapter and place above-mentioned; tioned; as R. Sol. Jarchi does also of the two tables of the law, though he likewise produces another sense of the words, which is, that by the two breasts are meant the king and the high priest; but for the understanding of the words, the reader is referred to Chap. iv. 5. where they are more largely insisted on.

Ver. 4. Thy neck is as a tower of ivory: Thine eyes like the fishpools in Heshbon, by the gate of Bathrabbim: Thy nose is as the tower of Lebanon which looketh toward Damascus.

CHRIST continues his commendation of the church's beauty, and adds, in these words, three other instances of it, to the five former, mentioned in the preceding verses. And,

- I. He compares her neck to a tower of ivory.
- II. Her eyes to the fishpools in Heshbon, by the gate of Bathrabbim.
- III. Her nose to the tower of Lebanon, which looketh toward Damascus.

I. He compares her neck to a tower of ivory. R. Aben Ezra, by the neck understands the king Messiah; but he is not the neck, but the head of the church: R. Sol. Jarchi interprets it of the temple and altar, or of the Lishcat gazit, or paved chamber, in which the Sanbedrim sat: The Targum would have Ab Beth Din, the father of the house of judgment, or chief of the Sanbedrim, intended; but it seems better by it to understand, either,

1st, The ministers of the gospel, who hold unto, bear up and exalt Christ, the head, and are instruments in bringing souls near unto him, and of conveying spiritual food to the several members of his body, the church; who are likewise beautifully adorned with the gifts and graces of the spirit, whereby they are fitted for the work they are called unto: These may also be said to be like towers for their strength and impregnableness; they are set for the defence of the gospel, and are as immovable as towers; they stand the battery of satan's rage and malice, and abide the force of the world's persecutions and reproaches; and none of these things move them to desert the work they are employed in. Moreover, this neck of the church, is compared to a tower of ivory: Whether there was a tower built of ivory, or that was so called, we have no account in scripture. The Targum on this place, speaks of an ivory tower, which king Solomon made, but the scripture is entirely silent about it; unless by it we understand that great throne of ivory which is mentioned in 1 Kings x. 18. and which may as well be called a tower as the pulpit on which Ezra and others stood, is, in the Hebrew text, in Neb. viii.

4. Now the church's neck may be said to be as a tower of ivory; 1. To express the purity of gospel-ministers, both in doctrine and life, who at once answer that character, of holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience, and so become examples to others, both in faith and purity. 2. These may be said to be as towers of ivory for their strength, which they receive from Christ, to hold fast the doctrine of faith, to confirm and establish others in it, and to withstand the force and power of satan's temptations. 3. They may be compared hereunto, for the smoothness and evenness of those doctrines which they preach ; by which I mean not those smooth things, which carnal persons would have prophesied to them, such as are tickling to the carnal ear, taking to the carnal fancy, and suited to the carnal hearts of unconverted ones ; but such as are agreeable to the word of God, consistent with themselves, being all of a piece, and not yea and no, as well as suited to the experiences of God's children. Or else, 2dly, By the church's neck may be meant, the scriptures of truth, which lead and direct souls to Christ, the head, and are the means of conveying spiritual breath, life and food to God's children, and are beautifully hung and adorned with soul-refreshing doctrines, and comfortable promises. Now this neck may be said to be as a tower which is very high ; seeing that it contains things which are sublime, and out of the reach of carnal sense and reason, and is also as impregnable and immoveable as a tower ; for though satan and his emissaries have attempted to remove the scriptures out of the world, yet their efforts have hitherto, and ever will, be in vain ; and these may likewise be very well compared to a tower of ivory, for the purity and glory of them ; for the words of the Lord are pure words : As silver tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times, Psal. xii. 6. Or else,

3dly, By the church's neck may be meant, the grace of faith, which lays hold upon and keeps close to Christ, the head ; it is that grace which exalts and glorifies him, and by which saints live upon him, and receive grace, strength and nourishment from him ; and is never without the other graces of the spirit, and the becoming fruits of righteousness, which serve to adorn it : This may be compared to a tower of ivory, 1. For the strength of it ; which appears both in believing the promises of God, which sometimes seem to be attended with difficulties insuperable to sense and reason, and in resisting and withstanding satan's temptations ; this fort and tower of faith satan could never take and demolish ; it has stood, and will stand, against all the posse that he is able to collect together against it ; because Christ, who is the author, will be the finisher of it, and continually prays that it fail not. 2. For the purity, beauty and glory of it ; as the church's neck being compared to a tower, is expressive of its strength ; so its being compared to ivory, shews its beauty and fairness. Faith that's pure and unfeigned is a beautiful grace in the eyes of Christ ; he is sometimes ravished with this neck of the church, and with one chain thereof. See Chap. iv. 9. 3. For the preciousness of it ; as ivory is very precious and valuable, so is this grace of faith ; it is called precious faith, in 2 Pet. i. 1. and so it is in its nature, object and actings ; it is more precious than ivory, yea, than gold : Hence the trial of it is said to be much more precious than of gold that perisheth, 1 Pet. i. 7.

II. The eyes of the church are here compared to fishpools in Heshbon, by the gate of Bathrabbim. Some think that Heshbon is not to be taken here as the proper name of a place, but to be read in construction with fishpools, thus, Thine eyes are like to fishpools, artificially made ; that are curiously formed, and according to art, such as were about the sheep gate, which is here called

* עיניך כרכות בחשבון Oculi tui piscinis artificiosissimis, Jun. Piscator. in Bimidar Rabba, parash. 14. the words are paraphrased thus ; Thine eyes are like fishpools ומחשבה שנגמרים בעצה which are finished with consultation and thought.

the gate of Bathrabbim, because it was much frequented, and through it abundance of people passed to and fro; but it seems most agreeable to understand it of the city Heshbon, which was the seat of Sidon, king of the Amorites, as appears from Numb. xxi. 26. and Bathrabbim was one of the gates of this city; which was so called, either because it led to Rabbath, a city near unto it, and therefore are mentioned together, in Jer. xlix. 3. which, as is manifest from 2 Sam. xii. 27. was a city of waters: Or else, because of the vast multitudes of people which went in and out thereat; for it may be render'd the gate of the daughter of many, or a multitude: Near this gate, it seems, were some very excellent and delightful fishpools, to which the eyes of the church are here compared; and by which may be meant, either,

1st, The ministers of the gospel<sup>c</sup>, who are that to the church as eyes are to the body; for which see Chap. i. 15. and these may be compared to fishpools, 1. For their clearness of sight into gospel-truths: 'Tis true, in comparison of that light and knowledge which saints shall have in glory, they now see but through a glass, darkly; but yet, with respect to the legal dispensation, in which there was much darkness and obscurity, they may be said to behold with open face the glory of the Lord; and their light will still be considerably increased, when the watchmen shall see eye to eye, and that will be when the Lord shall bring again Zion. 2. Like fishpools full of water, they are filled with the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ: The means of grace, the ordinances of the gospel, and particularly the ministry of the word, are in scripture compared to waters; see Isa. lv. 1. where souls are kindly invited, and where they often meet with that which is as refreshing as cold water to a thirsty man; and of this Christ's ministers are full, being filled by him, who fills all things; they are not like those in 2 Pet. ii. 17. who are said to be wells without water, but are like the fishpools in Heshbon, clear and full. 3. They may be compared to those fishpools which were by the gate of Bathrabbim, because of the multitude of people which flock to and attend upon their ministry, and which receive benefit more or less thereby; and then more especially will they answer this metaphor, when that prophecy, in Isa. ii. 2, 3. shall have its full accomplishment. 4. The word which is here translated fishpools, comes from a word which signifies to bless, because pools of water were esteemed blessings, see Judg. i. 15. and so are ministers of the gospel to the churches of Christ; they are promised by God as such, Jer. iii. 15. and he sometimes threatens to remove them as such, from his churches, when they grow carnal, lukewarm and indifferent, and do not prize and use such mercies and blessings as they should; see Rev. ii. 5. Lord's-days, ordinances, and opportunities of hearing the gospel preached, are the only blessings and comforts of life that some enjoy; God gives them the bread of adversity, and the water of affliction, this they are sure to have, with this they are fed all the week long; but on Lord's-days, they have sweet and comfortable meals for their souls; and this great blessing God favours them with, though he denies denies them many temporal ones, which is, that their teachers are not removed into corners, but their eyes behold their teachers; they have Christ's fishpools to come unto. 5. They are like fishpools, whose waters are still, quiet, invariable and constant, and are not like troubled waters, such as false teachers are, who are continually casting up the mire and dirt of their own inventions, and the divers and strange doctrines of men; but these abound with those truths, which, like Christ the author of them, are the same yesterday, to day, and for ever. Or else, 2dly, By these eyes of the church, may be meant, the eyes of her understanding, which are enlightened by the spirit of God, particularly those of faith and knowledge; which may be said to be as fishpools, 1. For their perspicuity: Faith can behold things clearly, which are invisible to, and are out of the reach of carnal sense and reason, and therefore is called the evidence of things not seen; it can look within the veil, and view an unseen Christ with all the invisible realities of another world. 2. For their steadiness and unmoveableness: The eye of faith is fixed, not upon the duties, services and performances of the creature, but upon the person, blood and righteousness of Christ; it looks off of all things else alone to him. 3. For their abounding with the tears of gospel-repentance: Jeremy wished that his head were waters, and his eyes a fountain of tears. The believers eyes are so; for repentance is a tear that drops from faith's eye. Souls first look and then they mourn; nor do they ever more so, nor in a better manner, than when they can view their righteousness, peace and pardon in a bleeding saviour; 'tis under a sense of this, they both mourn, most and best, both for their own sins, and the sins of others; their eyes are as fishpools, abounding with these waters; Rivers of water run down their eyes; because they keep not God's law, Psal. cxix. 136. 4. For the modesty of them: These are not rolling waters, to which wanton and immodest eyes may be compared, but quiet, still and standing ones: Faith is a very modest grace, and he that is possess of it, and has the greatest measure thereof, is the most humble soul; it exalts Christ, magnifies his grace, and gives all the glory to him; it abases the creature, takes away all boasting from him, and ascribes nothing to him; for which reason the church's eyes are also said to be as doves eyes within her locks. 5. For their proportionable size, exact symmetry, and delightful beauty: Perhaps, the allusion may be to fishpools, which being discerned at some distance, between trees or groves, look very sparkling and dazling; and so did the church's eyes to Christ, with which he seems to be ravished, as he says he was, in Chap. iv. 9. and vi. 5.

III. Her nose is said to be as the tower of Lebanon, which looketh toward Damascus. This tower of Lebanon seems to be one that was built in or near the forest of Lebanon, and was a frontier tower for that part of the country which lay towards Damascus; and to this the church's nose is compared: By which may be meant, either, 1. The ministers of Christ, as before; for it need not be thought strange that one and the same thing should be expressed by different metaphors for different reasons, especially this; seeing there are different parts and branches of the work and office of ministers, who are not only eyes to see, but as the nose to smell; having a spiritual discerning into into gospel-truths, beyond others, they not only savour them themselves, but diffuse the savour of them to others, and are themselves to many, the savour of life unto life. They are, in some measure, both the ornament and the defence of the church; the former is intended by their being compared to the nose, which is the ornament of the face, as well as the seat of smelling; and the latter by the tower of Lebanon, and this as looking towards Damascus, the inhabitants of which were always enemies to the people of Israel. And so it denotes the courage and vigilance of faithful ministers, who continually have their eye upon the church's enemies, watch all their motions, observe all their steps, and with a manful courage face and attack them. Or, 2. By this part thus described, may be intended in general, the stateliness and majesty, courage and magnanimity of the church; her stateliness and majesty by her nose, which, when of a good size and well proportioned, adds much grace and majesty to the countenance; her magnanimity and courage, by its being compared to the invincible and impregnable tower of Lebanon, which looks towards Damascus; intimating that she was not afraid to look her worst enemies in the face; and so answers the character which is given of her, both by Christ and by the daughters, in Chap. vi. 4, 10. which is, that she was terrible as an army with banners: Or else, 3. It is expressive of her prudence and discretion in spiritual things, which she is capable of discerning from carnal; she can distinguish truth from error, and can espy dangers afar off, and so guard against them, for which her nose may be compared to this tower, which was thus situated.

Ver. 5. Former part. Thine head upon thee is like Carmel, and the hair of thine head like purple.—

THESE words contain the two last, which are the ninth and tenth instances of the church's beauty.

- I. Her head upon her, is said to be like Carmel.
- II. The hair of her head like purple.

I. Her head is compared to Carmel. And it will be proper to enquire, First, What is the church's head. Secondly, Why it is thus compared.

First, I shall enquire what the church's head is; which is not the civil magistrate; he may indeed be a member of the church, but not the head of it. The princes and great men of the world may be of much service to the church, as in the latter day, kings shall be her nursing fathers, and queens her nursing mothers; but then they shall be so far from being her head, that they shall bow down unto her, and lick up the dust of her feet. The Targum indeed understands it of the king, who is set over the people.

Some think, that by the head is meant the soul or mind; which is indeed the chief part in man, and being filled with the graces of the spirit, and the precious fruits of righteousness, may much resemble the top of Carmel, covered with pleasant plants and fruitful trees; but it seems better to understand it of Christ, who only is the head of the church; she is compared to a body, because consisting of various members, of which body he is the head; see Col. i. 18. And he is the head of the body, the church. Christ is,

1st, A representative head of his church ; as such he acted, in the everlasting covenant of grace, where what he did he did in her name ; and what he received he received for her ; hence the elect are said to be blessed with all spiritual blessings, and grace is said to be given to them in him, before the foundation of the world. Thus also he acted as their representative, when he was crucified, buried, rose again, and entered into heaven ; they were then crucified, buried and raised, and are now made to fit together in heavenly places in him.

2<sup>dly</sup>, He is a political head ; in the same sense as a king is the head of his people, Christ is the head of his church ; and this regards his kingly office, as the other did his suretyship-engagements. Christ is given to be an head over all things to the church ; which may be understood in the same sense, and may be interpreted by his father's setting him as king over his holy hill of Zion ; which office he executes by enacting laws for the good of his people, which are written, not upon tables of stone, but upon the fleshy tables of the heart ; by subduing their enemies, protecting their persons, and supplying them with all necessities, as an head and common parent to them.

3<sup>dly</sup>, He is an œconomical head ; he is an head to his church in the same sense as an husband is to his wife, Eph. v. 23. she being espoused and married to him, ought to be subject to him as her head ; and in the same sense as a father is to his children. Christ is the everlasting Father ; saints are his children, which God has given him, and are born unto him, in his church, and him they ought to honour as their head. Also he is so in the same sense as a master is to his servants ; and it is under this consideration that Christ becomes the head of angels, who are servants in his family. He is not indeed the redeemer of angels, because they never were in a state of slavery and captivity ; nor is he the mediator of them, they having never been at variance with God, or rebelled against him ; but yet he is the head of them, according to Col. ii. 10. Which is the head of all principality and power.

4<sup>thly</sup>, He is a natural head, even as an human head is to an human body ; and it is in allusion to this that he is often called the head, of which many things may be said ; as, 1. That he is a true and proper head ; and that which is so, must, (1.) Be of the same nature with the body ; so is Christ, he has partook of the same flesh and blood, and has been, in all things, made like unto his church, sin excepted : Hence arise that strong affection to her, sympathy with her, and care of her. (2.) It must be united to it ; an head separate from the body cannot be a proper head, or do the service of one to the body. There is a spiritual and indissoluble union between Christ and his church, which is represented by that conjugal union there is between a man and his wife, by which they become one flesh ; and also by that natural one of the vine and branches ; but nothing does more express it to the life than that of head and members ; for we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones. (3.) It must be superior to the body, as well as of the same nature with it, and united to it ; so is Christ, and that not only in his highest nature, as he is God, and in his office, grace and power, but even in our nature, being crowned with honour and glory, and set at his Father's right-hand in it, far above all principality and power. (4.) It must be a living head, and endued with the same vital spirit as the body is; such an one is Christ; he and his church live one and the same life; he is the believers life, he lives, but it is Christ that lives in him; one and the same vital spirit actuates both head and members, and that is the spirit of God, which is in Christ the head, without measure, but in his members in measure; for he that is joined to the Lord, is one spirit. 2. Christ is a perfect head; there is no deficiency in him, nor nothing wanting that may render him a suitable one to his church. (1.) Here are no part nor sense wanting; he has eyes to see with, which are continually fixed upon his people; he sees their persons and their circumstances, and accordingly relieves them; his ears are open to their cries, which are not disregarded by him; and he has a tongue to speak a word in season, both to them and for them; he smells a sweet savour in the persons, garments and graces of his people, and has tasted death for them all. (2.) Here are no vitious humours which fall from hence, to infect the body. Adam was a federal head to all his seed, but nothing is derived from him but sin, corruption and death, and such vitious humours which have infected all human nature; but from Christ is nothing derived but holiness, grace and life; for he himself is holy, harmless, and undefiled. (3.) Here is no deformity at all, but every part is in its proper place and just proportion; there's a surpassing beauty in all; he is fairer than the children of men; there is none to be compared to him; he is white and ruddy, the chiefest among ten thousand. (4.) Here is a fulness of every thing to supply his body with; he is full of grace and truth: There is a fulness of justifying and sanctifying grace in him; all our righteousness, holiness, grace, strength, life and nourishment come from Christ, our head; it is in him we live and move and have our being; and he has a sufficiency of all grace to supply his members with. 3. Christ is the only head of his church; there is no other: If the church had more heads than one, she would be a monster. The civil magistrate is no head of the church; neither is the Pope of Rome; Christ only is. As there is but one body, though consisting of various members; and one spirit, which actuates them all; and one faith, by which they hold to the head; and one baptism, in which they make a profession of him; and one God and Father of us all, who by adopting grace has made and owned them for his children; so there is but one Lord and head unto them, who is over all, God blessed for ever. 4. He is an everlasting head. The church never was, nor never will be without an head; she has a living one, and one that lives for ever; and this is matter of joy and consolation to God's people. Hence they need not fear a suitable supply of all grace, life and strength; for because he lives as their head, they, his members, shall live also. But,

Secondly, I shall now consider why Christ, who is the church's head, is compared to Carmel. And, 1. This was a mountain in the land of Judea, where Elijah contended with and slew the prophets of Baal, and which the Targum on this text takes notice of; and for the height of it, Christ, the church's head, may be compared unto it, who is higher than the kings of the earth, nay, than the angels in heaven; for he is set far above all principality and power; nay, he

he is higher than the heavens themselves. 2. This was a very fruitful mountain, whose top was covered with vines, corn-fields and fruitful trees; see Isa. xxxv. 2. and Amos i. 2. the word is sometimes used for green ears of corn, as in Lev. ii. 14. and xxiii. 14. and is sometimes rendered, by our translators, a fruitful field, as in Isa. xxxii. 15. And this may be expressive of Christ, the church's head, who is her green fir tree, from whom all her fruit is found. 3. The word is by some<sup>b</sup> rendered crimson, and the rather, it may seem to be so taken here, because purple is made use of in the next description, and which go together, and are thus rendered, in 2 Chron. ii. 7. and iii. 14. And this may serve to set forth, (1.) The royal dignity and majesty of Christ; this being a colour usually worn by the kings and great men of the earth. One of Christ's titles, is, the prince of the kings of the earth, Rev. i. 5. (2.) His ardent love to his church; whose flaming affection to her may be very well represented by this colour. Or, (3.) His passion and bloody sufferings for his church and people; by which their sins, though like scarlet, become as snow, and though red like crimson, are as wool: So that here is a crimson Saviour for crimson sinners. Thus may Christ, the church's head, be compared to Carmel.

Though some think that not the head, but some covering of the head is intended here. R. Solomon Jarchi thinks, that the Tephillin or Phylacteries, which the Jews wore about their heads, are here meant; but this is not probable; rather, with others<sup>c</sup>, the allusion is to the nuptial crown or garland, made of flowers, &c. which was wore by the bride on the marriage-day: And this may denote the graces of the Blessed Spirit, which are an ornament of grace to the head, and chains about the neck, which may very well be thought to resemble the fruitful top of mount Carmel: And as one<sup>d</sup> well observes, by this covering of the head, more particularly may be meant, the grace of hope, which is the believer's head-piece, 1 Thess. v. 8. As Christ, who is our head, is called our hope; so our hope, which is our head-piece, by a figure which is not unusual, may be called our head; it is supported and sustained by faith, which is our neck; and has its life and liveliness from the death, sufferings, and resurrection of Christ, and therefore may be compared to crimson.

II. The hair of her head is said to be like purple: By which may be meant, either the thoughts of her heart, which are many and numerous, and which proceed from thence, as the hair does from the head; and when these are fixed upon and are employed in the contemplation of a crucified Christ, then may they be said to be like purple; and then are they took notice of by Christ, and are exceeding delightful to him: Though I rather think that believers are here meant, as I have observed, on Chap. iv. 1. and v. 11. who grow on Christ the head, and receive their strength and nourishment from him; and these may be said to be like purple, 1. Because of that royal and princely dignity, they are advanced to by Christ, who has made them kings and priests to God and his father; for this is a colour that is usually worn by great persons, such as all believers are. 2. Because of their being washed in Christ's purple blood, for so are both their persons and their garments; they are tintured with it, and are of this dye. 3. Because of the sufferings which they undergo for the sake of Christ and his gospel; and especially such dear and precious servants of Christ may be said to be as purple, who have spilled their blood, and laid down their lives on his account.

Though some * think, that not the hair, but either the hair-lace, or the pins, or some such small things, by which the hair is tied and dressed up in a beautiful order, are intended; and indeed the word is never used elsewhere for hair, and it properly signifies something small, thin and tender; and this may teach us what notice Christ takes of the meanest grace and performance of believers; every little thing that is in, or is done by a believer, looks very beautiful in Christ's eye; so far is he from despising the day of small things.

Ver. 5. Latter part.—The king is held in the galleries.

Ver. 6. How fair and how pleasant art thou, O love, for delights.

CHRIST having given a description of the church's beauty, in ten particular instances of it, does here,

- I. In the latter part of the fifth verse, discover his great love and affection to her, though in a very abrupt manner; the king is held in the galleries.
- II. Gives a general and comprehensive summary of her whole beauty in ver. 6. thus; How fair, and how pleasant, art thou, O love, for delights. And,

I. I shall consider this abrupt expression, The king is held in the galleries; which seems to have no dependance upon or connexion with, either the preceding or subsequent words, but only with the affections of Christ's heart; who being as it were, surprized and astonished at, captivated and ravished with the church's beauty, breaks out in these words, even before he had well finished the account he was giving. And it may be here enquired, 1st, Who is meant by the king. 2dly, What those galleries are, in which he is said to be held. And 3dly, What by being held in them.

1st, By the king, we are to understand the Messiah, the Lord Jesus Christ; who is the governor of the whole universe, has a sovereign dominion over all creatures, is the prince of the kings of the earth, who sets up and pulls down at pleasure, and exercises an uncontrollable power over all created beings; and who is in an especial manner the king of saints, who are committed to him as mediator by his father, to rule and govern; whom he has purchased by his own blood, and conquered by the mighty power of his grace; in whose hearts he reigns by putting his spirit, implanting his grace, and writing his laws there; whom he continually protects, subdues their enemies, and supplies with all things necessary; this kingdom of his is not of this world; it is not supported by worldly power, nor carried on with worldly interest; nor does it appear in worldly pomp and splendor, but is of an invisible and spiritual nature; it is managed according to the strictest rules of justice and equity, and is upon such a foundation as will last for ever.

2dly, By the galleries, in which this great king is held, we are to understand the ordinances of the gospel. The same word which is here rendered galleries, in Chap. i. 17. is translated rafters; which are of much use for the strength and support of buildings, as the ordinances are for the strengthening of weak hands, hands, and confirming of feeble knees. The word is also, by some, here rendered <sup>a</sup> canals, as it is gutters, in Gen. xxx. 38, 41. and troughs, to water cattle in, Exod. ii. 16. which also is applicable to the ordinances of the gospel, through which, as through so many canals, conduit-pipes or gutters, is conveyed to souls, the grace of the spirit, which is in scripture frequently compared to water: But if we render the word galleries, as does R. David Kimchi <sup>z</sup>, and after him Junius and Tremellius; it will well suit with the ordinances, which are those galleries where Christ and believers walk and converse together; where he discovers the secrets of his love, and leads them into a farther acquaintance with his covenant-grace; from whence they have delightful views of his precious person, who having been some time absent from them, they now from hence behold him coming towards them, leaping upon the mountains, and skipping upon the hills; here they are oftentimes indulged with Pisgah-views, and not only see the king in his beauty, but also behold the good land which is very far off. But,

3dly, I shall next consider what is meant by this great person's being held there. The word signifies a being bound, as a prisoner with chains and fetters. R. Aben Ezra and Alpheb acknowledge that the Messiah is here intended, and tell us, that it was the opinion of their ancient Rabbins, that he was born the day that Jerusalem was destroyed: And if you ask the modern Jews why then they are so unbelieving concerning him; they will tell you, that though he was then born, he is not yet revealed; and if you ask where he now is, some of them will tell you that he is in paradise, where he lies tied and bound with the locks of women's hair, which are like to the frizles and curlings of water in canals; to support which whim of theirs, they torture this text of ours, and read it thus; <sup>b</sup> the hair of thine head is like purple, with which the king is tied or bound in the walks or canals, i. e. in paradise: But though the king Messiah is here represented as one bound as a prisoner, yet not in this ridiculous sense; but his being held or bound in the galleries or ordinances of his house, shews, 1. How much his heart was ravished and captivated with the beauty of his church; it struck him with so much wonder, and filled him with so much pleasure, that he was like one bound in chains, and could not stir hand nor foot, had no power to move along, nor could he take his eye off of her, but stood and gazed upon her as one surprized and astonished at her. Or, 2. It is expressive of Christ's fixed habitation in his house and ordinances; for though believers do not always perceive him, yet he always is there; he has promised so to be, and he is as good as his word; nay, he takes delight and pleasure in being there, and that, as much as any man can, to be in his own house, and to walk in the galleries of it; This is my rest for ever, says he, Psal. cxxxii. 14. here will I dwell, for I have desired it. He is, as it were tied and fastened to its rafters, and bound in its galleries. Or, 3. It may be meant of any earthly king or prince whatever, and then the sense is as Junius gives it: There is no king so great and glorious, if he should behold thy beauty and glory, but would stand amazed at it, and would be held with a perpetual desire of seeing it, esteeming it far above his own or the glory of the whole world;

world; and indeed the earthly glory and grandeur of the greatest prince and monarch in the universe, is far inferior to that of Christ's church; if Solomon in all his glory was not array'd like one of the lilies of the field, much less is any king or prince to be compared with Christ's lily, the church; but though this sense serves much to set off the church's glory and beauty; yet I rather choose the other, which best expresses the affection of Christ, and the astonishing beauty of his church.

II. In ver. 6. Christ gives a general and comprehensive summary of his church's beauty, and at the same time expresses the strongest affection for her, saying, How fair, and how pleasant art thou, O love, for delights. Where may be observed,

1st, The title he gives her, O love. The church is Christ's love, both objectively and subjectively; she is the object of his love, whom he loved from all eternity, loves in time without any change or variation, and will love to all eternity without the least interruption. She is also one who dearly loves Christ, in whose heart that grace dwells and reigns; which she discovers by her regard to his person, value for his ordinances, and respect to his commands: Of this title, see more on Chap. i. 9. though indeed a different word is here made use of, and that more full and expressive both of Christ's love to her, and hers to Christ, than is there. She is called love in the abstract, as being all over love, love itself, nothing else but love, and altogether lovely in his esteem.

2<sup>dly</sup>, The commendations that are given of her, are, 1. That she is fair; and so she is, not in herself, but in Christ; not in her own nature and righteousness, which are unclean, but in his person and righteousness, which are without spot and blemish; not as she is now considered in this imperfect state, but as she shall be hereafter when she shall be presented a glorious church without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing. Though now, in Christ's eye she is all fair, and there's no spot in her; but this commendation we have frequently met with. 2. She is also said to be pleasant; which epithet is by her given to Christ, in Chap. i. 16. which he here returns to her, it being usual in this song for those two excellent lovers so to do. The church now was pleasant to Christ, and that for delights, he having loved her, not only with a love of benevolence, but with a love of complacency and delight, and that before the foundation of the world, as appears from Prov. viii. 31. The church, I say, is pleasant to him, as she is his spouse and bride, for so she is as the loving hind, and pleasant roe unto him; and as she is his portion and inheritance, of which he says, the lines are fallen to me in pleasant places; and also as she is his friend and intimate acquaintance, is pleasant to him, as Jonathan was to David. Moreover, she is so, as she is clothed with his righteousness, and adorned with the graces of his spirit; her countenance is comely, her voice, both in prayer and praise is sweet, her faith and love are ravishing, and her company delightful; in short, he takes abundance of satisfaction and pleasure in her. And therefore,

3<sup>dly</sup>, Expresses it after the manner he does, How fair, and how pleasant art thou! i. e. thou art incomparably and inexpressibly so; none can tell how fair thou art in my eye, and how pleasant and delightful thou art unto me;

'tis beyond all human thought and expression: What astonishing love and grace now appears in all this, that one so great and glorious as this royal person is, should be so much in love with, and take so much delight and pleasure in such poor, vile and sinful creatures as we are!

Ver. 7. This thy stature is like to a palm-tree, and thy breasts to clusters of Grapes.

CHRIST having gone through the ten particular instances of his church's beauty, in the five first verses of this chapter, and given a comprehensive summary of the whole, in ver. 6. one would have thought he had done; but as not satisfied with the commendations he had given, and as not knowing when nor how to give over, the subject being so delightful to him, begins anew in these words; where he,

I. in general commends her stature, by comparing it to a palm tree.

II. Her breasts, in particular, which are likened to clusters of grapes.

I. He compares her stature to a palm tree. Her stature is what arises from and is made up of the abovesaid parts, which he had commended, as is manifest from the relative this; which being all set in their proper place, and in a just proportion, as the members of the church are by God, see 1 Cor. xii. 12—18. look very beautiful and comely: The word properly signifies, the height, tallness and straightness of them; to be of a tall stature, was accounted very honourable, and an indication of majesty; such an one was fit to be chosen a king, as Saul was, who was higher than any of the people, from his shoulders and upwards; and when Samuel came to anoint one of the sons of Jesse, as king in his stead, the first born, Eliab, was presented to him, who when he saw his comely countenance, and the height of his stature, judged him to be the Lord's anointed; but the Lord bid him not look on these things, nor judge according to them, as man does; for he was not the person he had his eye upon. Now the church being here represented as tall of stature, may be expressive of her royal majesty and greatness; and so the Septuagint render the words, * This thy greatness is like to the palm tree. Moreover, tallness of stature was ever accounted no small addition to beauty, and therefore women have in former as well as latter ages, wore ornaments upon the very top of their heads, as well as high shoes to make them appear the taller; and perhaps this was the reason why the Jewish women walked with stretch'd forth necks, as is observed in Isa. iii. 16. so that this may be took notice of by Christ, as a commendation of the church's beauty. Besides, to be of a tall stature, is in many cases useful, and such in many instances have the advantage of others; Zacheus, because he was low of stature, was obliged to climb a sycamore tree, or he had lost the sight of Christ, which he was so desirous of gratifying his curiosity in. But to proceed; by the church's stature is meant no other than that measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ, mentioned in Eph. iv. 1. which the church, and all true believers are growing up to, and shall arrive at; for which reason, the means of grace, the ministry of the word, and the ordinances of the gospel are instituted and continued; and then will the church have arrived to this stature, when all the elect are gathered in, and every member join'd to the body; and these all filled with the several gifts and graces of the spirit designed for them, and are all grown up to a just proportion in the body: And in this state and condition Christ seems to view his church here, and therefore gives her this commendation. Now to this stature, no addition can be made, but by the grace and spirit of God; as no man, by taking thought, or projecting ~~ever~~ so many ways and methods, can add one cubit unto his bodily stature; so none can by any methods of their own, add to their spiritual stature, nor to the stature of the church of Christ: 'Tis the spirit of God that convinces and converts sinners; he works upon their wills and affections, and powerfully inclines their hearts to give themselves first to the Lord, and then to the churches; and when they are planted there, 'tis he, that by the effusions and influences of his grace, makes them grow up as willows by the water courses.

Now this stature of the church, is by Christ compared to a palm tree; a tree well known in Judea, where great plenty of them grew; and as Pliny<sup>b</sup> says, the noblest and best of this sort of trees, and especially about Jericho; which is frequently in scripture called the city of palm trees, as is Engedi sometimes called Ha'zazon Tamar, from the palm trees which grew there: And some have observed, that this tree, in future times, became an emblem of that country; and therefore the coin of several of the Roman princes had the figure of a palm tree upon them, and particularly Vespasian's; and the medal of the emperor Titus was struck with the figure of a captive woman, sitting under a palm tree, with this inscription on it, Judæa capta, Judæa is taken: The metaphor is taken, as are usually all the metaphors, similies and comparisons in this book, from what was well known in this country. And it is no unusual thing in scripture, for saints to be compared to palm trees; in Psal. xcii. 12. 'tis said, the righteous shall flourish like the palm tree; and in Solomon's temple, which was a figure of the church of Christ, were palm trees carved upon all the walls of the house round about, and upon the doors of the oracle, to teach us that none but saints ought to have a place in God's house below, or shall be admitted into heaven above, signified by the oracle, or holy of holies; also in Ezekiel's temple, which was shewn him in a vision, were palm trees and cherubim; between every cherub and cherub, was a palm tree; which temple was either a figure of the gospel-church, or of the church triumphant in glory: And if that is true, as some<sup>c</sup> have thought, that the places of the fallen angels are filled up with men redeemed by Christ; that the same number are redeemed among the one as fell among the other; this description would give a beautiful illustration of it; for as a cherub and a palm tree, a cherub and a palm tree, were placed in this order throughout the house; so an angel and a saint, an angel and a saint, an equal number of each, according to this notion, will be in the heavenly glory. But to consider a little particularly why the church and all true believers may be compared to palm trees; and they may, for these following reasons. 1. The palm tree grows up up very tall<sup>e</sup>; streight and upright; and therefore the idols of the gentiles are compared unto it, in Jer. x. 5. They are upright as the palm tree; and saints may be said to be so in a spiritual sense, and that if we consider them either in the exercise of their faith, or in the motions of their affections, or in the tendency of their desires, or agreeableness of their conversations; their faith looks streight upwards to a Christ above, and fixes its eye upon his person, blood and righteousness, and does not look downwards to its frames, duties, services or performances; their affections move heavenwards, and are set on things above, and not on things on earth, and therefore are compared to pillars of smok, which move streight upwards, and which rise up in the form of palm trees, as has been observed on Chap. iii. 6. their desires also steer the same course, and move after Christ; they want to have a larger knowledge of him, more communion with him, and a nearer conformity to him; they are breathing after the heavenly joys, and having seen the vanity and emptiness of this world, and the things of it, desire the better country and continuing city, which God is the builder and maker of; and long to be unclothed of this mortal body, that they might be clothed with their house from heaven: Thus, like the palm-tree, their souls move upward, in their faith in, love to, and desires after Christ, and those unseen glories which he is preparing for his people; and as they are upright in their hearts, so they are in their conversations, which are often in heaven, and employed about heavenly things, even whilst they are here on earth, which renders them becoming the gospel of Christ Jesus. 2. The palm tree will grow streight and upright, even though many<sup>f</sup> weights are hung upon it. Saints have many weights and pressures upon them; the apostle says, Heb. xii. 1. Let us lay aside every weight, which shews that they have more than one; they have a body of sin and death, which presses them hard, and makes them groan, being burdened with it: As also a variety of afflictions which attend them, as well as a load of reproaches and censures thrown upon them by the world, which often fall very hard and heavy, besides the many persecutions of various sorts, which they endure; and yet, as the apostle says, 2 Cor. iv. 8, 9. though they are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; they are perplexed, but not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed; they are supported under all, and still grow upright like the palm tree; none of these things move them to turn or bend either one way or another, or tempt them to desert the cause they have espoused, but continue in it with an unshaken mind, and a courageous and magnanimous spirit. So R. Sol. Jarchi applies this to the Jewish church, which stood as upright as the palm tree, refusing to be guilty of idolatry, in Nebuchadnezzar's time, when other nations bowed and fell down before his golden image: Nay, saints not only bear up under all these weights and pressures, but oftentimes grow the more in their faith, love, knowledge and experience under them; as the children of Israel, who the more they were afflicted, the more they grew and multiplied. 3. The palm tree is a fruit bearing tree; it bears the fruit which is called Dates, which is not only of a beautiful aspect, but of a delightful taste<sup>g</sup>, and is fit both for food, and drink. And this, perhaps,

was the reason why the children of Israel pitched their camp at Elim, Numb. xxxiii. 9. because there were not only twelve fountains of water there, but also three score and ten palm trees. The saints being implanted and ingrafted in Christ Jesus, and abiding in him, bring forth fruit; they are laden with all the blessings of the everlasting covenant, the graces of the Spirit, and the precious fruits of righteousness; all which fruit they have from Christ, who is their green fir tree. 4. Naturalists<sup>a</sup> tell us, that the vital force or power of the palm tree is not in its root, as in other trees, but in its top, which they call the cerebrum, or brain, and that if its top is lopped<sup>1</sup> off, it immediately becomes barren. The saints life is not in themselves, but in their head Christ Jesus; 'tis from him they receive all their grace and strength, their life and nourishment, their fruit and fruitfulness; and was it possible that any separation could be made between them and their head, they would not only become barren and unfruitful, but entirely dead and lifeless. 5. The palm tree is always green, and never<sup>k</sup> rots, or ever casts its leaf. The saints are frequently compared to trees in scripture, and that to such whose leaves do not wither, as in Psal. i. 3. Jer. xvii. 8. when hypocrites and carnal professors are called<sup>1</sup> δένδρα φθισιματώδη, trees that are withered in autumn; at which time, not only the fruit is gone, but the leaves fall; but saints being ingrafted in Christ, and planted by the rivers of divine love and grace, continually retain their verdure, shall never perish, but persevere for ever. 6. The palm tree is very long lived<sup>m</sup>, and continues flourishing a long time: Hence the flourishing of the righteous is compared unto it, in Psal. xcii. 12. in opposition to that of the wicked, in ver. 7. which is said to be as the flourishing of grass, which is soon over, and continues but a short time, but the palm tree abides so for<sup>n</sup> many years; and this may be expressive of the perseverance of the saints, whose grace is immortal and incorruptible, whose persons shall never perish, or ever be subject to the second death, but shall live for evermore. 7. The palm tree grows and flourishes best in<sup>o</sup> hot and sunny places, they will not grow in cold countries; and therefore we have them not here: So saints, being planted in the house of the Lord, where in the ordinances, they sitting under the warm and quickening beams of the sun of righteousness, Christ Jesus, flourish in the courts of our God; these are the best places for them, viz. the house and ordinances of God; here they delight to be, and here they thrive most, because here the Lord is a sun and a shield unto them. 8. Branches of the palm tree have been used as tokens of joy and emblems of victory. The Jews had a feast of tabernacles, which they kept as a time of rejoicing, and among other demonstrations of joy, this was one, to carry palm tree branches in their hands, Lev. xxiii. 40. as did also much people of the Jews, when Christ rode in triumph to Jerusalem, as an indication of the joy they were filled with at his coming, and to welcome him into their city, John xii. 12, 13. So likewise the saints are described, who were come out of great tribulations, and had got the victory over all their enemies, as clothed with white robes, and palms or palm tree branches branches in their hands, Rev. vii. 9. Saints, of all persons in the world, have reason to rejoice in the views of an atoning sacrifice, a justifying righteousness, and peace and pardon by Christ Jesus, through whom they are made more than conquerors over sin, Satan and the world; and a number of these with palm tree-branches in their hands will look like so many palm trees. But,

II. The church's breasts in particular are commended by Christ, and compared to clusters of grapes. This part has been already commended in Chap. iv. 5. and is repeated in ver. 3. of this Chapter, but here a different metaphor is made use of; there they are compared to two young roes that are twins, here to clusters of grapes: The word grapes is not in the Hebrew text; tho' the Targum supplies it as our translators do: R. Aben Ezra thinks that clusters of the vine are meant, which might be planted by and run up upon the palm tree; though I should rather think, that clusters of dates, the fruit of the palm tree itself, are here intended, especially seeing this fruit, as Pliny observes, grows in clusters. Moreover her breasts are compared to clusters of the vine in the following verse; and it does not appear so probable that Christ should use the same metaphor to commend the same part in two verses together: What we are to understand by the church's breasts has been shewn on Chap. iv. 5. but seeing a different metaphor is made use of here, it may not be improper to observe the agreement between them. And,

1st, By her breasts may be meant the ministers of the gospel. R. Sol. Jarchi would have Daniel, Hananiah, Misbael and Azariah here understood, who were as breasts to others in captivity: But it is much better to understand them of gospel-ministers, who not only direct men where they may have food, invite them to it, and dissuade them from every thing that would be pernicious to them, but also feed them themselves, with the sincere milk of the word, and bread of life; they rightly divide or cut the word of truth, and as wife and faithful stewards give to every one their portion of meat in due season. These may be compared to clusters, either of grapes or dates;

1. Because of their number. It is a great mercy to the churches of Christ, when there are plenty of gospel-ministers; Christ advised his disciples to pray for it, because the harvest was plenteous, and labourers were but few, Mat. ix. 37, 38.
2. Because of their unity, likeness and agreement; for though they have gifts and grace differing from each other, one has more than another has, yet they have one and the same commission, and preach one and the same Christ as the only way of salvation, though they may not be attended with equal success.
3. Like clusters of dates, the fruit of the palm tree, they are the fruit of the church; and such are the best ministers, who are educated and brought up in churches, and are approved and sent out by them: Or else,

2<sup>dly</sup>, By the church's breasts may be meant, the old and new testaments; which, like breasts, are full of the milk of the word, than which, no two breasts are more like one another; like the two cherubim upon the mercy-seat, they look towards each other: These may be compared to clusters, because there are in them clusters of excellent doctrines and precious promises; there are not only here and there a berry, but clusters of them, which being pressed and squeez'd by hearing, reading, meditation and prayer, yield both delight and nourishment to men. Or else, 3dly, By them may be meant the ordinances of baptism, and the Lord's supper, which are breasts of consolation to believers; and when they have the presence of Christ in them, and the discoveries of his love to them, then they are not dry breasts; they cannot say they have no cluster to eat; but as when there is new wine found in the cluster, and one saith, destroy it not, for a blessing is in it, Isa. lxxv. 8. So have they much pleasure, satisfaction and delight therein: And the church's breasts being thus like clusters full in themselves, are also delightful and beautiful in Christ's eye, and therefore are thus commended by him.

Ver. 8. I said I will go up to the palm-tree, I will take hold of the boughs thereof: Now also thy breasts shall be as clusters of the vine, and the smell of thy nose like apples.

CHRIST having compared the church to a palm-tree, and her breasts to clusters of dates, the fruit thereof, does here,

I. Make a resolution or promise to go up into it, and take hold of the boughs thereof.

II. Mentions several effects following upon his putting this resolution into practice, or fulfilling this promise, two of which we have an account of in these words; as, 1st, That her breasts should be filled, and become like clusters of the vine. 2dly, The smell of her nose should be like apples.

I. We have in these words Christ's resolution or promise; which consists of two parts; 1st, He resolves to go up to the palm-tree. 2dly, When there, to take hold of the boughs thereof.

1st, He signifies it as his will, to go up to the palm-tree. Some<sup>a</sup> popish writers have fancied that the cross of Christ, or at least, some part of it, was made of the wood of the palm-tree, to support which, they have no sufficient proof or evidence; though it is not very unlikely, seeing there was such plenty of those sort of trees in Judea, as has been observed on the former verse; and therefore, some<sup>b</sup> have thought that by Christ's going up to the palm-tree, is meant his crucifixion, which he expresses by being lifted up, in John xii. 32. Moreover, his going up to it may signify his voluntary submission unto death, even the death of the cross: Besides, the palm-tree being an emblem of victory, may represent the conquest which Christ has obtained over all his and our enemies; he has destroyed sin, overcome the world, abolished death, spoiled principalities and powers, and made a shew of them openly, triumphing over them on the cross.

Though others<sup>c</sup> have thought, that by Christ's going up to the palm-tree, are meant his ascension into heaven, his conjunction with his church there, and that unspeakable pleasure which he will take in her for evermore: It is true, Christ not only ascended to his God and our God, to his father and our father, but also went up to the church triumphant, which may very fitly be compared compared to a palm-tree; the saints there appearing with white robes and palms, palm-tree branches, in their hands, as a token of that joy they are possessed of, and of that victory over all their enemies, which they are sharers in; through Christ Jesus; and it was the delightful company of these persons, which Christ had in view in becoming a surety for them, assuming their nature, and dying in their room and stead; it was this joy that was set before him, which caused him so patiently to endure the cross, despising the shame which attended it: Though I am rather inclined to think, that by the palm-tree here, we are to understand the church militant, as in the foregoing verse; and Christ's going up into is expressive, 1. Of his right unto, and propriety in his church: She is his by the gift of the Father, and by the purchase of his own blood, as well as by the conquest of his powerful and efficacious grace; on which account he claims an interest in her, and says, I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by thy name, thou art mine; and she is very free to own and acknowledge this rightful claim unto her, as it is her honour, interest and duty so to do. This palm-tree is of his own planting; he waters it every moment; he keeps it night and day; he prunes it and makes it fruitful, and therefore has a right to go up into it when he pleases. 2. Of his presence with her. So Christ is said to be among the myrtle-trees, in Zech. i. 8. as he is here said to go up into the palm-tree: and this is the grand reason why the church is at any time in a flourishing condition, and, like the palm-tree, grows, though never such weights and pressures are upon it, because Christ is in the midst of her, and grants his gracious and supporting presence to her. 3. Of his delight in her: He loves to be in her presence and company, as men do to go up into their trees, and handle the boughs thereof. His saints are the excellent in the earth, in whom his delight was, before the world began, and now is and ever will be; the mutual delight which appears in the bride and bridegroom, falls short of expressing that which Christ takes in his church; he rejoices over her with joy; he rests in his love towards her, and joys over her with singing, Zeph. iii. 17.

Now from Christ's going up into his palm-tree, the church, we are not to imagine that the church is higher than Christ, for he is far superior to her; and it is an instance of his grace and condescension, that he will take notice of her, and grant his presence to her; he is her head and husband, her Lord and king, and therefore she is inferior, and ought to be in subjection to him; and though he was in our nature, and that by reason of suffering in it, made a little lower than the angels; yet he is vastly higher than they, yea, higher than the heavens themselves. But this expression here, is suited, and is very agreeable to the metaphor here made use of. The palm-tree is a very tall tree, and its boughs and branches do not grow out of the sides, as in many other trees, but only on the top of it; so that whosoever would lay hold upon them, and gather the fruit, must go up into it. Moreover, the trunk and body of it is made with rings in the bark of it, like steps; so that it may be very easily climbed, which is done by the Eastern people, with an incredible swiftness<sup>a</sup>.

2dly, Christ's going up into the palm-tree, is in order to take hold on the boughs of it; his end in doing this may be twofold, 1. To gather the fruit of it, which he has an undoubted right unto, they are his; whether we understand by them the blessings of grace, which believers are possessor of, or the graces of the spirit which are implanted in them, or the good works which they are enabled to perform, these all come from him; he is the green fir-tree, from whom all the believer's fruit is found; therefore he may lay hold on the boughs, and gather the fruit when he pleases; in doing which, he takes much delight and pleasure, and is kindly invited by his church thereunto; see Chap. iv. 16. 2. His other end in laying hold on the boughs, may be to prune them, that they may bring forth more fruit; this he does sometimes by his word, and the preaching of it, by which sin is corrected, error refuted, and sharp reproofs and admonitions given on the account of both; for as the word is as an ax to cut down sturdy and obstinate sinners, so it is as a pruning-knife in Christ's hand, to remove all superfluity of naughtiness, which hinders the growth of his trees and plants. Sometimes also Christ prunes his churches, by the ordinance of excommunication, by which he lops off unfruitful branches, such who are unfit for communion in his churches; which awful sentence is executed sometimes more mildly, and sometimes more severely, according to the nature of the offence; sometimes it is expressed in scripture by a withdrawing from disorderly persons; at other times by a rejecting of hereticks; as also by putting away such who are notoriously vile and wicked. Again, Christ prunes his people likewise by afflictive providences; by which their iniquity is purged, their graces are tried and exercised, and they made under those sharp trials, to yield the peaceable fruits of righteousness. Moreover, Christ sometimes effects this work by suffering persecution to befall his churches; this sun scorches up those plants, which are not of Christ's planting, and are not rooted in his person and grace; this is the fan which Christ sometimes takes in his hand, and thoroughly purges his floor, the church, of hypocrites, and formal professors; this is his pruning-knife, with which he lops off those fruitless and withered branches. This is an awful way of pruning the boughs of his palm-tree.

It may be observed, that these words are delivered in the form of a purpose or promise, I said, I will go up, &c. Christ thinks, and then resolves, before he acts; he does all things deliberately, and according to the counsel of his own will, and always for his own glory and his church's good. Moreover, this being a promise of Christ's, the performance of it may be expected by his people; for he is faithful who hath promised. It may also be pleaded by them; Has he promised to go up into his palm-tree, or grant his presence in his church? he will be as good as his word; his people may expect his presence there, and they are allowed to put him in mind of such a promise, which they need not doubt the fulfilment of. But,

II. Let us now consider the effects of Christ's going up into his palm-tree; and we find two of them mentioned in this verse, and a third in the following one:

1st. The church's breasts become like clusters of the vine; which words may be considered, either as a wish, and be read thus, and now let thy breasts be

be as the clusters of the vine: Or else; as a promise that they should be so, which accordingly was effected by his granting his presence to her, which filled her breasts, and made them like clusters of the vine: By which may be meant, either, 1. The ministers of the gospel; who not only direct men where the wine and milk of gospel-grace may be had, and invite them to it, but do also themselves feed them with the sincere milk of the word; with which they are filled by Christ's granting his presence to them in their studies and meditations, and are brought forth by him at proper opportunities, laden with the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ; so that these breasts look like clusters of the vine. Or, 2. By them may be meant, the ordinances, which are breasts of consolation to God's people, when they have the presence of Christ in them, otherwise they are but dry breasts; it is that which fills them with milk for nourishment, and with wine for refreshment. Or, 3. The two testaments, with those clusters of excellent doctrines and precious promises that are in them; which when men have the presence of Christ, either in the hearing or reading of them, yield them much delight and comfort, though at other times they are but as a dead letter. Though, 4. This may in general intend that influence, which Christ's presence has on the fruitfulness of his people; it is this which makes them fat and flourishing, brisk and lively in the exercise of grace, fruitful in every good word and work; so that they grow and thrive in every grace, and are not barren and unfruitful in the knowledge of Christ Jesus.

2dly, Another effect of Christ's going up into his palm-tree, or of his presence in his church, is, that the smell of her nose thereby becomes like that of apples; by which may be meant, either, 1. The refreshing doctrines of the gospel from Christ's ministers, who are the church's nose, and are capable of distinguishing truth from error: These doctrines which they preach, when fitly spoken, seasonably applied, and attended with the power and presence of Christ to poor souls, are like apples of gold in pictures of silver; nay, not only like apples for sight, being beautiful to look upon, but also for smell; for these diffuse a sweet flavour of the knowledge of Christ in the souls of his people. Or else, 2. The fame and report of the church's faith, piety and courage, which was spread far and near: Her faith, for its strength and purity, is compared in ver. 4. to a tower of ivory; and her courage and magnanimity in defending this faith, against all opposition, is expressed by her nose, being as the tower of Lebanon, which looketh towards Damascus. Now the smell, fame, or report of all this, like the smell of apples, was diffused abroad, and gained her credit and reputation, even from others; she having, like those heroes, in Heb. xi. obtained a good report through faith. Or, 3. It may be expressive both of her outward conversation and inward constitution, which were both sound and healthful; she had an inward principle of grace, from whence proceeded a savoury conversation without; the hidden man of her heart, was that which is not corruptible, which sent forth not a nauseous but a grateful odour; no rotten or corrupt communication proceeds from hence, but what is not only edifying to others, but grateful to Christ; and nothing has a greater influence than the presence of Christ, to make her inward constitution and outward conversation so. Though, 4. This may intend the favouriness of those things which she smelt, which were as grateful to her as the smell of apples: Thus spiritual and heavenly things, the divine truths and excellent doctrines of the gospel, are exceeding savoury to believers, especially when they have the presence of Christ, the discoveries of his love, and the quickening influences of his spirit. The third effect follows in the next verse.

Ver. 9. And the roof of thy mouth like the best wine, for my beloved, that goeth down sweetly, causing the lips of those that are asleep, to speak.

THESE words contain the third effect of Christ's going up into his palm-tree; or granting his presence to his church; in which may be considered,

- I. What is meant by the roof of her mouth.
- II. Why it is compared to the best wine.
- III. The commendations of this best wine, to which it is compared; which,
  - 1st, Is commended from the person, for whose use it is; for my beloved.
  - 2<sup>dly</sup>, From the property of it; it goeth down sweetly.
  - 3<sup>dly</sup>, From its effect; causing the lips of those that are asleep to speak.

I. It will be proper to enquire what we are to understand by the roof of the church's mouth. And, 1. By it may be meant her taste: The same word is so rendered in Chap. ii. 3. The church's taste is good, and not like that of unconverted persons, whose taste remains in them, as it is vitiated and corrupted by sin; so that they are not capable of discerning the difference of things, and therefore call evil good, and good evil; put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter: But so is not the church's taste, she can discern perverse things; her taste is like the best wine, she can tell whether it is good or no. Though, perhaps, this expression is not so much intended to signify the goodness of her sense of tasting, as the things which she tastes of, which are the person of Christ, and the words of his mouth; she tastes that the Lord is good in his person, grace and office, and finds the doctrines which proceed out of his mouth, and the fruit which drops from him, sweeter to her taste than the honey or the honey comb. 2. R. Aben Ezra thinks that the saliva or spittle under the tongue is here meant; and what may be intended by that, may be learnt from Chap. iv. 11. where it is said, that honey and milk are under her tongue; i. e. the doctrines of the everlasting gospel, which she lays and keeps there, and rolls them as a sweet morsel in her mouth; having tasted the goodness of them; herein she appears to be exceeding different from carnal and unconverted persons, under whose lips the poison of asps is said to be, Rom. iii. 13. 3. Others think, that by the roof of her mouth, is meant her breath, which proceeds from thence, which was sweet, and of a good smell, like the best wine; and not like the breath of carnal persons, whose breaths are like an open sepulchre, from whence are daily belched out horrid oaths, dreadful curses and imprecations upon themselves and others, with cruelty and threatenings to the saints and people of God; but as for the church's breath, it is of a different nature, no rotten communication proceeds out of her mouth, but what may be for the use of edifying; she breathes out nothing but peace and love among her members, and also to others: And as for her prayers to God, which may be justly called the breathings of her soul, these are as sweet odours, being perfumed with the incense of Christ's mediation. Though, 4. I rather think that by the roof of her mouth is meant her speech, or the words of her mouth; for the roof of the mouth is an instrument of speech, as well as of tasting; and the same word is frequently rendered the mouth, as in Chap. v. 16. Prov. v. 3. and viii. 7. which may either intend her speech in common conversation, which like the best wine is warming, comforting and refreshing to souls, as well as grateful to Christ: How many have been cold, dull and lifeless, when they have first come into the conversation of the saints, and by it have been warmed, quickened and refreshed, so that they have gone away with joy and comfort, blessing and praising God for such opportunities. Or else, by it may be meant the speech of the church in prayer or praise, which are both delightful and well pleasing to Christ; her voice in either is sweet unto him, makes delightful music in his ears; though the prayers of the saints are but like the chattering of a crane or swallow, yet they are gratefully received by him; as are also their praises, which are more esteemed by him, than the sacrifices of an ox or a bullock that has horns and hoofs; though I am most inclined to think, that the gospel, which proceeds out of Christ's mouth, and is put into the mouth of his church, which is preached in the midst of her, and by her ministring servants, is here intended. Which brings us to consider,

II. Why this is compared to the best wine. 1. That is the best wine which is pure and free from dregs and mixtures, that which is upon the lees well refined. Such is the gospel, as preached by the faithful ministers of it, who are not as some, which corrupt the word of God; they do not mix it with their own inventions, but deliver out this wine of the gospel, neat and clean, as they have received it. 2. Wine that has age, is also accounted the best: Thus saith Christ, Luke v. 39. No man having drunk old wine, straightway desireth new; for he saith the old is better. The gospel is no novel doctrine; for tho' it is more clearly made known under the New Testament-dispensation than it was under the Old, yet it was known then; it was wrapt up in the types, shadows and sacrifices of the old law; it was preached before unto Abraham, nay, to our first parents in the garden, and was spoken of more or less, ever since, by the mouth of God's holy prophets, which have been since the world began. 3. The best wine is that which is of a good flavour, and delightful to the taste, as well as that which is of a good colour: Such is the gospel, it is like milk for nourishment, and like wine for pleasantness, nay, like Ezekiel's roll, as honey for sweetness: Yea, the psalmist says, Psal. cxix. 103. that the words of God's mouth were sweeter than honey to his mouth. 4. Wine is of a chearing and reviving nature; it is what makes glad the heart of man, and therefore is proper to be given to those that be of heavy hearts, that they may drink and forget their poverty, and remember their misery no more. Of such a nature is the gospel; it being received by persons in distress, like the best wine, it cheers and revives their spirits; it makes them forget their spiritual poverty, and puts out of their minds their former misery and distress, whilst they behold what riches of grace are treasured up in Christ, and what ample provisions are there made for them; nay, it not only revives distressed and drooping souls, but such is the vertue and efficacy of it, that it will bring dead sinners to life; for it is the savour of life unto life to many.

5. The best wine is very refreshing to weary persons, who have been fatigued with labour and travel: The gospel is a word in season to him that is weary; it not only directs the weary soul where it may have rest, kindly invites unto it, but is also the instrument of bringing him into it. 6. Wine is reckoned a comforter and strengthener of the stomach; therefore the apostle Paul advised Timothy, 1 Tim. v. 23. to use a little wine for his stomach-sake, and his often infirmities. The doctrines of the gospel have a tendency to comfort souls, they are often blessed for that purpose; the ministers of it are employ'd herein on that account; and the spirit of God does his work, and executes his office as a comforter, by them. Thus, the gospel, the word, which is in, and proceeds out of the church's mouth, may be compared to the best wine.

III. I shall now consider the commendations given of this best wine of the gospel. And,

1st, It is commended from the person, for whose use it is, for my beloved, and therefore must needs be the best; it is such wine as a man would give to his friend whom he dearly loves; who, when he pays a visit to him, if he has any wine in the house, he shall be sure to have it; and if he has any better than the rest, it shall be at his service. But who are we to understand by this beloved, for whose use this wine is? And, 1. We may understand these words as the words of Christ, speaking to and of his church and people, whom, in Chap. v. 1. he calls his beloved, and his friends; and these he treats as such, with his best wine, the gospel, which is chiefly designed for their good, comfort, and establishment. 2. If we take these words to be the words of the daughters of Jerusalem, as some do, and that not only these, but all that is spoken in the preceding verses; then the beloved is Christ, whom they call their own, having now arrived to a greater knowledge of him, and acquaintance with him, than they formerly had; see Chap. v. 9. and vi. 1. Nor need it be wondered at that it should be expressed in the singular number, my beloved, seeing it may well be supposed, that but one of them spoke and delivered these commendations of the church. Though, 3. I rather take them to be the words of the church, speaking to and of Christ, who hearing such great things spoken in the commendations of herself, could hold no longer; but as one<sup>b</sup> expresses it, snatches the word out of Christ's mouth, breaks in upon his discourse before he had done, and thrusts in these words, referring all the glory to him; it is as if she should say, Is the roof of my mouth like the best wine? it is for my beloved, it is of his making and providing, and in which his glory is much concerned, as well as my comfort; for we preach not ourselves but Christ Jesus the Lord; he is the subject, the sum and substance of the gospel; it is designed for the manifestation of his grace, and the advancement of his glory; and its being so, makes it so comfortable and delightful to souls. Junius and Piscator render the word, most lovingly or most lovingly, and so understand it of the manner of this best wine, going down and being received by persons; but this is sufficiently expressed in the next clause, which I shall now consider.

2dly, This wine of the gospel is commended from the property of it, which is here mentioned, it goeth down sweetly; which words may be differently rendered, and as differently understood. And, 1. They may be translated thus, that walketh or moveth aright, as they are in Prov. xxiii. 31. where wine is also spoken of, and denotes its sparkling in the cup, which shews it to be a generous wine, of a good body, and that it has life and spirit in it; therefore the wise man, in the forementioned place, advises not to look upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his colour in the cup, when it moveth itself aright; because when it is so, it is very ensnaring: But here is no such danger in this wine of the gospel; the pleasantness of which, both in the eyes of Christ and of his church, may be here intended. 2. The words may be rendered thus, which goeth to my beloved straightway or directly; and so may denote the direct tendency of the gospel to lead souls to Christ, and to advance his honour and glory; for the whole of it consists in this, Christ in us the hope of glory. Or, 3. Thus, it goeth or leadeth to righteousnesses; for it is one principal part of the gospel to lead souls to the righteousness of Christ, which is clearly revealed therein; that disclaiming all pretences to their own righteousness for justification, they may wholly and alone look unto and depend upon that for their acceptance with God, and justification in his sight. Moreover, it also teaches them, that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, they should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world. Or, 4. They may be thus rendered, that goeth or walketh to upright persons; for so the word is rendered, in Chap. i. 4. and indeed, it is to such persons that the gospel is of real service and advantage; to them that believe, it is the power of God unto salvation, it works effectually in their hearts; these receive it in the love of it, by them it is highly valued and esteemed, and to them it yields much solid comfort, pleasure and satisfaction; for with such, 5. It goeth down sweetly, as our translators have rendered the words. This wine of the gospel is received and taken down with all readiness by all those who have once tasted the sweetness, and felt the power of it; with them the gospel is no hard saying, and who can bear it, but like the best wine that is very delightful. With some persons, the doctrines of the gospel, such as those of an eternal, personal election, particular redemption, powerful and efficacious grace in conversion, final perseverance, &c. are very disagreeable, but to believers in Christ, are like wine that goeth down sweetly.

3dly, This wine is commended from the effect it has upon those who drink of it; it causeth the lips of those that are asleep to speak: In which may be considered, 1st, The persons on whom it has this effect, those that are asleep. 2dly, The effect itself, which it has upon them, it causeth their lips to speak.

1st, The persons on whom this wine of the gospel has this effect, and they are such who are asleep. The Hebrew <sup>d</sup> word here used, is by some rendered ancient persons; for persons, when they are grown old, have not their senses so quick, nor are they so full of talk, but are more flow of speech than when they were in their youthful days; and therefore this serves much for the commendation of this wine, that it should have such an effect upon such persons; for that must be noble and generous wine that invigorates old men, and fills them with a juvenile heat, warmth and sprightliness. But the word may very well, and perhaps, better be rendered as it is, those that are asleep; by which may be meant, either, 1. Sinners, who are in the dead and deep sleep of sin. These, (1.) As persons asleep have not the free exercise of their senses; they do not see their lost, miserable and undone state by nature, nor their need of Christ and the value of him. Their ears are stopp'd, that they cannot hear so as to understand the joyful sound: They have no taste nor savour of divine things; and many have arrived to such a prodigious pitch of wickedness, as to be past feeling, having their consciences seared with an hot iron; nay, in this they exceed persons that are asleep, who though they have not the free exercise of their senses, whilst asleep, yet are not destitute of them; but these have no spiritual sense at all, but are dead in trespasses and sins. (2.) Like persons asleep, they are strengthless, and are not in a capacity to do any thing that is spiritually good of themselves; they cannot redeem themselves from destruction; they cannot fulfil the righteous law of God, nor satisfy divine justice; they have not power to begin or carry on a work of grace upon their souls; they cannot subdue their corruptions, nor withstand satan's temptations, nor perform the duties of religion; these things are not effected by the might and power of man. (3.) Like persons asleep, they are inactive; their strength is to sit still; they have neither power nor will to that which is good; there is none that doeth good, no not one; they have no true knowledge of what is good, for tho' they are wise to do evil, yet to do good they have no knowledge; and if they had knowledge, they have no inclination; and if they had that, yet still they have no power; for the Ethiopian may as soon change his skin, or the leopard his spots, as they do good that are accustomed to do evil. (4.) Like persons asleep, they are subject to illusions and mistakes; they are mistaken about the nature of the divine Being, whom they either imagine to be such an one as themselves, who will either connive at sinful actions, or take little or no notice of them; or else, presume upon his absolute mercy, to go on in sin; and they are as much deceived about the nature of sin itself, which they now roll as a sweet morsel in their mouths, but will e'er long find to be as gravel stones; and so they are likewise with respect to the ways of God and people of Christ, in the former of which, they suppose there's no true pleasure, and in the latter no enjoyment of true felicity; but in nothing are they more mistaken than in themselves and their state; which they imagine to be good, when at the same time they are poor and wretched, and miserable and blind, and naked. (5.) Like persons asleep they are insensible of danger; they are walking in the broad road to destruction, and are upon the brink of it, and yet know it not; they are crying, peace, peace, when sudden destruction is at hand. Or else, 2. By those that are asleep asleep may be meant drowsy professors: The wise as well as the foolish virgins slept; Christ's church may sometimes be in such a condition, as she was in Chap. v. 2. This sleep is not a dead sleep, as the former; there may be life notwithstanding this, I sleep, but my heart waketh. This consists in a non-exercise of grace, an indifferency to religious duties, a lukewarmness and want of zeal for the glory of Christ and his gospel, occasioned by the prevailings of sin and corruption. See more on Chap. v. 2. But, 2dly, Let us consider what effect the wine of the everlasting gospel has upon the abovesaid persons; when it comes in power, and is received in the love of it, it causes their lips to speak. In the former of these persons, that is, in carnal and Christless sinners, it produces humble confessions of sin; it makes them speak in the praise of Christ and his grace, whereby salvation is procured for such lost and perishing creatures, as they by nature were; it brings them to the gates of Zion, there to declare to the saints, the great things which God has done for them; it makes the tongue of the dumb to sing, who before had not one word to say for Christ, and of his grace; and those who were stammerers at these things, it makes them ready to speak plainly: As for the latter sort of persons, i. e. sleepy and drowsy professors, it makes them speak meekly and modestly of themselves, and very highly of Christ and his grace; for such souls who have drank the largest draughts of this wine, and have the greatest share of knowledge in gospel-truths, are the most humble; they are ready to acknowledge themselves the least of saints, and the chief of sinners; and none more frequent than they in magnifying Christ, and exalting the riches of his grace.

Ver. 19. I am my beloved's, and his desire is towards me.

CHRIST having spoken largely in the commendation of his church's beauty, vouchsafed his presence to her, and made her drink of his best wine, which causes the lips of those that are asleep to speak; she, after a long silence, breaks forth, as an effect of it. And,

I. Claims her interest in him; I am my beloved's.

II. Takes notice of his love and affection to her; and his desire is towards me.

I. She signifies the satisfaction which she had in her soul, with respect to her being Christ's; which is an affair of the utmost concern, about which, saints have often a great many doubts and fears, and a satisfaction which is exceeding desirable to them. The church has expressed herself in the same words, twice before, in this song; see Chap. ii. 16. and vi. 3. therefore less will be required in the explication of them here. However, some things respecting the present frame and disposition of her, the agreement of these words, with the context, and what has not been so carefully observed in the former texts, may be took notice of here. And,

1st, These words may be considered as expressive of that assurance of faith which the church had of her union to and in Christ; it is as if she should say, After all these expressions of love unto me, and the sweet enjoyment of his presence, which he has indulged me with, surely I may venture to say that I am his; nay, I am sure that I am. From hence may be observed, 1. That the grace of assurance is attainable in this life; instances of which we have, not only in the New Testament-saints, such as the apostle Paul, and others, who knew that Christ had loved him, and had given himself for him, was well satisfied both in his ability and fidelity, to keep what he had committed to him against another day, and was persuaded that there never would be a separation from his love; but also in Old Testament-saints, as David, who could claim his interest in an everlasting covenant, and was assured of it, even in his dying moments, and that in the prospect of the present and future ill state of his family; and Job, who knew that his redeemer lived, and that for him, even when he was under the most severe, afflictive dispensations of providence; as also Habakkuk, who discovered the strength of his faith in God, as his salvation, even when all outward and temporal enjoyments failed him.

2. That there may be a continuation of the exercise of this grace; a person may not only be able to express his satisfaction as to his interest in Christ, once, but also to repeat it as the church does in this song: This is the third time he expresses her assurance in this very form of words, and oftner still in other language. Nay, this grace is often exercised by believers after much sleepiness and drowsiness, many slips and falls, great weakness and infirmities; as may be observed in the church's case, frequently in this book. And it is likewise worthy of remark, that those persons who have been the greatest sinners before conversion, and have been suffered to fall the foulest after, have been blessed with this grace of assurance, as David, Paul, Peter, &c.

3. That the exercise of this grace often follows upon the enjoyment of Christ's presence; the church had been lately indulged with it; Christ went up into his palm-tree, the church, filled her breasts, the ordinances, with his grace and presence, and had made her drink of the wine of his consolation, which occasioned these expressions of hers.

4. Her frequent repetition of these words, shews, that much of her comfort depended upon the knowledge she had of her interest in Christ; for though assurance is not of the essence of faith, there may be true saving faith where there is not the assurance of faith, yet to have it, makes much for the comfort of a believer; for if a glimmering sight of Christ fills the soul with so much joy, what must a full view do? if only an hope of interest gives much satisfaction, certainly a full assurance of it must give much more.

5. It may also be observed, that this grace has no tendency to promote or encourage licentiousness: This is the sealing work of the spirit, who performs it as the holy spirit of promise; and at the same time he seals he leaves a greater impress of holiness upon the soul: This does not make persons careless, indolent and inactive as to duty, but rather excites and stirs them up to be more careful and constant in it: of which here is an instance in the church in the following verses; Come my beloved, let us go forth into the field; let us lodge in the villages; &c.

2dly, These words may be considered as a modest acknowledgment of the church's, that all she was and had, were Christ's; I am my beloved's, and it is by his grace I am what I am; all that he said of her in the former verses, she does in this one expression return to him again; she acknowledges that all her beauty, which he had so much commended, was his, and not her own; own; that she was by nature black, and only comely through that comeliness which he had put upon her; that those several graces, with which she was adorned, and which he might have a regard unto, in the several parts described, were his; he was the object, author, owner and preserver of them; that particularly it was owing to grace and strength received from him, that her walk, her outward conversation, was in any measure agreeable, and was so beautiful as he was pleased to declare, in ver. 1. that all her fruitfulness, either in the exercise of grace, or in the performance of good works, or in having many souls born again in the midst of her, which may be intended, ver. 2. were all from him, and to be referred to his mighty grace and divine blessing; that her ministers and ordinances were of his providing, appointing and filling, expressed by her breasts, in ver. 3. That all her strength, which appeared in the exercise of her faith on him, and in the discharge of her duty to God, her light and knowledge in divine truths, the savour and relish which she had of them, together with her zeal, courage and magnanimity to keep and defend them, signified by her neck, her eyes and nose, in ver. 4. were all communicated to her from him: As also that he was her only head, both of eminence and influence, and that it was owing to that grace, life, strength and nourishment which he afforded, that her hair, true believers, grew so well, and appeared so beautiful as they did, ver. 5. Moreover, that she was his palm-tree, which he might go up into, and gather the fruit of, when he pleased, and that it was his grace which caused her to grow so straight and upright, and made her so fruitful as she was, ver. 7, 8, 9. wherefore she concludes in this verse, saying, I am my beloved's; i. e. the glory of all this is to be referred to him, and not to myself.

3dly, These words may also contain in them a voluntary surrender of herself and all she had into Christ's hands. This is what he requires of us; my son, says he, Prov. xxiii. 26. give me thine heart; but this we are unwilling to, until the day of his power passes upon us, and then we are made willing to give ourselves unto the Lord, and all we have, that we may therewith serve and glorify his name: This the church was enabled to do, knowing that she was not her own, but his, and therefore was desirous to glorify him with her body and spirit, which were his.

4thly, They are likewise expressive of that open profession she made of Christ before others; she was not ashamed to tell whose she was, and to whom she belonged. It is our duty to make a publick profession of Christ, as well as to believe in his name, Rom. x. 10. for with the heart man believeth unto righteousness. and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation: A believing in Christ may be sufficient for our everlasting security; but a profession of that is necessary and requisite to shew forth a Redeemer's glory, which we ought to be concerned for; and when we have made a profession of Christ we ought to hold it fast, without wavering, and adorn it by a suitable conversation. But,

II. The church in these words takes notice also of the love and affection of Christ towards her; and his desire is towards me. The words may be rendered thus, because or seeing his desire is towards me; so Junius reads them; and then

then they may be considered as a reason of the former expression of her faith in Christ, acknowledgment of his grace, and profession of his name; for Christ's love manifested to us, is a considerable evidence of our interest in him; and in his everlasting love; this will make us free and ready to acknowledge that we have nothing but what we have received from him; 'tis this which fills us with love to him, constrains us to obey him, encourages us to make a profession of him, and to maintain it notwithstanding all discouragements thrown in our way, or opposition made against us. But let us consider a little the import of this phrase, and what is intended by it: It seems to be very much like, and perhaps, the allusion is unto those words, in Gen. iii. 16. and thy desire shall be to thy husband; but here the husband's desire is towards his wife; so that what was inflicted by way of punishment upon the woman, being inverted, is a blessing of grace unto the church. The phrase may be expressive,

1st, Of Christ's love and affection to his church; his desire was towards her, 1. From everlasting; for having loved her, he desired her of his father, for his spouse and bride, which was granted to him; for God gave him his heart's desire in this thing, and did not withhold the request of his lips from him. 2. His desire was towards her, in time, that he might procure everlasting salvation for her; as an instance of his love he undertook it, in the fulness of time assumed her nature in order to effect it, was strengthened in his mind, and, as it were, uneasy until it was accomplished, so great was his desire after it: Hence he expressed himself thus to his disciples at his eating the last passover, with desire have I desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer, Luke xxii. 15. The chief reason was, because the time was at hand, the hour was now come, so much desired by him, when he should give the strongest evidence of his love to his church, in laying down his life for her. 3. His desire is towards his people, even before conversion, though dead in trespasses and sins, that they may be quickened, called by grace, and brought to the knowledge of himself; and notwithstanding all their backslidings and revoltings from him, still his desire is after them to do them good; neither will he turn away from them, but rests in his love towards them. 4. His desire is continually after his peoples company, grace and beauty; they are the excellent in the earth, in whom is all his delight; he is well pleased with that beauty which he himself has put upon them, and his desire is after it; Psal. xlv. 11. so shall the king greatly desire thy beauty; he is ravished with those graces which he has implanted in them; he is exceeding delighted with their looks and words, and therefore says, Cant. ii. 14. Let me see thy countenance. let me hear thy voice, for sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely; nay, he has signified his desire that his church and people may be the place of his residence and habitation, and that for ever, Psal. cxxxii. 13, 14. For the Lord hath chosen Zion, he hath desired it for his habitation. Hence, 5. He will not be satisfied until he has the whole church with him in glory; this was the joy that was set before him in his sufferings, what he is now making preparation for in heaven, and what he is continually pleading for, as being exceedingly desirous of, saying, John xvii. 24. Father,

I

Cocc. Et ad me erit illius conversio, Tig. Et ad me est desiderium ejus, Mercer. Pagnin. Et super me desiderium ejus, Ar Montan. Quando quidem erga me est appetitus ejus, Jun.

I will, that they also whom thou hast given me, may be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory. Thus Christ's desire is towards his church.

2dly, This phrase may be expressive of that power which the church has over Christ, so that she can have any thing of him, what she pleases; he is so kind and indulgent an husband, that he will not deny his spouse any thing that may be for her good and his glory. The strength of faith in prayer is very great; an instance of this we have in Jacob, who had power with God and prevailed: And 'tis upon this score that God said to Moses, let me alone, knowing what interest Moses had in him, and how prevalent his petitions were with him; so that speaking after the manner of men, he could scarcely deny him any thing; the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much, Jam. v. 16.

3dly, The import of this expression may be, that Christ was her husband; I am my beloved's, and his desire is towards me; i. e. he is my husband, I am his, and he is mine: So the wife is called the desire of the eyes, Ezek. xxiv. 16, 18. and this was a very great blessing that she was favoured with, and an unspeakable comfort that she could claim her interest in Christ under this sweet and endearing character, and relation. Or,

4thly, It may be expressive of the whole care and concern of Christ for her, as her husband; who as such bears and sympathizes with her under all her weaknesses and infirmities; protects from all dangers and enemies, and provides every thing for her, as food and raiment, grace and glory, all things necessary for her, both for time and eternity, whatever may conduce to her comfort here, and eternal happiness hereafter; as a loving husband he has given himself for her, rescued her from slavery and thralldom, procured an inheritance for her, and is now preparing that for her, and her for that, and will, e'er long, put her into the possession of it. All which manifestly make appear how much his desire has been, and is towards her; which she having had some knowledge and experience of, ventures to invite him, as in the following words, saying,

Ver. 11. Come, my beloved, let us go forth into the field: Let us lodge in the villages.

Ver. 12. Let us get up early to the vineyards, let us see if the vine flourish, whether the tender grape appear, and the pomegranates bud forth; there will I give thee my loves.

IN these words are,

I. A general invitation given by the church to Christ, to go along with her; Come, my beloved.

II. Some particular things mentioned, which she invites him to. 1st, To go forth into the field. 2dly, To lodge in the villages. 3dly, To get up early to the vineyards.

III. The things she had in view in so doing. 1st, To see whether the vine flourished. 2dly, Whether the tender grape appeared. 3dly, Whether the pomegranates budded forth.

IV. A

IV. A motive which she makes use of to prevail upon him; there will I give thee my loves.

I. In these words is a general invitation given by the church to Christ to go along with her, Come, my beloved; on which may be made the following remarks, 1. That this word, come, is by the church took out of Christ's mouth; 'tis a word much used by them, not only with reference to themselves, but to others also; see Chap. ii. 10, 13. and iv. 8. Mat. xi. 28. Rev. xli. 17. and is expressive of much familiarity, hearty desire and tender affection. 2. We must not suppose that Christ needed stirring up, or was unwilling to go along with her; but he sometimes stays until he is asked, not only to make his church sensible of her duty, and that she may prize his presence the more; but also because he loves to hear her ask for his company, and say, Come, my beloved, let us walk together into the fields; let me there enjoy thy company, and let us take our fill of love. 3. These words may be considered as the church's calling upon Christ, to make good his promise, in ver. 8. where he had given her reason to expect his presence; I said, I will go up to the palm-tree; i. e. I'll grant my presence to my church and people, which are comparable to the palm-tree; I'll be in the midst of them: She now says to him, Come, my beloved, do as thou hast said. Though none of Christ's promises shall ever fail, yet they may not be immediately fulfilled; and it very much becomes believers to plead them with him in prayer, and not let them lie long by them; they ought to put Christ in remembrance of them, as they are allowed, that he would remember to them the word upon which he has caused them to hope. 4. They also contain an earnest desire after the presence of Christ, and the manifestations of his love unto her. Nothing is more desirable to believers than Christ's presence, and there is a great deal of reason for it; for this only makes their lives comfortable, whilst here, fills them with true solid joy and pleasure, makes a heaven upon earth, supports them under all their trials, carries them through all their difficulties, and gives them pleasing prospects of death and eternity. 5. They shew the sense she had of her own insufficiency for the work she was going about, without the presence of Christ; for without him we can do nothing. Hence, says Moses, Exod. xxxiii. 15. If thy presence go not with me, carry us not up hence. The church here knew full well that her visiting the several congregations of the saints, to see in what condition they were, would be to little purpose, unless Christ went with her, and therefore she requests the favour of him. 6. It may be further observed, that the clearer views a soul has of its interest in Christ, the more desirous it is of communion with him: This may easily be observed in the church's case, by comparing these words with the preceding verse. Some, the more they are known the less their company is desired; but the more and better a soul knows Christ, the more desirable his company is; and when they once have it, would never part with it; but say with Peter, Mat. xvii. 4. Lord, it is good for us to be here. Hence it is that they often long to depart out of this life, that they might be with Christ, which, to them, is far better than this life, and all the enjoyments of it. 7. The church's affixing this endearing character, my beloved, to the invitation come, thereby signifying her affection to him, as well as her interest in him him, may be considered as a powerful argument to induce him to go along with her ; for with whom should, or indeed, will loving husbands go, but with their wives, and especially when their company is importunately desired? one saint cannot tell how to deny another, when their company and conversation is desired on spiritual accounts ; so engaging is it to each other ; much less can Christ deny his church when she intreats him after this sort.

II. The particular things she invites him to, are now to be considered. And, 1st, She desires him to go forth into the field with her ; which may be expressive, 1. Of her desire after Christ's presence, both at home and abroad ; she would not stir out of doors without him ; when at home, nothing so delightful as his presence ; and having some business in the field, she is loth to go without him. O happy soul that is thus blessed ! of such an one it may be truly said, Deut. xxviii. 3—6. Blessed shalt thou be in the city, and blessed shalt thou be in the field ; blessed shalt thou be when thou comest in, and blessed shalt thou be when thou goest out. 2. Of her desire after solitariness, or of being alone with Christ : Thus, Gen. xxiv. 63. Isaac went out to meditate in the field ; where he could be retired, and have his thoughts more free, composed and fit for such an employment. The field is also a place of more secrecy, as well as retiredness ; and therefore, 1 Sam. xx. 11. Jonathan said to David, Come, and let us go out into the field ; that they might more freely tell their minds, and impart their loves to each other. Thus the church desire'd Christ to go with her into the field, that there being alone with him, she might tell him all her heart, and let him know how much she loved him, which she could not so freely do in company. 3. She might design some recreation by it ; it may be an allusion to persons who keep their country houses, who being retired from the city, take their walks in the fields to see how the fruits of the earth grow, as well as to enjoy the benefit of the country air : So the church, she is for going abroad into the fields ; but then she would have Christ go with her, for no recreation is so, unless he be with her ; walking abroad in the fields will yield her no pleasure, unless Christ be there. 4. It may signify her desire to have the gospel spread in the world, especially in those parts of it, in which it had not been as yet preached, and which looked very much like an uncultivated field ; thus the field in the parable, Mat. xiii. 38. is said to be the world ; which being overrun with the thorns and briars of sin and corruption, moves her pity and compassion, and excites desire in her to have the gospel planted there, that so it might become a fruitful field ; and therefore she is desirous to have her husband, and the true husbandman, go along with her, to manure, cultivate and plant it ; and perhaps the Gentile world may be particularly intended.

2<sup>dly</sup>, She further invites him to lodge in the villages with her : There's a manifest gradation in these words of hers, which shews her end and design in all ; she first invites him to go forth into the field, with her, and that is in order to lodge with her in the villages, and their lodging there is in order to get up early next morning to the vineyards. Jamius and Tremellius read the words thus, * Let us lodge by the cyprus-trees ; for the Hebrew word פפרים

cepharim signifies both villages and cypress-trees; see Chap. i. 14. and iv. 13. by which may be meant the saints, who may be compared thereunto, for their excellency, fragrancy and fruitfulness; and an invitation to lodge by or with these, could not be unwelcome to Christ, seeing they are with him, the excellent in the earth, in whom is all his delight. Though the word may as well be render'd villages, as it is by the Septuagint and others. From whence may be observed, 1. The villages being places of mean entertainment, both for food and lodging, that a mean condition of life, with Christ, is more eligible and much preferable to the greatest affluence of the good things of this world without him. The church had rather have hard lodgings in a country village with Christ, than to dwell in a city, have her lodgings in a king's palace, or lie upon a bed of down without him; as one <sup>b</sup> once said, Brown bread and the gospel are good fare. So it may be also said, A country lodging with Christ is good lodging. 2. Villages being places of retirement, and free from the noise and hurry of the city, might occasion her desire to lodge there; she wanted to be at liberty from the world, that she might have some solitary communion with Christ. So David being almost worn out with the fatigues of the camp, and hurries of the court, thus passionately wishes, saying, Psal. lv. 6, 7. O that I had wings like a dove, for then would I flee away and be at rest; so then would I wander far off, and remain, or as in the Hebrew text, lodge in the wilderness, Selah. The cares of this life, and the hurrying employments of it, do much interrupt and break in upon a believer's comfortable communion with Christ; and therefore, with the church, he desires sometimes to be retired from them, and lodge with him in the villages. 3. She desires not only communion with Christ, but that it might be continued: She would lodge with him all night, as she says, in Chap. i. 13. He shall lie all night betwixt my breasts; 'tis not merely for an hour or two, that she would have his company, but all night. Believers, who have got some knowledge of Christ's person, and have tasted the sweetness of communion with him, are like the Samaritans, John iv. 40. who besought him that he would tarry with them; they are never weary of his company, and do not care how much they have of it. Though, 4. These words may signify her desire to have the gospel preached in the villages, as well as in the cities: Thus our Lord Jesus Christ, in the days of his flesh, went about all the cities and villages, preaching the gospel of the kingdom, Mat. ix. 35. as did also his disciples after him; though, as one <sup>c</sup> well observes, the gospel was first preached in cities mostly, and from thence spread itself, in time, into the neighbouring villages; where the heathen idolatry lasted longer than in cities, from whence it had the name of paganism, pagus signifying a village; which the church here observing, desires Christ to go along with her, and spread the gospel there <sup>d</sup>.

3dly, She signifies her desire also to get up early to the vineyards; for which reason she thought it most proper to lodge in the villages, and not in the city; from whence she could not have been so early at the vineyards as she desired to be. By the vineyards, the Targum, R. Solomon Jarchi and Alfbeck understand the synagogues and schools of the Jews; and so it is explained in the

the Talmud ; though it seems much more probable, that by them is meant, the several particular churches and congregations of the saints, which are distinguished by sovereign grace, planted with a variety of fruitful vines, watered every moment by Christ, and fenced about with his almighty power; and by her getting up unto them, may be meant her visiting of them; which is much such an act of kindness and friendship as that of Paul's, who said to Barnabas, Acts xv. 36. Let us go again and visit our brethren, in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and see how they do. And what still more shews how intent she was upon it, and how much her heart was in it, she is for getting up early; i. e. betimes in the morning, or in the most seasonable time, as the word early is sometimes used; she is for losing no opportunity, and making use of the most suitable one to visit the churches; and that her visit may not be in vain, she's for taking Christ along with her; she is not willing to go alone; she knew of what service Christ's presence would be to the churches, and to what little purpose her's would be without him, and therefore she says, Let us get up early, &c. But,

III. She mentions the several things she had in view, in giving this invitation to Christ, or the several ends of it. And,

1st, It was to see if the vine flourished; and she might well think that this, and what follows, would take with Christ, and go a great way to prevail upon him to go along with her, seeing her ends here are much the same with his in going down into his nut-garden, Chap. vi. 11. and which, no doubt, she had some reference to. By the vine, the Targum understands the Israelites, who may be compared thereunto; and, I think, true believers in Christ, who are Israelites indeed, may very well be meant. These indeed, like vines, are weak and worthless creatures of themselves, yet being ingrafted in Christ, the true vine, and growing upon him, they bring forth fruit, and are exceeding valuable and precious: And by their flourishing may be meant, both their fruitfulness in the exercise of grace, and in the performance of good works: And though the believer is not always in a flourishing condition, there is sometimes but a small appearance of fruit upon him; his life, his grace is hid unto him, and his fruitfulness does not appear to others; yet he shall flourish again, because he is planted in a fruitful soil, by the rivers of divine love and grace; is well rooted in Christ Jesus, and whom he takes care of, waters every moment, and purges and prunes that he may bring forth more fruit; this the church was sensible of, and therefore is desirous that Christ would go along with her.

2<sup>dly</sup>, Another end she had in inviting Christ to go with her into the field, villages, and vineyards, is, to see whether the tender grape appear <sup>d</sup>, or whether the flower of the grape opened itself. By which may be meant, young converts, who are weak and tender, have but little knowledge, a small degree of faith, and have not arrived to that solidity and establishment as many others have; and are therefore compared to new-born babes, lambs and kids of the flock, as also to a bruised reed, and to the smoking flax; but as Christ does not.

* T. B. Erubim, fol. 21. 2. פתח הכסדר Heb. ἡ ἀνοίξις ὁ καρπὸς, Sept. Si flores fructus parturiunt, Vulg. Lat. Aperuerit se uva parva, *Ar. not despise the day of small things, so neither does the church overlook them, but shews a very great concern for them; she is very desirous of seeing these appear in churches: This is a very great encouragement to churches when souls are born again among them; it is a sign that the Lord designs to continue them, and to make them yet more flourishing and fruitful.

3dly, Her other end is to see whether the pomegranates budded. By pomegranates may be meant, stronger believers, who are taller and more fruitful than the former; why they are so compared, may be seen in Chap. iv. 13. and by the buddings of them may be meant, the attainings and exercise of grace in them. We may observe that the church is concerned for the comfortable well being, and good estate of believers of all ranks and sizes; of the vines and pomegranates, as well as of the tender grapes, and of the buddings of the one, as well as of the blossoming or opening of the other.

IV. The motive which she makes use of to prevail upon Christ to comply with her invitation, is, for thou wilt I give thee my loves; i. e. when we are alone in the field, or at our lodgings in the villages, or when we are together in the vineyards, visiting the vines and pomegranates, I will shew thee my love; I will open all my heart to thee, and thou shalt know how much I love thee. And, 1. We are not to suppose that this is the first time of her loving Christ, or of her manifesting it to him, for she loved him long before; but she mentions this now to gain her end; for she knew very well what would take with Christ's heart, what was grateful to him, and that nothing was more so than expressions of her love to him; and this she had learned from his own words, in Chap. iv. 10. How fair is thy love, my sister, my spouse! How much better is thy love than wine! Christ knew very well she loved him; but yet he loved to hear her say she did. What made Christ ask Peter so often whether he loved him or no? It was not because he doubted of it, but because he loved to hear him express it. 2. By her loves may be meant, the manifestations of her love to him, in the observance of his commands; the offering up the sacrifices of prayer and praise unto him, as well as all other branches of religious worship and service in his house, which she promises to him there; and this sense the Targum inclines unto. 3. This being expressed in the plural number may intend not only the excellency of her love to Christ, and the various ways of manifesting it to him, but also the abundance of it; here was an overflow of it in her soul; her heart was brimful of it, and she seems to want an opportunity of venting it; for which purpose she desires to be alone with Christ, as Joseph did with his brethren, that so she might, with the greater freedom, let out her affections to him. 4. Communion with Christ, and the flourishing condition of his churches tend much to enlarge a believer's heart with love to Christ, and to draw out his affections towards him; We love him, because he first loved us, 1 John iv. 19.

Ver. 13. The mandrakes give a smell, and at our gates are all manner of pleasant fruits, new and old, which I have laid up for thee, O my beloved.

IN these words the church makes use of another motive or argument to prevail upon Christ to grant her his presence and company; taken from the variety of fragrant flowers and pleasant fruits, which she abounded with, and had ready at hand, and which she had carefully laid up and reserved for his use and service; all which are commended.

- I. From the fragranty of them; the mandrakes give a smell.
- II. From the comprehensiveness of them; all manner of pleasant fruits.
- III. These are said to be new and old.
- IV. Not afar off, but at the very door; at our gates.
- V. They are all for his use and service; which I have laid up for thee, O my beloved.

I. The fragranty of those flowers or fruits with which she abounds, is here expressed; the mandrakes give a smell. The Hebrew word דודאים dudaim, translated mandrakes, is only found in this place, and in Gen. xxx. 14, 15, 16. in this sense; but what plant or herb is intended by it, is not very easy to determine. Junius and Tremellius have rendered it, in both places, by floræ amabiles, lovely flowers, which, they think, best agrees with the etymology of the word. Others<sup>a</sup> render it jesamin; others,<sup>b</sup> lilies; others, violets. R. Solomon Jarchi would have it render'd baskets here, and refers to Jer. xxiv. 1. where the people of Israel are represented by two baskets of figs, where a word derived from the same root, and of the same form is used; and that both sorts of people, there represented, may be here said to give a good smell, because now they all sought the face of the Lord. But the generality of translators and interpreters render it mandrakes; as do the Septuagint, both the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, on Gen. xxx. 14. Though the Targum on this place renders it balsam; but then 'tis questionable whether the same plant<sup>c</sup>, which is known among us by the name of mandrakes, is here meant, because of its strong smell; but of this more hereafter. Let us consider what may be intended hereby. And,

1st, By these mandrakes may be meant, the saints and people of God, who are plants of God's right hand planting, are both fragrant and fruitful, and may be compared unto them, 1. Because the mandrake is a<sup>d</sup> cold plant, and therefore used for the asswaging inflammations, and healing ulcers. The people of God, though they ought not to be cold in divine things, nor lukewarm in the cause of Christ, and vindication of his truths and ordinances, yet are, or at least should be, of cooling spirits to allay those heats, and heal those divisions which too often appear in the churches of Christ: which they may be instrumental in, by a prudent carriage, a moderate temper, and by

by using soft and pleasant words, which, as Solomon says, Prov. xv. 1. and xvi. 24. turn away wrath, and are sweet to the soul, and health to the bones: And when they appear to be of hot and fiery tempers and dispositions, 'tis what is opposite to the principle which is wrought in them, and that profession which they make. 2. Because the mandrake is supposed to excite love: Hence the apples of it are called apples of love; and the Hebrew word here used comes from a root which signifies love. The saints may well be represented by them on this account; for though they do not provoke Christ to love them, by the love they shew him, or the obedience they perform unto him, yet these often draw out Christ's affections to them; and what he himself has wrought in them, and put upon them, render them lovely in his eye: Besides, it is their incumbent duty, and should be the great employment of their lives, to provoke one another to love and good works. 3. They have been also thought to help barrenness, and to make fruitful, which some have imagined to be the reason of that great contention between Rachel and Leah, concerning them. Hence the phrase here may intend the fruitfulness of the church, in the first times of the gospel, through the vast numbers of souls which were born again therein; when that prophecy was fulfilled, Isa. liv. 1. Sing, O barren, thou that didst not bear; break forth into singing, and cry aloud, thou that didst not travail with child; for more are the children of the desolate than the children of the married wife, saith the Lord. Which fruitfulness of the church may be considered as a very good argument used by her here, to prevail on Christ to grant her his presence and company. 4. The mandrake is a narcotic, has a sleepy virtue in it, as Pliny observes, and much inclines thereunto. Levinus Lemnius <sup>1</sup> writes of himself, that being in his study, he was suddenly taken with a sleepy fit, which he could by no means account for, until he espied a mandrake apple upon one of the shelves, to which he ascribed it. The saints are often in sleepy frames themselves: The wise virgins slept as well as the foolish; and conversation with sleepy professors makes others so likewise. 5. It not only inclines to sleep, but makes persons sluggish and slothful: Hence those phrases, to drink the mandrake, and to sleep under a mandrake <sup>2</sup>, are proverbially used of persons who are sluggish and inactive in the discharge of their office. The saints are too often so themselves, and the cause thereof in others, being slothful in business, and not servant in spirit, serving the Lord, as they ought to be. 6. The apples of the mandrake are very delightful to look upon, being of a yellow or golden colour: And so are the saints in Christ's eye; to them he looks, and with them he is well pleased, they being beautified with the garments of his salvation, and adorned with the graces of his spirit. 7. These mandrakes are said to give a smell: 'Tis true, it is not said that they give a good smell; but it may be reasonably supposed that such an one is intended, because their commendation is designed; and they are took notice of by the church, as what might be inviting to Christ. And so, no doubt, Ruben's mandrakes, which Rachel took such a fancy to, were fragrant, and of a sweet smell, or we may reasonably suppose the boy would not have gathered them, nor Rachel have have took such a liking to them, no more than Leab would have contended with her about them. But then the difficulty is to know what plant is intended, seeing our present mandrakes are of a strong, stinking and offensive smell; and such an account also Pliny<sup>b</sup> gives of them; though Dioscorides, Levinus Lemnius<sup>1</sup> and Augustine<sup>2</sup>, who says he saw the plant, and examin'd it, say that it is of a very sweet smell, which though it does not agree with the plant which now bears the name, suits well with that intended here; for which reason the saints may be compared unto it, whose persons are of a sweet smell, being clothed with Christ's garments, which smell of myrrh, aloes and cassia, and anointed with the savoury ointments of the spirit's grace; whose prayers are so, being perfumed with Christ's mediation, and their good works being accepted with their persons in the beloved. So the Jews<sup>1</sup> interpret the mandrakes of the young men of Israel, who have not tasted the taste of sin, pure and holy persons, free from vicious habits. Or, 2dly, By these mandrakes, which give a good smell, may be meant, the doctrines and promises of the gospel; which, 1. Like mandrakes, are of a healing and cooling nature. The law is a fiery law, and when it works in a sinner's conscience, it makes fiery work there; it worketh wrath, which is only asswaged through the application of gospel-doctrines and promises by the blessed spirit. 2. Like mandrakes these excite love; for though 'tis the law which enjoyns and requires love both to God and to our neighbour; yet 'tis the gospel which moves and presses us to it, with the noblest motives and most powerful arguments, such as those which are taken from the love of God and Christ to us. 3. Like mandrakes, are the means of fruitfulness: 'Tis by the gospel, as the instrumental means, that souls are begotten again to Christ; for though they are born of an incorruptible seed, and are begotten again according to the sovereign will of God, and as an instance of his abundant mercy, yet 'tis by the word of truth which liveth and abideth for ever. 4. As the mandrake apples are delightful, so are the doctrines and promises of the gospel; which words being fitly spoken, are like apples of gold in pictures of silver. 5. As the mandrakes give a good smell, so do these, for to them that are saved they are the savour of life unto life.

3dly, By these Dudaim, or lovely flowers, as Junius translates the word, may be meant, the graces of the spirit; such as faith, repentance, love, thankfulness, hope, humility, &c. 1. Faith may be one of those lovely flowers which give a good smell: This is a flower that does not grow in nature's garden, but is sown and raised in the believer's heart, by the power and spirit of God; which at first is but like a grain of mustard seed, that is the least of all seeds, but afterwards grows in some more, in others less, but in all it is alike precious faith, which emits a sweet fragrantcy to God and Christ. 2. Repentance may be another of those lovely flowers; this grows in the same garden as faith does; they are sown and raised up together, and that by one and the same hand; and when attended with fruits becoming it, is highly valued by Christ Jesus. 3. Love may be another of those lovely flowers; this precious flower springs from, is raised up and influenced by, as well well as scented with the love of Christ; and of all the flowers in the believer's garden, none is fairer in Christ's eye, or gives him, with its small, more pleasure and delight; for of this he says, in Chap. iv. 10. How fair is thy love, my sister, my spouse, &c. 4. The grace of thankfulness is another of these flowers; nay, a certain Expositor<sup>1</sup> thinks, that it is chiefly intended. The exercise of this grace is required of us, for every mercy, both spiritual and temporal, and in every condition, state and circumstance of life: This is more pleasing to God, and he smells a sweeter savour of rest in it than in all burnt offerings; and a contrary disposition is highly resented by him, as appears from the case of the ten lepers that were cleansed, of which but one returned to give God thanks. 5. The grace of hope may be another of those lovely flowers: This is none of the meanest flowers which grow in the believer's garden; this is raised by powerful efficacious grace, is watered with divine love, is made to abound through the power of the Holy Ghost, and in which Christ takes no small pleasure and delight; for the Lord takes pleasure in them that fear him, in those that hope in his mercy. 6. The grace of humility is another precious flower; the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit is, in the sight of God, of great price: This grace so much adorns believers, that Christ says, to this man will I look, that is poor and of a contrite spirit; neither can he take his eye off of them, nor will he remove from them, but dwell with them for evermore. I might have mentioned many more of those lovely and sweet smelling flowers, as patience, self-denial, &c. but these may suffice.

II. The church's fruits are commended from the comprehensiveness of them: She is possessed of all manner of pleasant fruits: Which may denote, 1. The plenty of them: Believers have not only abundance of grace in Christ, but also abundance in themselves; for where sin abounded, grace does much more abound: They have also a fulness of all spiritual blessings in Christ, as well as a plenty of gospel-doctrines, and exceeding great and precious promises. 2. This may likewise denote the variety of them: The graces of the spirit are many and various, as are the blessings of the gospel, such as redemption through Christ's blood, pardon of sin, justification by his righteousness, adoption, sanctification, &c. So are the doctrines and promises of the gospel, which are all suited to the several cases and circumstances of believers. 3. It also denotes the excellency of them; for here are not only plenty and variety of all manner of fruits, but all manner of pleasant fruits, such as do not grow every where, or in any garden, but only in the garden of the church, whose plants are an orchard of pomegranates, with pleasant fruits, &c.

III. These fruits are said to be both new and old, which still heightens and increases the commendation of them: There's such plenty and fulness of them, as that the former year's produce is not gone, when the new is gathered in; here is some of both years increase, which is an indication of great plenty, as well as of the goodness of the fruit that will keep so long: By these fruits, new and old, 1. Some<sup>2</sup> understand the gifts of the spirit, which Christ, after his ascension received for his church, and bestowed on it, together with those temporal blessings which she enjoy'd before. Though, 2. Others

Others think, that by them are intended moral and natural virtues, which may be found in an unconverted man, and the graces of the spirit, which are only in renewed souls. But, 3. It seems much better to understand them of those fresh supplies of grace which believers have from Christ; for they cannot live upon their old stock, but must have a new supply, which they are graciously indulged with from Christ, from whose fulness they continually receive grace for grace. Tho', 4. I am rather inclined to think, that the doctrines of the old and new Testament, which for matter and substance are one and the same, are here meant, with which the church, and particularly her scribes and faithful ministers are furnished, so as they can bring forth out of their treasure things new and old, Mat. xiii. 52.

IV. These fruits are also said to be at their gates; which is mentioned, 1. In opposition to the mandrakes which grew in the field; for this appears to be a field-plant, from Gen. xxx. 14. where 'tis said, that Reuben went in the days of wheat harvest, and found mandrakes in the field; but these fruits here grew at their very doors. 2. It may be an allusion to a custom of the Eastern countries, in garnishing the doors of new married persons with fruits and flowers, which made it very inviting to go within. 3. It may also signify that these fruits were near at hand; there was no occasion to go far for them; they were even at the door, as the judge is said to be, Jam. v. 9. 4. It may denote the publickness of them: They are not hid in secret, but exposed to public view, as the graces and good works of the saints should be; Let your light, says our Lord, Mat. v. 16. shine before men, &c. as well as the doctrines of the gospel, which are not to be spoken in a corner, but to be divulged upon the house top. 5. By these gates may be meant, the means and ordinances of the gospel, where those fruits may be had; and it is therefore an encouragement to souls to watch daily at wisdom's gates, waiting at the posts of her door. So some Jewish<sup>a</sup> writers interpret them of their synagogues and schools.

V. All this plenty and variety of pleasant fruits which were just at hand, she declares, were all laid up for him; which I have laid up for thee, O my beloved. Christ had bestowed a large store and great plenty of fruit upon her, which she had carefully reserved for him; she laid it up in her heart; she bore it in remembrance, which this phrase is sometimes expressive of; thus, 'tis said, Luke i. 66. that all that heard of the surprizing circumstances, which attended the birth of John the Baptist, laid them up in their hearts, i. e. bore them in remembrance: So should we lay up the word of God, and the doctrines of it in our minds, and not forget them: Thus David said, Psal. cxix 11. he did; Thy word, says he, have I hid or laid up, 'tis the same word that is here used, in mine heart, that I might not sin against thee: So likewise should we treasure up in our minds all the instances of his grace and favour to us, and record the several experiences of his loving kindness, not as a stock to live upon, but to be brought out at proper times, to magnify the grace of Christ; and to advance his glory; for of him, and through him, and to him, are all things. Now this appears to be a very great attainment, and a mighty instance of grace in her, to have a stock of grace, a stock of

Promises and experiences, and yet not live upon them herself, but upon Christ, the author and donor of them, to lay them up for his service; and lay them out for his honour and glory; and her adding this endearing character, O my beloved, shews not only the strength of her affection to him, but may also serve to assure him of the truth of what she said, as well as be an inducement to him to comply with her request, which she passionately renews in the beginning of the next chapter.

C H A P. VIII.

Ver. 1. O that thou wert as my brother, that sucked the breasts of my mother, when I should find thee without, I would kiss thee: Yea, I should not be despised.

THESE words are a continuation, or rather a renewal of the church's desire after communion with Christ: They contain these three things;

- I. An ardent wish for a free and familiar converse with Christ, that he would shew himself to her, as her brother, and act the part of one unto her; O that thou wert as my brother; and her meaning herein is more strongly expressed, by adding, that sucked the breasts of my mother.
- II. A resolution of hers to kiss him when she found him without; when I should find thee without, I would kiss thee.
- III. The opinion which she entertained, that she should not be despised for such an action; Yea, I should not be despised.

I. These words contain an hearty wish of the church's; the words may be read thus, Who will give thee as a brother to me; such forms of wishing may be seen in many places, see Isa. xiv. 7. Job xxiii. 2. and the meaning is, that Christ would shew himself to her in the relation of a brother, act the part of one towards her, and that she might as freely converse with him as a brother and sister may, and use to do. Several Jewish writers acknowledge that the king Messiah is intended by the brother here: In what sense Christ stands in such a relation to his church, and to all true believers, as also what this wish of hers is expressive of, I shall now consider. And, 1. Christ is the church's brother, by virtue of his incarnation, or the assumption of her nature; they are nearly ally'd in the bonds of consanguinity; he is of the same flesh and blood with her, and she is flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bones; there's a very great nearness, affinity and likeness between them; for in all things it becometh him to be made like unto his brethren; and it is upon this score that he becomes a brother to them; the words may be considered as the wish of the old church for Christ's incarnation. 2. Christ and believers are of one and the

the same father. God is the father of Christ, and so he is of all his covenant-people, of whom he says, 2 Cor. vi. 18. I will be a father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters; which is an instance of his boundless and amazing grace. Hence because Christ and believers are sons of the same father, though not in the same way of filiation, he bid Mary Magdalene go to his brethren; and as an evidence of their standing in that relation to him, say unto them, John xx. 17. I ascend unto my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God: 'Tis also upon this account that saints become heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; they are heirs of God, because his children; and joint heirs with Christ, because they are his brethren, he being the firstborn among them. 3. Persons may be said to be brethren, by being concerned in one and the same covenant. Thus there was a brotherhood between Judab and Israel, which was dissolved by God's breaking his covenant with them, Zech. xi. 10, 14. Christ and his people are in one and the same covenant, and in such an one as can never be broken; though as he has the preheminance in all things as he ought to have, so he has in this, for he is the mediator, surety and messenger of the covenant; nay, he is the covenant itself; he is the foundation on which it stands, and the matter of which it consists; he is the saints representative in it, and because it is made with him, their elder brother, in their name, room and stead, therefore it is said to be made with them, and they share in all the blessings and comforts of it. 4. Persons that are of a like nature, temper, dispositions and practices, are said to be brethren: Thus Simeon and Levi are said, Gen. xlix. 5. to be brethren; not because of their natural relation, but because of their agreement in their tempers and practices. Christ and believers are brethren in this sense, they are much of the same nature; Christ has assumed their nature, and they are, in some measure, made partakers of his; principles of grace and holiness from him are wrought in them; nay, he is formed in their hearts, his image is enstamped, and his features are drawn there; there is a very great likeness between them; they are conformed to the image of him who is the first born among many brethren: Hence it is said, Heb. ii. 11. that he that sanctifieth, and they that are sanctified, are all of one, for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren; and to the same purpose those words of Christ might be produced, in Mat. xii. 50. for whosoever shall do the will of my father, which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother. 5. Those who are partners and companions in afflictions; may be also called brethren; hence Job says, Chap. xxx. 29. on the account of his sorrowful and afflicted condition, that he was a brother to dragons, and a companion to owls. Christ and believers are brethren in sufferings; though it is true, they were not companions with him in his sufferings, yet he is in theirs; the afflictions of the churches are the afflictions of Christ, he bears the heaviest part of them; for what is done to his people, he takes as done to himself; and as they suffer with him, so they shall reign with him hereafter in glory, and that for ever. 6. Persons may be called brethren on the score of friendship: Thus David, in 2 Sam. i. 26. calls Jonathan his brother; not so much because he had married his sister, but on the account of the mutual friendship that had been between them. In this sense Christ and believers are brethren; he is a friend to them, and such a friend that sticks closer than a brother; of which friendship of his towards them he has given many open and undeniable proofs; he accounts them as his friends, and therefore treats them as such, by frequent visiting of them, disclosing of his secrets to them, and making noble entertainments for them. 7. The church might wish that Christ would manifest himself to her, under this relation of a brother, because of that intimacy, freedom and familiarity which she might use with him as such; she would kiss him in the open street, take him by the hand, and lead him into her mother's house, and there keep a free conversation with him, as a sister might do with an own brother, and not be reproached for it. 8. Her meaning also may be, that he would act the part of a brother to her; that is, that he would be pitiful and compassionate to her, and sympathize with her under all her exercises, as a tender hearted brother would; and such an one is Christ, he has a fellow-feeling with his people in all their temptations, and gives them all needful succour and relief; in all their afflictions he's afflicted, and has bowels of compassion for them in all their distresses. 9. A brother not only sympathizes with, but condescends to the weaknesses and infirmities of his brethren; it is a wonderful condescension in Christ to stand in this relation to his people, as also not to be ashamed to own it; and being in it, he is capable of shewing a great deal of condescension to them in many instances, which the superiority of a father, in which relation he also stands, would not admit of, to which the church might have regard in this wish of her's. 10. The love and affection of a brother is very great, and much to be valued, as Christ's is by the church; for his loving kindness is better than life, and all the comforts of it; the manifestations of which the church may well be supposed to desire here, as she did in Chap. i. 2. where she says, and what is much the same with this request here; Let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth; for thy love is better than wine.

Again, the church's meaning in this ardent and pathetic wish of her's is more strongly expressed by adding that it was such a brother she wished for, that sucked the breasts of her mother; in which may be considered, 1st, What this phrase in general intends. 2<sup>dly</sup>, Who is meant by her mother. 3<sup>dly</sup>, What by sucking of her mother's breasts.

1st, This phrase in general may intend either, 1. The truth of Christ's human nature; she wishes for his incarnation in the former phrase, and in this, that it might appear to be true and real; of which his conception and birth, his being the child born, and the infant of days, his eating butter and honey, and sucking the breasts of his mother, were sufficient indications. Or, 2. The near relation Christ stands into his church, being a brother by the mother's side; which relation is accounted the nearest, and the affection of such an one is also the strongest; of which we have an instance in the case of Joseph, to whom Reuben, Judab, Simeon, &c. were brethren, though only by his father's side, and to whom he had a brotherly love, but not so strong an affection as he had to Benjamin, his mother's son, who was such a brother that had sucked the breasts of his mother, as may be seen in Gen. xliii. 29, 30, 34. such a brother, so nearly related, and of such an affection the church wisheth for.

2<sup>dly</sup>, It may also be enquired, who is meant by her mother, and this may be either the church, who may be called so, on the account of the many converts which are born in her: Thus Zion is said to travail in birth, and bring forth forth children, Isa. lxxj. 8. and the Gentile church is said to be the mother of many, Isa. liv. 1. and regenerate souls are frequently called the church's children, in that prophecy. Or else, by her mother we are to understand the covenant of grace, the Jerusalem which is above, which is the mother of us all, Gal. iv. 26. for every converted soul is the birth of an everlasting covenant; hence such are called, in Rom. ix. 8. the children of the promise; and it is no unusual phrase with the Jews to call themselves the children of the covenant.

3dly, By sucking the breasts of her mother, may be meant, either, 1. The enjoyment of the grace and blessings of the everlasting covenant; so this phrase of sucking the breasts is used for the enjoyment of blessings, Isa. lx. 16. and in this sense Christ may be truly said to suck the breasts of her mother; for all grace is in his hands; every blessing of the covenant he is in possession of; we have all our grace from him, and are blessed with all spiritual blessings only in him. Or else, 2. By these breasts may be meant, the word and ordinances, which are breasts of consolation to believers, in whose hearts Christ is formed; so that when they suck the breasts, and are nourished with the sincere milk of the word, and grow thereby, Christ may be said to suck of them, and be nourished by them. Or else, 3. This phrase may be expressive of that familiar intercourse and delightful communion which is between Christ and his church, which is frequently expressed by eating, feasting and supping together. See Chap. v. 1. and Rev. iii. 20.

II. The next thing in the words, is the church's resolution to kiss Christ, when ever she found him without: In which may be observed, 1st, The resolution itself, to kiss him. 2dly, The time when she would put this into practice, when I should find thee. 3dly, The place where she would do this, and that is without.

1st, We may consider the resolution itself, which is to kiss him, which is no other than what was her duty to do, and what is enjoyn'd all believers, Psal. ii. 12. Kiss the son, lest he be angry; which may be understood these several ways; 1. There is a kiss of approbation; in this sense the word is used, Prov. xxiv. 26. Every man shall kiss his lips, that giveth a right answer; i. e. shall approve his sayings, and highly extol and commend him for them, Christ is a person to be liked and approved, being altogether lovely, and the chiefest among ten thousands; and so he is by every believer; there is none in heaven, or earth, that is so much valued by them as he is; they count all things but loss and dung in comparison of him; they approve of him as their surety and saviour, and esteem him in every character and relation he stands in to them. 2. There is a kiss of love and affection, which is used by friends and relations, and that either at meeting or parting: Thus the prodigal's father fell on his neck, and kissed him, when he met him, as did Paul's friends at parting with him; which kiss of charity, or love, was much used among the primitive saints; and with such a kiss as this, the church kisses Christ, whom she dearly loves, and has the strongest affection for, arising from his love and loveliness. As Christ's kisses, in Chap. i. 2. are the lettings out, and manifestations of his love to the church, so the church's kisses are the lettings forth, and manifestations of her love to him: With such such a kiss as this the poor woman kissed Christ, in Luke vii. 38. who began to wash his feet with tears, and did wipe them with the hairs of her head, and kissed his feet, and anointed them with ointment; for she loved much, much being forgiven her. 3. There is also a kiss of faith and dependance, and then may souls be said to kiss Christ, when they, as perishing creatures, come and venture their all upon him, give up themselves to him, resolving to have no other saviour but him; when they can roll themselves on him, relying on his grace, trusting to his righteousness; when whilst they are coming out of the wilderness, are leaning upon their beloved; and more especially when they embrace him in the arms of faith, and say with Thomas, My Lord and my God. 4. There is a kiss of homage and subjection: So kissing the king's hand, as it is an instance of his grace and favour to his subjects, to permit them to do it, so it is a token of their subjection to him; thus Samuel anointed Saul, and kissed him, 1 Sam. x. 1. which former act was a declaring him king, the latter an instance of his subjection to him: Thus souls may be said to kiss Christ, when they acknowledge him to be their Lord and King, and submit to his laws and ordinances, refusing subjection to sin, satan and the world. 5. There is a kiss of worship and adoration: The custom of kissing idols very early prevailed among idolatrous people: Thus Baal's worshippers kissed him, 1 Kings xix. 18. as did also the worshippers of Jeroboam's calves, Hos. xiii. 2. So kissing the hand at the sight of the sun or moon, was esteemed an act of adoration of them in Job's time, Job xxxi. 26, 27. in the same sense it may be used here; for as Christ is the believer's Lord, he ought to worship him, and that not with a mere civil worship, which may be given to creatures, but with that religious adoration which ought to be given to the most high God; for all men should honour the son, as they honour the father. When therefore the church, or any believer, signify their love and liking to Christ, exercise faith upon him, subject themselves unto him, and give him all due worship and adoration, as well as make an open profession of him, then may they be said to kiss him. But, 2dly, She declares the time when she would do this, and that is, when she found him: From whence may be observed, 1. That Christ may be sometimes absent from his church and people, which is a very great affliction to them. 2. That they cannot be easy without him, but will be earnestly desirous of his company, and seek for him until they find him, as may be learned from the case of the church, in Chap. iii. 1, 2, 3. 3. That finding Christ is the comfortable enjoyment of his presence; it is the soul's having nearness to him and sensible communion with him, which is the time that they can come so near to him, as to kiss him.

3dly, The place where she would do this, and that is without; by which may be meant, either, 1. The Gentile world, which was without the land of Judea; the inhabitants of which are said to be without, afar off, aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, strangers to the covenants of promise, and without hope, and God, and Christ in the world; so that it may be expressive of her desire to find Christ in the Gentile world, and how much her love and affections would be drawn out to him on that account. Or, 2. By without, or in the first<sup>a</sup>, as it may be render'd, may be meant the publick ordinances, where wisdom cries, Prov. i. 20. and where the church sought Christ, Chap. iii. 2: and where finding him, she owns him, gives him homage and adoration, and lets out her affection to him. Or, 3. It may point out the way and manner in which she sought him, as well as the place where, which was by going out of herself: Christ is not to be found within, but without; believers go in and out, and so find pasture, food and comfort. Or, 4. By it may be meant any open or public place, where she should not be ashamed to own his person, gospel, ordinances, cause and interest; for those who are ashamed of him, and his words before men, he will be ashamed of before his father and his angels, Mark viii. 38. Or, 5. By her finding and kissing him without, may be meant, her going forth to meet him, claiming her interest in him, and signifying her affection to him, before men and angels at his second coming; see Mat. xxv. 6.

III. The opinion which she had entertained, that she should not be despised and reproached for such an act as this; yea, I should not be despised; or <sup>d</sup> they would not despise me, i. e. the people of the land, as the Targum paraphrases it. Now this opinion of her's might arise, 1. From the relation Christ stood in to her as a brother; for how unseemly and immodest soever it might be for a maiden, in the streets, to kiss a stranger, or one not related to her; yet no body would reproach her for using this freedom with an own brother; which would be accounted as chaste and harmless an action in her as if she had took a sucking child out of the nurses arms and kissed it; no more immodest and unbecoming is this act of the church's; and therefore she concludes, that she should not be despised for it. 2. From the reception she believed that she should meet with from Christ; who would not turn away his face from her, when she made such an offer to him, which would occasion shame and blushing in her, and others to laugh at her; but she was well assured of the contrary, and that it would be kindly accepted by him. 3. From her having so good an husband as Christ; which might be known by this familiarity between them, and whom she had no reason to be ashamed of, nor others to despise her for having none: not to have a husband being matter of reproach in those days; see Isa. iv. 1. and liv. 4, 5. 4. From her prospect of future fruitfulness; she doubted not but that by being married to such an husband, she should bring forth fruit unto God, and so not be despised for being barren and unfruitful, it being accounted reproachful to be so; see 1 Sam. i. 6. 5. It may be expressive of her boldness and confidence in owning and professing Christ without either fear or shame, before men and angels; she knew that she could not be justly despised and reproached for it, and if she was she did not value it. 6. She may have respect to those apprehensions, which the wicked will have of the saints in the last day; however mean and despicable the saints may appear to the wicked now, being in a state of imperfection, loaded with reproaches, and attended with a variety of of sorrows: yet they will appear otherwise, and that in their apprehensions too another day, when they would be glad to change places and conditions with them; though Lazarus was despised when he lay in his sores at the rich man's gates, yet he was not when in Abraham's bosom. Thus the church might conclude, that how much soever she may be despised now for owning and professing Christ, yet she should not, when she should go forth to meet him at his second coming, and be set at his right-hand in gold of Ophir.

Ver. 2. I would lead thee, and bring thee into my mother's house, who would instruct me: I would cause thee to drink of spiced wine, of the juice of my pomegranate.

THESE are still the words of the church, discovering the resolutions and desires of her heart, after communion with Christ, and a discharge of her duty to him; in which may be observed,

- I. Her resolution to lead and bring him into her mother's house.
- II. Her expectation of receiving instruction there; who would instruct me.
- III. The entertainment she promises to give him; I would cause thee to drink of spiced wine, of the juice of my pomegranate.

I. She resolves to lead and bring him into her mother's house; wherein may be consider'd, 1st, What may be intended in those acts of leading and bringing. 2<sup>dly</sup>, What by her mother's house, whither she would lead him, and into which she would introduce him.

1st, It will be proper to consider what those acts of leading and bringing intend. We frequently read of Christ's leading his church and people, but never, as I remember, but in this place, of the church's leading Christ. Christ leads his church as a king does his subjects, or as a general does his army; for he is given to be a leader and a commander to the people; which he performs by ruling them with wholesome laws, and protecting them in their rights and liberties from all their enemies: Thus, Deut. xxxii. 12. the Lord alone did lead Israel of old, and there was no strange God with him: Thus David, Psal. lxxviii. 72. the type of Christ, fed the same people, according to the integrity of his heart, and guided them by the skilfulness of his hands. He leads them also as a shepherd does his flock, gently, as they are able to bear it, to suitable pastures, and proper resting places; and likewise as a master does his scholars, leading them by his spirit, into all truth, and shewing them the fulness and glory of the everlasting covenant. Moreover, Christ leads his people as a guide does a stranger; for they know not the way everlasting themselves, and therefore commit themselves to his guidance and conduct; who though he leads often in rough paths, yet always in a right way, to the city of their habitation. Likewise he leads them as a nurse does her child, taking them by the hand, he teaches them to walk by faith, and leads them into their father's presence; and also as an husband leads his wife, when he brings her home, introduces her into his house, consummates the marriage, and makes her a partner of all his goods; hence the phrase, ducere uxorem, to lead lead a wife, is used to express the act of marriage. Thus it appears to be no very difficult matter to understand how Christ may be said to lead his church, but how she may be said to lead him does not appear so manifest and easy. The act seems to import these following things, 1. That she used much familiarity with Christ; for, for one person to take another by the hand and lead along, discovers this: Christ allows his church much freedom with him, which she may make use of without incurring the reproach and scandal of forwardness or immodesty; seeing it is her own brother, nay, her own husband, whom she thus treats. 2. It shews much tender love, affection and respect to Christ, as also a welcome of him to her mother's house. Thus friends and relations shew their respect and affection to each other, and a hearty reception of them into their houses, by taking them by the hand, and leading them in. 3. It also denotes honour given to Christ by her, becoming his stateliness and majesty: Thus kings and great persons are usually led; she treats him according to high station, as she is in Psal. xlv. 14, 15. and leads him along as kings and conquerors are led when they march in triumph. 4. All this is done by prayer and intreaty, in the exercise of faith. Christ is easily prevailed upon by his church, through the exercise of faith in prayer; he is, if I may be allowed the expression, to be led any way, by believers, in things which are consistent with his revealed will, and what will make for their good and his glory.

Much in the same sense are we to understand the other act of bringing; which, (1.) On her part may denote the strength of faith in prayer, which held him, and would not let him go, until she had brought him into her mother's house; like Jacob of old, who when the angel said to him, Gen. xxxii. 26. Let me go, for the day breaketh, answered, I will not let thee go, except thou blest me: Thus Jam. v. 16. the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much. (2.) On his part much condescension, in allowing such mean and worthless creatures, as believers in themselves are, to take him by the hand, lead him along, and bring him where they would have him.

2dly, The next thing to be enquired into is, what is meant by her mother's house, where she desired to bring him. Which may be expressive, 1. Of her desire to have the marriage consummated; the introduction of the bride and bridegroom into their house, being the last and finishing ceremony of marriage: Thus 'tis said of Isaac, Gen. xxiv. 67. that he brought Rebekah into his mother Sarah's tent, and she became his wife. Agreeable to this ceremony, the church expresses herself here; only here is this difference, that it was usual for the bridegroom to lead and bring his bride into his mother's house; but here the church promises to lead Christ to her mother's house; Christ and the church's mother being one and the same. 2. Of her desire to have the knowledge of Christ spread among her near relations, those of her mother's house; for nothing is more common than for persons, when they are converted themselves, to desire the conversion of their near relatives; an instance of which may be observed in the apostle Paul, Rom. ix. 1, 2, 3. 3. Of her desire to enjoy his presence in the church, which may be meant by her mother's house; for the catholick and invisible church, or the general assembly and church of the first-born, which are written in heaven, may be said to be the mother to the visible church on earth in any age of the world; for this is the Jerusalem which is above, which is the mother of us all ; as may also the visible church on earth be to the several particular and congregated churches ; and every particular and congregated church may be said to be the mother of particular believers, or converted persons ; so that, (1.) The church is their mother's house, where they are begotten and born again ; for of Zion it shall be said, this and that man was born in her, Psal. lxxxvii. 5. (2.) Where they are educated and brought up ; for Zion's children, as they are born in her, so they are nursed at her side, Isa. lx. 4. (3.) For which they have a great deal of zeal and affection, as persons usually have for the place of their nativity and education ; and this in imitation of, and conformity to Christ, of whom it is said, That the zeal of God's house had eaten him up, Psal. lxix. 9. (4.) Where they take much pleasure, and delight to be ; are glad when asked to go up unto it, because there they meet with the presence of Christ, receive instructions from him, and are employ'd in delightful service by him. (5.) This is not only the church's mother's house, but also Christ's father's house ; nay, his own house, which might be an inducement to him to go along with her ; see John ii. 16. Heb. iii. 6.

The reasons which might induce her to desire and endeavour the introduction of him into her mother's house, may be such as these ; [1.] That she might enjoy free and uninterrupted communion with him, which end was attained by her, as appears from the following verse. [2.] That others, even those of her mother's house, might have the benefit of Christ's presence and company, as well as herself ; which shews her to be of a free, noble and public spirit ; like those saints, in 1 John i. 3. who were concerned for the comfortable well-being of others, as well as of themselves. [3.] That the ordinances of her mother's house might be blessed unto her ; for she knew full well, that those breasts of consolation would be but dry breasts without his presence, and like the mantle of Elijah, be of little service and usefulness without the Lord God himself. [4.] That she might be assisted by him, in the service of the house ; there are a great many works of faith and holiness to be performed herein, which she knew she was not able to do of herself, but that through Christ strengthening her she could do all things.

II. She expected instruction in her mother's house, upon the bringing of him there, and this she expected either from her, or else from him ; for the word <sup>c</sup>, in the Hebrew text, will bear a reading which will suit either sense.

1st, They may be read, who teacheth me, referring it to her mother, who would do so : So Junius and Tremellius read them, to which our version agrees, and which is also favoured by R. Aben Ezra. From whence may be observed, 1. That the church is a school of instruction, where souls are instructed in the ways of Christ, in the doctrines of the gospel, and in all the duties of religion ; both how to carry themselves in the church, and how to behave themselves agreeably to Christ, in all acts of love and obedience to him, which she may here have chiefly a regard unto ; it seems to be an allusion to a grave and prudent woman, who taking her new married daughter apart by herself, teaches her how to behave herself towards her husband, that so she may have his affections, and live comfortably and happily with him. Some such instructions the church expected from her mother, 2. That the greatest believers are not above instruction, and the means of it, but count it a mercy to have both the one and the other. Some persons who know nothing as they ought to know, think they know every thing better than others, and therefore are above ordinances, despise instruction, and contemn the ministry of the word: But those who know most of themselves and of Christ Jesus, desire to know more, value the means of instruction, and make use of the ordinances of the gospel to improve therein: The difference of these two sorts of persons may be seen in Prov. ix. 8, 9.

2dly, The words may be render'd, thou shalt instruct me, meaning Christ; and this sense is favoured by the Targum upon the place, and is followed by many interpreters; for though the church is the school, and ordinances are the means of instruction, yet Christ is the teacher, who teacheth, as none else can: This the church knew, and therefore expected instruction from him in her mother's house, being there in the way of her duty, where persons may more reasonably look for it. Now when Christ and the church are in their mother's house together, he instructs her, and shews her her interest in all the goods of the house; acquaints her with her work and duty, and how she ought to behave herself towards him; he gives some such marriage-precepts as these, in Psal. xlv. 10, 11. Hearken, O daughter, and consider, and incline thine ear; forget also thine own people, and thy father's house; so shall the king greatly desire thy beauty; he is thy Lord, and worship thou him. He informs her what respect and affection, homage and obedience he expected from her, and that she should not now hanker after her own kindred and relations, being married unto him.

Now Christ teaches and instructs his church and people many ways; as, 1. By his spirit; who being sent by him, teaches them all things, goes before them, and leads them into all truth, as it is in Jesus, John xiv. 26. and xvi. 13. 2. By his ministers; who are both fathers and instructors to Christ's babes, and therefore are called pastors and teachers: Pastors, as they have the oversight of the flock; and teachers, as they are the instructors in Christ's school. 3. By the scriptures; which are profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; for there is nothing written there, whether promises or doctrines, words of advice and direction, or of exhortation and comfort, but what is written for our learning; that we through patience and comfort of the scriptures, might have hope, 2 Tim. iii. 16. Rom. xv. 4. 4. By his ordinances; for as in his church he teaches men his ways, so he teaches them by them, and in their waiting and attending on them. 5. By afflictive providences; he sometimes takes the rod, and makes use of that to promote his peoples learning, when need requires; and blest is the man whom he chasteneth, and thereby teacheth out of his law, Psal. xciv. 12.

III. She promises him a noble entertainment; I would cause thee to drink of spiced wine, of the juice of my pomegranate: This is a different kind of entertainment than what the old synagogue gave him, who when she found him in the street, did not kiss him, shewed no respect to him, made no profession of him, nor did she exercise any faith upon him, nay, despised those who did so; she was so far from leading and bringing him into the temple, which the Jews here understand by her mother's house, that she thrust him out of it, and gave him gall for his meat, and in his thirst gave him vinegar to drink; or, as one of the evangelists says, Mark xv. 23. Wine mingled with myrrh; which though it is of a sweet smell, yet is of a bitter taste; but the church here promises him spiced wine, such as was accounted the most pleasant and agreeable; and the juice of her pomegranate, for her plants were an orchard of pomegranates; from the fruit of which a delightful juice is squeezed, of which is made a pleasant wine; and the word which is here translated juice, signifies must, or new wine; and Pliny<sup>b</sup> speaks of a wine made of pomegranates; mention is also made of it in the Talmud<sup>c</sup>, and by Maimonides<sup>d</sup>: These sorts of wine were, no doubt, accounted the best, and therefore she resolves to treat Christ with them; by which may be intended, 1. The richness and plenty of this entertainment; a banquet of wine being accounted the richest banquet: Hence the provisions of grace, under the gospel, are represented by it, Isa. xxv. 6. as are also the joys of heaven, Mat. xxvi. 29. But here these metaphorical phrases intend the graces of God's people, which when in exercise, are preferred by Christ, to the richest wine. 2. The variety of it; here are spiced wine, and wine of pomegranates, different sorts of wine; which are expressive of the various graces of the spirit, which are implanted in the hearts of Christ's people. 3. The delight and pleasure which Christ takes therein; for even one single grace, even that of love, is said to be better than wine, and the smell of such ointments than all spices; which delight and pleasure is expressed by his drinking of it. See Chap. iv. 10. and v. 1.

THESE words may be considered either, 1. As a petition that it might be so, and be read thus<sup>a</sup>, Let his left hand be under my head, &c. Or, 2. As expressing her faith, that it should be so, which sense is favoured by our version. 3. As declaring her present enjoyment of the mercy which she had been seeking for, and had faith in, and so be read, as in Chap. ii. 6. where they are more largely explained.

Ver. 4. I charge you, O daughters of Jerusalem, that ye stir not up, nor awake my love, until he please.

THESE words are either the words of Christ or of his church, who having the presence and company of, and enjoying communion with each other, forbid all interruption, as has been observed on Chap. ii. 7. where the same words are used, as they are also in Chap. iii. 5. but with this difference. 1. The phrase by the roots and by the binds of the field, which is used in the two former texts, is here omitted, not because there is less vehemency and earnestness in this charge than in the former; for, 2. There is also a difference in the form of expostulation, which seems rather to express her earnestness the more; for the words may be render'd thus <sup>a</sup>, Why will ye stir up, and why will ye awake, &c. which seems to imply as if she was apprehensive that they were about to do it, and that there was danger of it; as also that it was an unreasonable thing in them to do it, and what would be every way as prejudicial to them as it would be to her; and therefore they ought to be careful, as well as herself, not to disturb him, or provoke him to depart.

Ver. 5. (Who is this that cometh up from the wilderness, leaning upon her beloved?) I raised thee up under the apple tree; there thy mother brought thee forth, there she brought thee forth that bare thee.

IN these words are,

- I. A question, put by way of admiration, concerning the church, who is here described, 1st, By her ascent out of the wilderness. 2<sup>dly</sup>, By her posture in coming up from thence; leaning upon her beloved.
- II. Some things asserted, either by Christ or by his church; I raised thee up, &c.

I. Here is a question put by way of admiration, Who is this, &c. not by the angels, as some think; though 'tis true, they admire the grace that is bestowed upon mortal men, and rejoice at the faith and conversion of sinners; but it is much more likely that these are the words of the daughters of Jerusalem, who being strictly charged in the former verse, to give no disturbance to Christ and his church, who were enjoying communion and fellowship with each other, look more earnestly at her, whom Christ had so much honoured and indulged with such nearness to himself, at which they seem astonished and surprized. Though others <sup>a</sup> have considered them as the words of the Jewish church, wondering at the conversion of the Gentiles, and their sudden reception into the embraces of Christ. Others <sup>b</sup> have taken them to be the words of the bride herself, declaring what Christ said to her when he first met her, as she was coming up from the wilderness; or else expressing her great love and affections to Christ, which appeared by her coming out of the wilderness, forsaking all for him, encountering with all difficulties, running all risques that she might enjoy his company; and therefore says, Who is this, &c. or where is there another that has done the like, or shewn the like love to him as I have done; which is not to be understood as though she boasted in herself? for she acknowledges that it was by his grace and strength that she had been enabled to do this, which is expressed in in the very next words, leaning upon her beloved; for she could never have been able to come up from the wilderness, had she not had his arm to lean upon: Though they seem rather to be the words of Christ himself, not as being ignorant of her, or not knowing who she was, but as admiring at the graces of his spirit in her, and especially that of faith signified by her leaning on her beloved; as he had admired her love and affections to him, in a like form of speech, in Chap. iii. 6. which are there compared to pillars of smoke.

The person who is here enquired of and wonder'd at, is either the Gentile church, which, before the gospel was brought thither, was much like a desert and wilderness, to which it is frequently compared in the prophecies of Isaiah; see Chap. xxxii. 15, 16. and xxxv. 1, 6. and her coming out of the wilderness may signify her conversion to the faith of Christ; or else the springing up of a new church may be here intended; and because an Arabic word is here made use of, Brightman thinks it intends the conversion of the eastern part of the world, Arabia, Persia, Egypt, Affyria, and refers it to the prophecy in Isa. xix. 23, 24, 25. though rather the bride, who is all along spoken of in this song, is here meant, who had attained to a greater degree of faith, and had larger experiences of Christ's love, and was allowed a more intimate communion with him; and is described here,

1st, By her ascent from the wilderness: The Septuagint read the words thus, Who is this that cometh up in white, or clothed in white? though there is nothing in the Hebrew text to favour such a version, yet this appears to be the apparel of the church in other places, especially in the book of the Revelation, Chap. iii. 4, 5. and xix. 8. where she is said to be array'd in fine linnen, clean and white; which fine linnen is said to be the righteousness of the saints, &c. that which Christ has wrought out for them, and is by an act of God's grace imputed to them; for their own righteousness doth not deserve the name of fine linnen, clean and white; that being, at best, but as filthy rags, and as an unclean thing. But the words are better render'd, Who is this that cometh up from the wilderness? by which may be intended, either her conversion from a state of nature, her being called and chosen out of the world, or her deliverance out of some great affliction; as the saints are said to come out of great tribulation, Rev. vii. 14. But of all this, see more on Chap. iii. 6.

2<sup>dly</sup>, She is described by her posture, in this her ascent out of the wilderness, leaning upon her beloved; which is expressive of much confidence in him, and familiarity with him, which she was allowed by him to use, and which she might, without justly incurring either shame or reproach; for he, on whose arms she leaned, stood in a near relation to her, being both her husband and her brother. The word here translated leaning is only used in this place, and is differently rendered. 1. Some, among which are many Jewish interpreters, from the use of the word in the Arabic language, render it, joining, or associating, or cleaving to her beloved. The church had given up herself to Christ, to be his for ever; was resolved, through grace to abide with him, and to go with him whithersoever he went; that act of faith in God's people, which in the new Testament, 2 Cor. viii. 5. is expressed by a giving up of themselves to the Lord, to serve, honour and glorify his name, is frequently expressed in the old Testament, Isa. lvi. 3, 6. Jer. l. 5. by a joining of themselves unto him; which, when they have done, they cleave unto him with full purpose of heart, resolving with Ruth, that where he goes, they will go; where he lodges, they will lodge; that his people shall be their people, and his God their God; nay, that in the strength of his grace, they will abide with him, and by his interest, even unto death. 2. Others read the words thus, <sup>h</sup> rejoicing or delighting herself in her beloved; which sense the Vulgate Latin seems to have a regard to, as well as expresses the sense of our version, by reading the words thus, delictis affluens, innixa super dilectum suum, flowing with delights, leaning upon her beloved: As does also the Targum, which thus paraphrases the words; and they shall delight themselves in the mercy of the Lord. Christ and his church take mutual delight and pleasure in each other; as she is fair and pleasant for delights in his esteem, so he is in her's. Saints delight themselves much in taking a view of his personal glory, his incomparable beauty, transcendent excellencies, inexhaustible fulness, and unsearchable riches; it is not only their duty to rejoice in the Lord always; but this is interwoven in the very make, frame and constitution of their souls, as renewed by grace: Hence they are said to be the circumcision which worship God in the spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh, Phil. iii. 3. 3. The Septuagint render it, <sup>i</sup> strengthening herself upon her beloved; i. e. being conscious of her own weakness and inability to perform the duties of religion, withstand the temptations of satan, escape the snares of this world, and hold on and continue in her Christian race, she applied herself to Christ, in whom she saw both righteousness and strength for her; and from whom she received both, the one as her clothing, the other as her armour; the one as her title for glory, the other to enable her to hold out until she arrived thither. 4. Others <sup>k</sup> translate the word thus, casting herself upon her beloved. Sensible souls will cast themselves at the feet of Christ for mercy, and into the arms of Christ for safety, shelter and security; they will cast their burdens upon the Lord, to be eased from them by him, who has promised to sustain them; and they will cast their care upon him, knowing that he careth for them; nay, they will venture their souls upon him, and commit the whole affair of their salvation to him; as undoubtedly the church did here. 5. Our version reads it <sup>l</sup> leaning on her beloved, which is the use of the word in the Ethiopic language<sup>m</sup>: Confidence and trust in our own strength, wisdom and righteousness, is sometimes expressed by leaning thereunto, as in Job xviii. 15. Prov. iii. 5. and so is faith in our Lord Jesus Christ; see Isa. l. 10. By faith believers lean upon Christ's person, for their acceptance with God; upon his righteousness, for their justification before him; upon his fulness, for every day's supply; and unto his blood for pardon and cleansing; who is such a staff or prop as will never deceive them, upon which they may venture to lay the whole stress of their salvation, as it seems the church did here.

II. In the following part of this text are some things asserted, either by Christ concerning his church; or else, by the church concerning Christ; I raised thee up under the apple tree, &c. These words may be considered as the words of Christ, shewing by whom and by what means the church was raised out of her former mean condition, and was brought to that honour and dignity which she now enjoy'd.

1st, Says he, I raised thee up under the apple tree; which may either intend the work of faith and conversion, which is the quickening or raising up a soul that is dead in trespasses and sins, unto a newness of life; or else the awakening of a sleepy and drowsy saint. If we consider the words in the former sense, they will lead us to observe, 1. The state and condition that the church was in before conversion; which Christ, it may be, remarks unto her, to teach her humility, that she might not be puffed up with spiritual pride, and forget what she once was; she was dead in sin, and must have continued so, had not Christ raised her up; she was like the wretched infant in Ezek. xvi. 5. which was cast out in the open field, to the loathing of its person, in the day that it was born; in which condition Christ found her, being like a new born infant, thrown under an apple tree, and there left naked and helpless; where he took compassion upon her, and said unto her, whilst in her blood, live. Moreover, some regard may be had in this place, unto the manner how she came to be in this condition, which was through Adam and Eve's eating the forbidden fruit, which some have thought to be the apple; whereby sin entered into the world, and death by sin: And so death passed upon all men, in whom all have sinned, Rom. v. 12. 2. That the work of faith and conversion is a resurrection from the dead; this is the first resurrection, which for ever secures persons from being hurt by the second death; see John v. 25. Rev. xx. 6. 3. That this work belongs to Christ, is performed by him, and the glory of it to be given to him; I raised thee up, &c. This work cannot be effected by the free will and power of man, but by the mighty and efficacious grace of Christ: Hence he is said to be the resurrection and the life, John xi. 25. No less a person than he, who said to Lazarus, Come forth, can raise a dead sinner; and no less a power must be exerted in doing this work than was in the resurrection of Christ's dead body; see Eph. i. 19. 4. Christ's doing of this work upon the hearts of his people, is a very great indication of his love to them; he speaks of it here as a peculiar favour done to his church; see Eph. ii. 4. Jer. xxxi. 3. But,

If we understand these words of the awakening of her when asleep, they may teach us the following things; 1. That she was fallen asleep; which is sometimes the case of God's own people, as in Chap. v. 2. 2. That this befel her when she was under the ordinances, under the shadow of the apple tree. 3. That Christ will not suffer his people to continue so, but will, by some means or other awake them out of it.

2<sup>dly</sup>, He says, that there her mother brought her forth, &c. Here he expresses her conversion by a regeneration, as he had before by a resurrection, by both which names it is very well known in the new Testament; which work, though it is effected by the grace and spirit of God, yet the ministry nistry of the word and ordinances are the instrumental means thereof, which Christ has placed, continues and blesses in his church for that end.

But the words seem rather to be the words of the church, speaking these things concerning Christ; for though there is nothing in our version to determine the sense this way, yet the suffixes in the Hebrew text being of the masculine gender, manifestly shew that they are spoken of a man, and not of a woman. And,

1st, The church says, that she raised Christ up under the apple tree; i. e. She sitting under the ordinances of the gospel, which are the shadow of the apple tree, to which Christ is compared in Chap. ii. 3. and finding no communion with him, he being, as it were, asleep all the while, did, by earnest prayer and entreaty, at length raise him up; so that she enjoyed a large degree of nearness to him, and familiarity with him.

2<sup>dly</sup>, That there his mother, which is the church, and every true believer, see, Chap. iii. 11. and Mat. xii. 50. brought him forth; as did, 1. The old Testament-church, who long waited for him, and was often in pain, as a woman with child, on that account, until this manchild was born, which was at length accomplished to the joy of all those who waited for the consolation of Israel. 2. With much pain did the apostles bring Christ forth into the Gentile world, by professing him, preaching his gospel, and suffering for his sake. Thus did they travail in birth, until Christ was formed in the hearts of men. 3. It is with much pain, even like that of a woman in travail, that the new birth, or the work of regeneration on the heart, which is no other than Christ formed there, is wrought; all, more or less, who are called by grace, pass under a work of the law, which is a killing letter; which puts the soul to a great deal of pain; pricks it to the heart, and makes it cry out, What shall I do to be saved? 4. The new Testament-church, which is also Christ's mother, in the exercise of faith and prayer is waiting for his second coming; nay, is not only looking for it, but is hastening to it, is uneasy, and, as it were, like a woman in travail, until he makes his appearance; which he will shortly do, through the incessant and continued cries and intreaties of his people. And this may be the reason why the phrase is doubled; there thy mother brought thee forth, i. e. the old Testament church, who waited for his manifestation in the flesh; there she brought thee forth that bare thee, i. e. the new Testament-church, which looks for his second appearance. R. Aben Ezra interprets these words of the raising, loosing and bringing forth of the king Messiah, through the prayers and intreaties of the Jews; who fancy that he now lies bound and fast asleep, but will, e'er long, be awaked and loosed through their prayers, and appear for their deliverance from present exile and captivity.

Ver. 6. Set me as a seal upon thine heart, as a seal upon thine arm : For love is strong as death, jealousy is cruel as the grave : The coals thereof are coals of fire, which hath a most vehement flame.

THESE words may be considered either as the words of Christ, or of his church. Some think that they are the words of Christ, expressing sing his desire to be set as a seal upon the heart and arm of his church ; and the argument, reason or motive which he makes use of to prevail upon her to grant him this request, is taken from the exceeding greatness of his affection to her ; which is compared to the strength of death, the cruelty of the grave, and the vehemency of flaming coals of fire.

I. He makes a request to her, that he might be set as a seal, both upon her heart and arm : By which he may intend, 1. An inward and abiding principle of love and affection in her towards him. The church's love to Christ is highly valued by him, especially when it comes from the heart ; for meer expressions of love, without an inward principle of it in the heart, are not satisfying to him ; for what he requires is, to love him, with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. Let us love therefore not in word, neither in tongue, i. e. only, but indeed and in truth ; for this is what he seeks for, and is highly esteemed of by him. 2. A manifestation of this affection to him outwardly ; it should not only have a place in our hearts, but also be shewn by our actions, which should be in conformity to his will ; for if ye love me, says he, John xiv. 15. keep my commandments : Christ should have both our hearts and our hands. 3. A constant remembrance of him, and continual looking to him : As seals worn upon the arm, or in a ring upon the finger, are continually in sight, and put in remembrance, whose they are, or whose image they bear ; so would Christ be always in his church's sight and mind ; for we should, as David did, set the Lord always before us, and continually look unto him, which is both pleasant and profitable ; pleasant, because we behold him full of grace and truth ; and profitable, because we receive from him grace for grace. 4. A greater likeness to him : Conformity to Christ's image is one great end of predestination, which is begun in the hearts of his people, by his spirit, is increased by those transforming views he gives them of the glory of Christ's person, and will be completed in heaven, when they shall be like him, and see him as he is. Believers have the image of Christ stamped upon them ; for as they have born the image of the earthly, they shall also bear the image of the heavenly ; which is to have Christ set as a seal upon the heart and arm, so as that he leaves an impress of his image there, which conforms both heart and life unto him, and cannot but be desired by him ; for every like loves its like. 5. A close adherence to his person, gospel, cause and interest ; having made an open and publick profession of him, we should cleave to him with full purpose of heart, as Ruth did to Naomi, or as a signet does to a man's right hand, on which it is worn. 6. And lastly, In this request of Christ to the church, his design may be, that she might appear to be his, and only for his use and service ; as things are known to be such a man's property by his mark or seal being upon them, so the church is known to be Christ's, by his seal being upon both her heart and arm ; which is himself, who is inwardly received and outwardly professed by her ; for whose use and service all she is and has are, being a garden inclosed, a spring shut up, a fountain sealed.

II. The argument, reason or motive which he makes use of to induce her to take notice of his request, is taken from the ardency of his love and affection to her, which is signified by those several following expressions ;

1st, He declares that his love to her was strong as death; he loved her so that he died for her; he preferred her to his own life, and chose death rather than to go without her, which is a full proof and evidence of his love to her, and shews the exceeding greatness of it; for, as in John xv. 13. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends; which may very well be improved by him as an argument or reason why she should love him again, manifest that love, bear him continually upon her mind, cleave close unto his cause and interest, seek after a nearer conformity to him, as well as reserve herself and all she had for his use and service.

2<sup>dly</sup>, He asserts his jealousy to be cruel as the grave: By which may be meant, either, 1. His zeal for his church's good and his father's glory; so this word is sometimes rendered; see Isa. ix. 6. and lxiii. 15. which zeal of Christ's, like the inexorable, cruel and devouring grave, consumed his time and strength, and at last, his life; as appears from his own words, The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up, Psal. lxi. 9. He, as the great prophet in Israel, shewed a becoming zeal for the gospel, which appeared by his warm and lively preaching of it, his assiduity and constancy in it, the frequent and wearisome journies he took to do it, the risques and dangers he run upon that account; as well as the many miracles he wrought to confirm it, and the care he took to free it from calumnies, aspersions and prejudices: He likewise shewed the like zeal for the discipline of his father's house, as is manifest from his severe reflections on human traditions, his asserting the purity of worship to be in spirit and in truth, as also his frequent inveighing against the vice of professors; as well as his great courage in clearing the temple from the defilers of it; which heroic action of his, is particularly recorded in John ii. 14, 15, 16, 17. which put the disciples in mind of what was before written of him: Moreover his zeal was no less fervent for the salvation of his people, and the glory of his father, concerned therein; which plainly discovered itself in his voluntary assumption of human nature, and cheerful submission to the death of the cross, on their account: Or else, 2. By it may be meant his vengeance on his and their enemies; in this sense the word is used, Deut. xxix. 20: Isa. lix. 17. what was a day of grace and salvation to his people was a day of vengeance to his enemies; for no sooner was the year of his redeemed come, but the day of vengeance was in his heart, which he executed upon them without any mercy, pity or compassion; his jealousy or vengeance was cruel as the grave; he spared them not; he made an end of sin, abolished death, destroyed satan, and spoiled principalities and powers. Or else, 3. By it may be meant, the jealousy which he justly entertains of his people's faith in him, love and duty to him; who frequently turn aside from him to other lovers, of which he often complains, being jealous over them with a godly jealousy; which is no other than the height of his love and affection to them; there being nothing that he is more anxiously concerned for and jealous of than the faith, love and obedience of his people, lest they should be given to any other.

3<sup>dly</sup>, This strong affection of his to his church, he compares to coals of fire, which hath a most vehement flame; by which he would signify the ardency and vehemency of his love; how torturing it was to him, and how ready he was until he had given it vent: Thus the prophet Jeremy, Chap. xx. 9.

being reviled and reproached for prophesying in the name of God, made a resolution, not to make mention of him, nor speak any more in his name. But, says he, his word was in mine heart, as a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not stay. So Christ's love was like burning coals of fire in his bosom, which gave him much uneasiness until he had given it vent, as appears from Luke xii. 50. I have, says he, a baptism, meaning his death and sufferings, to be baptized with, and how am I straightened, distressed, tortured and uneasy, till it be accomplished. And now this zeal of Christ's for the salvation of his church, his vengeance upon her enemies, his anxious concern that her faith, love and obedience might not be alienated from him, as also his uneasiness until her salvation was accomplished, may well be used by him, as so many arguments to prevail upon her to grant him the above said request. Thus much for the first sense of the words, as they may be considered as the words of Christ to the church; but the generality of interpreters understand them as the words of the church, requesting of Christ that he would set her as a seal, both upon his heart and arm, because of the greatness of that love which she bore to him, which she compares to death, the grave and coals of fire. And this I take to be the most genuine sense of them, as being most agreeable to the suffixes in the Hebrew text; I shall consider it much in the same method as I did the former. And,

First, The church requests of Christ that he would set her as a seal upon his heart, and as a seal upon his arm; in which she may desire, 1. Nearness to him, as a seal must be near that is worn next the heart or upon the arm. The saints are a people near unto the Lord; with respect to union, they are members of his body, of his flesh and of his bones. Christ and believers are like the old primitive Christians, of one heart and of one soul; and they would be near to him, with respect to communion; they would not only with Job, come even to his seat, but also into his arms, would lie in his bosom, nay, are not content without a place in his heart. 2. She seems to be desirous of abiding in Christ's heart, and that she might be as a signet upon his arm, from whence the might never be removed, but there always continue; of which believers may be assured, though they are often attended with fears about it; for, as in Psal. cxxv. 1. They that trust in the Lord shall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever; they can never be removed from off Christ's heart, on which they always are; nor out of his arms, in which they are continually inclosed; for they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of his hand. 3. She desires a share in his heart's love and affection, and that she might be valued and esteemed by him as a signet upon his right-hand; see Jer. xxii. 24. Hag. ii. 23. for there is nothing more desirable to believers than the love of Christ, and the discoveries of it; for his loving kindness is better than life; may they but have a share in Christ, an interest in his favour, be but valued and esteemed by him, they care not how they stand in the world's esteem, what they say of them, or can do unto them. 4. She seeks for a continuance of his love, which may be depended on; for having loved his own, which were in the world, he loved them unto the end, John xiii. 1. Christ's love is like himself, the same yesterday, to day, and for ever; from whence it is impossible that any separation should ever be made. 5. She also wanted and sought after an assurance of Christ's love, which is the spirit's work, and is expressed by sealing in scripture; see Eph. i. 13. and iv. 30. which he performs either more generally, by that work of grace which he has begun, and is carrying on in the hearts of believers; for from his drawing of them to Christ with loving kindness, they may conclude and be assured of their interest in his everlasting love; or else more particularly by some special testimony of his which he bears together with their spirits, that they are the children of God. 6. In this request she likewise presses after a manifestation of this love to her soul, by the arm of his almighty power, delivering her out of all temptations, and supporting and bearing her up under all afflictions, trials and exercises; which had wrought out salvation for her, and had plucked her as a brand out of the burning. 7. She desires a continual remembrance of him, and seems to allude to the high-priest, who had the names of the children of Israel engraven like the engravings of a signet upon precious stones; which were born by him, both upon his shoulders, and upon his heart, for a memorial before the Lord continually; which was <sup>b</sup> typical of Christ, our great high-priest, who represented the persons of all the elect, upon the cross, and now bears them upon his heart before the throne, in heaven, whither he is gone to appear in the presence of God for us. 8. She desires to be always in his sight, and under his care and inspection, as his people always are; for they are graven upon the palms of his hands, and their walls are continually before him: They are as the apple of his eye, his jewels and peculiar treasure which he has his eye always upon, and continually watches over, lest they should be lost, or any hurt come unto them.

Secondly, The reason of this request of her's, she declares to be the exceeding greatness of her love unto him; which she compares to death for its strength, to the grave for its cruelty, and to burning coals of fire for its insatiable and devouring nature.

1st, She asserts her love to Christ to be as strong as death; the meaning of which is, 1. That as death conquers all, kings and peasants, high and low, rich and poor, bond and free, young and old, weak or strong; there is no disputing his authority, or controuling his power, but all ranks and degrees of men must, whether they will or no, be subject to him, the king of terrors; so her love to Christ overcame all things, and surmounted all difficulties which stood in the way of her enjoying him; she could part with, and bear all or any thing for the sake of Christ; father, mother, wife and children, houses and lands, a good name, credit and reputation, are nothing to the believer, in comparison of Christ, which he cheerfully quits when they stand in competition with him; nay, things that are the most affrightful in nature, cannot scare him from Christ, nor separate him from the love of him; such as tribulation, distress, persecution, famine, nakedness, peril and sword; for in all these things he is more than a conqueror, through Christ that has loved him. Perfect love casts out fear; it dreads nothing, runs all risques, encounters, and surmounts all difficulties, that it may enjoy the object loved. 2. As her love, like death, had conquered all things, so she herself was conquered.

quered by it<sup>c</sup>, it had wounded her sore; so that she was, as one gasping, panting, dying, just ready to expire, unless she had the sight and enjoyment of him, whom she loved. 3. Such was her love to Christ, that death itself was nothing to her, so that she might but win Christ, and be found in him. The book of martyrs furnishes us with many instances of those bold, daring and heroic lovers, who loved not their lives unto the death, for the sake of Jesus; the most exquisite torments and most cruel deaths they have been put to, have rather inflamed, than lessened their love to Christ; so that their love to him has not only been as strong, but even stronger than death. 4. Her meaning may be, that love had so captivated her, and work'd so powerfully in her, that she was as a dead carcass, that might be moved and drawn by him whithersoever he pleased; the love of Christ constrained her to live to him, and not to herself; for love, as one<sup>d</sup> expresses it, is a kind of a civil death: Lovers rather live at the will and pleasure of others whom they love, than at their own; and so the church did here, for a frown or an angry look, or word from Christ, was as death unto her.

2dly, She says, that her jealousy was cruel as the grave: By which may be meant, 1. Jealousy of Christ's love unto her, either as it intends the height of love, love at its ἀκμή; or else that evil groundless suspicion of not enjoying another's love, or of having a rival in it, which Solomon calls, Prov. vi. 34, 35. the rage of a man; and may be said to be cruel as the grave; for such an one, he will not spare in the day of vengeance: He will not regard any ransom; neither will he rest content, though thou givest many gifts. Now if jealousy is taken in this sense here, it intends those fits of unbelief, which sometimes attend the people of God; who are often jealous of Christ's love to them, and ready to suspect his regard for them; which exceedingly tortures and afflicts them, and must not be reckoned their excellency, but their weakness; for of all people in the world they have the least reason to entertain such thoughts of him. 2. By it may be meant, the envy of the wicked against the saints, which is very great; for they would, as much as in them lies, deprive them of the common rights and liberties of mankind, as well as debar them the free enjoyment of their religious exercises; which is a great affliction to the people of God; for, Prov. xxvii. 4. wrath is cruel, and anger is outrageous: But who is able to stand before envy, or jealousy? it is the same word which is here used. In this sense the Targum or Chaldee paraphrase on our text understands it. Or, 3. By it may be meant her zeal for Christ, his gospel, cause and interest: Thus Elijah is said to be, 1 Kings xix. 10. jealous for the Lord of hosts, i. e. zealously affected to him, and concerned for his glory; which like the grave, is of a devouring and consuming nature; for, says David, Psal. cxix. 139. My zeal hath consumed me; because mine enemies have forgotten thy words.

3dly, She expresses the ardency and vehemency of her love and zeal for Christ, by comparing them to coals of fire; and it may be for these following reasons: 1. In coals of fire there is light; so there is in the church's love to and zeal for Christ; for though she believes in, and has love for an unseen Christ, yet not for an unknown Christ, for ignoti nulla cupido; her zeal zeal is not a blind, misguided zeal, but is according to knowledge. 2. In coals of fire there is heat as well as light: 'Tis true, sometimes the love of God's people waxeth cold, through the prevalency of corruption, and the cares of the world; it is like coals of fire covered with ashes, which seem to have no life nor heat in them; but then at other times it is rekindled, and re-inflamed by the spirit, either under the hearing of the word, or in meditation upon the glory of Christ's person, love and grace; My heart, says David, Psal. xxxix. 3. was hot within me, while I was musing, the fire burned: Then spake I with my tongue. Nothing sooner raises it into a flame than fellowship and communion with Christ Jesus, agreeable to what the disciples said to one another, Luke xxiv. 32. Did not our hearts burn within us, while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the scriptures? Again, though they are sometimes cold, lukewarm and indifferent in their frames, yet at other times they are servent in spirit, serving the Lord. 3. Fire is insatiable; it is one of those four things which say not, it is enough, Prov. xxx. 16. so is love, for it would always have more of Christ; it is never satisfied with communion with him, but like the horseleech, at the vein, continually crying, Give, give: And for the same reason love is compared to death, and jealousy to the grave, in the preceding sentences. See Hab. ii. 5.

Moreover, these coals of fire are said to have a most vehement flame; or as it is in the Hebrew text, the flame of Jah, or Jehovah: By which is meant, either, (1.) An exceeding great or most vehement flame, as our translators have well rendered it; for when the Hebrews would express the superlative degree, they sometimes use some one or other of the names of God; as mountains of God, and cedars of God, for most high mountains, and most excellent cedars. Or, (2.) It may mean a flame that is kindled by the Lord; for it is by the spirit of the Lord, who is compared to fire in scripture, that this flame of love is first kindled in our souls. Or, (3.) It may be in allusion to the fire upon the altar of burnt offerings, which was always kept alive, and so a fit emblem of love, which is of an abiding nature; see Lev. vi. 12. and ix. 24. and can never be extinguished, as is expressed in the following words.

Ver. 7. Many waters cannot quench love, neither can the floods drown it: If a man would give all the substance of his house for love, it would utterly be contemned.

IN these words are some further commendations of love; which,

- I. Is represented as inextinguishable and insuperable; Many waters cannot quench it, neither can the floods drown it.
- II. As exceeding valuable and inestimable; If a man would give all the substance of his house for it, it would utterly be contemned. Which may be understood, either of Christ's love to his church, or of the church's love to Christ; for as these words stand connected with the former, and are spoken by the same person, they must be interpreted the same way: and

I shall first consider them as they may be expressive of the excellency of Christ's love; Which,

1. Is inextinguishable and insuperable; it cannot be quenched by many waters, nor drowned by all the floods.

1st, Of sin and corruption, which have overflowed all human nature; for all have sinned and come short of the glory of God. Sin, like a mighty torrent, or rather inundation, has entered into the world, and brought death along with it, upon all the posterity of Adam; it has drowned them in destruction and perdition, as all burlful and foolish lusts do. Now the elect of God themselves are not exempted from this universal deluge; but though these waters of sin have come into their souls, and over-run all the powers and faculties thereof; yet they have not extinguished Christ's love towards them; nor in the least alienated his affections from them. It is true, when he first loved them, he saw them in all that glory and perfection which his father designed to bring them to, and which they will appear in, in another world; yet when the great council was held concerning their redemption, they were presented to him as plunged into the depths of sin and misery, which was so far from setting his heart against them, that it rather moved his pity and compassion for them, and gave him an opportunity of shewing the exceeding greatness of his love towards them; for upon this he readily and cheerfully became their surety, engaged to assume their nature, lay down his life for them, and thereby satisfy law and justice in their room and stead; all which agreements were, to a tittle, made good by him, in the fulness of time, for all the elect of God, notwithstanding their after-fall in Adam, and their actual rebellion against him, as they appeared upon the stage of the world; nay, though their innumerable evils compassed him about like floods of water, and brought death and the curse upon him; these being imputed to him, and laid upon him by his father, and with which, standing charged by divine justice, he suffered to the uttermost that they deserved; yet his love continued the same towards his people; for having loved his own, which were in the world, he loved them to the end, John xiii. 1. For,

2<sup>dly</sup>, By these waters and floods, may be meant the several afflictions and sufferings which Christ underwent for the sins of his own people, by which they are express'd, Psal. lxi. 1, 2. where Christ is introduced thus speaking, Save me, O God, for the waters are come in unto my soul. I sink in deep mire, where there is no standing: I am come into deep waters, where the floods overflow me. Hence it is that his sufferings are called a baptism, in Luke xii. 50. under which may be comprehended these following things: 1. The floods of ungodly men, which compassed him about; some of which reviled him, others spit upon him, others buffeted him, others crucified him, and pierced his hands, feet and side; yet his love to his people remained firm and unconquerable. Nay, though the whole infernal posse of devils was let loose upon him, and exercised all their rage and cunning; yet as neither life nor death, i. e. all his sufferings, both in life and death, could separate his people from his love, so neither could angels, wicked angels, nor principalities and powers. 2. Floods of reproaches were poured into his bosom on the account of his birth, parentage and education, his publick ministry, the miracles which he wrought, and and the free, courteous and affable conversation he used with sinners : He was spit upon in Pilate's hall, and mocked at when upon the cross in the utmost misery ; yet he bore all this contradiction of sinners against himself, with an uncommon patience, despising all the shame that attended these reproaches, for the joy that was set before him, of having all his people with him in glory. 3. The vials of his father's wrath were also poured forth upon him ; for though as God's son he was always the object of his love, yet as the sinners surety, suffering in their room and stead ; he was cast off and abhorred ; for God was wroth with his anointed or Messiah ; terrors took hold on him as waters ; when only some few drops of divine wrath fell upon him, he began to be sore amazed, and to be very heavy ; his soul became exceeding sorrowful unto death ; his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground ; then was it that the waters began to come into his soul, which kept flowing in until the measure was quite filled up ; yet all these waters and floods could not quench or drown his love towards his people ; his affections to them, as well as his regard to his father's will in their salvation, continued the same ; as appears from those words of his to his father, in the midst of his agony, not my will, but thine be done. 4. All the sorrows and sufferings of Christ, from his cradle to his cross, may be included herein ; for his whole life was one continued series of suffering, which ended in an accursed and ignominious death, to which he voluntarily submitted ; that so his people might be set free by justice, and delivered from death and condemnation.

3dly, As the love of Christ cannot be extinguished and overcome by all the waters, and all the floods of sin and corruption in them, nor by all the sorrows and sufferings which he has underwent in his own person, for their sins ; so neither can it, by all the water-floods and billows of sufferings and afflictions which pass over his members ; these indeed make them appear mean and abject in the eye of the world, and render them the object of their scorn and contempt : Yet nevertheless, though the sun of persecution has looked upon them, and made them black, they are comely in Christ's eye ; his heart is not set against them, nor his love alienated from them upon that account ; for when they pass through such waters, he will be with them ; nay, he chuses, approves of, and delights in them, when in the furnace of affliction, and will purify them thereby : So that though they have lain among the pots, and are become black and sooty ; yet they shall be as the wings of a dove, covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold, Psal. lxxviii. 13.

II. This love of Christ to his church, is also exceeding valuable and inestimable : If a man would give all the substance of his house for it, it would utterly be contemned. For, 1. This is not to be procured by money ; if any should offer to purchase the favour of Christ at any such rate, he would be treated with the utmost contempt, as Simon Magus was by the apostles, of whom he would have bought the gift of the Holy Ghost with money ; to whom Peter said, Acts viii. 18, 19, 20. Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money. Christ and his love are of greater value than to be obtained in such a manner ; for not only the substance of a single person's house, but even the riches of the whole world, and the most precious things in nature, are not equal to ~~them~~. See Job xxviii. 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19. Prov. viii. 11, 19. 2. Riches will not entitle men to the love and favour of Christ; he does not regard them on the account of these; though, perhaps, too many, like Haman, are apt to say, Esth. vi. 6. To whom would the king delight to do honour, more than to myself? and so trust in their wealth, and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches, to a neglect of divine providence, and concern about their immortal souls; such would do well to consider, that not many noble are called, but God hath chosen the poor of this world, whom it has pleased him that the gospel should be preached unto. 3. Riches will not procure Christ's love, favour and regard, either at the hour of death, or in the day of judgment; when he takes thee away with his stroke, i. e. of death, then a great ransom cannot deliver thee; all thy bags of money will not buy off thy life one hour, much less secure his favour to eternity; for, Will he esteem thy riches? No, nor gold, nor all the forces of strength, Job xxxvi. 19, 20. which will be much the same case at the day of judgment; for the righteous judge who will then sit upon the bench, will not be bribed, nor can his favour be procured by any such methods: Riches profit not in the day of wrath; for if a man gain the whole world, and lose his own soul, there will be no recovering it; for nothing can be given or will be taken in exchange for it. 4. Therefore the love and favour of Christ should be preferred by us to all temporal enjoyments; for if his loving kindness is better than life, then it is better than all the temporal comforts and enjoyments of it. We should not covet to have our portion here, nor boast ourselves of our wisdom, strength or riches, but glory in this, that we know the Lord, who exerciseth loving kindness in the earth. Thus much may suffice for the first sense of the words. I shall now proceed to consider them as they may be expressive of the church's love to Christ, which also is,

First, Inextinguishable and insuperable; it cannot be quenched nor drowned by many waters, or all the floods; 1. Of wicked and ungodly men, the people and nations of the world, who are frequently compared to many waters; see Isa. xvii. 12, 13. Rev. xvii. 1, 15. and so most of the Jewish writers understand them here. For the nations of the world, and the great men thereof, have not been able, either by force or flattery, by cruel edicts or fair promises, to alienate the church's love from Christ, or tempt her to desert his cause and interest. 2. It cannot be quenched nor drowned by all the waters and floods of persecutions, which wicked men, by the instigation of satan, have brought upon the people of God. Thus we read, in Rev. xii. 15. that the serpent, which is the devil, cast out of his mouth water as a flood, after the woman, which is the church, that he might cause her to be carried away of it: By which flood cast out of the serpent's mouth, must be meant, either a flood of heresies brought into the church to disturb her, and draw her off from Christ, her head, through the cunning craft of satan; or else, a flood of persecutions introduced by wicked and ungodly men, through his instigation, in order to affright, scare and turn her aside from the pure way of Christ, but all in vain; for, Rom. viii. 35, 37. Who shall separate us from the love love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. Nay, death itself, attended with the most exquisite torments and barbarous cruelties that hell can devise, cannot do it; for saints count not their lives dear to themselves, so they may but finish their course with joy, and bear a noble testimony to the gospel of the grace of God.

3. The love of believers to Christ is not quenched or drowned by all the waters and floods of affliction which God is pleased to bring upon them; they generally have a large share of them; waters of a full cup are wrung out unto them: Yet these, though they are not joyous, but grievous, do not alienate their affections from Christ, but rather fix them more strongly on him; whilst they view all their afflictions, as covenant-mercies, the effects of wisdom, love, and faithfulness, and designed for their good, profit and advantage.

4. Neither can their love be quenched or drowned by the many waters and floods of their own sins and corruptions: It is true, these are most likely to extinguish this fire and flame above all things else, and often do strike a damp upon it; for through the aboundings of iniquity, love oftentimes waxeth cold; but yet it is not quenched and drowned; there may be a leaving the first love; some degrees of heat in it may be remitted, but there is no such thing as losing the grace of love intirely; for it is an immortal seed, of a lasting, yea, of an everlasting nature.

5. Nor can it be quenched or drowned by all the waters and floods of satan's temptations; this enemy of believers oftentimes comes in like a flood upon them, by filling their souls with blasphemous thoughts, vile suggestions, and wicked insinuations, in all endeavouring to draw off their love, and alienate their affections from Christ; which he sometimes attempts by fair words, shewing them all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them, as he did Christ, and promising to give them to them, which is more than he can perform, if they will but turn their backs on Christ, and his ways; at other times, he sets before them all the hardships, difficulties, reproaches and persecutions, which they will be exposed unto, if they persist therein; and yet all these floods cannot quench nor drown their love to Christ.

Nor, 6. Can this be effected by divine desertions, which are compared to waves, billows and waterspouts, Psal. xlii. 5, 6, 7. For though these much weaken the faith, and disturb the peace of God's children, yet they do not destroy their love. Christ's absence gives much uneasiness to believers, brings much darkness upon them, and raises many doubts, fears and misgivings of heart in them; they cannot, it may be, say at such times with the church, My beloved is mine and I am his; yet they can say with her, when in the same condition with them, Saw ye him whom my soul loveth? 7. The terrors of the law, and the apprehensions of God's wrath, which believers are sometimes filled with, are set forth by waves and floods of water, in Psal. lxxxviii. 6, 7, 15, 16, 17. under which, though there may be but little faith and less joy; yet there may be much love to Christ, great longings and earnest desires after the enjoyment of his presence, as appears from the case of the Psalmist, now referred to.

8. And lastly, All the hardships, difficulties, pressures and reproaches, which may attend believers in their Christian race, are so far from destroying their love to, and alienating their affections from Christ, that they do but ~~rather~~ <sup>rather</sup> endear him the more unto them, and make heaven, and the enjoyments of Christ there the more desirable to them now, and the more welcome to them ~~hereafter~~.

Secondly, This love of believers to Christ, is exceeding valuable; for if a man would give all the substance of his house for it, it would utterly be ~~contemned~~: For, 1. This is not to be bought with money, no more than the love of Christ is; no gift nor grace of the spirit can be procured any such way. It is true, grace is compared to gold tried in the fire, which we are advised to buy of Christ; but then it is to be bought without money, and without price. 2. As this grace cannot be bought with money, so neither will it be parted with for it. A Judas, indeed, for thirty pieces of silver forsook his master, and betrayed him into his enemies hands; as Demas also deserted the apostles, and cause of Christ, having loved this present world; but these things cannot prevail upon true believers to do the like. For, 3. The offers of a man's whole estate, nay, of the riches of the Indies, or vast treasures of the whole globe, if made on terms and conditions of parting with Christ, or deserting his cause and interest, would be treated with the utmost disdain and contempt; they would utterly be contemned, or in despising they would despise it; as the words may be read from the Hebrew text. For, 4. The things of this world appear but mean in the believer's eye, who counts all things but loss and dung, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus: Nay, he is willing to part with all for Christ, and does, when called to it, take joyfully the spoiling of his goods, knowing that he has in heaven a better and a more enduring substance. 5. The sense of this clause is thus given by some; that those who spend their substance, their time, their strength, nay, their very lives, for the love they bear to God, Christ, his ways, cause and interest, are but laughed at, despised and set at nought by those who are destitute of it; which sense is favoured by the Septuagint version, which renders the words thus, If a man would give all his living away in love, or charity, in despising they would despise him. Now the constancy and insuperableness of this precious and valuable grace of love in her soul to Christ, is improved by the church to obtain the former request; set me as a seal upon thine heart, &c. for my soul is all in flames of love for thee, which cannot be extinguished by all I suffer on thy account, nor will be parted with for all that the world can give me; which love of her's discovers itself, not only in a regard to Christ, but also in a concern for others, as appears from the following words.

Ver. 8. We have a little sister; and she hath no breasts: What shall we do for our sister, in the day when she shall be spoken for?

THESE are either the words of the daughters of Jerusalem, who were concerned for the welfare of the church; or else of Christ, being solicitous for the conversion of the elect uncalled; or rather of the church, who, having in the preceding verses discovered a very strong affection to Christ, here signifies her hearty concern for the good of others, which go under the appellation of a little sister: By whom may be meant, either the unconverted elect in general; or else some new church that was to be set up in some certain age or period of time; or rather the whole Gentile church, who is called so by the Jewish church: So that they seem to be the words of the old Jewish church, signifying her affection to and concern for, the Gentile church, which was then uncalled: In which may be observed,

I. That the Jewish church asserts and owns the relation that the Gentile church stood in, both to her and Christ, at the present time; We have a little sister.

II. She describes her, 1st, By her being little. 2dly, By her having no breasts.

III. She manifests her concern for her; what shall we do for our sister in the day when she shall be spoken for?

I. The old Jewish church asserts and owns the relation, in which the Gentile church, though uncalled, stood in, both to her and Christ; We have a little sister: In which may be considered, 1st, In what sense the Gentile church is sister to the Jewish church. 2dly, How she appears to stand in the same relation to Christ. 3dly, How she could be said to be so at that present time.

1st, The Gentile church may be said to be a sister to the Jewish church, for these following reasons; 1. In a more general sense, because Jews and Gentiles are both of one and the same blood; for God hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, Acts xvii. 26. 2. On the account of their being neighbours: Thus Samaria and Sodom are said to be sisters to Jerusalem; the one the elder, the other the younger, Ezek. xvi. 46. 3. Because in a spiritual sense, those who are Christ's, whether they be Jews or Gentiles, are Abraham's seed, Gal. iii. 28, 29. 4. The elect of God, whether among the Jews or Gentiles, belong unto, and are interested in one and the same covenant of grace, Isa. xlii. 6. and xlix. 6. 5. Believers in Christ, of either race, are born of one and the same father, brought up in one and the same family, and are heirs together of the grace of life, Eph. ii. 19. and iv. 4. 6. Christ stands in the relation of an elder brother to the Gentile, as well as to the Jewish church, and therefore these two must be sisters, Rom. viii. 29. 7. The church catholic or universal, with respect to its several parts, is called a mother, and that frequently in this song; see Chap. i. 6. and iii. 4. and viii. 2. and so agreeably the parts of it, with respect to themselves, may be called sisters, being mother's children. 8. They are of the same faith and religion, as to the substance of it: It is true, there is some difference, as to the circumstantial of worship, which are now laid aside; but the true spiritual nature and object of it are the same. The old Testament-saints eat the same spiritual meat, and drank the same spiritual drink as saints do under the new. The articles of their faith are the same; for converted Gentiles believe none other things than those which Moses and the prophets did say should come, relating to Christ's person, grace, work and office.

2dly, The Gentile church is not only a sister to the Jewish church, but also to Christ: Therefore she does not say I have a little sister, but we have one; which which way of speaking, perhaps, she purposely makes use of, that she might stir up his affection and concern for her the more, she being as much related to him as she was herself. And it may be observed, that Christ is not ashamed to own his church, whether of the Jewish or Gentile race, ~~and~~ standing in this relation to him; nay, rather seems to take pleasure in viewing her under this consideration, as appears from his frequent use of it, in Chap. iv. 9, 10. and v. 1, 2. where this character is more largely opened.

3dly, There remains a difficulty in this clause to be removed, and that is, how the Gentile church could be said before calling to stand in the relation of a sister either to Christ or to the Jewish church; for she expresses herself in the present tense, we have a little sister; which difficulty will be removed, if we consider these following things, 1. She was so in divine predestination; just as the elect uncalled are said to be Christ's sheep before conversion, John x. 16. Other sheep I have which are not of this fold, Them also I must bring in. By which are particularly meant the Gentiles, who were sheep, though wandering, though not yet brought in by grace, nor folded in a church-state. The same are called the children of God before conversion, John xi. 52. though scattered abroad, and not openly and visibly appearing to be fellow-citizens of the saints, and of the household of God. For though they are not in the possession of adopting grace, yet they are predestinated unto the adoption of children; on the account of which they may truly be said to be related to the saints, who are called by grace. 2. The Gentile church was brought into this relation in the everlasting covenant, in which Christ not only stood as an elder brother and glorious representative to both churches, but also espoused them both to himself; so that they stood in the relations of sister and spouse to him, and of sisters one to another. Thus Christ is said to be the husband of the Gentile church, before her calling and conversion, Isa. liv. 5. Thy maker is thine husband, the Lord of hosts is his name. 3. The calling of the Gentiles being sure and certain in God's promise, all whose promises are yea and Amen, in Christ, it is represented as if it was already done; as things only promised and prophesied of, though not yet fulfilled, frequently are in scripture. See Isa. ix. 6. and liii. 3, 4, 5. 4. The Gentile church was a sister in the faith of the Jewish church, who viewed her future calling, as present; which agrees with the nature of faith, defined by the apostle, Heb. xi. 1. to be the substance of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not seen.

II. She describes this sister of her's; 1st, By her littleness. 2dly, By her having no breasts.

1st, She calls her a little sister: So the Gentile church was to the Jewish church, 1. In respect of age, being a younger sister. The Jewish church was first called, and then the Gentile, which is very fully and aptly expressed in the parable of the two sons, the elder and the younger, as is thought by some, Luke xv. 12, 25. the elder signifying the Jewish church at that time, which murmured at the grace of God bestowed upon the Gentiles; the younger, the Gentiles, who had lived in all manner of sin and wickedness, and was disregarded of God, but was now embraced with all demonstrations of joy, affection, and tenderness. 2. She is called so as being in some respects, less honourable than the Jewish church; Who are Israelites, the apostle apostle says, Rom. ix. 4, 5. and iii. 1, 2. to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises, Whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came: Therefore, as he says, the Jew has the advantage of the Gentile, and that much every way, but chiefly, because to them were committed the oracles of God. 3. The Jewish church calling the Gentile church a little sister, may express her pity and compassion towards her, being like a young and tender infant, that is in a forlorn and helpless condition; see Ezek. xvi. 4, 5. 4. She may be called so with regard to her number of converts, either at that time, which were very few, few profelytes being then made among the Gentiles of the Jewish religion; or else, at the time when the gospel first came among them; for this yet was every where spoken against; and indeed, the whole number of Christ's sheep, either among Jews or Gentiles, are but a little flock, when compared with the world. 5. She was then more especially, as also at her first calling, but little in spiritual stature; her light, knowledge and faith, being but small, not having as yet arrived to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ, she was to grow up unto.

2dly, She says that she has no breasts, i. e. 1. She was not arrived to years of ripeness; she was not marriageable; her breasts were not fashioned, as in Ezek. xvi. 7. The time of her open espousal to Christ, by the preaching of the gospel was not yet come. I call it the time of her open espousal to him; for she, as well as the Jewish church, her elder sister, was secretly espoused to Christ in the everlasting covenant; see Isa. liv. 5. But she was not yet espoused to him in that sense in which the apostle Paul says, 2 Cor. xi. 2. of the Corinthian, which was a Gentile church, I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you a chaste virgin to Christ: The time fixed upon for it, in ancient council, not being yet come. 2. She had no breasts, i. e. at this time she had no ministers nor ordinances, from whence she might suck and be satisfied, with the sincere milk of the word. Moreover, it was some time after the gospel came among the Gentiles, that they had a settled ministry, which was fixed by the apostles, who ordained elders in every city.

III. The Jewish church signifies her very great concern for the Gentile church, being thus little, and without breasts, saying, What shall we do, or shall be done for our sister? Which shews, 1. That this little sister was in a state of nature, uncalled, unconverted, poor, miserable, forlorn and helpless. 2. That the Jewish church was concerned for her, was moved with pity and compassion towards her, and would gladly contribute all she could, towards her everlasting salvation; as the apostle Paul was for his unconverted kinsmen and relations, Rom. ix. 1, 2, 3. 3. That she not only wished her well, but was willing to do any thing for her that lay in her power; though she seems, in some measure, to be at a loss what to do; and, indeed, the converted Jews were very much assisting to the spreading of the gospel among the Gentiles. They were Jews who first carried the gospel into the Gentile world; for it was proper that out of Zion should go forth the law or doctrine, and the word of the Lord out of Jerusalem; and when tidings of the Gentiles reception of the gospel came to the ears of the church at Jerusalem, they sent forth others also on the same errand; nay, supplied supplied them with money, that so they might not be burdensome to the Gentiles, nor give them an occasion to reproach the gospel; for the fund or stock, which was raised at Jerusalem, by the believing Jews, who knew that their land would be laid waste, and their city destroy'd in a little time, and therefore sold their lands and possessions, and put the money into the apostles hands; this, I say, seems to be designed, not only for their own use, but for the service of God in spreading the gospel among the Gentiles; who when they had churches settled among them, upon that consideration were called upon to make collections for these poor saints at Jerusalem.

4. She is not forgetful of the main and principal agent in this work, who is Christ; therefore she says, what shall we do. She was willing to do what she could; but she knew that all her endeavours would be of little significancy, without his agency and blessing: She could send her ministers; but if Christ did not go along with them, and bless them, they would meet but with little success; as it is said, Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man? I have planted, says Paul, Apollos watered, but God gave the increase, 1 Cor. iii. 5, 6.

The time that the Jewish church had in view, and is concerned what should be done for her then, is the day when she shall be spoken for, or with: By which may be meant, either, 1. The time of the first preaching of the gospel among them, which, to them, was the accepted time and day of salvation; when Christ, by his ministers spoke to and for them, wooed and beseeched them, treated and communed with them, as David with Abigail, about openly espousing them before the world. It seems to be an allusion to persons treating either with virgins themselves, or with their parents<sup>f</sup>, about their marriage. Or, 2. It may refer to the fame that was spread abroad of the conversion of the Gentiles: When it was first effected it made a great noise in the world. The faith of a single church, the church at Rome, was spoken of throughout the whole world. Thus this clause may be rendered<sup>g</sup>, In the day when she shall be spoken of, i. e. when her fame shall be spread far and near; and some will say one thing of her, and some another. Now the Jewish church seems to be concerned how she would behave herself under all this noise and talk about her. Or else, 3. The words may be rendered<sup>h</sup>, When she shall be spoken against. This has been the common lot of God's children: This sect, as it is called, has been in all ages, and in all places, spoken against; and no wonder, for Christ himself is set for a sign which shall be spoken against. Now the old church might be concerned for this new church of the Gentiles, that she might be able to stand firm and constant to her profession, notwithstanding all the revilings, reproaches and persecutions of men. Or, 4. They may be read thus<sup>i</sup>, When she shall be spoken to; i. e. When the great men of the world, as Nero, and other heathen emperors shall call her before them, and tempt her, either by fair words, or severe menaces, to desert the faith of Christ. O that she might stand fast then, as if the church should say, and not be ~~moved~~ away from the hope of the gospel; neither be frightened by their threatenings, nor deluded by their promises. She was jealous of her, as the apostle Paul was of the Corinthian church, lest she should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ. Now this should teach us in general, from the example of the Jewish church here, to be concerned for all the elect of God uncalled, and particularly for those among the Jews; we should earnestly pray for them, and use all proper means and methods to bring them to the knowledge of Christ. The time is coming when they shall be spoken for, shall be called by grace, and openly espoused to Christ; and seeing they were so much concerned for us, when we were little, and had no breasts, we should be as much concerned for them, they being now in the same case and circumstances.

Ver. 9. *If she be a wall, we will build upon her a palace of silver :
And if she be a door, we will enclose her with boards of cedar.*

THESE are the words of Christ in answer to the solicitous concern of the old Jewish church for her little sister, the Gentile, declaring what should be done for her on such and such considerations.

- I. If, or seeing she is a wall, we will build upon her a palace of silver.
- II. And if she be a door, we will enclose her with boards of cedar : All which is expressive of what strength and ornament should be added to her, and what grace and glory should be conferred upon her.

I. He promises, that if or seeing she was a wall; i. e. well walled, built upon a sure foundation, and firmly established in her faith in, and love to Christ, a palace or tower of silver should be built upon her; by which may be meant, either the scriptures of truth, with which she should be furnished; which, for their impregnableness and store of spiritual armour that is in them, may be compared to towers; and for their purity, richness and excellency, to silver ones: Or else, the ministers of the gospel may be intended, who are set for the defence of it; or this phrase may in general signify, that she should be fortified and put into a posture of defence against all her enemies, having on the πανοπλία, or whole armour of God. Walled towns and cities, to which the allusion is here made, usually have towers built upon the walls thereof: So Zion is said to have such, Psal. xlviii. 12, 13. which also this little sister, the Gentile church, should not be without. Though the word may as well be rendered, a palace; and signifies that she should be built up an habitation for Father, Son, and Spirit, who would come and make their abode with her; and being such noble and uncommon guests, a silver palace must be erected for them. The persons who were to do this work, are either the Jewish church with her ministers, as instruments, and Christ as the principal agent; for Psal. cxxviii. 1. Except the Lord build the house, they labour in vain that build it. Or else, by the we are intended the blessed Trinity, as in Chap. i.

11. who were all jointly concerned in raising up a church-state in the Gentile world. From the whole may be observed, 1. That he that begins the good work, whether it relates to a particular person, or to a church, must and will finish it: The same hands which lay the foundations must raise up the superstructure, and compleat the whole building, by bringing in the head-stones with shoutings, crying, grace, grace unto it. 2. This verifies the saying of our Lord, Mat. xxv. 20. that unto every one that bath shall be given, and he shall have abundance. Grace is usually but very small at first; but it afterwards increases much; frequently from small beginnings great things arise. This Gentile church, at first had but a very small appearance of a building; a foundation was just laid, and a side-wall erected, but in a short time, a noble structure, a silver palace for God is built up.

II. Christ also assures her, that if she was a door, she should be inclosed with boards of cedar. The meaning of which may be either, 1. If the Gentiles had the door of the gospel opened among them, as they had in many places, see Acts xiv. 27. 1 Cor. xvi. 8, 9. 2 Cor. ii. 12. this should be succeeded for the building up of an holy temple for the Lord; which should be of such ornament and strength, so well fenced and inclosed with the grace and power of Christ, that it should not be in the power of all their enemies to deface or demolish it. Or, 2. If the door of their hearts was opened to Christ, as Lydia's was, Acts xvi. 14. so as to receive and let in this king of glory, with his numerous train of graces, then she should be adorned and beautified with a larger measure of them. Or, 3. If when they came into a church-state, the door was set open, that so the righteous nation, which keepeth truth, may enter in, and yet at the same time careful to exclude others; this should make much for their honour, comfort, safety and security. Or, 4. This phrase is expressive of the building being compleated, but only it wanted some further decorations and ornaments, which it should not be long without. So the setting up of gates or doors, to towns or houses, seems to signify. See Neb. iii. Though, 5. It seems rather to intend the mean, low and weak state and condition the Gentile church was first in, when there was but very little appearance of a building: There was only as it were a door set up, which afterwards grew up to be a magnificent and stately temple, built up of cedar boards of the wood of Lebanon, of which Solomon's temple was made, and to which an allusion here seems to be. But, 6. Some have thought that these words carry in them some intimations of her inconstancy to Christ, and the wandering of her affections after other lovers; as also the methods which Christ would take to restrain and prevent her. If she be a door, i. e. if she will not keep at home, but will gad abroad, and go in and out at pleasure, we will use some methods to keep her in; we will inclose her with boards of cedar; or as it is express'd, in Hos. ii. 7. I will bedge up thy way with thorns, and make a wall, that she shall not find her paths. Though, 7. The meaning rather seems to be, that however mean and abject she might appear to be, even as a door, yet she should be adorned with grace here, and enjoy glory hereafter; both which, for their perpetuity and incorruptibleness, may be compared to cedar boards. Besides, the safety and security of the church in this present state, her walls being salvation, and her gates praise, may be here intended; as well as the delights and pleasures of the heavenly state, signified by the fragrant cedar, which she should be, e'er long, inclosed and surrounded with.

Ver. 10. I am a wall, and my breasts like towers : Then was I in his eyes, as one that found favour.

THESE are either the words of the Jewish church, asserting herself to be what her little sister was not, viz. that she was a wall well fenced, and firmly established, was indulged with ordinances, and blessed with ministers ; whilst the Gentiles lay open, were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world, Eph. ii, 12. as also confirming what Christ had said in the former verse, as well as assuring her little sister, the Gentile church, that she should also find favour in Christ's eyes, when she came into the same state and condition ; unless we should rather chuse to consider them as expressing that additional glory, peace and prosperity, which should accrue to the church, by the calling of the Gentiles ; which would not be inconsiderable, and no small indication of her finding favour or peace in Christ's eyes, who would then extend peace to her like a river, and the glory of the Gentiles like a flowing stream. Though I rather think, that they are the words of the little sister herself, the Gentile church, either signifying her desire to be in such a well-settled state and condition ; O that I was a wall, &c. or else asserting herself to be in such a case, which Christ had intimated in the former verse.

I. she asserts herself to be a wall.

II. That her breasts were like towers. And,

III. Being so, was, in his eyes, as one that found favour.

I. She asserts herself to be a wall, i. e. 1. Well walled : God himself is a wall of fire about his people ; Christ's salvation is appointed for walls and bulwarks to them ; nay, faithful ministers and Christian magistrates, may, in some sense, be said to be so, being placed for the protection and defence of the church. 2. She is one of those two walls, to which Christ is the corner stone, as he is called, Eph. ii. 20. the Jewish church is one, and the Gentile the other, which both meet and make up one building in Christ, the middle wall of partition being broken down. 3. She is a wall built up of lively stones, cemented together in love. The elect of God, by nature, lie in the same quarry, are took out of the same pit, and hewn from the same rock, as others are ; but being separated from them, by distinguishing and efficacious grace, are hewn, and fitted for the building by the spirit of God, where they are laid by him, and knit together in the bond of love. 4. She was firmly built on Christ the foundation, which God has laid in Zion, and is sure, firm and lasting, against which the gates of hell can never prevail ; and which will be sufficient to bear up and support the church, and all believers, who lay the whole stress of their persons, and the salvation of them upon it. 5. She was well established in the doctrine of faith : The Gentiles received the gospel with all readiness of mind, when the Jews rejected it ; and though it was in much affliction, yet it was with much joy in the Holy Ghost ; and when they once got it, they could not be moved away from it, by all the frowns and flatteries, promises and threatenings of men; which, to their adversaries, was an evident token of perdition, but to them, of salvation, and that of God. So the Targum and R. Sol. Jarchi interpret these words of the steadfastness of the congregation of Israel, in the religion and laws of God. 6. She was constant and immovable in her love to Christ: She was a wall, she was proof against all temptations and insinuations, and not a door that easily let into her affections every one that knock'd. She loved Christ dearly, and kept her love inviolate and pure for him; nothing could separate her from it; the greatest pleasures and profits of life could not tempt her to desert him, nor the most dreadful sufferings and torments deter her from expressing her affections to him. She was like a wall that stood invincible and impregnable.

II. She says, that her breasts were like towers, which may in general denote her ripeness for marriage; her breasts were fashioned, were round and plump, and rose up high like towers; she was now marriageable, the time of her being presented as a chaste virgin to Christ, and of her open espousals to him, was come. Or else more particularly,

1st, By her breasts may be meant the ministers of the gospel; who, like nurses, 1 Thess. ii. 7. give the breast to new born babes, and feed them with the sincere milk of the word; and like towers are set for the defence of the gospel; such ministers the first church among the Gentiles had, whose ministry was not only edifying and nourishing, but they themselves also were faithful, zealous and courageous in the discharge thereof; and could not be moved from their station, nor be made to desist from their work, by all the violence and oppression of men. Or else,

2<sup>dly</sup>, By these breasts may be meant the two Testaments, the Old and the New, which are both full of the milk of excellent doctrines and precious promises, which are all useful for the comfort, edification and instruction of God's people; and from whence, as from towers, they may be supplied with all needful armour, to repel satan's temptations, refute erroneous doctrines, and defend the gospel; and though efforts have been made by satan and his emissaries to remove them out of the world, yet they still remain impregnable and invincible. Now with these breasts the Gentile church is blessed.

3<sup>dly</sup>, The two ordinances of baptism, and the Lord's-supper, may be intended, which were peculiar to the church, under the New Testament-dispensation; which are as breasts of consolation to believers, especially when they have the presence of Christ in them, and his love at the same time manifested to them; these are like towers, have stood firm and immovable against all the efforts of men, to change, deface, subvert and abolish them. The Jews interpret the wall of the congregation of Israel, and the breasts as towers of the synagogues and schools; also the former of the law, and the latter of the scholars.

III. Being so, she says, she was in his eyes, as one that found favour; which may either respect,

1st, The time of her becoming a wall, and having breasts like towers; then was I, or from the time that I was in his eyes, as one that found favour or peace; i. e. I became a wall, was firmly built on Christ, established in the doctrine doctrine of faith, and formed into a church-state; had breasts, a settled ministry and gospel-ordinances, which have continued with me ever since I found peace with Christ, which he made for me, by the blood of his cross. Now this is certainly matter of fact, that from the time that Christ became our peace, Eph. ii. 14. the ceremonial law, which is there called the middle wall of partition, which stood between Jew and Gentile, was removed, so that they both coalesced in one church-state, ver. 14, 15, 16. and equally shared in all gospel-ordinances and privileges, ver. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, from that time the Gentile church began to be a church in gospel-order. Or else, 2dly, It may respect the time of the open manifestation of Christ's love, which was when she became a wall, and had breasts. It is true he loved her before, even from eternity, with an everlasting love; but that was hidden and secret both to herself and others; but now her breasts are fashioned; he look'd upon her, and her time is the time of love; he openly espouses her to himself, and lets all the world know, as well as herself, what favour she found in his sight; and it manifestly appears, that she was sensible of it; and by expressing it, would signify, 1. That her being a wall, and having breasts, were instances of his kindness to her; and indeed it is an unspeakable mercy to have a gospel-ministry, and gospel-ordinances; Psal. cxlvii. 19, 20. He shewed his word unto Jacob: His statutes and his judgments unto Israel. He hath not dealt so with any nation: And as for his judgments they have not known them; praise ye the Lord. If it was so great a favour for the people of Israel to have the law, on the account of which they were called a great nation; what an instance of surprizing and distinguishing grace is it, that we Gentiles should have the gospel and the ordinances thereof! The church here esteemed it a favour, and so should we. 2. She ascribes all these blessings and privileges which she was possessed of, to his grace and favour. Was she a wall? it was owing to him; and had she breasts? she acknowledges it as an instance of his regard to her, and was ready to say with the apostle, 1 Cor. xv. 10. By the grace of God I am what I am. An excellent example for us to follow. 3. This phrase may be expressive of her gracious acceptance with Christ. Thus Noah is said to have found grace in the eyes of the Lord, Gen. vi. 8. The Gentiles, who were profelyted to the Jewish religion, before the coming of Christ in the flesh, were like Esther, standing in the court alone, for they might not worship with the Jews; whom when Christ looked upon, they obtained favour in his sight; and he held out the golden scepter of his grace, and admitted them to nearer communion with him; built them into a church-state, furnished them with gospel-ordinances, and graciously accepted both them and their services; he took pleasure in these his people, and beautified the meek with salvation. 4. The enjoyment of the presence of God and Christ is a very considerable instance and evidence of finding favour in their eyes. Moses desired to be ascertained of his having found grace in God's sight, by the enjoyment of this blessing, Exod. xxxiii. 15, 16. which he was graciously indulged with; and perhaps, it is this which the church here had particularly in view; and a great mercy it was, to have ordinances, and the presence of Christ along with them, than which nothing can be more desirable and delightful. 5. The words may be rendered then was I in his eye, as one that found peace; meaning that inward peace of conscience, and tranquillity of mind, which passeth all understanding, which she enjoy'd in the midst of all her tribulations and sufferings for Christ; which he only gives, and which the world cannot take away; for if he giveth quietness, who then can make trouble? 6. This word favour or peace, may comprehend all those spiritual blessings, wherewith she was blessed in Christ Jesus; such as peace, reconciliation, justification, pardon of sin, sanctification, adoption, &c. for he's a sun and shield, he will give grace and glory: No good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly, Psal. lxxxiv. 11. 7. The manifestation of Christ's love, which is the greatest blessing in life, may be here intended: Hence says the Psalmist, Psal. cvi. 4. Remember me, O Lord, with the favour that thou bearest unto thy people; and no wonder that he should be so desirous of it; for in his favour is life, but not to enjoy it is death; O how miserable will those be to all eternity, in whom that scripture will be verified, Isa. xxvii. 11. He that made them, will not have mercy on them; and he that formed them, will shew them no favour!

Ver. 11. Solomon had a vineyard at Baal Hamon; he let out the vineyard unto keepers: Every one for the fruit thereof was to bring a thousand pieces of silver.

IN these words the little sister goes on to give an account of the success of the gospel, the planting of churches, and establishment of Christ's interest in the Gentile world, together with the advantages which accrued to Christ thereby, under the metaphor of a vineyard, and the fruit thereof; where we have to consider,

- I. The vineyard itself, and what is intended by it.
- II. The owner of it, who is Solomon.
- III. The place of its situation, at Baal Hamon.
- IV. The letting of it out to keepers, and who are meant by them.
- V. The price it was let at, or the rent which they were to bring in; Every one for the fruit thereof was to bring a thousand pieces of silver.

I. It will be proper to consider what is meant by this vineyard; which, I think, is to be understood of the church of Christ; the Israelitish nation, and the church of God therein sometimes bear this name; see Psal. lxxx. 8, 9, 14, 15. Isa. v. 1, 7. And 'tis very usual with Christ, to express the new Testament church-state by the same metaphor; see Mat. xx. 1. and xxi. 33. which was thus prophesied of by Isaiah, Chap. xxvii. 2. In that day, sing ye unto her, a vineyard of red wine. Now the church of Christ may be compared to a vineyard for these following reasons; 1. A vineyard is a spot of ground separated and distinguished from others. So is the church of Christ from the rest of the world, by electing, redeeming and efficacious grace: Believers are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation; and being so, are a peculiar people: They are fenced about with sovereign grace, whereby they are made to differ from others. 2. A vineyard is a spot of ground set with plants of various sorts, and especially vines: 'Tis manifest from Chap. i. 14. and vii. 12. that it was usual to set other plants in vineyards besides vines; for which, see also Luke xiii. 6. In the vineyard, the church, stands in the first place Christ, the true and most noble vine; and next to him true believers, who are there planted by him, engrafted on him, and grow up in him. Now these are of various sorts, of different growths and fruitfulness; some are larger and more fruitful than others, but are all the planting of the Lord, that he might be glorified. But besides these, there are some who are only externally planted here, and grow up only in a mere outward profession; who are not planted by Christ's heavenly father, and therefore shall be rooted up, because instead of bringing forth right fruit, they bring forth wild grapes. 3. Vineyards are valuable to the owners of them; one part of their wealth and riches consisting therein. The church of Christ is highly esteemed of by him, it being his inheritance, his portion, and wherein great part of his riches, as mediator, lies; his Father gave it to him, and he values it upon that account; as Naboth did his vineyard, because it was the inheritance of his fathers, and therefore would not part with it to Ahab, upon any consideration whatever. Moreover, Christ's esteem for his vineyard, the church, is farther manifest from the great price which he gave for it, which was his own blood, as also from the exceeding great care he takes of it. 4. A vineyard is a very fruitful spot: So is the church of Christ, and all believers, who are filled with the fruits of righteousness by Jesus Christ, who is the true vine, on whom they are engrafted, and the green fir tree, from whom their fruit is found. All that are planted in the house of the Lord, being watered by divine grace, flourish in the courts of our God, and bring forth fruit whereby he is glorified. 5. Vineyards are delightful and pleasant: Thus among the several methods which Solomon took to gratify and indulge himself in pleasure, this was one, he planted himself vineyards, Eccles. ii. 4. The church is as a delightful vineyard to Christ, where he delights to walk, and observe how his several plants grow and thrive; for this purpose he often goes down into it, as in Chap. vi. 11. and the church knowing how much pleasure he takes therein, invites him to it, in chap. vii. 12. 6. Vineyards are not only delightful, but also profitable; there's much fruit produced by them, to the advantage of the owners thereof: So Christ has much fruit from his vineyard, as appears from this and the following verse, which makes for the advancement of his honour and glory in the world; for as all their fruit comes by him, and from him, so all the glory redounds unto him; and his glory is great in every branch of their salvation. 7. Vineyards are exposed to beasts of prey, which often break in, and do much damage to them: The church of Christ is not only exposed to the beast out of the wood, the openly profane world, which often makes great havock of it, by its oppressions and persecutions, but also to those foxes, false teachers, hereticks, who cunningly and secretly bring in their pernicious doctrines, to the great annoyance and disturbance of the peace, comfort, and faith of God's people; hence it is said in Chap. ii. 15. take us the foxes, the little foxes, that spoil the

the vines ; for our vines have tender grapes. 8. A great deal of care must be used in promoting the fruitfulness of vineyards ; the vines must be watered, pruned, and propped up, as well as the stones gathered out, and a fence set about them, see Isai. v. 2. Christ does all this, and much more to his vineyard ; he waters it every moment with his grace, prunes and lops off the unfruitful branches, supports the weak and tender vines with his almighty power, gathers out all things that offend, and fences it about with divine favours ; in short, acts the whole faithful part of a vine-dresser to it.

II. The owner of this vineyard is Solomon, by whom the Messiah is meant ; for it may be truly said, that a greater than Solomon is here. Christ bears this name, because Solomon was an eminent type of him, as has been shewn on Chap. iii. 7. he now is the owner of this vineyard ; it is his, 1. By choice : He has pitched upon this spot of ground, and separated it from all others for his use and service. 2. By his Father's gift : He asked it of his Father, and he gave it him ; thine they were, says he, and thou gavest them me, John xvii. 6. 3. By purchase : He has bought this vineyard with his own blood, Acts xx. 28. 4. It is of his own planting : All the vines in it are of his setting, and are made fruitful by him. 5. He takes the whole care of it, and has the advantage of the fruit thereof.

III. The situation of this vineyard, at Baal Hamon, perhaps the same with Baal Gad in the valley of Lebanon, Josh. xi. 17. since they are of the same signification, the master of a multitude, or of a troop. By which may be meant, either, 1. The city of Jerusalem ; which may be called Baal Hamon, or the master of a multitude, because it was a very populous city, as it is said in Lam. i. 1. How doth the city sit solitary, that was full of people ? Where was the principal seat of the Jewish church-state ; the letting out of which, to keepers, the priests and Levites, may seem to suit well with the legal and mercenary spirit, which much attended the old testament-dispensation. Though, 2. I rather think the Gentile world is here intended ; among the nations of which Christ has a gospel-Church planted ; whereby the promise is fulfilled to Abraham, that he should be a father of many nations, which his name signified, and is of much the same import with this in our text ; Unless, 3. It should be thought only to intend in general, the fruitfulness of the soil in which Christ's vineyard was planted ; at Baal Hamon, <sup>b</sup> the Lord or Master of a multitude, i. e. where a multitude of vines grow. Thus 'tis said in Isai. v. 1. my well beloved hath a vineyard in a very fruitful hill ; the church of Christ, and so all believers, are planted in a very fruitful soil, being rooted and built up in Christ, and watered with the continual dews of divine grace ; the believer is like to a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season, his leaf also shall not wither, and whatsoever he doth shall prosper, Psal. i. 3.

IV. The letting out of this vineyard to keepers is next to be enquired into. By the keepers we are to understand the ministers of the gospel, who have their several parts, and different employments assigned them in this vineyard of Christ. 1. The business of some of them is to plant ; this work the apostle Paul was much concerned in ; I have planted, says he, 1 Cor. iii<sup>16</sup>, 8.

and indeed it is hard to say how many churches, and how many souls in those churches were planted by him; and especially at Baal Hamon, in the Gentile world, with whom he was chiefly concerned. 2. Others are employed in watering this vineyard, as was Apollos, of whom Paul says, I have planted, Apollos watered. Some ministers are more useful for edification than conversion; their ministry succeeds most for the watering of Christ's plants, for promoting the comfort and faith of those who are already planted; their doctrine drops as the rain, and their speech distils as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herb, and as the showers upon the grass, Deut. xxxii. 2. so that they become fruitful. 3. The work of others is to prune the vines; they have an excellent talent at reproof, both on the account of erroneous doctrines, and immoral practices; they can give gentle admonitions where the case only requires them, and rebuke with sharpness, cut deeper, where there is a necessity for it, not being afraid of the faces of any, but having the good of Christ's vineyard at heart; these excel in that branch of their office, which concerns the discipline of the church. 4. Others are useful in supporting and upholding weak believers; who, like vines, stand in need of it, which they do, by putting into their hands the staff of the promises, and refreshing them with the reviving cordials of gospel-doctrines. 5. The employment of others is to protect and defend; their business is chiefly to take the foxes, to refute heresies, and defend the doctrines of grace, and preserve the church from all innovations, both in doctrine and worship. Now I would not be understood, as though I thought that ministers were so confined to one or other of these particular branches of the ministerial work, that they had no concern in the rest; for one and the same minister may be more or less useful in them all, but yet, generally speaking, he excels in some one of them.

The letting out of this vineyard to them, agrees with those parables of our Lord, in Mat. xx. 1, 2. and xxi. 33. where he seems to allude to the words of our text; which is no inconsiderable evidence of the divine authority of this book. The phrase shews, 1. That though Christ takes care of the vineyard himself, yet he also makes use of his ministers: Christ is not separated from his ministers; he acts as the owner, they as the servants; he is the chief and principal vinedresser, which work he performs mediately by his ministers, who are not to be slighted and laid aside; hence the apostle writing to the Corinthians, among whom were many divisions about their ministers; some being for Paul in opposition to Apollos, and some for Apollos in opposition to Paul, and others for Cephas in opposition to them both, and others for Christ in opposition to them all; they were for Christ without his ministers; but says the apostle, 1 Cor. i. 12, 13. is Christ divided? i. e. from his ministers; no, they are not to be separated from him, though subordinated to him. 2. It shews, that Christ entrusts his vineyard with his ministers; he makes them overseers of it, he sets them to watch over it, and faithfully discharge the several branches of their duty before mentioned, which is meant by the letting it out unto them; and it ought to be observed, that Christ has the sole power of letting out his vineyard, and he lets it out to whom he pleases, therefore none ought to usurp it; it is indeed a great honour to be entrusted with it, but no man should take this honour to himself, but he that is called of God to it; persons should not run into this work before they are sent, nor perform it negligently when they are in it. 3. Christ in some respects makes his ministers owners of this vineyard; he let out, or gave, the vineyard to keepers; hence in Chap. ii. 15. 'tis said, our vines have tender grapes; ministers have in some sort an interest in the vines, the churches; their joy, comfort, life, and glory lie much in the fruitfulness and well-being of them; which is a very great and powerful argument to induce them to vigilance, diligence, and carefulness in the discharge of their work.

V. The price this vineyard was let at, or the rent which these keepers were to bring in for the fruit of it, is a thousand pieces of silver; which may denote, 1. The exceeding great fruitfulness of this vineyard, that the fruit of it was worth so much: Thus in Isa. vii. 23. 'tis said, and it shall come to pass in that day, that every place shall be, where there were a thousand vines, at a thousand silverlings, it shall even be for briers and thorns; i. e. those places which were so exceeding fruitful before, shall now be barren and desolate. 2. It may denote the usefulness of a gospel ministry, which is to bring home souls to Christ, to gather in the fruit of his labours, and travail of his soul, which are as dear and valuable to him as a thousand pieces of silver; at which he rejoices as much as the poor woman did, Luke xv. 8, 9. at the finding of her lost piece. Christ's ministers are his rent-gatherers, and the collectors of his fruit; I have chosen you and ordained you, says he, John xv. 10. that ye should go and bring forth fruit; and then do they bring it in, when souls are converted under their ministry. 3. The sum to be brought in from every one of them is alike, every man his thousand pieces; Christ's ministers have indeed one and the same commission to preach the gospel, but they have not all the same abilities for the work, nor are they alike succeeded in it; but yet in the faithful and honest discharge of their work, they are all so blessed by him, as to answer the end of their ministration, designed by him; so that he reckons, that every one, even the meanest, brings in his thousand pieces, as well as the more able and successful. 4. It shews that there's a reckoning-day a coming for ministers as well as others, who must give an account of their talents, what use they have made of them in Christ's vineyard, and what success has attended their labours; which, if they can do with joy, and not with grief, will turn to their account, as well as be of advantage to others.

Ver. 12. My vineyard, which is mine, is before me: Thou, O Solomon, must have a thousand, and those that keep the fruit thereof two hundred.

THE former part of these words seem to be the words of Christ, asserting his interest in his vineyard, the church, thereby explaining and confirming what the church had said in the former verse. The latter part of the

the text appears to be the words of the church, allotting proper portions to the owner and keepers of the vineyard.

I. Christ asserts his claim, right and propriety in his vineyard, the church; My vineyard, which is mine, is before me; in which may be considered,

1st, The vineyard itself, which is the church of Christ, and is called so for several reasons, which have been shewn on the preceding verse.

2<sup>dly</sup>, This is expressed in the singular number, a vineyard; for Christ's church is but one, as he asserts in Chap. vi. 9. Though 'tis true, we read of vineyards, in the plural number, in Chap. vii. 12. because there are several separate, distinct and congregated churches; though these all make up but one catholic church, one general assembly and church of the first born, which are written in heaven.

3<sup>dly</sup>, Christ asserts his right and propriety in this vineyard, My vineyard, says he; whereby he confirms what the church had said in the foregoing verse; where has been shewn in what respect he is the owner of it, and what kind of right he has to it.

4<sup>thly</sup>, He doubles this claim of his unto it; he not only says, My vineyard, but adds, which is mine; whereby, 1. He excludes all others from having any right unto it; the vineyard is his, and only his; he is the sole proprietor of it, none has any thing to do with it, but himself. 2. By repeating his claim, he shews the certainty of it, that his title is unquestionable and indisputable; and indeed, what can be more sure and evident, seeing his father has given it to him, who had an undoubted right to dispose of it; nay, he has purchased it with his own blood, and has it now in possession; he is right heir to it, according to God's own appointments; though the wicked Jews, the chief priests and Scribes, who were the keepers of the vineyard, when our Lord was here on earth, when they saw him, said among themselves, This is the heir, come, let us kill him, and let us seize on his inheritance: And they caught him, and cast him out of the vineyard, and slew him, Mat. xxi. 38, 39. 3. He may use this additional phrase, which is mine, to distinguish it from all other vineyards; as also to shew the excellency of it, it being preferable to all others. This world, when compared with Christ's church, is a mere desert and wilderness; all other vines are of the vine of Sodom, and of the fields of Gomorrah; their grapes are grapes of gall, their clusters are bitter, Deut. xxxii. 32, 33. 4. He repeats it to signify the great delight he took in his vineyard; as it is in itself preferable to all others, so it is exceeding valuable and delightful to Christ; he says of it, The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places; yea, I have a goodly heritage, Psal. xvi. 8.

5<sup>thly</sup>, He says, that this vineyard was before him; which may denote, 1. The omniscience of Christ, which in general extends to all persons and things that ever were, are, or shall be; Lord, says Peter, Thou knowest all things, John xxi. 17. but in a more especial manner he is concerned about his own people, whom he knows by name, and is acquainted with all their wants and necessities; he knows his whole flock, and the state of it, which the Father has committed to him; he knows every sheep and lamb therein, in what condition they are, and what is most suitable for them; he knows his vineyard, and the several vines which grow there; there is never a plant escapes his notice and watchful eye; he is acquainted with every one of them, and in what case they are. 2. The omnipresence of Christ; he is the Lord that fills heaven and earth with his presence; the whole world is before him, but more especially his church; where in a peculiar manner he grants his gracious presence, there he dwells, and will abide for ever; who holds the seven stars in his right hand, who walks in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks, Rev. ii. 1. 3. The delight and complacency which Christ takes in his church; it is ever before him, his eye is continually upon it, he cannot bear it out of his sight; so dear and valuable is it to him: Thus it was from everlasting, and has continued ever since, and so it ever will; his delights from all eternity were with the sons of men, the elect of God, rejoicing in the habitable part of his earth, where he knew, in time, he should have a vineyard planted. 4. The care of Christ over his people, who are engraven upon the palms of his hands, and whose walls are continually before him. Though Christ does indeed let out his vineyard to keepers, yet he is not neglecting of it himself, he is present with them, and works by them; it is still in his own hands, and under his watchful eye; I the Lord, says he, Isa. xxvii. 3. do keep it, I will water it every moment, lest any hurt it, I will keep it night and day. Thus these words may be expressive of Christ's claim unto, affection for, and care over his vineyard, the church. Though,

There are some interpreters who take them to be the words of the church, speaking of her vineyard; by which may be meant, her own soul, and the particular concerns of it. Thus every one has a vineyard to look after; and in what condition that of the slothful man's was, may be seen in Prov. xxiv. 30, 31. which was all grown over with the thorns and nettles of sin and corruption; its stone wall or fence was broken down, so that he was exposed to every snare and temptation: Or else, by this vineyard may be meant, the church in general; for believers have a mutual interest in each others persons, gifts, graces, prayers, &c. and being all members of one and the same body, should, as the apostle says, 1 Cor. xii. 26. Have the same care one for another. Though, perhaps, the several gifts and talents, whether of nature or grace, which God bestows upon his people, may be intended, which are all to be used for the glory of Christ, and the good of his church; for as every one has a vineyard of his own, or a particular work assigned him in the vineyard, the church; so he has his particular gift, talent and capacity for that work, which ought to be used by him; for he must one day give an account thereof. Now the church here says, that her vineyard was before her, thereby signifying her care, watchfulness and diligence in it, of which we have an instance, Chap. vii. 12. and shews that she was now in a different frame from that of which she complains in Chap. i. 6. Though I think that the former sense of the words is most agreeable. Yet,

II. The latter part of the text, Thou, O Solomon, must have a thousand, and those that keep the fruit thereof, two hundred, manifestly appears to be the words of the church, allotting proper portions, First, To the owner of the vineyard, Salomon. Secondly, To the keepers of it, the ministers.

First, She allots to Solomon a thousand, i. e. a thousand pieces of silver, as in the former verse; where is to be considered,

1st, Who is meant by Solomon; by whom, no doubt, the Messiah is intended, as is acknowledged by R. Aben Ezra*, and other <sup>b</sup> Jewish writers; though Maimonides <sup>c</sup> says, that wherever the name of Solomon is mentioned in the song of songs, it is holy, and is as the rest of the names, except that, a thousand unto thee, O Solomon: To which, <sup>d</sup> some add also, Chap. iii. 7. but that Christ, and not Solomon, is here intended, is most agreeable to the nature and design of this song.

2<sup>dly</sup>, The church's manner of addressing him, Thou, O Solomon, shews that he was now in his presence, had much nearness to him, and used much freedom and familiarity with him, as she was by him allowed to do.

3<sup>dly</sup>, The allotment which she makes to him, is a thousand; which, 1. Is the sum agreed upon in the former verse; for the church is willing that Christ should have all that he demands or desires; she would have no abatement made, but would have him have his whole due, and full revenue of glory from his people. 2. It is a far greater share than what is assigned to the keepers; and good reason there is it should be so; for he is the head and master of them, as well as the owner of the vineyard; he is all and in all, and God over all, blessed for ever; his is the vineyard, and all the fruit thereof; he has a right unto it, and takes the chief care and oversight of it; so that neither is he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth, but Christ, who gives the increase; and therefore should have all the glory. 3. This shews the fruitfulness of this vineyard, that it yields so large a profit, both to the owner and keepers of it.

Secondly, The share allotted to the keepers is two hundred; from whence may be observed,

1st, That the ministers of the gospel shall have their reward; every one that labours in the vineyard shall have his penny; and every man, as the apostle says, 1 Cor. iii. 8. shall receive his own reward, according to his own labour; whether he be employed in watering or in planting.

2<sup>dly</sup>, That their having their reward is no lessening of Christ's; for he has his whole thousand, tho' they have their two hundred; nay, Christ comes at a considerable part of his revenue, through their having theirs; for he that receiveth you, says he, Mat. x. 40. receiveth me; where ministers are valued and honoured, Christ also is.

3<sup>dly</sup>, As one <sup>e</sup> well observes, where Christ gets his due among a people, there and there only do ministers get their due; where Christ is heartily received, the feet of them that bring glad tidings, will be beautiful; where Christ has his thousand, ministers will have their two hundred; but if Christ comes short of his due, no wonder that ministers should of theirs; but what is this two hundred, which is due to the keepers? Why, 1. An honourable maintenance for themselves and their families; for the labourer is worthy of his reward, which is his due according to God's ordination: Hence the apostle, 1 Cor. ix. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. establishing the truth of this, from several instances in nature, from the reasonableness of things, as well as from proofs out of the law of God, adds, even so hath the Lord ordained, that they which

which preach the gospel should live of the gospel; but this is but the least part of their two hundred. 2. Honour and esteem among the people, to whom they minister, is another part thereof; for, 1 Tim. v. 17, 18. The elders that rule well, are to be counted worthy of double honour; by which the apostle means first, an honourable maintenance, as is manifest from his following words; and then that duty and respect which are due to them, from their people, who ought to esteem them very highly in love, not for their persons, but for their works sake. 3. The conversion of sinners is another part of this two hundred; and indeed, godly and faithful ministers think, that they have a very large share of their reward, when their labours are succeeded this way; for what is our hope, says the apostle, 1 Thess. ii. 19, 20. or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? for ye are our glory and joy; and as the conversion of sinners, so the comfort and edification of saints, their stedfast adherence to, and continuance in the doctrines of the gospel, are likewise a great satisfaction to them; for now we live, says the same apostle, 1 Thess. iii. 8. if ye stand fast in the Lord. 4. Eternal glory is the complement of it; they will have their full two hundred in heaven, how much short so ever they come of it here; where instead of it, poverty, disrespect and reproach, frequently attend them; then they that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars for ever and ever, Dan. xii. 3. who when they have fought the good fight of faith, 2 Tim. iv. 8. shall receive the crown of righteousness, which is laid up for them, and shall be given, not only to them, but unto all them also that love Christ's appearing.

Ver. 13. Thou that dwellest in the gardens, the companions bearken to thy voice: Cause me to hear it.

I Once thought that these words were the words of the church to Christ, whose dwelling place is in his gardens, the churches, to whose voice in the everlasting gospel, the companions, or young converts, listen with great attention and affection, which the church observing, stirred up in her earnest desires to hear the same with more power and efficacy, life and liveliness; but having considered the original text, I find it will by no means bear this sense; for the word translated, thou that dwellest, is in the feminine gender, and so regards the bride, and may well be render'd <sup>a</sup>, O thou inhabitress of the gardens: Hence they appear to be the words of Christ, directed unto his bride, the church: In which may be considered,

- I. The title and appellation, which is given her; Thou that dwellest in the gardens.
- II. The notice which the companions take of her; the companions bearken to thy voice.
- III. The request which Christ makes unto her; cause me to hear it.

1. The title and appellation given her by Christ, is, Thou that dwellest in the gardens, or, O thou inhabitress of the gardens: Where by the gardens must be understood particular congregated churches, as has been observed on Chap. vi. 2. of which, the church universal is made up, and wherein it may be said to dwell. The Jewish writers <sup>b</sup> interpret them of the schools and congregations, where the law was taught. Now her dwelling in those gardens, is expressive, 1. Of the work she is employ'd about there; she does not dwell there idle; there is work for her to do, which is the reason of her dwelling there, and that is, to plant, water, prune and dress the gardens, which she does by her ministers: Her business here also is to attend upon the ministry of the word, and all other ordinances of the gospel, where she frequently meets with her beloved; for he feeds in the gardens, and gathers lilies. 2. It denotes her diligence, constancy, and assiduity in attendance on publick ordinances; she not only attended now and then, but always; she dwelt in the gardens, and like the first Christians, continued stedfastly in the apostles doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers, Acts ii. 42. 3. It shews the delight she took in being there, seeing she had took up her dwelling there: The tabernacles of God were amiable to her, a day in his courts was better than a thousand elsewhere. This was the one thing she desired of the Lord, Psal. xxvii. 4. and what, with a great deal of application she sought for, namely, to dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of her life; to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to enquire in his temple; because with the disciples, she judg'd it was good for her to be there, where she enjoyed the presence of Christ, had the assistance of his spirit, and the discoveries of his love. 4. It also appears evident from hence, that she made an open profession of Christ; she did not creep into those gardens now and then as it were by stealth, but she dwelt in them; she was not like Nicodemus, who came to Christ by night, nor those other Jews, who believed in him, but were afraid to confess him, for fear of being put out of the synagogue; nor like many in our days, who will not enter into church-communion, because of being exposed to the reproach of the world; though with the mouth confession should be made unto salvation, as well as with the heart man should believe unto righteousness, Rom. x. 10. for as the one is necessary for the comfort of the believer, the other is as necessary for the glory of Christ. 5. Her dwelling here expresses her stedfast adherence to the profession she had made; as well as her constant attendance on gospel-ordinances; she was not as many who forsake the assembling of themselves together, but cleaved unto the Lord, and to his churches with full purpose of heart, having an affectionate concern for them all; and in this respect she dwelt in them; it may be said of her on some accounts, as the apostle said of himself, 2 Cor. xi. 28. that the care of all the churches was upon him, as appears from Chap. vii. 12. and viii. 8.

Moreover, from Christ's giving her this title, may be observed, 1. That her dwelling in the gardens, was what he approved of, and was well pleasing to him; 'tis his will that saints should incorporate into churches, and those who are converted give themselves up to them, and continue with them; as appears from his blessing of them, when they are there, with greater measures of grace, light and knowledge, larger supplies of his spirit, and sweet enjoyments of his presence. 2. That this is a title of honour, and is expressive of what dignity she was advanced unto; and indeed, it is no small honour which saints have, to have a name and a place in God's house, which is better than sons and daughters; David thought so when he envied the very sparrow and swallow, which had made their nests, as he says, even near thine altars, O Lord of Hosts, my king and my God; and then adds, blessed are they that dwell in thine house, they will be still praising thee, Psal. lxxxiv. 3, 4. their work, their employment, as well as their place is honourable and glorious. 3. That it was for her profit as well as for her honour, to dwell here; for these gardens are stored with all manner of precious fruits; and above all, there stands in the midst of them the apple-tree, Christ Jesus, which is richly laden with a variety of excellent fruit, mentioned Chap. ii. 3. under the shadow of which the church frequently sits with great delight, and plucks and eats, and the fruit thereof is sweet unto her taste. 4. That she should always continue and abide there; he does not say, thou that didst dwell, or shalt dwell in the gardens, but, thou that dwellest, denoting her continued abode there; there is no fear of her being turned out of these gardens, as Adam was out of his Eden, so he drove out the man, Gen. iii. 24. nor are there any cherubim, or a flaming sword to keep the way of the tree of life, but all free and open, and nothing terrifying and menacing; it is true, every plant which Christ's heavenly father has not planted, shall be rooted up; all those who are in churches only by a mere visible profession without the truth of Grace, shall be turned out with a friend how camest thou in hither? but as for all true believers, they shall continue and abide until they are transplanted into the heavenly paradise above.

II. The notice which the companions take of her, they hearken to her voice, in which may be enquired, 1st, Who are meant by the companions. 2dly, What by their bearkening to her voice.

1st, These companions may be taken either in a bad sense or in a good sense; if in a bad sense, as in Chap. i. 7. then by them we are to understand false teachers, who pretend to be the companions and friends of Christ; who artfully insinuate themselves into churches, and would have them believe, they are aiming at the advancement of the same cause and interest, and mean the same things as they do; and thus with feigned words they introduce their damnable heresies, and make merchandize of the souls of men; they listen to the churches words and doctrines, to catch and carp at, wrest and pervert, use and improve to answer their own ends and purposes: Now these words may be considered as a caution given by Christ to the church to beware of them, as he did to his disciples, Mat. vii. 15. and as Paul did to the elders of Ephesus, Acts xx. 29, 30, 31. seeing they were listening to what she said, not out of good, but ill will; yet notwithstanding he would not have her be silent, but says he, cause me to bear it, or cause to bear me, i. e. preach me boldly and openly, in no wise being afraid of them; for he would not have her speak so softly to him, that the companions which listened might not hear, as R. Aben Ezra on the text observes; no, for says he, what I tell you in darkness, that speak

Speak ye in light; and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the house tops, Mat. x. 27. but yet with a proper guard upon themselves both with respect to open and secret enemies. Though, I rather think, that we are to understand these companions in a good sense; by whom may be meant, either, 1. God the Father, <sup>b</sup> and God the Holy Ghost, who are both the companions of Christ; for there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and these three are one, 1 John v. 7. they are of one nature and essence, possess the same perfections, are partners in the same works both of nature and grace, and equally share the glory which results from thence; now these divine persons listen to what the church and poor believers say; they that feared the Lord spake often one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard it, Mal. iii. 16. Or else, 2. The holy angels may be here intended, as many interpreters <sup>c</sup> both Jewish and Christian think; these are the friends and companions of the saints, as well as of Christ; they are reconciled to them through Christ, are willing to perform all the offices of friendship to them, they rejoice at their conversion, bring messages of peace and comfort to them, acknowledge themselves to be their fellow-servants, and are ministering spirits unto those who are the heirs of salvation: not to enter upon the consideration of that question, whether every man hath his angel to attend upon him; which I must confess I am somewhat inclined to believe, there being some scriptures which seem to furnish us with some proofs of it, as Mat. xviii. 10. Acts xii. 15. however this appears certain, that the saints have the angels of God attending on them; he hath given his angels charge concerning them; they encamp round about those that fear him; they are the guardians and companions of the saints in life, and at death carry their souls to glory; now these listen to what they say in their closets, in their families, in their private or publick conversation, as seems manifest from Eccles. v. 6. they wait upon the publick assemblies of the saints, and hearken to the voice of the gospel, as delivered by the ministers of it; hence that direction is given by the apostle, 1 Cor. xi. 10. for the woman to cover her head in the time of publick worship. The angels get much of their knowledge in, and acquaintance with the great mysteries of grace and salvation, from what they hear from the church, Eph. iii. 10. and it is with much constancy, diligence, and earnestness that they desire to look into these things, 1 Pet. i. 12. Or else rather, 3. By these companions may be meant the daughters of Jerusalem, who all along attended the bride in this song; who are the virgins, her companions, as they are called, Psal. xlv. 14. by which young converts more especially may be understood; who listen with a great deal of affection and attention to what the church, or older and more experienced christians say; though all believers in general may well come under this title of companions, as it is given to them, Psal. cxxii. 8. for David, though he was so a great man, and in such an exalted station of life, yet did not disdain to be called a companion of all them that fear God, Psal. cxix. 63. Now the saints may be said to be companions of each other for these following reasons. (1.) Because they are interested in one and the same covenant, of which Christ is the head, surety and mediator, and have an equal right and claim to all the blessings and promises of it.

(2.) They have all one and the same saviour, are all saved in one way, and share alike in the same salvation; for which reason it is called the common salvation, Jude 3. not that it is common to all the world, but only to the elect of God, who are called to be saints. (3.) They are partakers of the same grace, particularly that of faith; for the meanest saint obtains like precious faith with the greatest; the same may be said of all other graces of the spirit; for indeed as there is but one body, of which they are all members, so there is but one spirit which actuates them all, even as they are also called in one hope of their calling, Eph. iv. 4. (4.) They are partners, and share alike in the same privileges of the gospel, to which they have all an equal right; for they are all fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God. (5.) As companions they frequently converse together; they that feared the Lord spake often one to another; they meet in private, and take sweet counsel together, as well as walk unto the house of God in company; they sympathize with each other in all conditions, both outward and inward; they weep with them that weep, and rejoice with them that rejoice; they bear one anothers burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ. (6.) They are here companions together in tribulation and sufferings, as John says, Rev. i. 9. and shall be partners together in heaven, where they shall enjoy that glorious inheritance, which lies among them that are sanctified.

2dly, Now these companions hearken to the voice of the church; by which may be meant either, 1. The gospel as preached by her ministers, which is a joyful sound, and makes delightful music in the ears of believers, which are opened and unstopped by the spirit of God; or, 2. The admonitions of the church, which ought to be hearkened to, Mat. xviii. 15, 16, 17. and will be regarded by all those who wish well to Zion, who have a value and esteem for the authority of churches, and entertain mean and humble thoughts of themselves, Psal. cxli. 5. 3. The voice of the church in all other ordinances, and particularly that of singing may be here intended; for the church was now bearing her part in this song with Christ; with whose voice these virgins her companions were charmed, which made them get the nearer, and more carefully listen to her. Thus saints should be teaching and admonishing one another in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, singing with grace in their hearts to the Lord, Col. iii. 16. 4. The voice of the church, and of true believers in private conversation, is listened to by young converts; because it is that which is good, to the use of edifying, and what ministers grace unto the bearers.

III. The request which Christ makes to his church, is, cause me to hear it; i. e. thy voice which is exceeding sweet and charming to Christ, as appears from Chap. ii. 14. where he says, let me hear thy voice; a phrase exactly agreeable to this, and which is there more largely explained; and the reason there given, why he makes such a request, is, because sweet is thy voice: So is the voice of the church in praying to him, praising of him, speaking largely of his person, grace, and office, as well as boldly confessing of him before men. Though the word here used may as well be rendered cause to hear me, i. e. preach me, as Junius translates it; and the meaning is, seeing the companions thus flock unto thee, and listen with the utmost attention and satisfaction to thy voice, voice, take the opportunity of preaching me unto them; let my person, blood, righteousness, and grace be the subject of thy ministry. And thus indeed it was in the primitive times; for, says the apostle Paul, I determined not to know, i. e. to make known any thing among you, save Jesus Christ and him crucified, 1 Cor. ii. 2. The first ministers of the gospel did not preach themselves nor others, but Christ Jesus the Lord; he was the sum and substance of their ministry; and now though this way of preaching was to the Jews a stumbling-block, and to the Greeks foolishness; yet it was owned of God, for the conversion of sinners, and the comfort of saints, and has been more or less so in all ages of the world, and will be continued to be practised until the second coming of Christ; which he may perhaps here intend, and is what the church earnestly prays for in the following verse.

Ver. 14. Make haste, my beloved, and be thou like to a roe, or to a young hart, upon the mountains of spices.

THESE are the words of the church, earnestly imploring the presence of Christ. She begins and ends this song, and in both signifies her great affection to him, how much she valued his company, and how desirous she was of it; this appears throughout the whole song to lie uppermost in her heart, affections, and desires; she had had much nearness of access to Christ, and much communion with him, as appears from this chapter, and yet she wants more; she cannot be easy without the everlasting enjoyment of him on the mountains of spices. In the words may be considered,

I. The title she gives him; my beloved.

II. The request she makes to him; make haste, &c.

I. The title she gives him is, My beloved; and is what she had often given him in this song: She seems to take delight in using it; in which she expresses her love and affection to him, with the continuance of it; she acknowledges that he was her beloved still; she claims her interest in him, a comfortable sense of which she now enjoyed; hereby she also distinguishes him from all other beloveds, and shews that she was not ashamed to own him as such; as indeed, she had no reason: And, perhaps, she may have a particular view in giving him this title here, which is to improve her interest in him, as a motive or argument to obtain her request; for such suits that are founded upon the near relation which souls bear to Christ, seldom miss of succeeding. But having more largely explained this character elsewhere, I shall not insist any longer upon it; but proceed,

II. To consider the request she makes; which may be regarded either, 1. As a passionate wish for the incarnation of Christ, that he would speedily come and appear on mount Zion, and in the temple where the sacrifices were offered up, and the sweet smelling incense ascended, which were both typical of his sacrifice and mediation; nothing was more desirable or more importunately pray'd for, or more impatiently longed for by the Old Testament-church, than this was, and yet nothing more slighted than it was, when brought about. 2. It may be understood as the desire of the church after the spiritual presence of Christ, in his house, and upon the mountains of Zion, where he commands his blessing, even life for evermore: Nothing is more satisfying to believers than Christ's presence; it is preferred by them to all the enjoyments of life; if thy presence go not with me (says Moses, Exod. xxxiii. 15.) carry us not up hence; this puts joy and gladness into the souls of God's people, more than when corn and wine increase; they are oftentimes impatient without it, pant for it, as the hart panteth after the water brooks; for as his absence is death unto them, so his presence is life; this fills their hearts with comfort, diffuses an universal pleasure throughout their souls, banishes their doubts and fears, supports them under all the pressures, sorrows and afflictions of life, sets them above the fears of death, and makes them that they can look into another world, and an awful eternity, with the utmost satisfaction and serenity of mind; so that it is no wonder that Christ's gracious presence should be so desirable to saints: Besides, there was good reason for the church to make such a request here, seeing he had in the preceding verse enjoined her to cause him to hear her voice, i. e. to preach his gospel, set forth the glory of his person, and open the treasures of his grace to souls, which to perform aright, she knew that she was unable of herself; for who indeed is sufficient for these things? for even those who are furnished with the greatest gifts and largest capacities for such a work, are yet insufficient to think any thing as of themselves, much less to go through so great a work, but their sufficiency is of God; and therefore the church here desires the presence of Christ with her, and that speedily, in order to do it: It is as if she should say, I am very willing to be found faithful and diligent in the discharge of this work, which thou hast called me to; but I am not able to perform it myself; do thou therefore hasten to my assistance, and grant me thy presence, without which I can do nothing; and this also Christ knows full well, and therefore he has promised his ministering servants to be with them always in their work, even unto the end of the world. Or else, 3. This petition of her's may regard the spreading of the gospel over all the nations of the world. The gospel shall not only be preached to all nations, but this precious box of ointment being opened, the savour of Christ's knowledge shall be diffused in every place; for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea: Isa. xi. 9. Multitudes of souls shall be converted to Christ, and made subject to the sceptre of his grace; those voices shall then be heard in heaven, i. e. in the church below, Rev. xi. 15. The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ: Those nations which before were comparable to lions dens, and the mountains of the leopards, may now be called the mountains of spices; for their fragrantcy and fruitfulness; on which Christ appears in his glory, the time being come that the prophecy should be fulfilled, Zech. xiv. 9. And the Lord shall be king over all the earth: In that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one; and what can be more desirable to the saints than this? No wonder the church should be so importunate in her request. Though, 4. I rather think that she intends the second coming of Christ; as the Old Testament-saints breathed after his first coming, so New-Testament-saints earnestly desire his second coming; they love it, they long for it, they pray for it; nay, as the apostle Peter says, 2 Pet. iii. 12. they are are hasting to it, i. e. they desire Christ to hasten it; they do not care how soon that day comes; for though it will be awful and terrible to the wicked, yet it will be much to their profit and advantage; for Christ will appear a second time without sin unto salvation; his first appearance was in the likeness of sinful flesh, and with all the sins of his people charged upon him, for which he made satisfaction to justice, and thereby procured eternal salvation for them; but his next appearance will be without any sin at all, in any sense whatever, being fully discharged from all, as the head, surety, and representative of his people; when he will put them into the actual possession of that salvation he before procured. Now it may be observed that this is the last petition of the church's; she closes the song with it, as John does his book of the Revelation: Surely I come quickly, says Christ; Amen, says John, even so come Lord Jesus: From whence we may observe, that the coming of Christ to take his people to himself, that where he is there they may be also, is the completion of all believers prayers and joys; when this is obtained, they have no more to ask for, nor any more indeed do they want; it may be said of them then, what is said of David, in the 72d psalm, which whole psalm regards the glory and peace of Christ's everlasting kingdom, the prayers of David, the son of Jesse, are ended; i. e. all his wishes are granted, and his requests fulfilled, when this is effected. But now let us consider a little more particularly, the several phrases by which the church expresses her desire for the coming of Christ. And,

1st, She says, Make haste, my beloved: Not that she desired him to come before the time appointed of the Father; for as there was a set time, which is called the fulness of time, which was agreed upon for Christ's coming in the flesh; so there is a time fixed and determined for his second coming; as the person, so the day is appointed by God, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness; though of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the son, as he is man, but the Father; therefore it is both vain and sinful for persons curiously to enquire into it, and bold and daring to attempt the fixing of it; for it is not for us to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power. Now Christ will not come before, nor will he stay longer than this time appointed; and this the church knew; nor does she desire him to come sooner, yet could be glad to see those things accomplished, which must precede it; such as the conversion of the Jews, and the bringing in the fulness of the Gentiles, all which the Lord will hasten; but it will be in his own time; nor does the church mean any other; but by using this expression, she signifies the earnestness of her desire to have this accomplished, being as it were impatient until it was done; her language is much like Sifera's mother's, who said concerning him, Why is his chariot so long in coming? Why tarry the wheels of his chariots? Moreover it may be observed, that the word here translated, make haste, may be rendered flee away; the meaning of which is not that the church desired Christ to remove or depart from her; no, she valued his presence at another rate than to desire him to withdraw from her; those indeed who prefer their lusts, their pleasures, their profits, their swine before Christ,

say, depart from us ; but as for the church, when she has found him, she holds him fast, and will not let him go ; so that when she desires him to fly away, something else must be understood ; which is, that she being weary of a sinful and troublesome world, breathed after an everlasting rest with him upon the spicy mountains ; and therefore she would have him remove from his garden below, where he was, and take her along with him to glory ; where she might eternally enjoy him without any disturbance or molestation.

2dly, She desires that he would be like a roe or a young hart upon the mountains of spices : For what reasons Christ may be compared to a roe or a young hart, has been shewn on Chap. ii. 9. Her meaning here is, that he would come quickly and speedily, and be as swift in his motion as the roe or young hart which runs upon the mountains, and other high places, where they delight to skip and leap ; see Hab. iii. 19. And by these mountains of spices, we are not to understand mount Moriab, and the temple built upon it, as R. Sol. Jarchi interprets them ; but rather the mountains of Zion, or the several congregations and churches where she desired his gracious presence, until his second coming ; which may be compared to mountains for their height and sublimity, being established and exalted above all others, Isa. ii. 2. as well as for their permanency and immoveableness ; for they that trust in the Lord shall be as mount Zion, which can never be removed, but abideth for ever, Psal. cxxv. 1. and may be called mountains of spices, because of those precious plants which grow there, and those fragrant graces with which they abound, as well as those sweet smelling sacrifices of prayer and praise, which are there offered up : Though I rather think that the joys and glories of the heavenly state are here intended, where the church desires to have everlasting and uninterrupted communion with her beloved ; and that speedily, if it was his will ; where she should be on high, and out of the reach of every snare, and every enemy ; where she would be safe, secure and immoveable, and roll herself in pleasures that will never end. For, 1. These mountains may denote the height and sublimity of this happy state ; it is above, it is an inheritance reserved in heaven, a hope laid up there, a prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. 2. May express the permanency and everlastingness thereof : It is a city which hath foundations, and these immoveable : It is a building of God, eternal in the heavens ; these habitations are everlasting, from whence there never will be a remove. 3. May signify the exceeding pleasantness and delightfulness thereof ; that state may well be represented by spicy mountains, seeing in the presence of Christ there is fulness of joy, and at his right hand there are pleasures for evermore ; no wonder then that the church should so passionately wish for the enjoyment of this happiness, and close this song in the manner she does, saying, Make haste, my beloved, and be thou like a roe or a young hart upon the mountains of spices.

C H A P. I.

VERSE 1. The song of songs, &c.] The songs and hymns which Solomon the prophet, king of Israel delivered by the spirit <sup>b</sup> of prophecy, before Jehovah, the Lord of the whole world. Ten songs are sung in this world; but this is the most excellent of them all. The first song Adam sung, at the time when his sins were forgiven him; and the sabbath-day came, he put a covering upon his lips, and he sung <sup>c</sup> a psalm or song for the sabbath-day. The second song sung Moses with the children of Israel, at the time when the Lord of the world divided the sea of Suph for them; then they all of them opened their mouths, and sung as one a song; as it is written, <sup>d</sup> Then sang Moses and the children of Israel. The third song the children of Israel sung at the time that the well of water was given them; as it is written, <sup>e</sup> Then sung Israel. The fourth song Moses the prophet sung, when his time was come to depart <sup>f</sup> out of the world, and in which he reproved the people of the house of Israel;

<sup>a</sup> The word תרגום signifies an exposition, or interpretation, or a translation of one language into another; and here, of the Hebrew text into the Chaldee language, with an explanation. The first use of these translations was after the return of the Jews from Babylon, where they had almost lost the Hebrew language, and therefore were necessary for the understanding the law and the prophets. The translation of the five books of Moses was done by Onkelos, and that of the prophets by Jonathan Ben Uzziel; the former of which lived a little after Christ, and the latter a little before him; but the translation of the Hagiographa, among which is this book of Canticles, is generally thought to be done by R. Joseph Cæcus. Tosaphot in T. Bab. Sabbat. fol. 115. 1. The paraphrase on this book could not be wrote till after the finishing of the Talmud, seeing express mention is made of it in it. <sup>b</sup> Which is the holy spirit, as is afterwards explained. This book was wrote by inspiration of the holy spirit, as all the books of the old Testament were: The authors of them spoke and wrote as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. What the Targum says of this book is the mind of Jewish writers in general. Vid. Misna, Tract. Yadaim, c. 3. §. 5. Shirhashirim Rabba in ver. 1. Midrash Kobelet in ver. 1. Zohar in Exod. fol. 59. 3. Tarchi and Aben Ezra in Præfat. in Cant. Kimchi in 1 Reg. 11. 41. <sup>c</sup> Psal. xcii. which psalm many Jewish writers think was made by the first man Adam; so Targum in Psal. xcii. Zohar in Gen. fol. 43. 2. Vajikra Rabba, parash. 10. but in Shemoth Rabba, parash. 23. 'tis said that Adam never composed any song; and that the song which Moses and the children of Israel sung at the red sea, was the first that ever was sung in the world; and indeed, 'tis the first that is mentioned in scripture. <sup>d</sup> Exod. xv. 1. <sup>e</sup> Numb. xxi. 17. <sup>f</sup> A phrase expressive of death; see Phil. i. 23.

as it is written, <sup>e</sup> Give ear, O heavens, and I will speak. The fifth song, Joshua the son of Nun, sung, when he fought in Gibeon, and the sun and moon stood still for him <sup>h</sup> thirty and six hours; when they ceased from singing, he himself opened his mouth, and sung a song; as it is written, <sup>i</sup> Then sung Joshua before the Lord. The sixth song, Barak and Deborah sung, in the day that the Lord delivered Sisera and his army into the hands of the children of Israel; as it is written, <sup>k</sup> Then sang Deborah and Barak, the son of Abinoam. The seventh song, Hannab sung, at a time when a son was given her by the Lord; as it is written, <sup>l</sup> and Hannab prayed in prophecy, and said. The eighth song, David the king of Israel sung, on the account of all the wonders which the Lord did for him; he opened his mouth and sung a song; as it is written, <sup>m</sup> And David sang in prophecy before the Lord. The ninth song, Solomon the king of Israel sung, by the holy spirit, before Jehovah, the Lord of the whole world. And the tenth song, the children of the captivity shall sing, at the time when they shall come out of captivity, as it is written and explained by Isaiah the prophet; <sup>n</sup> This song shall be unto you, for joy as in the night, that the feast of the passover is kept holy; and gladness of heart, as when the people go to appear before the Lord, three times in a year, with all kinds of music, and sound of the pipe; when they go up to the mountain of the Lord, to worship before the Lord, the mighty one of Israel.

Ver. 2. Let him kiss me, &c.] Solomon, the prophet said, Blessed be the name of the Lord, who hath given us the law by the hands of Moses, <sup>o</sup> the great scribe, written upon two tables of stone, and the six parts of the <sup>p</sup> Misna and Talmud <sup>q</sup> with the explanation; and he was speaking to us face to face, as a man kisseth his friend, because of the greatness of the love with which he loved us more than <sup>r</sup> the seventy nations.

Ver. 3. Because of the favour, &c.] At the report of thy wonders, and of thy power, which thou wroughtest for thy people the house of Israel, all the nations trembled who heard of the fame of thy greatness, and of thy good good signs ; and thy holy name was heard in all the earth, which is more excellent than the anointing oil that was poured upon the heads of the kings and priests ; and therefore the righteous love to walk in thy good way, that they may possess <sup>r</sup> this world, and the world to come.

Ver. 4. Draw me, &c.] When the people of the house of Israel came out of Egypt, the Shechinah of the Lord of the world went before them <sup>r</sup> in a pillar of cloud by day, and in a pillar of fire by night. The righteous of that generaion said, Lord of all the world, draw us after thee, and we will run in thy good way ; and bring us to the foot of mount Sinai, and give us the law out of thy treasure-house, the firmament, and we will rejoice and be glad, in the <sup>u</sup> twenty two letters with which it is written ; and we will remember them, and love thy Deity, and will withdraw ourselves from the idols of the nations ; and all the righteous which do what is right before thee, shall fear thee, and love thy commandments.

Ver. 5. I am black, &c.] When the house of Israel made the calf, their faces became black, like the sons of Cush <sup>v</sup>, which dwell in the tents of Kedar ; but when they returned, by repentance, and were forgiven, the brightness of the glory of their faces was increased, like the angels ; because they made curtains for the tabernacle, therefore the Shechinah of the Lord dwelt among them ; and Moses, their master, went up into the <sup>x</sup> firmament, and made peace between them and their king.

Ver. 6. Look not upon me, &c.] The congregation of Israel said before the nations, Do not despise me, because I am blacker than you, for I have done according to your works, and have <sup>y</sup> worshipped the sun and moon ; for false prophets have been the cause that the fierce anger of the Lord hath come down upon me ; and they taught me to worship your idols, and to walk in your laws ; but the Lord of the world, who is my God, I have not served, nor walked in his commandments, nor have I kept his statutes and his law.

Ver. 7. Tell me, O thou, &c.] When the time of Moses the prophet was come, to <sup>z</sup> depart out of the world, he said before the Lord, It is revealed unto me, that this people will sin, and go into captivity ; now shew me how they shall be governed and dwell among the nations, whose decrees are grievous as the heat, and as the scorplings of the sun at noon, in the <sup>a</sup> summer-solstice ; and wherefore it is that they shall wander among the flocks of the sons of Esau and Ismael, who join to thee their idols, for companions.

<sup>r</sup> A like phrase see in Eph. i. 21. Mat. xii. 32. <sup>t</sup> Vid. Exod. xiii. 21, 22. <sup>u</sup> The number of Hebrew letters in the Alphabet. R. Isaac in Shirhashirim Rabba in loc. gives the same sense of the words, which he collects from the word בך in thee, ב standing numerically for two, and ך twenty. <sup>v</sup> The Ethiopians. Shirhashirim Rabba in loc. explains the words by Amos ix. 7. Are ye not as children of the Ethiopians unto me, &c. <sup>x</sup> It is a received opinion among the Jews, that Moses went up into the firmament of heaven ; though the scriptures only signify that he went up into mount Sinai, and was in the midst of the cloud with God there. So the Targum on ver. 11, 12, 14. and on Psal. lxxviii. 18. <sup>y</sup> So 'tis explained in Shirhashirim Rabba in loc. See Deut. xvii. 3. Job xxi. 26, 27. <sup>z</sup> Kings xxxiii. 5, 11. Ezek. viii. 16. <sup>a</sup> See note on ver. 1. <sup>b</sup> The Jews, as here and elsewhere call it תקופת חמץ the revolution of Tammuz ; the sun is so called, Ezek. viii. 14. which was worshipped under this name ; it answers in part to our June, when the sun enters into the tropic of Cancer, and is what is meant by this revolution, Maimon. Hilch. Kiddush Hachodesh, c. 9. §. 2. Vid. Targum Jon. in Gen. viii. 22.

Ver. 8. If thou know not, &c.] The holy blessed God said to Moses the prophet, if it is thy desire that the captivity may be averted; the congregation of Israel, which is like to a fair damsel whom my soul loveth, let her walk in the ways of the righteous, and let her order her prayer according to the direction of her governors, and let her lead her posterity, and learn her children, which are like to the kids of the goats, to go to the synagogue and the school; and by that righteousness they shall be governed in the captivity, until the time that I send the king Messiah, and he shall lead them quietly to their habitations; yea, he shall bring them to the house of the sanctuary, which David and Solomon, the shepherds of Israel shall build for them.

Ver. 9. To a company of horses, &c.] When Israel went out of Egypt, Pharaoh and his host pursued after them, with chariots and horsemen, and their way was shut up on the four sides of them; on the right-hand and on the left were wildernesses, full of fiery serpents, and behind them were wicked Pharaoh and his army, and before them was the sea of Suph. What did the holy blessed God do? He was manifested in the power of his might upon the sea, and dried the sea up; but the clay he did not dry up. The wicked and the mixed multitude, and the strangers which were among them, said, <sup>a</sup> The waters of the sea he is able to dry up, but the clay he is not able to dry up. In that very hour the fierce anger of the Lord came upon them, and he sought to drown them in the waters of the sea, as Pharaoh and his army, his chariots and his horsemen, and his horses, were drowned; had it not been for Moses, the prophet who spread his hands in prayer before the Lord, and turned away the anger of the Lord from them: Then he and the righteous of that generation opened their mouths, and sang a song, and passed through the sea of Suph on dry land, because of the righteousness of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, the beloved of the Lord.

Ver. 10. Thy cheeks are comely, &c.] When they went out into the wilderness, the Lord said to Moses, How fair is this people, that the words of the law should be given unto them! and they shall be as bridles in their jaws, that they may not depart out of the good way; as a horse turneth not aside that has a bridle in his jaw: And how fair is their neck to bear <sup>b</sup> the yoke of my commandments! and it shall be upon them, as a yoke upon the neck of a bullock, which plougheth in the field, and feeds both itself and its master.

Ver. 11. We will make thee borders of gold, &c.] Then was it said to Moses, go up into the firmament, and I will give thee the two tables of stone, hewed out of the <sup>c</sup> sapphire of the throne of my glory, shining as the best gold, disposed in rows, written with my finger; in which are engraven the <sup>d</sup> ten words, purer than silver that is purified seven times seven, which is the number of the things explained in them, <sup>e</sup> forty-nine ways; and they shall be given by thine hand unto the people of the house of Israel.

<sup>b</sup> 'Tis very common in Jewish writings to compare the law to a yoke; so Targum in Lam. iii. 27. Misna, Traët. Berac. c. 2. § 2. Pirk. Aboth, c. 3. § 5. Midraß Echa Rabbati, fol. 56. 3. Bereßith Rabba, paraph. 98. Bemidbar Rabba, paraph. 13. See Matt. xi. 29. and Acts xv. 10.

Ver. 12. While the king sitteth, &c.] Whilst Moses their master was in the firmament, to receive the two tables of stone, and the law, and the commandments, the wicked of that generation, and the mixt multitude that were among them rose up, and made a golden calf, and caused their works to stink; and there went out an evil report of them in the world, for before this time a fragrant odour of them was diffused in the world, but afterwards they stank like <sup>f</sup> nard, whose smell is very bad, and the plague of leprosy came down upon their flesh.

Ver. 13. A bundle of myrrh, &c.] At that time the Lord said unto Moses, go down, for thy people have corrupted themselves, desist from speaking to me, and I will destroy them: Then Moses returned and asked mercy of the Lord, and the Lord remembred for them the <sup>s</sup> binding of Isaac, whom his father bound on mount Moriab<sup>h</sup>, upon the altar, and the Lord turned from his fierce anger, and caused his Shechinah to dwell among them as before.

Ver. 14. A cluster of camphire, &c.] Lo, then went Moses down with the two tables of stone in his hands, and because of the sins of Israel, his hands grew heavy, and they fell and were broken: Then went Moses and ground <sup>t</sup> the calf to powder, and scattered the dust of it upon the river, and made the children of Israel drink it, and slew all that deserved to die, and went up a second time into the firmament, and prayed before the Lord, and made atonement for the children of Israel; then was he commanded to make a tabernacle and an ark. Immediately Moses hastned, and made the tabernacle and all its furniture, and the ark; and he put in the ark the two other tables, and appointed the sons of Aaron the priests, to offer the offerings upon the altar, and to pour the wine upon the offerings; but from whence had they wine to pour? For in the wilderness they had no proper place for sowing, neither had they fig-trees, nor vines, nor pomegranates; but they went to the vineyards of Engedi, and took clusters of grapes from thence, and pressed wine out of them, and poured it upon the altar, the fourth part of an hin to one lamb.

VER. 1. I am the rose of Sharon, &c.] The congregation of Israel said, when the Lord of the world causes his <sup>5</sup> Shechinah to dwell in the midst of me, I am like the green narcissus of the garden of Eden; and my works are fair as the rose which is in the plain of the garden of Eden.

Ver. 2. As the lily among thorns, &c.] But when I turn aside out of the way that is right before him, and he removes the Shechinah of his holiness from me, I am like to a rose which flourishes among thorns, by which its leaves are pricked through and torn; even so am I pricked through and torn with wicked edicts, in the captivity among the <sup>6</sup> kings of the nations.

Ver. 3. As the apple-tree among the trees, &c.] As the pomecitron tree is beautiful, and to be praised among the unfruitful trees, and all the world knows it, so the Lord of the world was praised among the angels, when he was revealed on mount Sinai, and gave the law unto his people; in that very hour I desired to sit under the shadow of his Shechinah, and the words of his law were <sup>7</sup> fixed upon the roof of my mouth, and the reward of his commands is reserved for me in the world to come.

<sup>4</sup> The word Shechinah comes from שכן which signifies to dwell, and Eliæ Levitæ in his Metburgeman says, that their wife men called the Holy Spirit so, because it dwelt upon the prophets, though perhaps he says, there may be another sense of it among the Cabbalistick doctors, which he declares himself ignorant of; it seems to intend the glorious majesty and presence of God with his church and people, and is the same with St. John's οὐκὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ, Tabernacle, or Habitation of God, which is said to be with men, Rev. xxi. 3. and may very well be applied to the Messiah, Jesus, who was made flesh, καὶ ἠοικίωσεν, and dwelt among us, John i. 14.

Ver. 4. He brought me, &c.] The congregation of Israel said, the Lord brought me to the school which is in Sinai, to learn the law from the mouth of Moses the great scribe, and the banner of his commandments I took upon me in love, and said, all that the Lord commandeth I will do, and will obey.

Ver. 5. Stay me with flagons, &c.] But when I heard his voice which spake out of the midst of the flame of fire, I trembled and went backwards because of fear; then I drew near to Moses and Aaron, and said unto them, Receive ye the voice of the words of the Lord, out of the midst of the fire, and bring me to the school, and sustain me with the words of the law, on which the world is founded, (or by which the world is made sweet); and put veils upon my neck, the interpretation of the holy words, which are sweet to my palate, as the apples of the garden of Eden; and I will study in them, perhaps I may be healed by them, for I am sick of love.

Ver. 6. His left hand is under my head, &c.] When the people of the house of Israel were travelling in the wilderness, they had <sup>a</sup> four clouds of glory at the four winds of the world round about them, that the <sup>c</sup> evil eye might not rule over them; there was one above them, that the heat and sun, as also the rain and hail might not have power over them; and one below them, which carried them as a nurse carrieth a sucking child in her bosom; and another ran before them, at the distance of three days journey<sup>d</sup>, to level the mountains, and to elevate the plains; and it slew all the fiery serpents and scorpions, which were in the wilderness; and it spy'd out a convenient place for them to lodge in, because they studied in the doctrine of the law, which was given them by the right-hand of the Lord.

Ver. 7. I charge you, O ye daughters, &c.] After that it was commanded Moses, by the spirit of prophecy from the Lord, to send spies to spy the land; and when they returned from spying it, they brought an evil report upon the land of Israel, wherefore they tarried forty years in the wilderness; Moses opened his mouth, and thus he said, I adjure you, O congregation of Israel, by the Lord of hosts, and by the fortresses of the land of Israel, that ye presume not to go up to the land of Canaan, until it is the will of the Lord; lest the whole generation of warlike men perish from the camp; even as your brethren, the children of Ephraim presumed, <sup>e</sup> who went out thirty years from Egypt, before the time came, and they fell into the hand of the Philistines, which dwell in Gath, and they slew them; but tarry ye unto the end of forty years, and afterwards your children shall go up and inherit it.

Ver. 9. My beloved is like a roe, &c.] The congregation of Israel said, when the glory of the Lord was revealed in Egypt, in the night of the passover, and slew all the first-born, he rode upon a swift cloud, and ran like a roe or a young hart; and protected the houses in which we were, and stood behind our wall, and looked out of the windows, and beheld thro' the lattices, and saw the blood of the sacrifice of the passover, and the blood of circumcision which was fixed upon our gates; and he looked from the highest heavens, and saw his people, who eat of the sacrifice of the feast which was roasted with fire, with <sup>r</sup> Tamca and Ulsbin, and unleavened bread; and he spared us, and did not give power to the destroying angel to destroy us.

Ver. 10. My beloved spake, and said unto me, &c.] And in the morning my beloved answered and said unto me, Arise O congregation of Israel, my love, who wast so of old, and who art fair in good works, go, get thee out from the bondage of the Egyptians.

Ver. 13. The fig-tree putteth forth, &c.] the congregation of Israel, which is like to the first fruits of figs, opened her mouth, and sung a song at the sea of Suph, yea the babes and sucklings praised the Lord of the world with their tongues; immediately the Lord of the world said unto them, Arise, O congregation of Israel, my love, and my fair one, and go from hence into the land which I have sworn unto thy fathers.

Ver. 14. O my dove, that art in the clefts of the rock, &c.] And when wicked Pharaoh <sup>b</sup> pursued after the children of Israel, the congregation of Israel was like to a dove, that is shut up in the clefts of the rock, whom the serpent afflicts within, and the hawk oppresses without; even so the congregation of Israel was shut up on the four sides of the world; for before them was the sea, and behind them enmity <sup>c</sup> pursued, and on the two sides of them were the wildernesses, which were full of fiery serpents, which bite and kill the sons of men with their poison; and immediately she opened her mouth in prayer before the Lord, and Bath Kol <sup>d</sup> went out from the highest heavens, and thus it said; O thou congregation of Israel, who art like to a clean dove, and which is hid in the closure of the clefts of the rock, and in the secret places of the stairs, shew me thy countenance and thy works which are right; cause me to hear thy voice, for thy voice is sweet in prayer in the house of the little sanctuary, and thy countenance is fair in good works.

Ver. 15. Take us the foxes, &c.] After that they had passed through the sea, they murmured for water; then came wicked Amalek against them, who hated them on the account of the birthright and blessing which Jacob our father took away from Esau; and he came to make war with Israel, for they had made void the words of the law; and wicked Amalek <sup>e</sup> itole from under the wings of the clouds of glory, several persons from the tribe of Dan, and slew them, because the idol of Micah was in their hand; in that very hour the house of Israel, which is like to a vineyard, was condemned to be destroyed, except the righteous of that generation, who were like to the best spice.

C H A P. III.

VER. 1. By night on my bed, &c.] And when the people of the house of Israel saw that the clouds of glory were removed from them, and the holy crown<sup>6</sup> that was given to them at Sinai, was taken from them, and they were left dark as the night; then they fought the holy crown, which was removed from them, but they found it not.

Ver. 2. I will rise now, &c.] The children of Israel said one to another; Let us arise and go and surround the tabernacle of the congregation, which Moses fixed without the camp, and let us seek instruction from the Lord, and the holy Shechinah, which is removed from us; and they went about the cities, and in the streets, and in the broad places, but they found it not.

Ver. 3. The watchmen that go about the city, &c.] The congregation of Israel said<sup>1</sup>; Moses and Aaron, and the Levites, which keep the charge of the word of the tabernacle of the congregation, who go round about it, found me; and I enquired of them concerning the Shechinah of the glory of the Lord, which was removed from me. Moses, the great scribe of Israel, answered, and thus he said; I will go up to the highest heavens, and I will pray before the Lord; perhaps, atonement may be made for your transgressions, so that he may cause his Shechinah to dwell among you as before.

Ver. 4. It was but a little that I passed, &c.] It was but a very little time, and the Lord turned from the fierceness of his anger, and commanded Moses the prophet, to make the tabernacle of the congregation, and the ark, and caused his Shechinah to dwell in it; and the people of the house of Israel offered their offerings, and studied in the words of the law in the chamber<sup>2</sup> of the

Ver. 5. I charge you, &c.] When the seven nations <sup>1</sup> heard that the children of Israel were about to possess their land, they arose as one man, and cut down the trees, and stopped up the fountains of water, and destroyed their cities, and fled. The holy blessed God said to Moses the prophet, I have sworn to their fathers, that I will bring their children to inherit a land flowing with milk and honey; but now I shall bring them to a land that is desolate and empty. Now therefore I'll cause them to stay forty years in the wilderness, and my law shall be mixed with them, and after that these wicked nations shall build what they have destroyed; and then said Moses to the children of Israel, I charge you, O congregation of Israel, by the Lord of hosts, and by the fortresses of the land of Israel, that ye presume not to go up to the land of Canaan, until the forty years are ended; when it shall be the good pleasure of the Lord, to deliver the inhabitants of the land into your hands, then shall ye pass over Jordan, and the land shall be subdued before you.

Ver. 6. Who is this that cometh out of the wilderness, &c.] When the Israelites came up out of the wilderness, and passed over Jordan with Joshua the son of Nun, the people of the land said; Who is this choice nation which comes up out of the wilderness, perfumed with the sweet incense, and supported through the righteousness of Abraham, who worshipped and prayed before the Lord, on mount Moriab; and is anointed with the anointing oil, through the righteousness of Isaac, who was bound in the place of the sanctuary, which is called the mountain of frankincense; for whom wonders are also wrought, through the holiness of Jacob, who wrestled with him, until the morning ascended, and prevailed over him, and was delivered, he and the twelve tribes?

Ver. 7. Behold his bed, which is Solomon's, &c.] When Solomon, the king of Israel, built the house of the sanctuary of the Lord, in Jerusalem; the Lord said by his word; How beautiful is the house of this sanctuary, which is built for me, by the hands of king Solomon, the son of David! And how beautiful are the priests when they spread their hands and stand upon their desks, and bless the people, the house of Israel, by the sixty letters <sup>m</sup> which were delivered to Moses their master, and with that blessing which surrounds them like an high and strong wall, and by which all the mighty men of Israel prevail and prosper!

Ver. 8. They all hold swords, &c.] And the priests and the levites, and all the tribes of Israel, all of them take hold of the words of the law, which are like to a <sup>n</sup> sword, in which they employ themselves as men that are expert in war; and every one of them has the <sup>o</sup> seal of circumcision sealed upon their flesh, even as it was sealed upon the flesh of Abraham; and by it they prevail vail as a man that has his sword girt upon his thigh, wherefore they are not afraid of noxious spirits<sup>p</sup> and apparitions, which walk in the night.

Ver. 9. King Solomon made himself a chariot, &c.] King Solomon built for himself<sup>q</sup> an holy temple, of the trees of 'Zangebila, fir-trees, and cedars, which came from Lebanon, and covered it with pure gold.

Ver. 10. He made the pillars thereof, &c.] And after that he had finished it, he put in the midst of it the ark of the testimony, which is the pillar of the world, and in it the two tables of stone, which Moses placed there in Horeb, which are more precious than silver purified, and more beautiful than the best gold; and he spread and covered over it<sup>r</sup> the veil of blue and purple; and between the cherubim, which are over the mercy seat, the Shechinah of the Lord abode, whose name dwelleth in Jerusalem, above all the cities of the land of Israel.

Ver. 11. Go forth, O ye daughters of Zion, &c.] When king Solomon came to make the dedication of the house of the sanctuary, a cryer went forth in strength, and thus he said; Go forth and see, ye inhabitants of the provinces of the land of Israel, and ye people of Zion, the crown and diadem wherewith the people of the house of Israel crowned king Solomon in the<sup>s</sup> day of the dedication of the house of the sanctuary; and he rejoiced with the joy of the feast of tabernacles; for king Solomon kept, at that time, the feast of tabernacles<sup>t</sup> fourteen days.

CHAP. IV.

VER. 1. Behold thou art fair, &c.] And in that day king Solomon offered up a<sup>u</sup> thousand burnt offerings upon the altar; and his offerings were graciously accepted by the Lord. Bath Kol<sup>v</sup> went forth from heaven, and thus it said, How fair art thou, O congregation of Israel! and how fair are the princes

<sup>p</sup> So this fear in the night is interpreted by some of the Rabbins in Shirbasirim Rabba in loc. and in Bemidbar Rabba, parash. 11. Though others of them in the said places, explain it of the fear of hell, which is like to the night; as they do also in Gemara Bab. Tract. Sanhed. c. 1. fol. 7. col. 1. <sup>q</sup> By this chariot, R. Aben Ezra also understands the house of the Lord; and in Shirbasirim Rabba, and by Jarchi in loc. 'tis interpreted of the tabernacle, as it is by some of the Jews, in Bemidbar Rabba, parash. 12. though others think the ark is intended; and others in the same place would have the world meant, which way they explain it in Zabar in Gen. fol. 2. 1. The word אפריון very properly signifies the marriage bed, so called from פרו which signifies to fructify, or to be fruitful. Hence לבנות אפריון is a very usual phrase with the Rabbins, to express the celebration of marriage. Vid. Buxtorf: Epist. Heb. lib. 2. ep. 7. <sup>r</sup> Elias Levita, in his Metburgeman on this word says, that this is cinnabar; he seems to mean a kind of red wood, which dyes use; but observes, that some say it is the spice we call ginger: So David de Pomis renders it in his Lex. Heb. fol. 54. 4. and indeed, 'tis joined with Pepper in Maimon. Tract. Shebitat Asur, c. 2. §. 6. Biath Hamikdash, c. 7. §. 13. and Beracoth, c. 8. §. 7. 'Tis most likely to be a kind of cedar. <sup>s</sup> Vid. Bemidbar Rabba, parash. 12. Shirbasirim Rabba, and Jarchi in loc. <sup>t</sup> Most of the Jewish writers refer this to the time of the giving of the law on mount Sinai, and the setting up of the tabernacle by Moses; so T. Bab. Taamith, fol. 26. 2. Jarchi and Shirbasirim Rabba in loc. Shemoth Rabba, parash. 52. Vajikra Rabba, parash. 20. Bemidbar Rabba, parash. 2. and 12. Prefat, Echa Rabbati, fol. 21. 2. <sup>u</sup> In 1 Kings viii. 65. 'tis said, that Solomon held a feast seven days and seven days, even fourteen days; the reason of which distinction, is because the first seven days were kept for the dedication of the altar, and the other for the feast of tabernacles; Vid. Procop. Gazæus in 3 Reg. viii. 65. p. 208. see 2 Chron. vii. 8, 9. whereas our Targumist would have the feast of tabernacles kept the whole fourteen days, contrary to the command in Lev. xxiii. 34. Vid. R. Levi Ben Gerson, and R. David Kimchi in 1 Reg. viii. 65. <sup>v</sup> In 1 Kings viii. 63. the sacrifice of peace offerings which Solomon offered, were two and twenty thousand oxen, and an hundred and twenty thousand sheep; but the number of burnt offerings is not mentioned. <sup>w</sup> See Not. on Chap. ii. 14.

princes of the congregation, and the wifemen <sup>z</sup>, who fit in the Sanbedrim, who enlighten <sup>a</sup> the world, the people of the house of Israel, and are like to young doves ! yea even the rest of the children of thy congregation, and the people of the earth are righteous as the sons of Jacob <sup>b</sup>, who gathered stones, and made a heap thereof, on the mount of Gilead.

Ver. 2. Thy teeth are like, &c.] How fair are the priests and Levites, who offer up thine offerings, and eat the holy flesh, and the tithes and the offering of fruits ; and are pure from all oppression and rapine, even as clean as Jacob's flocks of sheep, when they were shorn, and came up from the brook Jabok, among which there was no oppression or rapine ; and they are all of them like to one another, and always bear twins ; neither is any barren, or that miscarrieth among them.

Ver. 3. Thy lips are like a thread, &c.] And the lips of the high priest enquire in prayer, on the day of atonement before the Lord, and his words turn the transgressions of Israel, which are like to a thread of scarlet, and make them white <sup>c</sup> as pure wool ; and the king who is their head, is full of the commandments, as a pomegranate ; besides, the Amarcalin and Arbonin, who are next the king, who are righteous ; neither is there any iniquity in them.

Ver. 4. Thy neck is like the tower, &c.] And the head of the school, who is thy master, is powerful in righteousness, and mighty in good works, as David king of Israel, by the word of whose mouth the world is built ; and in the doctrine of the law in which he employs himself, the people of the house of Israel place their confidence ; and they overcome in war, as if they held in their hands all kind of warlike instruments of mighty men.

Ver. 5. Thy two breasts, &c.] Thy two redeemers, which shall redeem thee <sup>e</sup>, Messiah, the son of David, and Messiah, the son of Epbraim, are like

<sup>z</sup> So the words are explained in Shirhashirim Rabba in loc. <sup>a</sup> So Christ calls his disciples the light of the world ; Mat. v. 14. <sup>b</sup> This refers to the account that is given of what passed between Jacob and Laban, in Gen. xxxi. 46, 47. See Jarchi in loc. <sup>c</sup> This is the ford Jacob passed over with his wives and children, when he went out to meet his brother Esau, Gen. xxxii. 22. Mention is made of it in several other places of scripture, Deut. ii. 37. and iii. 16. Josh. xii. 2. <sup>d</sup> The Jews say, that when the scape goat was sent into the wilderness, a scarlet thread was tied to the temple door, which as soon as the goat was arrived in the wilderness, turned white ; which was not only a token to them of its arrival there, but was also an indication of their sins being forgiven ; as it is said, Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow, Isa. i. 18. See Misna, Tract. Yoma, c. 6. § 8. and Ez Chayim in ib. This scarlet thread, they say, ceased turning white, forty years before the destruction of the temple ; which was about the time Jesus Christ, who was typified by the scape goat, made atonement for sin ; Talmud Yoma, fol. 39. col. 2. This tradition the Targumist seems to have in view here. <sup>e</sup> These officers were of the tribe of Levi, Bamidbar Rabba, parash. 3. Their number was never less than seven ; their work was to take the care and charge of the keys of the court ; and one might not open the door, unless all seven were present, Misna, Tract. Shekalim, c. 5. § 2. Maimon. Hilch. Cele Hamikdash, c. 4. § 17. Jarchi in zReg. xii. 9. tho' Kimchi, in zReg. xii. 9. and xxii. 4. thinks that they were treasurers, who had the charge of the publick money. The etymology given of this word is very different. Baal Aruch says, this officer was so called because he was מלך על הכל Lord over all : The same is given in Pajikra Rabba, parash. 5. where Shebna the treasurer, Isa. xxii. 15. is said to be one of these officers. Ellas Levita, in his Methurgeman, says, he was so called because אומר כל he said or prescribed all things. <sup>f</sup> This is from the Greek word ἄρχων, and signifies princes, rulers or governors. <sup>g</sup> The Jews observing different characters given of the Messiah, which they think irreconcilable in one person, have feigned two Messiahs ; the one they call Messiah, the son of David, who shall be a potent, prosperous and victorious prince ; the other Messiah, the son of Epbraim, or Joseph, as he is sometimes called, who shall be exposed to

to Moses and Aaron, the sons of Jocbed; who are compared to young roes that are twins, who by their righteousness fed the people, the house of Israel, forty years in the wilderness, with manna, and with fatted fowls, and water of <sup>a</sup> the well of Miriam.

Ver. 6. Until the day break, &c.] And all the time that the house of Israel held fast, in their hands, the religion of their righteous fathers, were fleeing away those noxious spirits that walk in the night-time, or in the morning, or at noon-day; so that the Shechinah of the glory of the Lord dwelt in the house of the sanctuary, which was built on mount Moriab; for all the noxious and destroying spirits fled at the smell of the sweet incense.

Ver. 7. Thou art all fair, &c.] And when thy people, the house of Israel, do the will of the Lord of the world, he praises them in the highest heavens, and thus he saith; Thou art all fair, O congregation of Israel, and there is no <sup>1</sup> spot in thee.

Ver. 8. Come with me from Lebanon, &c.] The Lord said by his word; Dwell with me, O congregation of Israel, who art like to a modest <sup>k</sup> damsel, and go up with me to the house of the sanctuary; where the heads of the people, which dwell by the river of <sup>1</sup> Amana, and the inhabitants that reside on the top of mount <sup>m</sup> Ta'ga, and the people, which are in Hermon, shall bring gifts unto thee; and they that inhabit the strong, fortified cities, which are as powerful as lions, shall pay tribute to thee; yea, an offering shall be brought from the cities of the mountains, which are mightier than the leopards.

Ver. 9. Thou hast ravished my heart, &c.] Fixed upon the <sup>n</sup> table of my heart is thy love, O my sister, the congregation of Israel, who art like to a modest damsel; fixed upon the table of my heart, is the love of the least of thy children, who is righteous as one of the great men of the Sanhedrim, as one of the kings <sup>o</sup> of the house of Judah, on whose neck the crown of the kingdom is put.

Ver. 10. How fair is thy love, &c.] How fair is thy love to me, my sister, the congregation of Israel, who art like to a modest damsel: How excellent is thy love to me, more than the <sup>p</sup> seventy nations; and the good <sup>q</sup> name of thy righteous ones is more excellent than all spices.

Ver. 11. Thy lips, O my spouse, &c.] And when the priests pray in the holy court, their lips drop as the honey comb; and so does thy tongue, O thou thou modest damsel, when thou deliverest songs and hymns, sweet as milk and honey; and the smell of the priests garments is as the smell of Lebanon.

Aben Ezra* in ibid. <sup>n</sup> Compare with this, 2 Cor. iii. 3. <sup>o</sup> Many of the kings of the house of Judah, were holy and good men; so Aben Ezra in loc. <sup>p</sup> See Not. in Chap. i. 2. <sup>q</sup> So Jarchi in loc.

Ver. 12. A garden inclosed, &c.] Thy women, which are married to modest men, are as a modest damsel, and as the garden of Eden, into which no man hath power to enter, except the righteous, whose souls are by angels carried into it; and the virgins are hid and concealed in private chambers; and are sealed up, because they are as a fountain of living water, which comes forth from under the tree, and is parted to the four heads of the rivers; but unless it was sealed with the great and holy name, it would go forth and flow, and overflow all the world.

Ver. 13. Thy plants are an orchard, &c.] And thy young men are full of the commandments, as pomegranates, and love their wives, and beget children as righteous as themselves; and their smell therefore is as the excellent spices of the garden of Eden, even camphires with nards.

Ver. 14. Spikenard and saffron, &c.] Nard and saffron, and sweet calamus and cinnamon, with all trees of frankincense, pure myrrh, and lign aloes, with all kind of spices.

Ver. 15. A fountain of gardens, &c.] And the waters of Siloah * go softly, with the rest of the waters, which flow from Lebanon, to water the land of Israel; because they study in the words of the law, which are like to a well of living water, and in the righteousness of pouring of water, which they pour

* Vid Jarchi in loc. * It was an antient opinion of the Jews, that the ministry of angels was used in carrying the souls of saints to heaven: Thus in Debarim Rabba, parash. 11. several angels are ordered by God to bring the soul of Moses to him. Agreeable to this notion, 'tis said in Luke xvi. 22. that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom. * It was very usual with the eastern people, to keep their virgins, especially those of note and esteem, very reclusive, and not admit them to publick or common conversation, but oblige them to abide much within doors: Hence they are called in the Hebrew language, עַלְמֵי בֵּית from the word עָלָה which signifies to hide or cover, because they were not exposed to publick view; wherefore the author of the second book of Maccabees calls them καλῶδες παρθένους, virgins that were shut up, i. e. in the houses of their parents, in private chambers, as the Targumist here says, see 2 Macc. iii. 19. * Regard seems to be had to the river which went out of Eden, mentioned in Gen. ii. 10. and was parted into four heads or rivers, the names of which were Pison, Gibon, Hiddekel and Euphrates. The cabbalists suppose a great many mysteries to be contained therein; see Zohar in Gen. fol. 85. 2. and in Exod. fol. 34. 3. and 37. 2. and in Lev. fol. 24. 3. where the name of this river is said to be Jobel, according to Jer. xvi. 8. and so it is in Vajikra Rabba, parash. 22. and in Bemidbar Rabba, parash. 21. * See Isa. viii. 6. and Aben Ezra upon it, who expounds the text in Isaiah by this in Canticles. Jarchi in Isa. viii. 6. says the name of this fountain was Gibon: In the new testament 'tis called Siloam, John ix. 7, 11. it was a fountain near Jerusalem, Neh. iii. 15. * The Paraphrast has here regard to a ceremony used at the feast of tabernacles, when the people fetched water from Siloah, and brought it to the Priest, who poured it upon the altar with the wine of the daily sacrifice; this they say Moses received from God at mount Sinai; though it is not written. This ceremony of drawing and pouring water at those times, was attended with all the demonstrations of joy imaginable, as shouting, leaping, dancing, singing, blowing of trumpets, throwing of citrons, illumination of houses, &c. infomuch that they say, that those who never saw the rejoicing of drawing water, never saw rejoicing in their lives, Misna Tract. Succa. c. 4. § 9, 10. and c. 5. § 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. and Jarchi, and Ez Chayim in ib. Maimon. Tract. Tamidin, c. 10. § 6, 7, 8. and Cele Hamikdash, c. 7. § 8. and c. 8. § 6. They fancied the Holy Ghost was much delighted with this vain joy of theirs; nay, that in drawing water they drew him, i. e. procured his descent upon them, and abode with them as a spirit of prophecy; which they say Jonah obtained at this time, and in this way; and therefore, whilst they were performing this ceremony pour upon the altar, in the house of the sanctuary, that is. built in Jerusalem, which is called * Lebanon.

Ver. 16. Awake, O north wind, &c.] And at the north side <sup>a</sup> was a table, and upon it <sup>b</sup> twelve loaves of shew bread, and at the south side <sup>c</sup> was the lamp to give light; and upon the altar, the priests offered up the offerings, and caused the sweet incense to ascend from thence. The congregation of Israel said, Let God my beloved come into the house of the sanctuary, and graciously accept the offerings of his people.

C H A P. V.

VER. 1. I am come into my garden, &c.] The holy blessed God said unto his people, the house of Israel; I am come into the house of my sanctuary, which thou hast built for me, O my sister, the congregation of Israel, who art like to a modest damsel: I have caused my Shechinah to dwell with thee <sup>d</sup>; I have received thy sweet incense, which thou hast made on my account; I have sent fire from heaven, and it hath devoured the burnt offerings, and the holy drink offerings; the libation of the red and white wine is graciously received by me, which the priests pour out upon mine altar. Now therefore come ye priests that love my commandments, and eat what is left of the offerings, and delight yourselves with those good things which are prepared for you.

Ver. 2. I sleep, but my heart waketh, &c.] After all these words the people of the house of Israel sinned, and he delivered them into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, who carried them into captivity; and they were in the captivity, like a man asleep, that cannot be awaked out of his sleep; wherefore the voice of the Holy Ghost warned them by the prophets, and awaked them out of the sleep of their hearts: Then answered the Lord of the whole world, and thus he said; Return by repentance, open thy mouth, rejoice and shew forth my praise, my sister, my love, O congregation of Israel, who art like to a dove for the perfection of thy works; for the hair of my head is filled with thy tears, as a man, the hair of whose head is wet with the dew of heaven; and my locks are filled with the drops of thine eyes, as a man whose locks are full of the drops of rain which descend in the night.

With joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation*, which they understand of the Holy Ghost, Beresbit Rabba, parath. 70. Midrash Ruth, fol. 32. 2. Jarchi and Ez Chayim in Misna, ubi supra: To this ceremony Christ is thought to allude, when in the last day, the great day of this feast of tabernacles, he stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink: He that believeth on me, as the scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water; but this spake he of the spirit, &c. John vii. 37, 38, 39. Vid. Tremell. in ib. <sup>2</sup> So the temple is called in Zech. xi. 1. Open thy doors, O Lebanon, that the fire may devour thy cedars, according to the mind of several Jewish interpreters; who, out of Talmud Yoma, fol. 39. 2. relate, that forty years before the destruction of the temple the doors thereof opened of themselves; at which Jochanan Ben Zaccai said, O temple, temple: Now know I that thy destruction is at hand; for so prophesied Zechariah, the son of Ido, of thee; Open thy doors, &c. Vid. *R. Ver. 3. I have put off my coat, &c.] The congregation of Israel answered in the presence of the prophets; Behold, now have I removed from thee the yoke of his commandments, and have served the idols of the nations; wherefore, how can I have the face to return to him again? The Lord of the world answered them by the prophets, saying; And behold, now I also have removed my Shechinah from thee, and how shall I return again, seeing thou hast done evil works? for I have washed my feet from thine uncleanness, and how shall I defile them in the midst of thee with thy evil works?

Ver. 4. My beloved put in his hand, &c.] When it appeared manifest before the Lord, that the people of the house of Israel would not repent and turn unto him, he stretched forth <sup>f</sup> his mighty arm against the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh, on the other side of Jordan; and he delivered them into the hand of Sennacherib, the king of Assyria, who carried them into captivity, <sup>g</sup> to Lachlach, and Chabor, and to the rivers of Gozan, and cities of Media; and he took out of their hands the molten calf, which Jeroboam, the wicked, set in Leshem-Dan, which was called <sup>h</sup> Pamias, in the days of Pekah, the son of Remaliab; and when I heard it, my bowels were moved towards them.

Ver. 5. I rose up to open to my beloved, &c.] And when the mighty stroke of the Lord lay heavy upon me, I repented of my works; and the priests offered up offerings, and burnt the sweet incense, but it was not graciously received, for the Lord of the world shut the doors <sup>i</sup> of repentance to my face.

Ver. 6. I opened to my beloved, &c.] The congregation of Israel said; I was willing to seek instruction from the Lord, but he removed his Shechinah from me; and my soul desired the voice of his words; I sought the Shechinah of his glory, but I found it not; I prayed before him, but he covered the heavens with <sup>k</sup> clouds, and did not receive my prayer.

Ver. 7. The watchmen that went about the city, &c.] The Chaldeans <sup>l</sup> which kept the ways, and besieged the city of Jerusalem all round, joined themselves to me; some of mine they slew with the sword, and others they carried into captivity; they took the crown royal from off the neck of Zedekiah

Both Baal Aruch, and David de Pomis, say, that פמ'אס Pamias was a cave at the head of the river Jordan; and 'tis asserted by several of the Rabbins, that Jordan took its rise from hence, and therefore say, that that river was so called, ש'יורר כדן because it descended from Dan, i. e. from Leshem Dan, or Pamias, Talmud Baba Bathra, fol. 74. col. 2. and Bechoroth, fol. 55. col. 1. Megilla, fol. 6. 1. and Gloss. in *ib. This in Bereshith Rabba, parath. 63. is called פנ'אס Panias, as it is also by Josephus; and no doubt, is the same which Pliny, in Nat. hist. l. 5. c. 18. calls Paneas; who also makes mention, in c. 15. of a fountain of the same name, from whence he says, the river Jordan sprung: The same is observed by Solinus, in his Polyhistor. c. 48. who calls it by the name of Peneas; Eusebius in his Ecll. hist. l. 7. c. 17. says, that the Phœnicians call Cæsarea Philippi, Paneas, and speaks of a mountain called Paneius, from whence the river Jordan has its original. <sup>l</sup> In Shirbasbirim Rabba, in Chap. v. 2. mention is made of פתח של תשובה the gate of repentance, which the Lord desired the Israelites to open to him. Agreeable to this phrase 'tis observed in Agg. xiv. 27. that God had opened unto the Gentiles, ד'עצא נ'ס'עו, the door of faith. <sup>k</sup> See Lam. iii. 44. <sup>l</sup> Jarbi by these watchmen understands Nebuchadnezzar and his army. *R. Ver. 8. I charge you, O daughters of Jerusalem, &c.] The congregation of Israel said; I charge you, O ye prophets, by the decree of the word of the Lord, that if your love manifests himself unto you, that you tell him, that I am sick of love, with which I love him.

Ver. 9. What is thy beloved, &c.] The prophets answered and said unto the house of Israel; <sup>a</sup> What is this God thou art seeking to worship, O congregation of Israel, who art fairer than all the nations? What is this God thou art desirous to fear, that thou dost so charge us?

Ver. 10. My beloved is white and ruddy, &c.] Wherefore the congregation of Israel began to speak in the praise of the Lord of the world, and thus she said; That God I desire to serve, who in the day is covered with a garment <sup>a</sup> white as snow, <sup>p</sup> and the brightness of the glory of the Lord, whose face shines as fire, because of the greatness of wisdom and knowledge; for he is making new things every day, and will manifest them to his people in the <sup>a</sup> great day; and his banner is over ten thousand times ten thousand angels, who minister before him.

Ver. 11. His head is as the most fine gold, &c.] His law, <sup>r</sup> which is more desirable than the best gold, and the interpretation of the words thereof, in which are senses, <sup>s</sup> heaps upon heaps, and the commandments to them that keep them are white as snow, but to those that do not keep them are black as the wings of a raven.

Ver. 12. His eyes are as the eyes of doves, &c.] His eyes look continually <sup>t</sup> upon Jerusalem, to do good unto it, and to bless it from the beginning of the year unto the end of the year, as doves which stand and look upon the water courses, because of the righteousness of those who sit in the Sanhedrim, who study in the law, and give light to a cause, that it may be smooth as milk; and they sit in the house of the school, and wait <sup>u</sup> in judgment until they have finished either for absolution or condemnation.

<sup>m</sup> See Jer. lii. 7, 9, 11. <sup>n</sup> Vid. Jarchi, and Shirhashirim Rabba, in loc. <sup>o</sup> So the antient of days is represented in Dan. vii. 9. <sup>p</sup> In some exemplars these following words are inserted, And studies in the twenty four books of the law, and in the words of prophecy, and in the holy writings, and in the night time employs himself in the six parts of the Mishna; which Buxtorf has omitted in his bible, tho' he makes mention of them in his Recensio operis Talmud. p. 232. and indeed they greatly lessen the glory of the divine being, though they are designed to extol and magnify the Mishna, or oral law.

<sup>q</sup> i. e. The day of judgment, which in Jude, ver. 6. is called ἡμέρας πυρός ἡμέρας, the judgment of the great day; when not only the hidden things of darkness, and the counsels of the hearts will be made manifest, 1 Cor. iv. 5. but the judgments of God also, Rev. xv. 4.

<sup>r</sup> The same way the words are explained in Shirhashirim Rabba, and by Jarchi in loc. and in Pajikra Rabba, parash. 19. By this head, R. Aben Ezra understands the throne of glory. <sup>s</sup> i. e. A variety or a great multitude of them; for the Jews suppose the law may be interpreted various ways, and that there is not the least thing in it but what contains a great many mysteries, See Not. on Chap. 1. 11.

Ver. 13. His cheeks are as a bed of spices, &c.] The two tables of stone which he gave unto his people are written in ten lines, like to the rows of a spice garden, producing acute meanings and senses, even as a garden produces spices; and the lips of his wisdom which study in the law, drop senses on every side; and the speech of their mouths is as the choice myrrh.

Ver. 14. His bands are as gold rings, &c.] The twelve tribes of Jacob his servant are included in the plate of the holy crown of gold, and are engraven upon the twelve precious stones with the three fathers of the world, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Reuben is engraven on Achmad; Simeon is engraven upon Akik; Levi is engraven on Barkan and Affran; Judah is engraven on Cachale; Issachar is engraven on Ismorad; Zebulon is engraven on Gibar; Dan is engraven on Birla; Naphtali is engraven on Esfhor; Gad is engraven on Tabeag; Asher is engraven on Frozag; Joseph is engraven on Meribag; Benjamin is engraven on Apantor; these are like to the twelve celestial signs, shining as lamps, polished in their works like ivory, and bright as sapphires.

Ver. 15. His legs are as pillars of marble, &c.] And the righteous they are the pillars of the world; set upon sockets of the best gold; these are the words

* So Jarchi by his cheeks understands the words of mount Sinai. * Every commandment was wrote in a distinct line by itself, five on one table and five on the other. * In the same order are the names of the twelve tribes as engraven on so many precious stones mentioned in Targum Jerus. in Exod. xxviii. 17, 18, 19, 20. in Shemoth Rabba, parash. 38. and in Bemidbar Rabba, parash. 2. tho' different names are given of the pretious stones; the names of them in the Rabbot are the same with those in Exod. xxviii. in the Targum Jer. are Chaldee names, and in this paraphrase they are different from them. Reuben's stone was the Sardius, Heb. Odem, Onk. Samkan, Jon. Semuktha, Jerus. Samkatha; it is so called by all those names from the redness of its colour; here it is called Achmad, perhaps from אֲחַמַּד because it is very desirable. Simeon's stone was the Topaz, Heb. Pitdah, Onk. Yarkun, Jon. and Jerus. Yarketba, because of its green colour; here it is called Akik, but what Gem is intended by it is not certain. Levi's stone was the Carbuncle, Heb. Barketh, Jon. and Jerus. Barketha, and here Barkan, and so in Onk. and is so called because of its bright and glittering light. Judah's stone was the Emerald, Heb. Nopheh, Onk. Ismaradin, Jon. Ismorad, both seem to mean the Smaragd, Jerus. Cadcedana, or the Chalcedony, here it is called Cachale, it is thought to be the Smaragd. See Elie Levite's Metburgeman, Buxtorf. and Schindler. in voce. Issachar's stone was the Sapphire, Heb. Sapphir, Onk. Shabazz, Jon. Sappbirinon, Jerus. Sampuryana, all intend the Sapphire; here it is called Ismorad, or the Smaragd. Zebulon's stone was the Diamond, Heb. Tahalom, Onk. Sabbalom; it bears those names from the hardness of it; Jon. Cadcodin or Chalcedony, Jerus. En Eglā, the calve's eye; here it is called Gibar, which some think to be the Jasper. See Buxtorf. in voce. Dan's stone was the Ligure, Heb. Leshem, Onk. Kankire, Jon. Kankirinun, Jerus. Zuzin; here it is called Birla, which seems to be the Beryl. Naphtali's stone was the Agate, Heb. Sheba, Onk. Tarkia, Jon. Arkin, Jerus. Birzalin; and here it is called Esfhor, which may be thought to be the Sapphire. Gad's stone was the Amethyst, Heb. Achlanuh, Onk. and Jon. En Eglā, the calve's eye, Jerus. Smaradin, the Smaragd; and here it is called Tabeag, but what is meant by it I know not. Asher's stone was the Beryl, Heb. Tarfisb, Onk. Jon. and Jerus. Crum Yamna, here it is called Frozag; Elias in his Metburgeman says, That a Topaz in the German language is called Frozam. Joseph's stone was the Onyx, Heb. Sholam, Onk. Burla, Jon. Berleuath, both seem to intend the Beryl; Jerus. Bdoleha or Bde'lim, here it is called Meribag, which some take to be the Onyx. See Buxtorf. in voce. Benjamin's stone was the Jasper, Heb. Jeshepeh, Jerus. Margalita, a pearl, Onk. Pantere, Jon. Apanturin, and here Apantor; which Elias in his Metburgeman says is so called because it comes from Pontus, but rather because some sorts of Jaspers are variegated and spotted like Panthers. In the same order were the names of the twelve tribes engraven, both upon the stones in the breast plate, and on the two Onyx stones upon the shoulders of the Ephod, according to Maimon. Traat. Crie Hamikdash, c. 9. §. 1. 7. 9. * So these Sockets of fine Gold are explained in Shirhashirim Rabba, and by Jarchi in loc. in Vajikra Rabba, parash. 25. and in Bemidbar Rabba, parash. 10.

words of the law, in which they study, and reprove the people of the house of Israel, that they may do his will; and he is filled with compassion to them, as an old man, and makes the transgressions of the house of Israel as white as snow; and is ready to make victory and war among the nations who have transgressed his word, as a young man, who is strong and robust as the cedars.

Ver. 16. His mouth is most sweet, &c.] The words of his mouth are sweet as honey, and all his commandments are more desirable to his wisemen than gold and silver; this is the praise of God, who is my beloved, and this is the power of the might of the Lord, who is dear to me, O ye prophets, who prophesy in Jerusalem.

C H A P. VI.

VER. 1. Whither is thy beloved gone, &c.] The prophets replied, when they heard the praise of the Lord from the mouth of the congregation of Israel, and thus they said; For what offence is the Shechinah of the Lord removed from thee, O thou who art fairer in thy works than all the nations? and which way did thy beloved turn himself when he removed from thy sanctuary? the congregation of Israel said, Because of the sins, transgressions and rebellions which were found in me. The prophets said, But now return by repentance, and let us arise, both thou and we, and we will pray before him, and seek mercy with thee.

Ver. 2. My beloved is gone down into his garden, &c.] And the Lord of the world graciously received their prayer, and came down to the Sanhedrim of the wise men at Babylon, and gave refreshment unto his people, and brought them out of their captivity by the hands of Cyrus, and Ezra, and Nehemiah, and Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and the elders of Judah; and they built the house of the sanctuary, and appointed priests over the offerings, and Levites over the charge of the holy commandment; and he sent fire from heaven and graciously received the offerings, and the sweet incense; and as a man supplies his own beloved son with dainties, so did he deliciously feed them; and as a man that gathereth roses out of the plains, so did he gather them out of Babylon.

Ver. 3. I am my beloved's, &c.] And in that day I served the Lord of the world, who is my beloved; and my beloved caused the holy Shechinah to dwell with me, and he fed me with dainties.

Ver. 4. Thou art beautiful, O my love, &c.] The Lord said by his word; How fair art thou, my love, when thou art willing to perform my pleasure! beautiful is the house of the sanctuary which thou hast built for me as the former sanctuary, which Solomon, king in Jerusalem, built for me; and thy dread was upon all the people in the day that thy four standards marched in the wilderness.

Ver. 5. Turn away thine eyes from me, &c.] Set thy doctors the wise men of the great congregation in a circle over against me; for these made me their king king (or consulted me) in the captivity, and fixed the school for the teaching of my law; and the rest of thy nobles, and the people of the earth justified me by the word of their mouth, as the sons of Jacob, who gathered stones and made an heap <sup>b</sup> upon the mount of Gilead.

Ver. 6. Thy teeth are as a flock of sheep, &c.] and the priests and Levites, who eat thine offerings, and the holy tithes, and the oblation of fruits, are pure from all oppression and rapine; for they are as clean as Jacob's flocks of sheep, when they came up from the brook <sup>c</sup> Jabok, in whom there was no oppression or rapine; but they are all of them like one another, and they always bear twins, neither is there any that miscarrieth or is barren among them.

Ver. 7. As a piece of a pomegranate, &c.] And the kingdom of the house of the Hasmoneans <sup>d</sup> are all of them full of the commandments, even as a pomegranate, besides Matthias the high-priest and his sons, who are more righteous than them all, who very eagerly established the commandments, and the words of the law.

Ver. 8. There are threescore queens, &c.] At that time the Grecians arose and gathered sixty kings of the children of <sup>e</sup> Esau clothed with coats of mail, riding upon horses, and horsemen, and eighty dukes of the children of Ismael riding upon elephants, besides the rest of the nations and languages, of which there's no number; and they appointed king Alexander to be the general over them, and they came to make war against Jerusalem.

Ver. 9. My dove, my undefiled is but one, &c.] And at that time the congregation of Israel, which is like to an unblemish'd dove, was serving her Lord with a single heart, and took hold of the law, and studied in the words of the law with a perfect heart; and her righteousness was as pure as in the day when she came out of Egypt; lo, then the sons of the Hasmoneans and Matthias, and all the people of Israel, went forth and made war with them, and the Lord delivered them into their hands; which when the inhabitants of the provinces saw, they blessed them, and the kingdoms of the earth, and the governors, and they praised them.

<sup>b</sup> See not. on Chap. iv. 1. <sup>c</sup> See not. on Chap. iv. 2. <sup>d</sup> Schindler in his Lex. Pentaglott. fol. 680. says, that Mattathias and his posterity were called so from הַשְׁמֹנִי Hafmon, one of their ancestors; though I think there is no evidence of any of their ancestors being of that name. The Jewish writers pretty generally agree, that they were so called from the word הַשְׁמֹנִי Hafmannim, which signifies princes, or great persons, and is so used in Psal. lxxviii. 32. for they had both the high-priesthood and the princely government in their hands. So R. Aben Ezra, R. David Kimchi, and R. Sol. Ben Melet in Psal. lxxviii. 32. David de Pomis, Lex. Heb. fol. 42. 1. and so likewise Scaliger de Emend. Temp. lib. 5. p. 436. 437. who observes that Mattathias was never so called, nor was he an high-priest, though the Targumist here calls him so, but a common priest of the course of Jebaiarib, and of the town of Modun. See 1 Maccab. ii. 1. and that this family began to be called by the name of the Hasmoneans, from the times of Simon Hyrcanus, who was both high priest and prince of the Jewish nation; which kind of government continued in that family unto the times of Herod the great, who destroyed both it and them; and this well agrees with what the Paraphrast here says, who manifestly distinguishes the kingdom of the house of the Hasmoneans, from Mattathias and his sons, i. e. Judas Maccabeus, and Jonathan. Of these Hasmoneans, Jarchi and Aben Ezra explain the 10th and 12th verses of this chapter. Vid. Fuller. Miscell. Sacra, l. 2. c. 13. p. 258. <sup>e</sup> Vid. Aben Ezra and Jarchi in loc. and Bemidbar Rabba, parash. 14. where those sixty queens and eighty concubines are interpreted of the sons of Noah, Abraham, Ham, Ismael and Esau.

Ver. 10. Who is she that looketh forth as the morning, &c.] The nations said, How splendid are the works of this people as the morning! fair are their young men as the moon, and their righteousness as clear as the sun; and their dread was upon all the inhabitants of the earth, in the time their <sup>f</sup> four standards marched in the wilderness.

Ver. 11. I went down into the garden of nuts, &c.] The Lord of the world said; in the second <sup>e</sup> temple, which was built <sup>a</sup> by the hands of Cyrus, I will cause my Shechinah to dwell, to behold the good works of my people, and and to see whether the wisemen, who are like to a vine, multiply and increase, and whether their branches are full of good works, as the pomegranates.

Ver. 12. Or ever I was aware, &c.] And when it appeared manifest before the Lord, that they were righteous, and studied in the law, the Lord said by his word; I will not humble them any more, yea, I will not consume them, but will consult with my self to do them good, and to set them, even their excellent ones in the chariots of <sup>1</sup> kings, because of the worthiness of the righteous of that generation, who are like in their works to Abraham their father.

Ver. 13. Return, Return, O Shulamite, &c.] Return unto me, O congregation of Israel; return unto Jerusalem; return unto the house of the doctrine of the law; return to receive the prophecy from the prophets, who have prophesied in the name of the word of the Lord; for what is your goodness, ye lying prophets, to make the people of Jerusalem go astray by your prophecies? for ye speak perverse things against the word of the Lord, to profane the camp of Israel and Judah.

C H A P. VII.

VER. 1. How beautiful are thy feet with shoes, &c.] Solomon said by the spirit of prophecy from the Lord; How beautiful are the feet of the Israelites, when they come up to appear before the Lord <sup>k</sup> three times a year, in sandals of badger skin, and offer up their vows, and free-will offerings; and their sons which come out of their loins, are fair as the gems which were fixed upon the holy <sup>1</sup> crown that Bezaleel the artificer made for Aaron the priest.

<sup>1</sup> In Shirhashirim Rabba in loc. these words are referred to the deliverance of the Israelites out of Egypt, and their exaltation over the nations in the land of Canaan, to the raising of David to the throne of Israel, after he had been persecuted by Saul, and to the advancement of Mordecai to great dignity, in Babylon, after his mourning in sackcloth and ashes; all which are represented as severally surprizing to them.

<sup>1</sup> So the plate of gold was called, on which was inscribed, holiness to the Lord, which was fixed to the fore front of the mitre on Aaron's forehead; see Exod. xxviii. 36. and xxxix. 30. This plate was two fingers broad, and reached from ear to ear; holiness to the Lord were wrote upon it in great letters, standing out, and that either in one line or in two lines; if in two lines, holiness was wrote below, and to the Lord, above, Maimon. Hilch. Cele Hamikdash, c. 9. §. 1. 2. and Ceseph. Misna. ib. and Tarchi in Exod. xxviii. 36.

Ver. 2. Thy navel is like a round goblet, &c.] And the head of thy school, by whose righteousness all the world is nourished, even as the fetus receives its nourishment through its navel, in its mother's bowels; who shines in the law, as the orb of the moon, when he comes to pronounce pure or unclean, to justify or condemn; neither do the words of the law ever fail from his mouth, even as the waters of the great river, which proceeds from Eden, never <sup>m</sup> fail; and the seventy wisemen are round about him, as a round <sup>n</sup> floor whose treasures are full of the holy tithes and vows, and free-will offerings, which Exra the priest, and Zerrubbabel, and Joshuah, and Nehemiah, and Mordecai, Bilshan, men of the great <sup>o</sup> congregation, who are like to roses, decreed for them, because they had strength to study in the law day and night.

Ver. 3. Thy two breasts are like two young ones, &c.] Thy <sup>p</sup> two redeemers, which shall redeem thee, Messiah, the son of David, and Messiah, the son of Ephraim, are like to Moses and Aaron, the sons of Jochebed, who are compared to two young ones that are twins.

Ver. 4. Thy neck is as a tower of ivory, &c.] And <sup>q</sup> the father of the house of judgment, who determines thy causes, is mighty over thy people to bind them, and to bring him forth, who is condemned in judgment; even to bring him forth as Solomon the king, who made a tower of ivory, and subjected the people of the house of Israel, and returned them to the Lord of the world. Thy scribes are full of wisdom, as pools of water; and they know how to number the computations of the <sup>r</sup> intercalations; and they intercalate the years; and fix the beginning of the months, and the beginning of the years at the gate

<sup>o</sup> This was the Sanhedrim or great council, collected by Exra the Scribe, after the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity, of which he was president. This assembly consisted of an hundred and twenty persons, of which, these here mentioned were the chief. There are others reckoned with them by some, as the three prophets, Haggai, Zechariah and Malachi, with Daniel, Hananiah, Misbael, Azariab, Seraiah, Realiab, Mispar, Bigvai, Rebum, and Baanab: The last of this venerable body of men, they say, was Simeon the just; who, about forty years after the building of the second temple, met Alexander the great coming against Jerusalem, and appealed him: These men were called אֲנָשֵׁי כְנֶסֶת הַגְּדוֹלָה the men of the great congregation, because they restored the law to its pristine glory; and purged the Jewish church from those corruptions which had crept into it during the captivity in Babylon. They are said to have received the oral law from the prophets, who had received it from the elders, and they from Joshua, and Joshua from Moses, and to have transmitted it down to posterity, Pirke Aboth, c. 1. §. 1, 2. and Tarchi in *ib. Ver. 5. Thine head upon thee is like Carmel, &c.] The king who is set over thee, an head, is righteous as Elijah the prophet, who was jealous with a jealousy for the Lord of heaven, and slew the false prophets in the mount of Carmel, and returned the people of the house of Israel, to the fear of the Lord God; and the poor of the people, which go with a bowed down head, because they are poor, shall be clothed in purple, as Daniel was clothed in the city of Babylon, and Mordecai in Shushan, because of the righteousness of Abraham, who long before consulted the Lord of the world; and because of Isaac, whom his father bound, in order to offer him up; and because of the holiness of Jacob, who pilled the rods in the gutters.

Ver. 6. How fair and how pleasant art thou, &c.] King Solomon said; How beautiful art thou, O congregation of Israel, when thou bearest upon thee the yoke of my kingdom; when I correct thee with chastisements for thy transgressions, and thou bearest them in love, and they appear in thy sight as delicious dainties!

Ver. 7. This thy stature is like to a palm-tree, &c.] And when thy * priests spread their hands in prayer, and bless their brethren, the house of Israel, the four fingers of their hands are spread like the branches of the palm-tree, and their stature is as the Date, and thy congregations stand face to face over against the priests, and their faces are bowed to the earth like a cluster of grapes.

Ver. 9. And the roof of thy mouth like the best wine, &c.] Daniel and his companions said ; We will surely take upon us the decree of the word of the Lord, as Abraham our father, who is compared to old wine, took it upon him ; and we will walk in the ways which are right, before him, even as Elijah and Elisba, the prophets, walked, through whose righteousness the dead, which are like to a man asleep, were raised ; and as Ezekiel, the son of Buzi, the priest, by the prophecy of whose mouth those who were asleep were awaked, even the dead which were in the valley of * Dura.

Ver. 10. I am my beloved's, &c.] Jerusalem † said ; All the time that I was walking in the way of the Lord of the world, he caused his Shechinah to dwell with me, and his desire was towards me ; but when I turned aside out of his paths, he removed his Shechinah from me, and carried me away among the nations ; and they ruled over me as a man rules over his wife.

Ver. 11. Come my beloved, let us go forth into the field, &c.] When the people of the house of Israel sinned, the Lord carried them into captivity, into the land of Seir, the fields of Edom. The congregation of Israel said ; I beseech thee, O Lord of the whole world, receive my prayer which I have prayed before thee, in the cities of the captivity, and in the provinces of the people.

Ver. 12. Let us go up early to the vineyards, &c.] The children of Israel said one to another ; Let us get up early in the morning, and let us go to the synagogue, and to the school, and let us search in the book of the law, and see whether ‡ the time of the redemption of the people of the house of Israel, who are like to a vine, is come, that they may be redeemed out of their captivity ; and let us enquire of the wisemen, whether the righteousness of the righteous, who are full of the commandments as pomegranates, is made manifest before the Lord ; whether the time is come to go up to Jerusalem, there to give praise to the God of heaven, and to offer up the burnt-offerings, and the holy drink-offerings.

Ver. 13. The mandrakes give a smell, &c.] And when it is the pleasure of the Lord to redeem his people out of captivity, it shall be said to the king Messiah ; Now is the end of the captivity compleated, and the righteousness of the righteous is become sweet before me, as the smell of balsam ; and the wisemen fix their habitations by the gates of the school ; they study in the words words of the Scribes<sup>a</sup>, and in the words of the law; Arise now ~~take~~ the kingdom which I have reserved for thee.

C H A P. VIII.

VER. 1. O that thou wert as my brother, &c.] And when the king Messiah<sup>b</sup> shall be revealed unto the congregation of Israel, the children of Israel shall say unto him; Be thou with us for a brother, and let us go up to Jerusalem, and let us suck with thee, the senses of the law, as a sucking child, sucketh the breasts of its mother; for all the time that I was wandering without my own land, whenever I remembered the name of the great God, and laid down my life for the sake of his deity, even the nations of the earth did not despise me.

Ver. 2. I would lead thee and bring thee, &c.] I will lead thee, O king Messiah, and bring thee to the house of my sanctuary; and thou shalt teach me to fear the Lord, and to walk in his paths, and there will we keep<sup>c</sup> the feast of

<sup>a</sup> So: new and old are interpreted in T. B. Erubin, fol. 21. 2. & Gloss in ib. The words of the Scribes are mentioned before the words of the law, and are indeed, by the Jews, preferred unto them: They say the words of the beloved, i. e. the wisemen, are better than the wine of the law; so they paraphrase the words in Cant. i. 2. they assert that the law cannot be understood without the words of the Scribes; that the oral law is the foundation of the written law, and not the written law the foundation of the oral law; and that he that transgresses the words of the wise men, as much deserves death as though he had been guilty of idolatry, murder, or adultery, or prophanes the sabbath; nay, that if these say, their right-hand is their left, and their left-hand is their right, they are obliged to hearken to them, Shirhashirim Rabba in c. 1, 2. Bemidbar Rabba, parash. 14. Matteh Dan, Dialog. 3. fol. 31. 3. Jarchi in Deut. xvii. 11. Vid. Buxtorf. Recensio Operis Talmud. p. 222, 223, &c.

<sup>b</sup> The Jews very seldom speak of the birth or nativity of the Messiah, as future, but only of a revelation, or discovery of him to them, which they expect; for they are under self-convictions, that he was born long since: Some of them say he was born on the day the house of the sanctuary was destroyed, but is hid because of their sins and transgressions, and that either in the sea, or in the walks of the garden of Eden; and some say that he sits among the lepers, at the gates of Rome, from whence they expect he will come unto them, R. Aben Ezra in Cant. vii. 5. Targum in Mic. iv. 8. Talmud Sanhedrim, fol. 98. col. 2. Targum Jerus. in Exod. xii. 42. Vid. Justin Martyr. dialog. cum Trypho. p. 226.

<sup>c</sup> The Jews expect a very sumptuous feast to be made for the righteous in the days of the Messiah, which will consist of all sorts of flesh, fish and fowl, of plenty of generous wine, and of a variety of delicious fruit, some particulars of which they have thought fit to give, and are as follow; 1st, They say an exceeding large ox shall be served up, which they take to be the Bihemoth in Job xl. of which they say many things that seem incredible; as that it lies upon a thousand hills, and feeds upon them all, and drinks up all the waters which are gathered together, in a year's time, in the river Jordan, at one draught, Vajikra Rabba, parash. 22. Bemidbar Rabba, parash. 21. Targum in Psal. l. 10 Jarchi in ib. and in Job xl. 20. 2<sup>dly</sup>, The next dish is the Leviathan and his mate, which they say, are the great whales mentioned in Gen. i. 21. The male, they say, God castrated, and the female he slew, and salted it against this feast, Talmud Baba Batbra, fol. 74. 2. Targum Jon. Jarchi and Baal Hatturim in Gen. i. 21. Vajikra Rabba, parash. 13. Targum Sec. in Ester iii. 7. Aben Ezra in Dan. xii. 2. 3<sup>dly</sup>, They speak of an exceeding large fowl, which they call Ziz, that shall be one part of this entertainment, of which they say many things incredible; as particularly, that when its feet are upon the earth, its head reaches the heavens, and when it stretches out its wings, they cover the body of the sun, Baba Batbra, fol. 73. col. 2. Targum and Kimchi in Psal. l. 10. Vajikra Rabba, parash. 22. 4<sup>thly</sup>, After all this shall be served up a variety of the most pleasant and delightful fruits, which are in the garden of Eden, which the Targumist here speaks of. And, Lastly, The wine which will then be used, will be generous old wine, which, as it is said, here and elsewhere, was kept in the grape from the

of Leviathan, and drink old wine, which has been reserved in its grapes ever since the day the world was created, and of the pomegranates, the fruits which are prepared for the righteous in the garden of Eden.

Ver. 3. His left-hand should be under my head, &c.] The congregation of Israel said; I am chosen above all people, because I have bound the Tephillin<sup>a</sup> upon my left-hand, and upon my head, and the Mezuzah is fixed<sup>c</sup> on the right-side of my door, the third part thereof, over against my bed-chamber; so that the noxious spirits have no power to destroy me.

Ver. 4. I charge you, O daughters of Jerusalem, &c.] The king Messiah shall say, I adjure you, O my people, the house of Israel, wherefore do ye stir up yourselves against the people of the earth, to go out of captivity? and why do you rebel against the army of Gog and Magog? tarry a little while, until the people which come up to make war against Jerusalem are destroyed; and after that the Lord of the world will remember unto you the mercies of the righteous, and then it will be his good pleasure to redeem you.

Ver. 5. Who is this that cometh up from the wilderness, &c.] Solomon, the prophet, said; When the dead shall revive, the mount of Olives shall be cleaved the creation of the world, Zohar in Gen. fol. 81. 4. Targum Jon. in Gen. xxvii. 25. and Targum in Ecc. ix. 7. Something of this gross notion seems to have obtained among the Jews in the time of Christ; see Luke xiv. 15. Vid. Buxtorf. Synagog. Jud. c. 50.

<sup>a</sup> These were four sections of the law, wrote on parchments, folded up in the skin of a clean beast, and tied to the head and hand: The four sections were these following, viz. The first was Exod. xiii. 2. to ver. 11. The second was Exod. xiii. 11, to ver. 17. The third was Deut. vi. 4, to ver. 10. The fourth was Deut. xi. 13, to ver. 22. Those that were for the head were written and rolled up separately, and put in four distinct places in one skin, which was fastened with strings to the crown of the head towards the face, about the place where the hair ends, and where an infants brain is tender; and they take care to place them in the middle, that so they may be between the eyes. Those that were for the hand were written in four columns, on one parchment, which being rolled up, was fastened to the inside of the left-arm, where it is fleshy, between the shoulder and the elbow, that so it might be over against the heart. These they call Tephillin, from the root תפלה to pray, because they use them in the time of prayer, and look upon them as useful to put them in mind of that duty; in Mat. xxiii. 5. they are called φυλακτήρια, phylacteries, because they think they keep men in the fear of God, are preservatives from sin, nay, from evil spirits; and against diseases of the body; they imagine there is a great deal of holiness in them, and value themselves much upon the use of them, Targum Jon. Jarchi, and Baal Hatturim in Exod. xiii. 9, 10. and Deut. vi. 8. Maimon. Hilch. Tephilin, c. 1. §. 1. and c. 2. §. 1. and c. 3. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. and c. 4. 1, 2, 25. Matthe Dan, Dialog. 2. fol. 9. 4. and 10. 1. Vid. Buxtorf. Synagog. Jud. c. 9. and Leo Modena's history of the rites, &c. of the present Jews, par. 1. c. 11.

<sup>c</sup> These were two passages in the law, the one was Deut. vi. 4, to ver. 10. the other was Deut. xi. 13, to ver. 22. which were written on a piece of parchment in one column, which being rolled up and put into a pipe of reed or wood, was fastened to the right-side of the door-post; this they imagine was useful to put them in mind of the divine being, to preserve them from sin, and from evil spirits, Targum Jon. in Deut. vi. 9. Maimon. Hilch. Tephilin, c. 5. §. 1, 6. and 6, 13. Vid. Buxtorf. Synagog. Jud. c. 31.

<sup>f</sup> Magog was one of the sons of Japhet, Gen. x. 2. from whom very probably the people called by these two names, sprung, who seem to be the Scythians or Tartars; for Josephus Antiq. Jud. l. 1. c. 7. calls the Scythians, Magog; and Hierapolis in Cælosyria, Pliny, Nat. Hist. l. 5. c. 23. says, was called by the Syrians, Magog; and Marcus Paulus Venetus, l. 1. c. 64. says, that the countries of Gog and Magog are in Tartary, which they call Jug (perhaps rather Gug) and Mungug. Vid. Schindler. Lex. Pent. fol. 288. mention is made of these in Ezek. xxxviii. and xxxix. Rev. xx. 8, 9. with which last text may be compared what the Targumist here says. The Jewish Rabbins, in their writings, very frequently speak of the war of Gog and Magog, which they expect in the days of the Messiah. See Mr. Mede's works, Book 1. Disc. 48. p. 374. and Book 3. p. 713, 751.

cleaved <sup>a</sup> asunder, and all the dead of Israel shall come out from under it; yea, even the righteous, which die in captivity, shall pass through subterraneous <sup>b</sup> caverns, and come out from under the mount of Olivet; but the wicked which die and are buried in the land of Israel, shall be cast away <sup>1</sup>; as a man casts a stone with a sling: then all the inhabitants of the earth shall say; What is the righteousness of this people, which ascend out of the earth, even ten thousand times ten thousand, as in the day they came up out of the wilderness to the land of Israel, and are deliciously fed because of the mercies of their Lord, as in the day when they were hid <sup>k</sup> under mount Sinai, to receive the law? and in that very hour, Zion which is the <sup>1</sup> mother of Israel, shall bring forth her sons, and Jerusalem receive the children of the captivity.

Ver. 6. Set me as a seal upon thine heart, &c.] The children of Israel shall say in that day unto their Lord; We pray thee, set us as the signature of a ring upon thine heart, as the signature of a ring upon thine arm, that we may not be carried captive any more; for strong as death is the love of thy deity, and mighty as hell is the envy, which the people bear unto us; and the hatred which they have reserved for us, is like to the coals of the fire of hell <sup>m</sup>, which the Lord created on the second <sup>n</sup> day of the creation of the world, to <sup>o</sup> burn therein those who commit idolatry.

<sup>a</sup> See Zech. xiv. 4. <sup>b</sup> The Jews are of opinion that those of their nation, who die and are buried in other lands, at the resurrection of the dead, shall not rise where they died and were buried, but shall be rolled through the caverns of the earth, into the land of Canaan, and there rise. This they call גלגול המתים the rolling of the dead, or גלגול המבילות the rolling through the caverns; which they represent as very painful and afflicting, and say, that this was the reason that Jacob desired he might not be buried in Egypt, and is now one reason why the Jews are so desirous of returning to their own land; nay, at this time the more wealthy and religious among them, go thither on this very account, especially when advanced in years, that they may die, and be buried there, and so escape this painful rolling under the earth, T. Hieros. Celaim, fol. 32. 3. and Bab. Cetubot, fol. 111. 1. Beresbit Rabba, parash. 96. Midresh Hannealim in Zohar in Gen. fol. 68. 4. Targum in Gen. xlvii. 29. Kimchi in Ezek. xxxvii. 12. Vid. Buxtorf. Synagog. Jud. c. 3. and Lex. Talmud. fol. 439.

<sup>1</sup> Though the resurrection of the dead is one of the thirteen articles of the Jewish creed, yet many of them are of opinion that it is peculiar to the righteous, and that the wicked shall have no share therein, but that their bodies perish with their souls at death, and shall never rise more, R. David Kimchi in Psal. i. 5. and in Isa. xxvi. 11. R. Saadiah Gaon in Dan. xii. 2. Vid. Po-cock. Not. Misc. c. 6. p. 180, &c.

<sup>k</sup> The Targumist here refers to a fabulous notion of the Jews; that when the people of Israel came to mount Sinai to receive the law, the Lord plucked up the mountain, and removed it into the air, and set the people under it, where he gave the law unto them; this they collect from Exod. xix. 17. and Deut. iv. 11. And this, they say, is the apple-tree under which the church is here said to be raised up, T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 88. 1. and Avoda Zara, fol. 2. 2. Targum, Jon. Targum and Baal Hatturim in Exod. xix. 17. Targum and Shirhashirim Rabba, in loc.

<sup>1</sup> So Jerusalem is said to be the mother of us all, in Gal. iv. 26. <sup>m</sup> גהנום The valley of Hinnom, where the idolaters caused their children to pass through the fire to Moloch, and burnt them, 2 Chron. xxviii. 3. and xxxiii. 6. Jer. vii. 31. and xxxii. 35. R. David Kimchi in Psal. xxvii. 13. says, that Gehinnom was a very contemptible place near Jerusalem, where all manner of filthiness and dead carcases were cast, and that a continual fire was kept there to burn them; hence the word is used very frequently by the Jewish Rabbins, to signify the place where the wicked are punished after death; and so the word genna is used in the New Testament; see Mat. v. 22. and x. 28. and elsewhere.

<sup>n</sup> The same is asserted in Talmud, Pesach. fol. 54. 1. Beresbit Rabba, parash. 4. and 11. and 21. Shemoth Rabba, parash. 15, Zohar in Deut. fol. 120. 1. Targum in Isa. xxx. 33. and yet at other times, they reckon hell among the seven things which were created before the world was, Talmud, Pesach. fol. 54. 1. and Nedarim, fol. 39. 2. Zohar in Lev. fol. 14. 4. Targum Jon. in Gen. iii. 24. See Mat. xxv. 41.

Ver. 7. Many waters cannot quench love, &c.] The Lord of the world said unto his people, the house of Israel; If all people <sup>p</sup> which are like to the waters of the sea, which are many, were gathered together, they could not extinguish my love unto thee; and if all the kings of the earth, which are like to the waters of a river that runs fiercely, they could not remove thee out of the world; but if a man will give all the substance of his house to obtain wisdom in the captivity, I will return unto him <sup>a</sup> double in the world to come; and all the spoils <sup>r</sup> which they shall take from the armies of Gog shall be his.

Ver. 8. We have a little sister, &c.] At that time the angels of heaven shall say one to another, We have one nation in the earth, and her righteousness is very little, and the kings and governors have no power to make war with the armies of Gog: What shall we do for our sister, in the day when the nations shall speak of going up against her to war?

Ver. 9. If she be a wall, &c.] Michael * the prince of Israel shall say; If she is fixed as a wall among the people, and give silver to procure the <sup>r</sup> unity of the name of the Lord of the world, I and you together with their Scribes, will surround her, as borders of silver, that the people may have no power to rule over her, even as a worm hath no power to rule over silver; and tho' she <sup>o</sup> is poor in the commandments, we will seek mercies for her from the Lord; and the righteousness of the law shall be remembered to her, in which infants study, being written upon <sup>w</sup> the table of the heart, and is placed over against the nations as a cedar.

of the wicked in hell, is very frequently expressed by Jewish writers, by their burning in fire and brimstone, Bereishit Rabba, parash. 6. and 51. Zohar in Gen. fol. 71. 3. Raya Mehimna in ib. in Lev. fol. 7. 2. Targum Jon. and Jerus. in Gen. iii. 24. Targum Jerus. in Gen. xv. 12. Targum in Ecc. viii. 10. and x. 11. Targum in Isa. xxxiii. 14. R. David Kimchi in Isa. xxx. 33. Thus idolaters, with others, are said to have their part in the lake, which burneth with fire and brimstone, Rev. xxi. 8. <sup>p</sup> So the words are explained in Shemoth Rabba, parash. 49. Bemidbar Rabba, parash. 2. Zohar in Numb. fol. 105. 3. Raya Mehimna, in ib. in Gen. fol. 51. 3. Shirhashirim Rabba, Jarchi and Aben Ezra in loc. <sup>q</sup> See Mark x. 30. Luke xviii. 30. <sup>r</sup> See Ezek. xxxix. 9, 10. <sup>s</sup> See Dan. x. 13, 21. and xii. 1. The Jews suppose that every nation or kingdom has an angel set over it to be its president, protector and defender, and that Michael was he that presided over Israel. <sup>t</sup> i. e. The knowledge of the unity of God: The doctrine of the unity of the divine being is the second article in the Jewish creed, where they say that God is one, and that there is no unity in any respect, like his; this they very much magnify and extol: Hence they often have those words in their mouths, Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord, Deut. vi. 4. which they think, is entirely inconsistent with a trinity of persons: Hence says Maimonides, Hilch. Yesod. Hattorah, c. 1. §. 4. This God is one, not two, or more than two, but one; for there is no unity like his, in any of the individuals, which are found in the world; neither is he one in specie, which comprehends more individuals; nor one in body, which is divided into parts and extremes; but he is so one, that there is no other unity like it in the world. All which is not so much opposed to the polytheism of the Heathens, as to the plurality of persons in the trinity, and the incarnation of Christ: But though modern Jews have exploded the doctrine of the trinity, as inconsistent with that of the unity of the divine being; yet their more ancient writers do very manifestly speak of it, as the great mystery of faith, Zohar, Edit. Sultzbac. in Gen. fol. 1. col. 3. and in Exod. fol. 18. 3, 4. and fol. 58. 1. and fol. 66. 2, 3. and in Lev. fol. 27. 2. and in Num. fol. 67. 3. Jeruzira, Edit. Trinitate, Allix's judgment of the Jewish church, against the Unitarians, c. 9, 10, 11. <sup>u</sup> In Raya Mehimna in Zohar in Exod. fol. 38. 3. it is said, that no man is poor but he that is so in the law, and in the commandments, and that the riches of a man lie in them; and in Vajikra Rabba, parash. 34. where those words, in Prov. xxii. 2. The rich and poor meet together, are mentioned: It is said, The rich is he that is rich in the law, and the poor is he that is poor in the law: See also Zohar in Numb. fol. 91. 3. with all which compare <sup>v</sup> 1 Tim. vi. 18. <sup>w</sup> See Nor. in Chap. iv. 9.

564 The Targum, or Chaldee Paraphrase, &c.

Ver. 10. I am a wall, &c.] The congregation of Israel answered and said † I am strong in the words of the law, as a wall, and my sons are mighty as a tower; and at that time the congregation of Israel found mercy in the eyes of her Lord, and all the inhabitants of the earth asked of her welfare.

Ver. 11. Solomon had a vineyard at Baal-hamon, &c.] One nation came up in the lot of the Lord of the world *, with whom is peace, which was like unto a vineyard †; he placed it in Jerusalem, and delivered it into the hands of the kings of the house of David, who kept it as a vine dresser keeps a vineyard; after that Solomon king of Israel died, it was left in the hands of his son Reboam; Jeroboam the son of Nebat, came and divided the kingdom with him, and took out of his hands ten tribes, according to the word of Abijah of Shilob, who was a great man.

Ver. 12. My vineyard, which is mine, &c.] When Solomon, the king of Israel heard the prophecy of Abijah of Shilob, he sought to † kill him, but Abijah fled from Solomon, and went into Egypt; and at that time king Solomon was informed, by prophecy, that he should rule over the ten tribes all his days, but after his death, Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, should rule over them; and the two tribes, Judah and Benjamin, Reboam, the son of Solomon, should reign over.

Ver. 13. Thou that dwellest in the gardens, &c.] Solomon said, at the end of his prophecy; The Lord of the world shall say to the congregation of Israel, in the end of days; O thou congregation of Israel, which art like to a garden the least among the nations, and dwelleth in the school with the companions of the Sanhedrim, and the rest of the people, which hearken to the voice of the chief of the school, and learn from his mouth his words; cause me to hear the law, the voice of thy words, when thou sittest to justify and condemn, and I will consent to whatever thou doest.

Ver. 14. Make haste my beloved, &c.] In that very hour the elders of the congregation of Israel shall say; Flee, O my beloved, the Lord of the world, from this defiled earth, and cause thy Shechinah to dwell in the highest heavens; and in the time of straits, when we pray before thee, be thou like a roe, which when it sleeps †, has one eye shut, and the other eye open; or as a young hart, which when it flees, looks behind it: So do thou look upon us, and consider our sorrow and our affliction, from the highest heavens, until the time come that thou wilt take pleasure in us, and redeem us, and bring us to the mountain of Jerusalem, where the priests shall offer up before thee the sweet incense.

* In Sbirbasirim Rabba, in loc. it is explained the same way; R. Aben Ezra, by Solomon, in the next verse, understands the king Messiah; though it is interpreted of Solomon, king of Israel, by the Targum and Jarchi in loc. by Maimon. Yefod. Hattorah, c. 6. §. 12. and in Zohar in Exod. fol. 91. 3.

† So it is explained of the people of Israel, under the government of Solomon in Sbirbasirim Rabba, and by Jarchi and Aben Ezra in loc. † This is a very great mistake of the Targumist, for it was Jeroboam, and not Abijah, who fled into Egypt, whom Solomon sought to kill: See 1 Kings xi. 40. † The same is mentioned in Sbirbasirim Rabba, and in Pesikta in Talkut in loc.
